1288

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

1939

Chief Justice :

The Hon'ble Sir Gilbert Stone, Kt., B.A., LL.B., Bar-at-law.

Puisne Judges :

The Hon'ble Sir Frederick Louis Grille, Kt., I.C.S., Bar-at-law.

" Mr. M. Bhawanishankar Niyogi, M.A., LL.M., C.I.E.

" " Ronald Evelyn Pollock, I.C.S.

" " Harold George Gruer, I.C.S., Bar-at-law.

" " Vivian Bose, Bar-at-law.

Advocate General :

Mr. W. R. Puranik, B.A., LL.B.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

DR. SUDISH CHANDRA ROY, M.A., LL.B., PH.D., BAR-AT-LAW, Calcutta.
SIR M. V. JOSHI, Kt., K.C.I.E., Ex-Law Member, C. P. Government, Nagpur.
MR. E. VINAYAKA RAO, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
MR. V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., Senior Advocate, Federal Court of India, Nagpur.

EDITORIAL STAFF

MR. R. K. MANOHAR, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay (O.S.) and Nagpur.
MR. S. G. GADGIL, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay and Nagpur.
MR. D. D. DATAR, B.Sc., LL.B., Advocate, Nagpur.
MR. R. D. DATAR, High Court Vakil (Bom.), Nagpur.

REPORTERS

Privy Council

DR. A. Majid, M.A., LL.D., BAR-AT-LAW, London.

Federal Court of India

Mr. Rang Behari Lall, B.A., LL.B., Senior Advocate, Federal Court of India, Delhi.

Allahabad

Mr. Shri Rama, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, Allahabad.

Bombay

Mr. S. C. Joshi, M.A., LL.B., M.L.C., Advocate (O.S.), Bombay.

Calcutta

Mr. Praphulla Chandra Ghose, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Monindra Nath Mukerji, B. L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Surajit Chandra Lahiri, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Baidyanath Banerji, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. A. K. Bhattacharjee, BAR-AT-LAW, Calcutta.

Lahore

Mr. Amolak Ram Kapur, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.
Mr. Anant Ram Khosla, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.
Mr. Kedar Nath Chopra, B.Sc., LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.

Madras

Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
Mr. N. Srinivasa Iyengar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
Mr. C. R. Krishna Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.

Nagpur

Mr. E. M. Joshi, M.A., BAR-AT-LAW, Junior Advocate, Federal Court, Nagpur.
Mr. R. K. Manohar, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay (O.S.) and Nagpur.

Oudh

Mr. Surendra Nath Roy, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, Lucknow.
Mr. G. C. Roy, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Vakil, Lucknow.

Patna

Mr. Subal Chandra Muzumdar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Patna.
Mr. Laxmidhar Mahanty, B.A., B.L., M.L.C., Vakil, Circuit Court, Cuttack.
Mr. Jagat Bandhu Kar, B.A., B.L., Pleader, Circuit Court, Cuttack.

Peshawar

Pandit Raghunath, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, Peshawar.

Rangoon

Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee, BAR-AT-LAW, M.H.R., Rangoon.
Mr. K. C. Sanyal, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Rangoon.

Sind

Mr. Hakumatrai M. Eidnani, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Karachi.
Mr. P. K. Vaswani, M.A., LL.B., BAR-AT-LAW, Karachi.

NOMINAL INDEX

*Abdul Hussain v. Mohamad Ebrahim Riza 205
Abdul Rahim v. Mt. Pusia Bai 85
Akbar Ali v. Sobharam Motiram 282
*All India Railwaymen's Benefit Fund Ltd., Nagpur v. Ramchand Hemraj 179
Amergir Ramgir v. Rambhajan Ram Sewak 4
Amraoti Municipal Committee v. Minamal Manbhar Das 247
Amrutlal Chunnilal v. Municipal Committee, Amraoti 171
*Anjuman Mufiddul Islam v. Zal Rustomji Madan 65
Azhar Husain v. Mohammad Shibli 183
Baliram Pamaji v. Uttam Chand Motilal 110
Baliram Singh v. Emperor 295
Balkrishna Rajaram v. Baijnath Girdharilal 150
Bapuji Ramji v. Gangaram Madhorao 47
Baretto, Dr. v. T. R. Pruce 19
Bhagwati, Mt. v. G. I. P. Railway 106
*Bisham Chand Jagannath Sao v. Kisanlal Sheosing 103
Brijmohan Mathulal v. Chandrabhagabai 173
Bulakhidas Narsingdas v. Radhakisan Gopikisan 177
Chouda, B. L. v. B. K. Rai 274
Chudaman Singh v. Kamtanath Gauri Shanker 230
Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, Lucknow v. Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 89
Daryaosingh Bhagwansing v. Krishnarao Vishnupant 91
Dhundiraj Madhao v. Ganpat Vithal 121
*Dipchand Kundanmal v. Manakchand Multanmal 154
Dukhuram v. Khanderao 83
Ganga Prasad v. Ratan Chand 118
Gangaprasad Nandasao v. Itwarsingh Manoharsingh 287
Ganpatrao Madhorao v. Badar Farid 193
Garamlal Punaji v. Tularam Amritlal 33
*Gowardhan Shewaram v. Hargovind Sitaram 17
Gulabchand v. Kishanlal 42
Gulam Husain v. Mir Jakirali 27
Haridas Narayandas v. Jagannath Das 256
Indian Cotton Co. Ltd. v. Ramcharanlal Chunnilal 128
Jabbarshah Akbarsha v. Kanchhedi Lal 166
Jagannath Ramkisan v. Jamnavallabh 97
Jagannath Tarachand v. Surajmal Punamchand 64
*Jageshwarprasad v. Mulchand (FB) 57
Jainarayan Ramgopal v. Balwant Maroti 35
Jakiuddin Badruddin v. Vithoba Jagannath 301
Janardan Sadasheo v. Madanlal Mangulal 215
Janba Dayaram v. Manno Kashiram 312
Jasodabai, Mt. v. Firm Shrikishan Radhakishan 10
Kamruddin Yusaf Ali v. Municipal Committee, Khandwa 195
Kashinath Ganesh v. Ganesh Bhola 207
Keshav Yeshwant v. Krishna Balaji 107
Kisan Dewaloo v. Ganga Bai 279
Krishna Chandra v. Seth Rishabha Kumar 265
Krishnaji Ganuji v. Anusaya Bai 130
Kuwarji Madhao v. Bhurelal Ajitmal 163
Lakhandhar Bholadhar v. Harlalpuri Shankerpuri 5
Laxman Namdeo v. Emperor 281
Laxman Ramchandra v. Wasudeo Vithal 120
Laxminarayan Ganeshdas v. Ghasiram Dalchand 191
Laxminarayan Ganeshdas v. Ghasiram Dalchand 267
Lokman Chhabilal v. Motilal Tulsiram 269
Madhao Gopal v. Secretary of State 44
Madhodass Gulabdas Firm v. Appaji Raoji 221
Mahadeo Nilkanth v. Janardan Harbaji 75
*Mahomed Azizullakhan v. Md. Noorullah Khan (FB) 233
Manaklal Bhimraj v. Mt. Phulabai 213
Maroti Bansi v. Emperor 95
Maroti Laxman v. Jagannathdas Lachhmandas 72
Meghaji Jairam v. V. D. Bhake 203
Meghji Hirjee & Co. v. B. N. R. Co. Ltd. 141
Meherban Lalli v. Yusufkhan Kallu 7
Mishrilal Seth v. Barik Tursi 305
Motiram v. Daulat (FB) 50
Muktawandas Ajabdas v. Emperor 13
Munna v. Emperor 87
Narain Chouthmal v. Rama Jago 156
Nathuram v. Kalu 69
*Nathusa Pasusa v. Mohammad Siddique 159
*Pandit, W. R. v. S. R. Pandit 101
*Pandurang Ganpatrao v. Vishwanath Pandurang 20
*Pannalal Baliram v. Sumranlal Rupram 260
Pannalal Singhai v. Firm Hasan Dada 258
Pitambar Ramchandra v. Sahebchand Harakchand Shop 277
Provincial Government, C. P. and Berar v. Dinanath Lala Ganpatrai 263
Purushottamdas Sakalchand v. Devkaran Kesheoji 39
Rahman Sheikh v. Seth Sheodas Daga 241
*Rajlu Naidu v. M. E. R. Malak 197
Ramchandra Krishnaji v. Zolba Balaji 220
Ramdayal Munnalal v. Sheodayal (FB) 186
Ramlalsao Gupta v. M. E. R. Malak 225
*Ramnath Hajarimal v. Mohanlal Radhakisan 23
Ramsingh Ranjitsingh v. Jalamsingh Sonusingh 192
Renukabai, Mt. v. Bheosan Hapsaji 132
Sadasheo Rao Shamrao v. Roopchand Gorelal 136
*Sangakheda Kalan Co-operative Bank, Hoshangabad v. Ayodhyaprasad Shiamlal 232 Sarjabai, Mt. v. Bhagwanji Nagoji 140
Sarju Prasad v. Badri Prosad 242
Sarup Singh v. Emperor 226
Secretary of State v. Mt. Geeta 122
Shaligram Bhagoo v. Mt. Dhurpati 147
Shaligram Shriram v. Sheopratap Wallabhadas 3
Shankarrao v. Hazarimal Nathuramji 81
*Shobhalal Shyamlal v. Sidhelal Halkelal 210
Shridhar Krishnarao v. Narayan Namaji 227

Shridharrao Shanker Rao v. Shrawan Vithoba 149
Sunderlal Shanker Lal v. Amrut Rao 217
Superintendent Leprosy Asylum, Chandkhuri v. Ramsahaigir Gosawi 145
Suwalal Vemichand v. Fazle Hussain Rajabali 31
*Syed Ahmad v. Ram Gopal Bhagwandeen 224
Tapibai Mt. v. Shanker Lal 113
*Tikaram Ratiram v. Emperor 309
Trimbak Wamanrao v. Mt. Bhagu Bai 249
Trivenibai v. Deorao Gobind Deshpande 1
Tukaram Manbaji v. Shrikrishna Ramratan 209
Udebhan Zangoji v. Vithoba Ukandaji 78
Vithal Bhagwan Mandir of Pushkarraj v. Narayanrao Raghunath Rao 175
*Yadorao Wasudeorao v. Govindrao Ramji 245
Zalliram Battolal v. Mangalsingh Nandlal Singh 302

SUBJECT INDEX

Abadi— Village abadi is not communal land 145*c*

Acquiescence — Circumstances not sufficient to raise effective defence of 163*b*

Adverse Possession — Widow—Adverse possession against widow does not affect reversioner's rights 260*b*

——Burden of proof—Suit for possession of property—Plaintiff's title as well as defendant's possession for more than 12 years before suit established — Plaintiff's plea that he has let in defendant as tenant not established— Defendant pleading adverse possession—Burden of proof is on him—If he does not discharge it, plaintiff is entitled to decree 7*a*

Appeal—Abatement—Decree for damages passed—Judgment-debtor dying after appeal filed—Appeal does not abate—Maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona — Application of 256*c*

——Stay order — Stay order passed by Appellate Court is vacated the moment the appeal is dismissed 107*c*

Arbitration — Award — Award need not be in writing—Proof of oral award is not excluded by provisions of Registration Act (FB) 233*d*

——Award— Registration — Unregistered award affecting immovable and moveable properties—Portion dealing with moveable property not separable with reasonable clearness from portion dealing with immovable property—Award must be rejected as a whole (FB) 233*e*

Berar Land Revenue Code (1896), S. 72 (3) — Rent of ante-alienation tenant is charge on his holding—Rent not paid on due date—Jagirdar, in equity, is entitled to interest on arrears of rent 149

——Ss. 178, 38 — Rules for disposal of Government building site made by Chief Commissioner in 1906 were valid and operative although not published in Gazette as required by S. 178—Plaintiff acquiring occupancy rights in land on condition that rent fixed at future settlements should be 33 per cent. of letting value of land—Town survey officer assessing rent accordingly in 1928—Assessment challenged by plaintiff — Assessment officer held to have jurisdiction to revise assessment—Plaintiff held to be bound by his agreement 44*a*

——(1928), Ss. 41 (3), 192 (1), Proviso— Person acquiring occupancy right under rules for disposal of Government sites in 1906 disputing right of Government to enhance assessment of the land— Dispute decided against him by Revenue Officer—He is entitled to sue under S. 41 (3) to establish his right—Suit also comes under S. 192 (1), Proviso— Civil Court has jurisdiction to try it 44*b*

——S. 112 (1) — Expression "first hearing"—Meaning explained 110*c*

——S. 112 (2)—Dismissal of suit under S. 112 (2) is decree and hence appealable 110*a* ——S. 112 (2)—Granting of time means granting it after lapse of first hearing: 110*d*

——Ss 174, 176 — Oral sale which is ineffective as sale under Transfer of Property Act may operate to transfer some portion of vendor's interest in holding within the meaning of S. 176 and may amount to sale giving rise to right of pre-emption—Intention of parties is determining factor 35*a* ——S. 174—Pre-emption rights conferred by Code can be interpreted in sense in which they are used in Sec. 7, para. vi, Court-fees Act, and in Art. 10, Limitation Act 35*d*

——S. 174 (1)—All questions of pre-emptions in Berar must be governed by the Code — Reference may be made to Mahomedan law to elucidate matters upon which Code is silent 35*b*

Bond — Consideration — Executant may discharge onus of proving consideration by showing that presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, does not arise— Question whether onus is discharged is one of fact: 78*c*

Burden of Proof—Question of onus if regarded as final factor in the case cannot be ignored 78*a*

Central Provinces Courts Act (1 of 1917), S. 26—Presentation of appeal in Additional District Judge's Court must be regarded as appeal filed in District Court: 42

Central Provinces Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933) — Act must be construed strictly 282*b*

——Ss. 7-A and 12 (1) — S. 7-A is not retrospective—Prior to S. 7-A, Civil Courts have right to decide whether facts necessary to constitute 40 per cent. rule are present or not 136*b*

——S. 12—Scope —Settlement by transfer of lands is not contemplated by S. 12 : 224*a*

——Ss. 12 (1), (2), 13—Payment of debts can be agreed to be made in cash or in kind — Amount made payable in cash—S. 13 applies—Jurisdiction of Civil Court does not arise until S. 13 (3) is complied with — Amount payable in kind—Agreement is enforceable as decree by Civil Court as soon as it is registered 227*a*

Central Provinces Debt Conciliation Act
——S. 12 (1)—Word "amounts" in S. 12 (1) is not limited to sums of money—Both liabilities as well as payments in kind are comtemplated 227*b*
——Ss. 12 (1) and 15—Certificates under S. 15 when debts due to creditors accepting award are less than 40 per cent. are without jurisdiction 136*c* ——Ss. 15 and 21 — Sale in execution before application under Sec. 4 is made—Power of Civil Court to confirm sale under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., is not affected either by S. 15 or S. 21 282*a* ——Ss. 16 (b), 15 — Allegation of fraud by decree-holder—In spite of it, the Debt Conciliation Board issuing certificate — Question of fraud cannot be re-agitated in Civil Court 312
——S. 21 and R. 11—Object of certificate stated 282*c*
——S. 21 — Stay operates from date on which certificate is produced in Court: 282*d*
——Rules under, R. 18 — R. 18 does not cure illegality occurring under R. 47: 277*a*
——Rules under, R. 47 and S. 8—Failure of Board and debtor to have proper guardian appointed after due notice to minor and guardian—Proceedings are null and void 277*b*
Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, (2 of 1917), S. 68 (5) — Full effect must be given to entry however much vested rights are affected — It is sufficient notice of entry to all concerned if wide publicity is given to all settlement operations 287*f*
——S. 157 (3) — Sadar lambardar paying land revenue due in respect of mortgagor's land has only priority over mortgagee to extent of land revenue — Sale by him does not free land from incumbrance 302
——S. 188 (2)— Lambardar is not landlord vis-a-vis his co-proprietors 287*c*
——S. 192 — Suit for village profits — Lambardar or mukaddam can claim remuneration for services even for period preceding its fixation under S. 192 75
——S. 192 (1)—Lambardar's commission for collecting land revenue from malik makbuzas — Lambardar's cosharers have no right of share 121*b*
——S. 203 — S. 203 has nothing to do with rights and liabilities of proprietors as between themselves 287*a* ——S. 203 — Abadi — Usufructuary mortgage— Mortgagee is mere trespasser, and suit for possession by landlord is governed by Art. 142 or Art.144 and not by Art. 120, Limitation Act 163*a* ——S. 203 (2) — Cosharer parting with

Central Provinces Land Revenue Act agricultural land and retaining only proprietary share in village cannot be said to forfeit his right to house site in abadi: 287*b*
——S. 203 (6) —Ex-proprietor transferring site and building in abadi and keeping acre or two of occupancy land — Palatial residence erected by him in abadi is not preserved for him 287*e*
——S. 203 (8) — Proprietor mortgaging his village share and house in abadi—After mortgage is foreclosed he cannot claim to retain possession of house 83
——S. 220 (n), (o) — A and R cosharers in village assigned shares in imperfect partition — A alleging that partition was subsequently modified by arbitration — Parties in dispute as to basis on which perfect partition should proceed—Revenue member finally deciding that it was to be made in accordance with imperfect partition as modified by subsequent arbitration —R filing suit for declaration that shares in village were as they were fixed at imperfect partition and not as modified by arbitration — Held that suit was maintainable — That jurisdiction of Civil Court was not barred for purpose of declaring title of parties 5
Central Provinces Local Fund Audit Act (9 of 1933), Ss. 8 to 13 — Civil suit is maintainable even if procedure laid down by Ss. 8 to 13 is not followed 247*b*
Central Provinces Motor Vehicles Taxation Act (1 of 1932 as amended in 1935), S. 3 (1), Proviso — License fee for motor lorries imposed by Amraoti Town Municipality under its bye-laws is not tax — Person residing within other Municipality would be liable for license fees in respect of lorries plying between those Municipal towns 171*a* Central Provinces Municipalities Act (2 of 1922), S. 25, Rules under, R. 7 — R. 7 does not provide for representation on behalf of Committee — Members of Committee engaging counsel without sanction to represent Committee in appeal by dismissed employee — Members are liable for payment made to counsel 247*a*
——(as applied to Berar), S. 179 (g) — Rules under — R. 1 framed by Amraoti Town Municipal Committee — Words "plying for hire within limits of Amraoti Town Municipality"—Interpretation: 171*b*
Central Provinces Protection of Debtors Act (4 of 1937), Ss. 3 and 4 — Creditor going to debtor to demand money and being told to go to Civil Court hitting him

Central Provinces Protection of Debtors Act
— This act does not amount to an offence under Section 3 281
Central Provinces Reduction of Interest Act (32 of 1936), S. 2 — "Secured debt" —Attachment does not cause judgment-debt to be secured debt 267
Central Provinces Tenancy Act (11 of 1898), S. 41 — Mortgage of tenancy made without notice to landlord is voidable — Landlord, if in possession, can treat alienation as nullity— Fact that decree for sale was obtained in mortgage suit to which landlord was not party cannot affect landlord's position 91*d*
——Ss. 46, 47 and 48—Transfer by occupancy tenant in contravention of S. 46 (3) is voidable by landlord who can do so only in Revenue Court and not by Civil suit : 166*b*
——(1 of 1920), S. 2 — Definition of land does not apply to sites in abadi — Same meaning is assigned to 'land' in C. P. Land Revenue Act 287*d*
——S. 6—Transfer by absolute occupancy tenant — He ceases to be tenant from date of transfer — Transferee is liable either for rent or for damages for occupation between date of transfer and date on which it is avoided 175
——Ss. 49 and 110 —Sec. 49 has no retrospective effect in respect of leases of sir land validly granted under old Act by ex-proprietor when he was proprietor — Rights acquired under the lease are saved by S. 110 230*a* ——S. 49 (1) — Mortgagor losing right to occupy sir land by foreclosure is entitled to benefit of Sec. 49 (1) even if land was declared sir after mortgage but before suit— Benefit can be claimed in execution 287*g*
Charge — Creation of — Requirement — Decree providing payment by instalment and directing defendant not to alienate property till satisfaction of decree—Decree held created charge on property 118*a* Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908)—Interpretation of — Conflict between body of Code and Schedule — Former must prevail (FB) 186*d* ——Ss. 2 (2), 104 and O. 43—Order that appeal or cross-objection abates is appealable 39*a* *——S. 2 (12), O. 21, R. 63—Plaintiff in claim suit establishing his title to property —Possession of auction-purchaser becomes wrongful so far as mesne profits are concerned—Plaintiff is entitled to claim mesne profits from him 23*a*
Civil P. C.
——S. 2 (12) — Term "wrongful" is used in special sense — Meaning of term explained 23*b*
*——Ss. 2 (17) (h) and 80 — Liquidator appointed under Sec. 42 of the Co-operative Societies Act, is public officer—Attachment by him in execution of award issued by Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies— Objection by person to attachment dismissed — Suit by that person under O. 21, R. 63 must fail for want of notice to liquidator 232
——S. 7—Small Cause Court has no power to create charge on immovable property 118*b*
——Ss. 11 and 47, O. 22, R. 5 and O. 2, R. 2 — Order under O. 22, R. 5 is not res judicata but is final so far as suit in which it is made is concerned—Subsequent decision in separate suit does not affect rights of parties in former suit — What matter amounts to res judicata stated 147*b*
——S. 47, O. 21, R. 90—Judgment-debtor's application for setting aside sale falls under O. 21, R. 90 and not under Sec. 47 even though auction-purchaser is not made party to it 241*a* ——S. 47, O. 21, R. 58—Term "representatives" in Sec. 47 includes not only legal representatives but also representatives-in-interest, i. e., transferees from decree-holder or judgment-debtor — Assets of deceased person in hands of legal representatives attached in execution of a decree against legal representatives in respect of debt charged on assets—Question whether property belongs to assets of deceased or not raised by legal representatives or the transferees from them, who are bound by decree, falls under Sec. 47 and not under O. 21, R. 58—It must be determined in execution and not by separate suit 183*a* ——S. 47—Auction-purchaser is not necessary party to proceedings arising out of Sec. 47 between parties to suit 183*b*
——S. 47 — Legal representative — Whether person is legal representative of party to decree should be decided by executing Court — Separate suit does not lie 147*a* ——S. 47 — Question whether property can be proceeded against held must be decided under Sec. 47 by executing Court and not in separate suit 147*c*
*——S. 48 — Sec. 48 is not controlled by Sec. 6, Limitation Act 245
——S. 60 — Motor tractor is not "implement of husbandry," more so when not used for agriculture but for driving flour-mill: 3*a*

Civil P. C.

——S. 60—Term "implement"—Meaning of — It would be erroneous to extend the meaning of the word "implement" occurring in Sec. 60, beyond what it was understood to signify in 1908 3*b*

——S. 66—Sec. 66 does not draw distinction between purchase by a person in name of stranger and one by father in name of son 274*a* ——S. 66—Object—The object of Sec. 66 is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales 274*c*

——S. 66 (1) — Sec. 66 (1) does not deal with cases in which A purchases at Court auction in his own name though on behalf of somebody else 274*b*

——S. 89 and O. 23, R. 3 — Award by arbitrator privately appointed by parties to pending suit cannot be recorded as adjustment by compromise: 23 N L R 100=95 I C 89=A I R 1926 Nag 405 and 24 N L R 55=107 I C 525=A I R 1928 Nag 173, OVERRULED (FB) 186*b*

—— S. 103 and O. 21, R. 25 —Scope of O. 41, R. 25 — Issue not determined by first Appellate Court — In second appeal issue remitted to trial Court for recording further evidence—Trial Court after taking evidence returning case to High Court — Issue can be determined by High Court under S. 103 173*a*

*——Ss. 144, 151 and 47—Suit remanded — Meanwhile in application for execution defendant depositing sum which plaintiff withdrew—On remand fresh decree passed for lesser amount than that deposited — Defendant applying for refund of surplus—Refund held could be granted under S. 151 upon principle of S. 144—Right to claim refund held accrued on date of fresh decree and not from order of remand—S. 47 held also applied 101

——O. 1, R. 1— Object of joining necessary parties—Mortgage in favour of B and D—Suit by B alone—D dying during course of suit—B acquiring D's rights of recovering debt—Non-joinder of D held immaterial 242*a*

——O. 2, R. 6— Misjoinder of causes of action and parties is not invariably fatal to suit—When such misjoinder is objectionable stated 256*a*

——O. 6, R. 14 and O. 4, R. 1— Scope of O. 6, R. 14— Mortgage suit by one of two co-mortgagees presented by pleader for plaintiff-mortgagee is deemed to have been properly presented 242*b*

—— O. 9, R. 8 and O. 17, R. 2 — Case reaching stage after issue stage has in part been passed — Court is not compelled to exercise its powers under O. 9, R. 8 but can, in doubtful case, make order under O. 17, R. 2 213*b*

—— O. 9, R. 9 — Complete usurpation of possession and consequent dispossession of owner is not continuing trespass within the meaning of S. 23, Limitation Act — Previous suits alleging forcible and wrongful possession of a certain land and praying for ejectment dismissed under O. 9, R. 8—Subsequent suit alleging forcible and illegal possession and praying for possession is barred being based on same cause of action and not continuing one 145*a*

—— O. 17, R. 2 and O. 9, R. 8 — Order under O. 17, R. 2 read with O. 9, R. 8 is not appealable 213*a*

——O. 20, R. 14—Pre-emption— Suit for — Person exercising right of pre-emption must strictly comply with conditions imposed on him — Plaintiff failing to make payment within period fixed by Court — — His right of pre-emption is lost — Mere fact that plaintiff files appeal and executes security bond does not extend time — Nor is there any question of adjustment between parties 107*a*

——O. 21, R. 1 — Decree awarding interest until payment—Sum paid into Court—Interest ceases to run from date of such payment 191

*——O. 21, R. 53— For attachment of decree to be effective notices to judgment-debtor and decree-holder are imperative: 17

—— O. 21, Rr. 62 and 66 — What is sold as result of order under R. 62 is equity of redemption — Distinction between cases where property is sold subject to mortgage and cases where notice of alleged mortgage is given in sale proclamation 305*b*

——O. 21, R. 62 — Property attached in execution of simple money decree — Mortgagee objecting that property is subject to his mortgage — Judgment-debtor supporting his objection— Property sold subject to mortgage — Auction purchaser having knowledge that mortgage was fictitious keeping silence cannot challenge validity of mortgage in mortgagee's suit 305*c*

——O. 21, R. 63 — Property attached declared to be subject to mortgage — Fact that property is subsequently released from attachment does not relieve decree-holder of his duty to bring suit within one year: 305*a*

—— O. 21, R. 63 —Plaintiff in claim suit basing his claim on mortgage decree obtained against member of joint Hindu family, alleging that member was sued in representative capacity — Whether burden of proving so, which lies on him, is discharged, when he establishes that father and son were joint and that suit was against father (Quære) 23*d*

Civil P. C.
——O. 21, R. 66—Irregularity on account of omission to mention mortgage in sale proclamation cannot be cured by mortgagee's statement in witness-box that he would not enforce it 179*f*
——O. 21, R. 71—Decree-holder can apply to recover deficit even if judgment-debtor, and not he, is damnified by default 269*e*
——O. 21, R. 71— Bid made on behalf of temple by its managing trustee — Default in payment of deposit—Trustee is not personally liable for deficit 269*f*
——O. 21, R. 77 — Sale of the moveable property is complete when officer conducting sale declares who is purchaser and receives purchase money and grants receipt 269*a*
——O. 21, R. 84— Officer conducting sale can declare highest bidder to be purchaser — He need not ask Judge to declare who is purchaser 269*b*
——O. 21, R. 84 — Failure of officer conducting sale to wait for payment of deposit is not material irregularity 269*c* ——O. 21, R 84— 'Forthwith,' meaning of —Re-sale can be held on same day as date of default in payment of deposit if circumstances permit 269*d*
——O. 21, R. 90— Irregularity and illegality — Difference — Holding of sale few hours before advertised time is illegality which renders sale void — Court can set aside sale on its own initiative — It is at least material irregularity and can be dealt with under O. 21, R. 90 258*a*
——O. 21, R. 90 — Irregularity apparent from record but objection not taken in application—Objection based on such irregularity can be considered by Court at any stage 258*b*
——O. 21, R. 90— Sale of portion of houses when entire houses proclaimed to be sold amounts to material irregularity— Whether it results in substantial injury depends upon facts of case 241*b*
*——O. 21 R. 90 — Auction-purchaser is entitled to set aside sale : 68 I C 429 = AIR 1923 Nag 161, OVERRULED: 179*a*
*——O. 21 R. 90—Interests—Word being plural implies more than one interest and includes that of auction-purchaser 179*c*

Civil P. C.
——O. 21, Rr. 90 and 91— Difference between — The express mention of the auction-purchaser in R. 91 cannot of itself exclude him from the purview of R. 90 — The object of the two enactments is different — R. 91 postulates that the sale is free from any fraud, irregularity or illegality whereas R. 90 leaves the door open for questioning the validity of the sale on the above three specific grounds—The fact that the auction-purchaser is specifically mentioned in R. 91 itself evidences the intention of the Legislature to afford him a summary remedy 179*d* ——O. 23, R. 3—Parties agreeing in stating that suit has been adjusted — Court must record it even if compromise was embodied in unregistered document (Obiter) (FB) 233*c*
——O. 41, R. 22 (4) — Cross-objection cannot be heard when appeal abates 39*b*
Companies Act (7 of 1913), S. 101 (3)— Provisions of sub-s. (3) are mandatory — Application for share not accompanied by 5 per cent. of share amount does not constitute valid offer—Hence company cannot demand share amount from applicant : 225*a* Contract — Novation — Agreement with respect to debts, entered between creditor and debtor, subsequently backed out by debtor — Creditor cannot file suit on original debt 224*b* ——Right of third party to sue—The person beneficially entitled under the agreement can sue even though not a party to the agreement itself 20*a* Contract Act (9 of 1872), S. 6 (2)— Scope — Proposal for purchase of shares made in July 1933 and December 1934—Allotment of shares not made till August 1935 — No notice of allotment sent — Revocation not waived by proposers—Proposals held must be deemed to have been revoked 225*b*
——S. 16 — Pardanashin women when executing an instrument must know clearly what they do by independent advice— Courts should see that the transaction is fair— If it is not, it cannot alter its terms to make it fair but must be satisfied that they not only put their hand to the paper but also their mind to the transaction: 159*a* ——S. 65—Transfer void under law—Suit to recover consideration— Time runs from date of agreement 27*b*
Co-sharers—Village profits— Where it is not necessary for lambardar to send to his co-sharers their share of profits by money-order he is not entitled to money-order charges 121*c*

Court-fees Act (7 of 1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) — Suit for declaration that plaintiff is reversioner and for injunction and appointment of receiver comes under S. 7 (iv) (c) (Per Niyogi J.) (F B) 50*a* ——S. 7 (iv) (c)—In considering meaning of S. 7 (iv) (c), it is necessary to consider Suits Valuation Act, S. 8 and Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 11 (F B) 50*b*

——S. 7 (iv) (c)—In valuing suits coming under S. 7 (iv) (c) principle that value of suit is value of property affected by relief asked for cannot be adopted as test (F B) 50*d*

* * ——S. 7 (iv) (c) — Valuation put by plaintiff, if arbitrary and unreasonable, Court can interfere and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C.—A I R 1937 Nag 14 = 165 I C 106, OVERRULED (F B) 50*e*

Criminal Procedure Code (5 of 1898), S. 56—Constable directed by station officer to arrest without warrant— Arrest cannot be effected without authority in writing required by S. 56 95*b*

——Ss. 164 (3) and 533 — Certificate recorded only partly complying with S. 164 (3)—Evidence that statement was voluntarily made is admissible under S. 533: 295*a*

——S. 195 (1) (b)—Complaint alleged to be false made to police and then to Court — Prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, cannot proceed without complaint of Court 226

——S. 239—Prosecution alleging unity of criminal behaviour actuated by common intention on part of all accused to extort confession— All accused are triable jointly 263*b*

——S. 239—"Sameness of transaction" — Relevant point of time is time of accusation 263*c*

——Ss. 476 and 195 (1) (c) — Courts mentioned in Sec. 476 can make complaint in respect of offence of forgery against persons who are not parties to proceedings before it 85

Criminal Trial — Evidence — Finding of small disintegrated blood stains on dhoti and saluka of accused is not of much importance but it strengthens the case against him as a whole 309*a* ——Confession—Retracted confession cannot be used to contradict co-accused's confession 295*c*

——Practice—Accused assaulting police in uniform and declaring that he does not care for latter's authority—Matter should not be dealt with lightly 95*c*

Criminal Trial

——Summary trial—Object of—Warrant case — Accused, after his examination is entitled to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination 87*a* ——Procedure—Warrant case — Prosecution including evidence given on commission in other presidencies—Case should not be tried summarily (Obiter) 87*b*

——Duty of prosecution to call witnesses —Eye witnesses when not numerous must all be examined 13*a*

Decree—Variation—Decree can be varied by Court itself and only in particular way (Obiter) 249*e*

——Variation of — A decree once passed cannot be varied by consent 107*b*

Deed — Construction — Discrepancy between dimensions and boundaries—Area specified within boundaries will pass: 197*f*

Easement—Suit by person for specific performance on basis of agreement of sale of certain land in his favour—This does not preclude him from claiming easement in respect of that land 197*b*

——Easement of necessity — An easement of necessity is one without which the property retained upon the severance cannot be used at all—It is not one which is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of that property 197*e*

——Custom of burial—It is not necessary to establish immemorial user—Certain land used by Mahomedans for burial for 45 years — Court can infer that right to bury dead was granted to Mahomedans in past 193*b*

*——Landowner granting right of easement over his land—Grant reserving right of revocation—Land subject to easement subsequently sold—Right to revoke easement reserved in the grant passes to purchaser—Right of easement can be enjoyed against the purchaser only to the extent of condition in grant 65

Easements Act (5 of 1882), S. 15—Long user of right of way—Relation between parties not indicating that user was attributable to leave and license — User is presumed to be as of right 197*c*

*——S. 15—Person by prescription acquiring right of way for himself, his servants and carts—Right of way cannot be presumed to include passage for sweepers: 197*d*

——S. 15—Law presumes that user is as of right if it is proved that user was open and notorious 69

Estoppel—Chemicals taxable by Municipality with terminal tax — Consignment received by shopkeeper but not taxed at that time—Shopkeeper selling his goods on this basis—Municipality subsequently is not estopped from holding shopkeeper liable for tax 195*b*

Estoppel
——Wrong representation to oneself is no estoppel 195*c*
——Evidence — Plot of land in another district included in mortgage to enable registration in such district—Mortgagor intending to work fraud not on registration law but upon mortgagee — Mortgagor estopped from contending that transfer of plot was not intended (FB) 57*a* Evidence Act (1 of 1872), Ss. 10 and 30 —Object of conspiracy carried out—Subsequent confession made by accused after arrest is not admissible under S. 10 though it may be taken into consideration against co-accused under S. 30 295*b*
*——S. 30—Confession must be confession of offence for which accused are tried and not of some other offence 309*b*
——S. 32 (2)—Cancelled will used in support of statement made by testator against his own interest is admissible 274*d*
——S. 43—Right of party concluded by previous judgment can be proved by production of the judgment 72
*——S. 71—Execution of document by pardanashin ladies — It is the conscious execution and not the mechanical execution of a document that must be established in the case of documents executed by pardanashin ladies 159*b*
——S. 92, Proviso 1—Illustrations are not exhaustive 20*b*
*——S. 92, Proviso 1—One party to sale deed showing that he did not receive consideration — Other party can show that consideration was paid in full not in cash but in kind by proving contemporaneous oral agreement to that effect 20*c*
——S. 114 — Presumption — Document executed by ignorant and illiterate person —Usual presumption under S. 114 cannot be drawn 78*b*
——S. 115 — Estoppel — Statement of puisne mortgagee in witness-box that he would not enforce his mortgage does not estop him from enforcing his legal rights 179*e*
——S. 115 — Person building on land belonging to another has no equitable right to possession of land on ground that owner stood by and allowed construction to proceed, unless it is shown that he supposed the land to be his own 7*d*

Evidence Act
——Ss. 155 (3) and 145—Oral statements made to witnesses by others—Questions to witnesses about those statements are legally admissible 13*b*
Execution Sale—Setting aside—Application by one of several judgment-debtors — Property sold consisting of only one item — Irregularity not apportionable — Sale must be set aside as a whole 258*c*
Hindu Law—Adoption—In Berar, Bombay rules about adoption apply 47*a* ——Adoption — Mother's power to adopt terminates when her son dies leaving widow 47*b* ——Debts—Avyavaharika debt—Debt to buy motor to ply for hire is not avyavaharika and is binding on sons 192
——Debts—Father—Decree passed against father in joint Hindu family—It can be executed against son's share although father is sued in personal capacity 23*c* ——Maintenance—Agreement by manager to pay maintenance is binding on family 249*f*
——Maintenance—Past and future—Ordinarily, the questions regarding the payment of past and future maintenance would be separate and independent and so in the absence in a deed of an express statement to the contrary, it must be assumed that they are treated separately there 249*g*
——Minor and guardian — Guardian as manager can bind minor's estate—Where guardian is not manager, minor is not liable for debts contracted by guardian 33
——Stridhan—Ornaments given to daughter-in-law at her marriage are her stridhan 130*b* ——Widow—Re-marriage—Effect of, on rights of widow to hold property (Obiter) 260*a* ——Widow — Maintenance — Agreement by members of Hindu family to pay maintenance to widow at certain rate — In absence of express terms to contrary agreement is subject to implied condition that rate will be subject to variation in family fortunes—Only method of obtaining variation is by showing that circumstances justifying variation have come into play: 249*a* ——Widow—Maintenance—Deed agreeing to pay maintenance to widow must be construed with reference to practice and usage in these matters 249*b* ——Widow — Maintenance — Practice of Court—Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved 249*c*

Hindu Law
——Widow — Maintenance — Right of alteration—The right to alter or rescind rate of maintenance fixed for payment to widow does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both 249*d* ——Widow—Maintenance—Amount of—Unproductive ornaments should not be taken into account when fixing rate of maintenance 130*a* ——Widow — Maintenance — Even minor widow, to whom no guardian is appointed, cannot be deprived of right of maintenance merely because she refuses to live in husband's family, more so, when financial condition of family allows of granting of separate maintenance 130*c*
——Widow — Maintenance — Court has wide discretion in matter of granting or withholding arrears of maintenance : 130*d*
——Widow — Maintenance — Agreement executed in favour of widow agreeing to pay her certain amount annually as maintenance—Charge created on portion of family property in respect of maintenance—Widow obtaining decree for arrears of maintenance and getting property sold in execution—Property not sold subject to charge—Charge for subsequent years is extinguished, so far as property sold is concerned 1*a* ——Widow — Maintenance — Nature of widow's right to maintenance explained—Ways in which her right can be satisfied enumerated 1*b*
Income-tax Act (11 of 1922, as amended in 1929), S. 58-K (2)—Meaning of the words "his share" explained 89
Insolvency — Mortgagor adjudged insolvent—Preliminary decree for sale obtained by mortgagee made final and property sold in execution—Proceeding is not binding on receiver if not impleaded in it 128*b*
Interest — Compound interest — Interest on interest means compound interest 136*d*
Interpretation of Statutes — No Act should be construed so as to destroy existing rights 230*b*
——Marginal notes — Marginal notes can be looked into if particular construction leads to conflict of rights granted by Act and those acquired under old Act repealed by it 230*c*
——Construction—Grammatical and ordinary sense of words leading to absurdity or inconsistency—It can be modified so as to avoid these consequences 227*c*
——General words following specific words of same nature must be construed as taking their meaning from the specific words which precede them and must be restricted to the same genus FB 186*c*
——Duty of Court—It is not the function of the Court to make alterations in the terminology of the plain provisions of law, as in that case they would not be interpreting but making the law 179*b* ——Limitation Acts — Construction — Limitation Acts should be construed so as to save rather than bar a proceeding (Per Stone C. J.) 150*a*
——Nothing is to be added to or taken from a statute 44*c* ——Codified law—Construction of—When a law is merely being codified, and especially when it is being transferred almost bodily from one Code to another, departure is not to be presumed unless it is made in express terms 35*f*
Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Suit is not one for accounts, merely because some accounts have to be gone into 64*a* Land Acquisition — Acquisition of malik makbuza—Landlord is not entitled to compensation (Obiter) 121*a* Landlord and Tenant — Principles of English feudal law are inapplicable to malguzar 91*a* ——Absolute occupancy tenancy — On death of tenant without heirs tenancy does not revert to landlord but Crown takes it by escheat 91*b*
——Absolute occupancy tenant dying without heirs and leaving estate burdened with mortgage — Mortgage whether would be extinguished (Quære) 91*c*
——Occupancy holding — Joint tenants—One joint tenant dying without any heirs—No division of tenancy by metes and bounds — Lambardar is not entitled to sue for joint possession of undivided half share of deceased tenant 4
Letters Patent — Practice — Leave — Judge being satisfied that there is no case to be made out by appellant, refusing to admit second appeal — He is not justified in granting leave to file Letters Patent Appeal 193*a* ——(Nagpur) — Letters Patent appeal should be filed within 30 days — Whether time during which Court is closed should be excluded (Quære) 122*a*

Letters Patent
——Cl. 10—Decision of High Court Judge disposing of appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act, is not judgment — Letters Patent Appeal does not lie 122*b*
*Limitation Act (9 of 1908), S. 12 (2) Application for copies made on day on which judgment is pronounced—That day must be included in days requisite for obtaining copies : 13 N L R 89=A I R 1917 Nag 196=40 Ind Cas 425, OVERRULED (Per Stone C. J. and Niyogi J.; Clarke J., contra.) 150*b*
——S. 14 — Court — Governor-General is not a Court 141*f*
——S. 14 — Proceedings carried on before Railway Board do not extend time under Section 14 141*h*
——S. 15 — Stay of execution — Decree-holder obtaining stay of execution in previous suit against him by offering security of decree obtained by him against judgment-debtor whose estate was under management of Court of Wards — Court obtaining from decree-holder undertaking not to accept payment direct from Court of Wards — Order held did not amount to stay by injunction within the meaning of S. 15: 81
——S. 20 — Part payment by manager of joint Hindu family gives fresh period of limitation against other members of family 156*a*
——S. 20 — Part payment — To give fresh period of limitation, writing need not be specifically towards principal or interest — It is enough if it is towards the debt and identifies it and amounts to acknowledgment 156*b*
——S. 23 and Arts. 142 and 144—Taking exclusive possession of land whether communal or not is not continuing trespass within the meaning of S. 23 but is dispossession under Arts. 142 and 144 145*b*
——S. 26 — Act does not exclude other modes of acquiring easements 193*c* ——Art. 10 — 'Sale' in Art. 10 is to be understood in sense in which it is used in Mahomedan law 35*e*
——Arts. 49 and 115 — Applicability — Cause of action arising ex delicto — Suit is governed by Art. 49 and not by Art. 115 177
——Art. 62 — Art. 62 applies to suit for over-charge against a Railway Company 141*g*
——Art. 85 — Mutual, open and current account — Nature explained 113
——Arts. 120 and 142 — Gallery of person's house encroaching on land of other person — Latter bringing suit against former for relief under S. 54, Specific Relief Act, coupled with prayer for possession of land beneath gallery—Suit is not governed by Art. 120 197*g*
——Art. 132 — Operation of — Debtor's default during term of mortgage when furnishes starting point of limitation stated —Mortgage for certain period also providing that debt would become exigible on default by mortgagor in payment of annual interest — Provision enures for benefit of mortgagee but not of mortgagor — Limitation against mortgagee begins when mortgage debt becomes due and not when default is made by mortgagor in payment of interest 242*c* ——Arts. 142, 144 — Applicability — Before Art. 142 can apply, it must be shown either that plaintiff was dispossessed or that he discontinued possession —Unless that is done case cannot come under Art. 142 and Art. 144 will apply 7*b*
——Art. 142 — Terms 'dispossession' and 'discontinuance' explained—Wrongful possession cannot be assumed against true owner when he himself handed over possession and was not deprived of it by other side 7*c* Mahomedan Law — Minor — Guardian— De facto guardian cannot alienate minor's immovable property without Court's permission 27*a* Minor — Conveyance and contract of sale of minor's property — Distinction between explained 265*a* ——Contract of sale by guardian on behalf of minor—Purchaser cannot ask for specific performance against minor 265*b*
Mortgage — Mortgage by conditional sale —Mortgagor's title and right of possession is not lost on date of mortgage 287*h*
——Subrogation — Land burdened with prior and subsequent mortgages purchased by person for full price and free from incumbrance—Purchaser compelled to discharge prior mortgage, when disclosed, to protect his interest — He is subrogated to rights of prior mortgagee 217
Municipality — C. P. Notification No. 5931-1924-M-8, dated 25th October 1932, Sch. 2 (e) — Ammoniumsulphate and sulphate of potash are chemicals taxable under Sch. 2 (e) even if they are used as manure 195*a*
Musalman Wakf Act (42 of 1923), S. 10 — Scope and object of Act explained —When existence of wakf tself is in dis-

Musalman Wakf Act
pute inquiry under S. 10 cannot be held 205 Partnership — Contract of partnership may be implied 301*a* ——Guardian can enter into contract of partnership on behalf of minor 301*b* Partnership Act (9 of 1932), Ss. 22 and 25 — Surety executed by partner held on behalf of firm and hence binding on other partners 31*a* ——S. 69—Suit disposed of before registration — Proceedings cannot be validated and decree cannot be passed by Appellate Court even if registration takes place during appeal 301*c*
Penal Code (45 of 1860), Ss. 34 and 120-A — Difference between S. 34 and S. 120-A explained 263*a* Pleadings — Amendment — Limitation — Amended plaint filed when suit is barred by limitation, merely furnishing particulars and introducing no new cause of action — No question of limitation arises 23*e*
Police Act (5 of 1861), S. 34 — Scope — Offence under S. 34 is cognizable offence 95*a* Practice — Revision — Incorrect view of law—High Court will interfere only when law is well known 64*c* ——Party should not suffer for error of Court 10*c*
Precedents — Principle of stare decisis — Applicability of — The principle of stare decisis does not apply and the Courts are not prevented from giving effect to what they conceive to be the law when security of title is not affected and no injustice results from so doing (FB) 186*a*
Pre-emption—Holder of decree for pre-emption depositing pre-emption price within prescribed period but withdrawing it on reversal of decree in appeal — In second appeal decree of trial Court restored—Pre-emption price which is withdrawn should be allowed to be deposited 279
——Suit for—Decree in favour of plaintiff in terms of O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C.—Plaintiff can appeal within period of limitation allowed for appeal whether or not he has made payment within period fixed by Court — Appellate Court has power to vary both price and time for payment—It should fix fresh date for payment 140
——Decree for pre-emption directing plaintiff to deposit purchase money within certain time and failing this his suit to stand dismissed — Deposit not made within time fixed — Plaintiff can appeal from decree made against him 120
——Suit for — Word 'sale' when used in connexion with pre-emption must be construed in wider sense in which it is used in Art. 10, Limitation Act, and S. 7 (vi), Court-fees Act 35*g* Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 21 (2), 28 (2) and 56 (3) — Position and powers of insolvency Court before and after adjudication explained 10*a* *——Ss. 27 (2) and 43 (1) — Court has power to extend time to apply for discharge —Lapse of time originally fixed does not automatically bring about annulment of adjudication 103*a* ——Ss. 28 (2) and 44 (2) — Order of discharge does not terminate insolvency proceedings — After order of discharge, insolvent's property does not become available to his creditors to be proceeded against in ordinary Civil Court 103*d*
——S. 28 (6) — Power of secured creditor to realize his security does not authorize him to secure out and out sale of equity of redemption from insolvent in satisfaction of his own charge decree—Such sale during pendency of insolvency proceedings is void 207*a* ——S. 30—Failure of publication of order of adjudication in Gazette is mere irregularity and does not vitiate validity of order 103*b*
——Ss. 34 (2) and 44—Order of discharge —Subsequent application for execution by decree-holder who had no notice of insolvency proceedings — To recover his debt decree-holder would have to seek recourse to Insolvency Court 103*e* ——S. 37 — Receiver applying for annulment of insolvency — Court annulling adjudication and ordering sale of property in receiver's hands for distribution of proceeds among creditors — There was no vesting order — Reverter held subject to condition to distribute proceeds among creditors 203
——S. 41 (1)—Omission to give notice of application for discharge is not irregularity if no creditor had proved his debt 103*c* ——Ss. 53 and 54 — Transfer made after presentation of creditors' petition on which order of adjudication is passed is not covered by Ss. 53 and 54 207*b*
——Ss. 56 and 4 — Powers of Insolvency Court after adjudication when insolvent's property is in custody of third person and he sets up title — Procedure for recovering

Provincial Insolvency Act possession of such property—Creditor proceeding with Court's permission is Court's agent — Property, if recovered, passes to Court — To third party's proceedings for recovering back possession all creditors are not necessary parties 10*b*
Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (9 of 1887), Sch. 2, Art. 41 — Suit by co-sharer against others for contribution in respect of payment made under joint decree falls under Art. 41 64*b*
Railways Act (9 of 1890), Ss. 41, 28 and 30 — Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to investigate into the liability of Railway Company, created by statute and the litigant is confined to the remedy specifically provided 141*c*
——S. 77—Claim for overcharges — S. 77 does not provide remedy but it cuts down one 141*a* ——S. 77—Over-charge — An over-charge is simply a charge of more than is permitted by law and should be interpreted in a wide sense 141*b*
——S. 77 — S. 77 does not contemplate that notice should be given in anticipation 141*d*
——S. 77 — The object of S. 77 is to prevent stale and dishonest claims for loss and not as means to enable the Railway authorities to deprive their customers of their just dues, but the Railway authorities are entitled to have due notice of the total extent of the claim preferred against them 141*e*
Registration Act (16 of 1908), S. 17 (1) (b) (As amended by Act 21 of 1929) — Applicability to Berar — Notification No. 3510.B issued by Governor-General in Council in 1913 stating that Registration Act (1908) shall apply to Berar subject to any amendments to which that enactment is for the time being subject in Central Provinces is not ultra vires—Amendment of 1929 therefore applies to Berar and award is compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (b) (FB) 233*a* *——Ss. 17 (1) (b) and 49 — Effect of unregistered award—Filing of award under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., affects immovable property comprised in award and therefore requires registration when it is used for purpose of being filed under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. (FB) 233*b*
*——S. 28 — Fraud on registration law—Piece of land not intended to be transferred but included in mortgage to give jurisdiction to Registrar amounts to fraud on registration law — If property so included found not to exist within jurisdiction of Registrar, registration is invalid (FB) 57*b*
——Ss. 28 and 29—To see whether document falls under S. 28 or S. 29 it must be regarded as a whole — Mortgage bond falling under S. 28, but registered in wrong office cannot be treated as registered bond falling under S. 29 (FB) 57*c*
Res Judicata—Bar of — Previous suit between same parties instituted in Small Cause Court and subsequent suit on regular side—Decision in previous suit does not operate as res judicata, although same Judge presides over both Courts 130*a* Revision—Revision application from Small Cause Court decision—Findings of fact are to be accepted, unless they are perverse or unreasonable 19*b*
Sale of Goods Act (3 of 1930), S. 4—Contract to make and deliver set of false teeth is contract for sale of goods 19*a* ——S. 16 (1)—Purchaser finding goods to be not reasonably fit for purpose for which they are required is entitled to reject them 19*c*
Second Appeal—Question of fact—Omission of lower Appellate Court to mention this or that piece of evidence is no ground for interference 221
——Court has only to see whether evidence is admissible and proper for consideration 210*a* ——Court considering documents as pieces of evidence involving no question of construction — Inference of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal 197*a* ——Exercise of discretion by trial Court and Appellate Court—High Court can see which discretion is proper 110*b*
Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), Ss. 42 and 54—Legal character—Party preventing invited persons, by peaceful measures, from attending ceremony — Declaration that party has no right to do so cannot be granted—Party having no legal obligation in matter of ceremony—No cause of action for injunction against party held existed 154*b*
Stamp Act (2 of 1899), S. 36—Once improperly stamped document is admitted S. 36 comes into play and Court should proceed as though it were properly stamped 220
Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1887), S. 8—Suits coming under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act valued at different figures for purposes

Suits Valuation Act
of jurisdiction and court-fees — Court can challenge one of those values (FB) 50c Surety—Continuing guarantee for limited amount for supply of goods on credit—Goods worth more than amount mentioned in bond supplied on credit—Surety is liable to extent mentioned in bond 31b
*——Continuing guarantee—Acknowledgment by principal debtor does not save limitation against surety 31c
Tort — Damages — Caues of action—Worry caused by opposition set up by other party is not injury in legal sense and does not furnish cause of action for damages 154a Transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882), S. 3—Notice — Conduct which can be regarded as wilful abstention stated: 132e
——S. 3—Notice to agent is constructive notice to principal 132f
——S. 6 (e)—Right to sue — Profits not due when attached becoming due and actually ascertained after attachment—Attached profits held mere right to sue and could not be transferred 97
——S. 52—Owner of property filing insolvency application and on his insolvency his property vesting in receiver — Owner cannot be said to have transferred it 128a
——S. 53—The burden of proving that a transfer was for value and without notice is on the transferee 132d
——S. 54—Mere contract of sale does not of itself create interest in or charge upon property when Transfer of Property Act applies 35c
——S. 55 (4) (b)—Unpaid vendor's charge—Difference between English law and Indian law explained 210b
*——S. 55 (4) (b)—Title passing to vendee—Suit by vendee for possession — Court though cannot pass conditional decree it is open to it, while decreeing possession, to incorporate in decree statutory charge under S. 55 (4) (b) — Vendor can enforce that charge by execution of decree and need not have recourse to separate suit 210c
—— S. 55 (6) (b) — Rights of vendee—Sale of minor's property by guardian—Purchaser has charge on minor's property for earnest money paid to guardian who contracts to sell portion of it to remove pressure on minor's estate from creditors 209
——Ss. 58 and 105 — Document fulfilling definition of usufructuary mortgage is mortgage though described as lease 166a

Transfer of Property Act
——Ss. 59-A and 68 (1) (c)—'Mortgagor' includes subsequent purchaser 256b
——S. 60—Mortgage is one and indivisible and co-mortgagees hold as tenants-in-common 136a
——Ss. 60, 67 (d) — One of three mortgagees acquiring share in mortgaged property without consent of others—Mortgage is not split up and co-mortgagees are entitled to proceed against entire property 136e
——S. 67 (d)—Severance of interest in a mortgage requires consent of all parties concerned 136f
——S. 67 (d)—Consent — What does not amount to stated 136g
——S. 68 (1) (c) — Mortgagor's liability under—Value of materials removed by him resulting in depreciation is no criterion 256d
——S. 92—Mortgage split up—Each part should be treated as independent mortgage—Person redeeming any part in full can claim right of subrogation of that part and is entitled to be substituted as decree-holder under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C. 215
——S. 100 — Agreement which creates a charge cannot be invalid simply because its provisions offend against the procedural law in latter part of S. 100 132a
——S. 100—Charge—Creating of—Agreement providing that in default of a certain payment for maintenance by one party to the other the latter will be at liberty to cultivate a field and maintain herself—Charge is created—But such a charge cannot be enforced by sale of the land 132b
——Ss. 100 and 91—Mortgagee with notice of charge on property mortgaged is bound by it as mortgagor himself 132c
——S. 100—Charge — Enforcement of—Charged created over mortgaged property—Nature of decree to be passed explained 132g
Vendor and Purchaser — Vendor repudiating bargain — Purchaser claiming specific performance how can discharge onus about readiness and willingness stated 173b
Workmen's Compensation Act (8 of 1923), S. 10 (1) — Interpretation — S. 10 does not lay down period of limitation regarding proceedings for recovery of compensation before Commissioner 106a
——S. 30 (1)—Substantial question of law—Claim disallowed in full—Appeal lies 106b

COMPARATIVE TABLES

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur = Other Journals.

AIR	Other Journals		AIR	Other Journals		AIR	Other Journals		AIR	Other Journals
1	1938 N L J	353	83	181 I C	577	154	182 I C	18	225	183 I C	748
	180 I C	496	85	1938 N L J	348		ILR 1939 N	429	226	1939 N L J	210
3	1938 N L J	416		181 I C	751	156	1939 N L J	205		181 I C	928
	179 I C	656		40 Cr L J	572		ILR 1939 N	235		40 Cr L J	638
	ILR 1939 N	355	87	1939 N L J	7		182 I C	573	227	1939 N L J	218
4	175 I C	536		ILR 1939 N	457	159	1939 N L J	275		ILR 1939 N	503
	1939 N L J	58		184 I C	44		182 I C	763		184 I C	864
5	1938 N L J	463		40 Cr L J	846	163	1939 N L J	136	230	1939 N L J	347
	180 I C	797	89	1939 N L J	18		182 I C	527		183 I C	695
	ILR 1940 N	16		181 I C	399	166	1939 N L J	308	232	1939 N L J	215
7	1938 N L J	418		1939 I T R	187		182 I C	239		182 I C	514
	181 I C	203	91	1938 N L J	366	171	1939 N L J	262	233	1939 N L J	375
10	1938 N L J	384		182 I C	263		181 I C	520	FB	183 I C	845
	179 I C	943	95	1939 N L J	101		40 Cr L J	556		ILR 1939 N	607
13	1938 N L J	434		ILR 1939 N	488	173	182 I C	12	241	1939 N L J	344
	ILR 1939 N	109		184 I C	231		1939 N L J	315		184 I C	635
	180 I C	602		40 Cr L J	905	175	1939 N L J	196	242	1939 N L J	333
	40 Cr L J	393	97	1939 N L J	1		182 I C	617		ILR 1939 N	515
17	1939 N L J	73		181 I C	533	177	1939 N L J	190	245	1939 N L J	387
	180 I C	305		ILR 1940 N	37		ILR 1939 N	498		ILR 1939 N	559
19	1939 N L J	118	101	1939 N L J	193		183 I C	386		184 I C	72
20	1939 N L J	33		182 I C	66	179	1939 N L J	238	247	1939 N L J	327
	180 I C	370		ILR 1939 N	492		ILR 1939 N	357		184 I C	494
23	1939 N L J	21	103	1939 N L J	96	183	1939 N L J	270	249	1939 N L J	409
	181 I C	106		182 I C	214		ILR 1939 N	548		185 I C	580
27	1938 N L J	409		ILR 1939 N	478	186	1939 N L J	228	256	1939 N L J	338
	180 I C	457	106	1939 N L J	90	FB	ILR 1939 N	250		184 I C	579
31	1939 N L J	80		181 I C	920		183 I C	128		ILR 1940 N	63
	179 I C	771		ILR 1939 N	460	191	1939 N L J	211	258	1939 N L J	319
33	1938 N L J	375	107	1939 N L J	13		183 I C	256	260	1939 N L J	391
	180 I C	742		181 I C	616	192	1939 N L J	161		ILR 1939 N	624
35	1938 N L J	379	110	1939 N L J	157		182 I C	733		185 I C	108
	180 I C	963		182 I C	52	193	1939 N L J	246	263	1939 N L J	373
39	1938 N L J	399		ILR 1939 N	452		183 I C	341		ILR 1939 N	644
	181 I C	411	113	1939 N L J	109	195	1939 N L J	265		41 Cr L J	27
42	1938 N L J	454		184 I C	139		183 I C	443		184 I C	412
	ILR 1939 N	306	118	1939 N L J	121	197	1939 N L J	297	265	1939 N L J	324
	181 I C	556		182 I C	102		ILR 1939 N	580		185 I C	156
44	1938 N L J	439	120	1939 N L J	160		186 I C	155		ILR 1940 N	55
	ILR 1939 N	143		182 I C	962	203	1939 N L J	186	267	1939 N L J	257
	180 I C	532	121	1939 N L J	140		183 I C	316	269	1939 N L J	504
47	1938 N L J	476		181 I C	915	205	1939 N L J	249	274	1939 N L J	421
	180 I C	792	122	1939 N L J	63		183 I C	465		185 I C	210
50	1938 N L J	327		ILR 1939 N	124		ILR 1939 N	564	277	1939 N L J	472
FB	ILR 1938 N	558		182 I C	970	207	1939 N L J	267		ILR 1939 N	697
	180 I C	271	128	1939 N L J	202		ILR 1939 N	540		185 I C	418
57	1939 N L J	44		183 I C	97		183 I C	172	279	1939 N L J	475
FB	179 I C	933	130	1939 N L J	87	209	1939 N L J	260		186 I C	21
	ILR 1939 N	64		183 I C	689		183 I C	456	281	1939 N L J	455
64	1938 N L J	457	132	1939 N L J	129	210	1939 N L J	252		185 I C	348
	181 I C	123		185 I C	33		ILR 1939 N	636		41 Cr L J	168
65	1939 N L J	27	136	1939 N L J	142		185 I C	169	282	1939 N L J	283
	180 I C	204		184 I C	719	213	1939 N L J	351		ILR 1939 N	654
69	20 N L J	12	140	1939 N L J	76		ILR 1939 N	574	287	1939 N L J	429
	171 I C	121		181 I C	895		184 I C	102	295	1939 N L J	442
	ILR 1938 N	21	141	1939 N L J	124	215	1939 N L J	369		184 I C	274
72	1938 N L J	466		185 I C	241		183 I C	651		40 Cr L J	937
	180 I C	118	145	1939 N L J	153	217	1939 N L J	366	301	1939 N L J	427
75	ILR 1938 N	509		182 I C	613		183 I C	439	302	1939 N L J	477
	1938 N L J	448	147	1939 N L J	82		ILR 1939 N	690		185 I C	780
	181 I C	5		ILR 1939 N	165	220	1939 N L J	341	305	1939 N L J	487
78	1938 N L J	459		182 I C	285		183 I C	509		ILR 1939 N	665
	180 I C	443	149	1939 N L J	198	221	1939 N L J	329		185 I C	727
	ILR 1939 N	160		183 I C	176		ILR 1939 N	510	309	1939 N L J	469
81	1939 N L J	40	150	ILR 1939 N	185		183 I C	492		184 I C	258
	181 I C	518		182 I C	662	224	183 I C	478		40 Cr L J	934
83	1939 N L J	9		1939 N L J	173		1939 N L J	256	312	1939 N L J	486
	ILR 1939 N	52	154	1939 N L J	184	225	1939 N L J	305		185 I C	888

Other Journals = All India Reporter

I. L. R. (1939) Nagpur = All India Reporter

ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR
1	1938	N	335	185	1939	N	150	312	1938	N	499	432	1938	N	377	559	1939	N	245
51	"	"	422	194	1938	"	388	318	"	"	257	450	1937	"	149	564	"	"	205
54	"	"	267	200	"	"	449	324	"	"	385	452	1939	"	110	569	1937	"	158
59	1939	"	83	206	"	"	415	330	"	"	466	457	"	"	87	574	1939	"	213
64	"	"	57	216	"	"	455	338	"	"	487	460	"	"	106	580	"	"	197
79	1938	"	288	221	"	"	314	347	"	"	77	463	1937	"	226	592	1938	"	65
81	"	"	497	226	"	"	365	350	"	"	326	465	1938	"	7	600	"	"	512
85	"	"	76	229	"	"	461	355	1939	"	3	478	1939	"	103	601	1936	"	260
88	"	"	423	235	1939	"	156	357	"	"	179	484	1938	"	247	607	1939	"	233
104	"	"	273	241	1938	"	235	367	1938	"	191	488	1939	"	95	624	"	"	260
109	1939	"	13	246	"	"	459	371	"	"	75	492	"	"	101	631	1938	"	126
116	1938	"	106	250	1939	"	186	373	"	"	183	497	1937	"	269	632	1937	"	379
119	"	"	502	261	1938	"	237	377	"	"	454	498	1939	"	177	636	1939	"	210
124	1939	"	122	266	1937	"	143	380	1937	"	396	503	"	"	227	641	1937	"	334
137	1 38	"	266	274	"	"	201	383	1938	"	97	510	"	"	221	644	1939	"	263
139	"	"	529	276	1938	"	259	393	"	"	334	515	"	"	242	648	1938	"	186
143	1939	"	44	285	"	"	14	396	"	"	182	521	1938	"	193	652	"	"	253
157	1938	"	272	290	1937	"	211	398	"	"	281	526	"	"	298	654	1939	"	282
158	"	"	448	293	1938	"	143	403	1937	"	160	530	"	"	408	665	"	"	305
160	1939	"	78	297	1937	"	188	405	1938	"	465	534	"	"	444	674	1938	"	251
165	"	"	147	300	1938	"	149	408	"	"	188	536	"	"	148	679	"	"	269
170	1938	"	420	306	1939	"	42	413	"	"	173	540	1939	"	207	686	"	"	283
175	"	"	413	310	1937	"	196	419	1937	"	293	548	"	"	183	690	1939	"	217
180	"	"	445					422	1938	"	300	556	1938	"	63	695	1938	"	51
								429	1939	"	154					697	1939	"	277

1939 Nagpur Law Journal = All India Reporter

NLJ	AIR			NLJ	AIR			NLJ	AIR			NLJ	AIR			NLJ	AIR
1	1939	N	97	140	1939	N	121	256	1939	N	224	373	1939	N	263	512	1940	N	74
7	"	"	87	142	"	"	136	257	"	"	267	375	"	"	233	514	"	"	104
9	"	"	83	150	1938	"	413	260	"	"	209	387	"	"	245	520	"	"	13
13	"	"	107	153	1939	"	145	262	"	"	171	391	"	"	260	525	"	"	8
18	"	"	89	157	"	"	110	265	"	"	195	409	"	"	249	534	"	"	79
21	"	"	23	160	"	"	120	267	"	"	207	421	"	"	274	535	"	"	47
27	"	"	65	161	"	"	192	270	"	"	183	427	"	"	301	537	"	"	75
33	"	"	20	173	"	"	150	275	"	"	159	429	"	"	287	539	"	"	1
40	"	"	81	184	"	"	154	283	"	"	282	442	"	"	295	544	"	"	84
44	"	"	57	186	"	"	203	297	"	"	197	451	1940	"	42	548	"	"	108
58	"	"	4	190	"	"	177	305	"	"	225	455	1939	"	281	551	"	"	46
63	"	"	122	193	"	"	101	308	"	"	166	458	1940	"	38	553	"	"	88
73	"	"	17	196	"	"	175	315	"	"	173	461	"	"	110	562	"	"	72
76	"	"	140	198	"	"	149	319	"	"	258	465	"	"	4	563	"	"	65
80	"	"	31	202	"	"	128	324	"	"	265	469	1939	"	309	564	"	"	117
82	"	"	147	205	"	"	156	327	"	"	247	472	"	"	277	567	"	"	81
87	"	"	130	210	"	"	226	329	"	"	221	475	"	"	279	573	"	"	70
90	"	"	106	211	"	"	191	333	"	"	242	477	"	"	302	577	"	"	99
96	"	"	103	215	"	"	232	338	"	"	256	483	1940	"	45	583	"	"	78
101	"	"	95	216	1940	"	113	341	"	"	220	486	1939	"	312	585	"	"	66
109	"	"	113	218	1939	"	227	344	"	"	241	487	"	"	305	591	"	"	94
118	"	"	19	228	"	"	186	347	"	"	230	493	1940	"	73	594	"	"	80
121	"	"	118	238	"	"	179	351	"	"	213	496	"	"	7	596	"	"	87
124	"	"	141	246	"	"	193	366	"	"	217	497	"	"	77	601	"	"	97
129	"	"	132	249	"	"	205	369	"	"	215	500	"	"	92	604	"	"	91
136	"	"	163	252	"	"	210					504	1939	"	269	605	"	"	102

CASES OVERRULED IN A. I. R. 1939 NAGPUR.

Balwant v. Ratanlal, (1923) A I R 1923 Nag 161=68 I C 429	Overruled in A I R 1939 Nag 179.
Namdarkhan v. Nanhoo, (1926) 23 N L R 100=9 N L J 97=A I R 1926 Nag 405=95 I C 89	Overruled in A I R 1939 Nag 186 (F B).
Narayandas Bhagwanji & Co. v. Kalyanji Mawaji & Co., (1928) 24 N L R 55= A I R 1928 Nag 173=107 I C 525	Overruled in A I R 1939 Nag 186 (F B).
Salam Singh v. Hira, (1917) 13 N L R 89=A I R 1917 Nag 196=40 IC 425	Overruled in A I R 1939 Nag 150.
Secy. of State v. Dadoo Ghanshyam Singh, (1937) AIR 1937 Nag 14=165 IC 106	Overruled in A I R 1939 Nag 50 (F B).

THE

ALL INDIA REPORTER

1939

Nagpur High Court

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 1

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Trivenibai w/o Balkrishna — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Deorao Govind Deshpande — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 207 of 1936, Decided on 17th August 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. District Judge, Chanda, D/- 9th January 1936.

(a) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance— Agreement executed in favour of widow agreeing to pay her certain amount annually as maintenance — Charge created on portion of family property in respect of maintenance— Widow obtaining decree for arrears of maintenance and getting property sold in execution —Property not sold subject to charge—Charge for subsequent years is extinguished, so far as property sold is concerned.

Where the members of a joint Hindu family execute an agreement in favour of a Hindu widow entitled to maintenance from the family property, agreeing to pay to her certain amount every year for her maintenance, at the same time creating charge on a portion of the family property in respect of the maintenance, and the widow after arrears of maintenance have accrued, obtains a decree and brings a portion of the property which has been charged to sale in execution of the decree and the property is not sold subject to the charge, the charge for the subsequent years is extinguished so far as the property sold is concerned by reason of the execution sale, and the auction purchaser is not liable to pay out of the property in his hands the maintenance allowance subsequent to the period covered by the decree. [P 3 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance — Nature of widow's right to maintenance explained—Ways in which her right can be satisfied enumerated.

There are many ways in which a right to maintenance to which a Hindu widow is entitled and which is charged on the family property may be satisfied. The widow can, if she so chooses, live with her husband's family and be supported by them, and in that case her rights, so far as the property is concerned, are no higher than those given by S. 39, T. P. Act. Her right is not to the property itself but to the profits arising out of it. Another way in which the family can discharge its obligations towards her is by assigning a portion of the property to her in lieu of her maintenance. Here again her rights are to look to the profits and not to the property, but she can, if she so chooses, alienate her right to the enjoyment and possession of that property or any portion of it for the period of her life, and if she chooses to do so, she cannot turn round afterwards and demand that she be maintained out of it. It is also open to the widow to agree upon a definite sum for her maintenance and agree that it shall be a charge upon a definite and specified portion of the family property. The charge holder has two remedies, open to her. She can, if she so chooses, ask for a receiver or she can bring the property or portion of it to sale on obtaining a decree. When the decree-holder with a choice of remedies deliberately selects the one which involves sale of a portion of the property, she must be taken to have given up her right to the charge as she has a right to do, unless she expressly reserves it at the sale : A I R 1932 All 662 ; A I R 1925 P C 176 and 26 Cal 341, Ref. [P 2 C 2; P 3 C 1, 2]

T. J. Kedar and R. G. Rau — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye — for Respondent.

Judgment. — On 23rd January 1923 defendants 1 and 2 executed an agreement, Ex. P-10, in favour of the plaintiff-appellant agreeing to pay her during her life-time Rs. 100 a year for her maintenance, and at the same time a charge was created on the family property mentioned in the deed, namely a malguzari share and four fields, in the following words, and the incumbrance of your maintenance shall remain on the above property. In case I do not pay you the amount, you may recover the same from the above property.

Arrears accrued and so the plaintiff sued the executants of the deed in Civil Suit

No. 245 of 1930 and obtained a decree on 9th December 1930. The plaint in that suit is Ex. 3, D-2 and the decree Ex. P-4. The decree directed that in default of payment of Rs. 219 and Rs. 29-12-0 as costs, certain property (which I am given to understand by counsel on both sides is the same as the property covered by Ex. P-10, the numbers of the fields having been changed in the meanwhile) be sold. The money was not paid and so, a part of the property charged, namely the malguzari share, (but not the fields), was brought to sale and purchased by defendant 3. Ex. 3, D-4 dated 31st October 1933 is the sale certificate.

The plaintiff's maintenance again fell into arrears and so the present suit was instituted for the arrears due for the three years from 5th May 1930 to 5th May 1933. This time defendant 3 was also joined because, according to the plaintiff, she still has a charge upon the property purchased by him on 31st October 1933, and the question which I have to decide is whether the charge for the subsequent years was extinguished so far as the malguzari share is concerned by reason of defendant 3's purchase or not. The first Court held that it was not, while the lower Appellate Court holds that it was. The plaintiff appeals and defendant 3 is the only respondent before me.

There can be no doubt that in the ordinary way a charge upon property is extinguished by sale of that property in satisfaction of a claim giving rise to the charge. But the learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant contends that the sale in this case was not in satisfaction of the whole of the right which gave rise to the charge but of a portion only. He argued that the right conferred by Ex. P-10 was to receive Rs. 100 a year for maintenance during the whole of the plaintiff's life. The right dealt with by the decree related only to a small fraction of this, namely to the arrears due for two years. Therefore, if any portion of the charge was extinguished by the sale, it was only that portion of it which related to those two years; the remainder of the charge was left intact. Consequently, since defendant 3 purchased with his eyes open—even if he did not know what the suit was about, Ex. P-10 is a registered document sufficient to fasten him with notice—the charge is still there.

I think this is pressing the doctrine too far. Unfortunately, I have not been able to find any case in point and so must fall back on first principles. The charge created by Ex. P-10 was in respect of a claim which a Hindu widow (the plaintiff) was making for her maintenance. Now there are many ways in which such a right to maintenance can be satisfied. The widow can, if she so chooses, live with her husband's family and be supported by them and in that case her rights, so far as the property is concerned, are no higher than those given by S. 39, T. P. Act. It will be observed that the right contemplated there is the right to receive maintenance "from the profits of immovable property"; and this of course is all that the Hindu law contemplates. Her right is not to the property itself but to the profits which arise out of it.

Another way in which the family can discharge its obligations towards her is by assigning a portion of the property to her in lieu of her maintenance. Here again her rights are to look to the profits and not to the property, but she can, if she so chooses, alienate her right to the enjoyment and possession of that property or any portion of it for the period of her life, and if she chooses to do so, she cannot turn round afterwards and demand that she be maintained out of it. Her right to make an alienation of this kind has been upheld in 54 All 366;[1] and even in 47 All 385[2] where the right was conferred expressly "without power of transfer" their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed a receiver to be appointed. Therefore it is clear that she has this limited right of alienation, and if she has that when the property is in her own hands, she equally has the right to consent to an alienation by some male member of the family when it is not.

If then these two points are conceded, I cannot see how the position can alter when the parties concerned adopt still another course which is also open to them, namely to agree upon a definite sum for maintenance and agree that it shall be a charge upon a definite and specified portion of the family property. The basic right to maintenance has not in any way altered, nor yet the idea that the widow is to look to the profits arising out of the property and not to the property itself. All that has happened is that, that which was vague and indefinite before has now become concrete: the amount has been specified and also the property to which alone she is now entitled to look. It is a position mid-way between the other two.

1. Dhup Nath v. Ram Charitra, (1932) 19 A I R All 662=143 I C 65=54 All 366.
2. Rajendra Narain Singh v. Mt. Sundar Bibi, (1925) 12 A I R P C 176=87 I C 295=47 All 385=52 I A 262 (P C).

Now let us see how the widow can enforce these rights. As I have said the primary idea in these cases is that the widow is to look to the profits arising out of the property and not to the property itself. I have already pointed out that in every case where the widow has a right to maintenance, she has a floating charge over the whole of the property under Sec. 39, T. P. Act, and that if she chooses to agree to or sanction a voluntary alienation of some portion of the profits, whether for her maintenance or for any other reason, the charge disappears. It would, in my opinion, equally disappear if instead of agreeing to a voluntary alienation she brought the property to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of maintenance. How then can the position differ simply because the floating charge has now assumed definite shape both as regards the amount and as regards the property against which it is to be enforced?

The charge holder has two remedies in all such cases. She can, if she so chooses, ask for a receiver. This was done in 26 Cal 441[3] under the terms of the charge decree itself and in 47 All 385,[2] which I have already cited, their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed the creditors of a person in possesion in lieu of maintenance and without powers of alienation, even during his lifetime, to obtain a receiver. It follows that when the charge decree does not itself make provision for the appointment of a receiver in default of punctual payment, the Court can sanction it in execution at a later stage. This is the proper course when the widow wants to maintain her security intact and is content with such profits as the property may yield.

But of course she is not bound down to that. She can also bring the property or a portion of it to sale as she did in this case. But if she does that, then the principles which I have outlined above must apply. Any other view would make a sale impossible, or at any rate very difficult. Here we have a malguzari share and four fields made the subject-matter of a charge to secure a sum of Rs. 100 a year. Presumably they together were considered sufficient to yield an income of about Rs. 100 a year. We find that only a small portion of this property is sold, and the unfortunate purchaser is now expected to supply the entire Rs. 100 a year out of this fraction of the whole. Who would buy in such circumstances? It would be unjust in the extreme to interpret the law in this way, unless of course the property was expressly sold subject to the charge, which is not the case here; all that the plaintiff contends is that the charge is implied. It would be unjust not only to the purchaser but to future decree-holders as well.

On the other hand, when a decree-holder with a choice of remedies deliberately selects the one which involves sale of a portion of the property, I can see no reason in principle why the usual rules should not prevail. She must be taken in such cases to have given up her right to the charge, as she has a right to do, unless she expressly reserves it at the sale. I therefore uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

3. Hemangines Dassee v. Kumode Chunder Dass, (1899) 26 Cal 441=3 C W N 189.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 3

NIYOGI J.

Shaligram Shriram Dangra — Decree-holder — Appellant.

v.

Sheopratap Wallabhadas and another — Judgment-debtors — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 4 of 1936, Decided on 26th August 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 26th November 1935.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60—Motor tractor is not "implement of husbandry," more so when not used for agriculture but for driving flour-mill.

A motor-tractor cannot be said to be an "implement of husbandry" within the meaning of S. 60, more particularly so when at the time of attachment it is not being used for agriculture but for driving a flour-mill. It is not therefore exempt from attachment. It is not indispensable for agriculture and therefore it cannot be regarded as being essential to it. [P 4 C 1, 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60—Term "implement"—Meaning of.

It would be erroneous to extend the meaning of the word "implement" occurring in S. 60, beyond what it was understood to signify in 1908. [P 4 C 2]

W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

V. K. Rajwade — for Respondent 1.

Order. — In execution of a decree in Civil Suit No. 80 of 1932 the appellant attached a motor-tractor belonging to the respondents (judgment-debtors). At the time of attachment it was not being used for agriculture but for driving a flour-mill. Both the Courts below have agreed in the view that the motor-tractor was an implement of husbandry and therefore exempt from attachment. I have taken some time to consider the question and I find it difficult to persuade myself that a motor-tractor can be classed with the implements of husbandry. The motor-tractor is an internal combustion machine which performs the work of bullocks and is used for its power. It is not indispensable for agriculture and therefore it cannot be regarded as being essential to it. The expression "implements of husbandry' occurring in S. 60, Civil P. C., read with reference to its context appears to negative the view taken by the Courts below. That expression is preceded by "tools of artisans" and followed by "cattle." That indicates a class of husbandmen who are of the same status as artisans and who perform their agricultural operations with the help of animate beings and not inanimate machinery. The "implements" of the husbandman correspond to the "tools" of artisans.

Artisan is a person who is trained to manual dexterity in some mechanic art or trade. He is a handicraftsman or a mechanic. Tools mean such instruments as hammer, saw, plane, file and the like used in the manual arts to facilitate mechanical operations. Implement also means an instrument used in work especially manual work (see Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary in 4 volumes). Implements would mean such instruments as the agriculturist handles in the course of his agricultural work or work connected with agriculture. Driving a motor-tractor cannot be said to be manual work and it cannot therefore be regarded as an implement. S. 60, Civil P. C., speaks of implements and cattle which term applies to bullocks as well. It would be absurd to say that bullocks are implements. Then how can a motor-tractor which is a substitute for bullocks be regarded as an implement? The Civil Procedure Code was enacted in 1908 when the automobile was just making its appearance in big cities in India and the possibilities of its penetrating into the countryside for agricultural purposes was presumably not contemplated by the Legislature. It would therefore be erroneous to extend the meaning of the word implement occurring in S. 60 beyond what it was understood to signify in 1908. In any case the motor-tractor, as has been found by the lower Appellate Court, was, at the time it was attached, being used for driving a flour-mill, i. e. for an industrial purpose. The evidence shows that it had been so used for at least two years. It could not then be treated as an agricultural implement. The order releasing the motor-tractor from attachment is set aside. The appeal succeeds with costs in all Courts. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

R.M./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 4

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Amergir Ramgir Gosai — Appellant.

v.

Rambhajan Ram Sewak — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 551 of 1935, Decided on 3rd December 1937, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 20th August 1935.

Landlord and Tenant—Occupancy holding—Joint tenants—One joint tenant dying without any heirs—No division of tenancy by metes and bounds — Lambardar is not entitled to sue for joint possession of undivided half share of deceased tenant.

Certain fields originally formed an occupancy holding of two persons. One of them died without leaving any person who could be his heir under the Tenancy Act. The lambardar of the village in which the fields were situated sued for joint possession of the deceased tenant's undivided half share, as the ultimate reversioner under the law. There had never been any division of tenancy by metes and bounds :

Held that the lambardar was not entitled to joint possession of the undivided half share of the deceased tenant until the rights of both the tenants had determined. That the law applicable was the same whether the two tenants were originally let into possession at one and the same time or whether they came to acquire their rights one after the other : A I R 1934 Nag 237 and A I R 1927 Nag 351, Ref. [P 5 C 1]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff who is a lambardar of the village in which the property in suit is situate sues for joint possession of an undivided half share in the plaint fields. It is admitted that these fields originally formed an occupancy holding of two persons Gurudin and the defendant Rambhajan. Gurudin died in April 1934 without leaving any person who could be his heir under the Tenancy Act. Therefore the plaintiff sues for joint possession of Gurudin's undivided half share as the ultimate reversioner under the law. It is admitted that there has never been any division of the tenancy by metes and bounds. There is a dispute about the manner in which these tenancy rights are acquired. The defendant's case is that they were jointly acquired, while the plaintiff states that Gurudin acquired the entire holding first and that Rambhajan was admitted as a co-sharer on a later date. I cannot see that this makes any difference to the question now at issue. The new tenant could only have been introduced with the consent of all concerned. That means that there was a fresh contract in place of the old one. The old tenancy was determined by consent of the parties and a new letting of the two together took its place. The law applicable will therefore be the same whether the two were originally let into possession at one and the same time or whether they came to acquire their rights one after the other as D. W. 1 indicates. It is argued that S. 11, Tenancy Act, shows that there can be no survivorship and that under S. 13 a landlord is the ultimate reversioner. Therefore, it is stated that Gurudin's undivided half share could not pass to his co-tenant Rambhajan and that the landlord is entitled to possession, but this, in my opinion, misconceives the real position.

When an owner of property carves a lesser interest, such as a tenancy, out of his rights, the reversion of course remains in him, but when the reversion falls in, there is no transfer of title from the tenant to himself. He has retained to himself his title intact all the time but his right to possession and to the exercise of certain other acts of ownership remains in abeyance until the lesser right which he has created in the land is determined. If then he chooses to place two persons on the land giving each a right to uninterrupted possession of the whole upon their paying him jointly the whole rent his reversion cannot fall in until the rights of both have determined. It is not a question of survivorship as ordinarily understood, and is certainly not a question of the landlord succeeding to the deceased tenant as his heir. The rule, as I have said, is not one of succession or of a transfer of title, but that the reversion falls in when the lesser interests carved out of the estate have determined. It is on this principle that one co-tenant is not allowed to surrender his undivided share in a holding which has not been divided by metes and bounds : 31 N L R 62.[1] Any other view would bring about this absurd and anomalous legal position. A man who is the landlord of the whole would be entitled to demand the entire and undivided rent of the whole holding jointly from his own tenant and himself, and in the event of it being not paid be entitled to evict his co-tenant and himself. He would be his own tenant—a position which is legally untenable. This is also the view in A I R 1927 Nag 351,[2] a case which is not unlike the present except that it is the other way round. The view taken by the Courts below is therefore correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Annasa v. Shankar Balaji, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 237=151 I C 505=31 N L R 62 (S B).
2. Nago Rao v. Mt. Alookhi, (1927) 14 A I R Nag 351=104 I C 584.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 5

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Lakhandhar Bholadhar and others — Defendants — Appellants.

v.

Harlalpuri Shankerpuri Gosai and others — Plaintiffs — Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 3 of 1936, Decided on 14th September 1938, from order of Vivian Bose J., Reported in A I R 1937 Nagpur 163.

C. P. Land Revenue Code (2 of 1917), Sec. 220 (n), (o) — A and R cosharers in village assigned shares in imperfect partition—A alleging that partition was subsequently modified by arbitration—Parties in dispute as to basis on which perfect partition should proceed — Revenue member finally deciding that it was to be made in accordance with imperfect partition as modified by subsequent arbitration—R filing suit for declaration that shares in village were as they were fixed at imperfect partition and not as modified by arbitration — Held that suit was maintainable — That jurisdiction of Civil Court was not barred for purpose of declaring title of parties.

A and R were cosharers in a village. In 1913-1914 there was an imperfect partition of the village, the parties being assigned certain shares. A alleged that the partition was subsequently modified by arbitration in 1917. When, subsequently, at the time of settlement proceedings, the perfect partition of the village came before the Settlement Officer for consideration, the parties were in dispute as to the basis on which the partition should proceed, R saying that it should be made in accordance with the imperfect partition of 1913 while A contended that it should be in accordance with the 1917 award. The Revenue member finally ordered that the perfect partition should be made in accordance with the imperfect partition of 1913 as modified by the award. R thereupon filed a suit for a declaration that the shares in the village were as they were fixed at the time of the imperfect partition and not as modified by the award :

Held that the suit was maintainable ; whether the decision of the Revenue Court was intra vires or ultra vires, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was not barred for the purpose of declaring the titles of the parties, although such Court has no power to interfere with the partition made by the Revenue Officer. [P 7 C 2]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellants.

D. T. Mangalmurti and N. T. Mangalmurti — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The parties to this appeal are cosharers in the village of Pandhi in the Bilaspur District. In 1913-14 there was an imperfect partition of the village, the parties being assigned certain shares. The appellants-defendants alleged that this partition was subsequently modified by arbitration in 1917. When thereafter settlement proceedings commenced in Bilaspur, the perfect partition of this village came before the Settlement Officer for consideration and the parties were in dispute as to the basis on which the partition should proceed. The respondents-plaintiffs said that the partition should be made in accordance with the imperfect partition of 1913 while the appellants-defendants said that it should be made in accordance with the 1917 award. The contest was carried up to the Revenue Member who ordered that the perfect partition should be made in accordance with the imperfect partition of 1913 as modified by the award. The plaintiffs have now filed this suit for a declaration that the shares in the village are as they were fixed at the time of the imperfect partition and not as modified by the award. The question for determination before us is whether such a suit lies in view of the provisions of S. 220 (n) and (o), Land Revenue Act.

There is no doubt that if the Revenue Courts have authority to decide the question whether the imperfect partition without the award or imperfect partition cum the award was to be the basis of the perfect partition, then the Civil Courts are barred by Section 220 from entertaining the same question. Therefore the question resolves itself into one as to whether the Revenue Courts have such authority. It is a self-evident fact that the Revenue Court have decided that question and have made the partition in accordance with that decision, and, as pointed out by Bose J., the Civil Courts have no power to interfere with the partition. But if the determination of that question was not within the province of the Revenue Courts, then S. 220 will not operate to bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide it. What the effect of such a decision would be is another matter supposing that plaintiffs were successful in the suit. The Revenue Courts are under no obligation to alter the partition which they have made as a result of anything which the Civil Courts might decide on this question, and even if successful the plaintiffs might have nothing more than a paper decree. They say however that they are willing to take their chance as to whether the decree will be of any material value to them or not. S. 220, Land Revenue Act, lays down, 'omitting the words which are irrelevant for the purposes of the case before us, > except as otherwise provided in this Act or in any other enactment for the time being in force, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit instituted to obtain a decision or an order on any matter which any Revenue Officer is by this Act empowered to determine, decide or dispose of and in particular and without prejudice to the generality of this provision no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters: (n) the partition or union of mahals or pattis ; and (o) the distribution of the land by partition.

The Chapter of the Act which deals with partition is Chap. 11. Sec. 161 begins by explaining partition to be of two kinds: perfect and imperfect. Ss. 162 to 183 deal with imperfect partition, with which we are not at present concerned. Although there are detailed provisions occupying 22 Sections of the Act as to how imperfect partition is to be carried out, there are only three Sections, 184 to 186, devoted to perfect partition, and of these only one, S. 185, is of importance to us here. From S. 184 we find that an application for perfect partition is to show that the share which it is desired to form into a separate mahal is already held in severalty, except such portion of it as may be impartible. S. 185 then goes on to provide that, subject to rules made under S. 227, the Settlement Officer may, after making with the consent of the parties such modifications in the pattis as he thinks necessary, declare the pattis to be separate mahals, provided that no patti shall be declared to be a separate mahal until the proprietors of other pattis in the mahal have been given an opportunity of objecting. The rules framed under S. 227 commence with the form in which an application for partition is to be made and there is a foot-note to the effect that:

It is immaterial whether the shares are held in severalty as the result of an imperfect partition made by the Deputy Commissioner or by a private arrangement among the co-sharers.

Rule 3 then provides for summonses to issue to the other co-sharers and it is then laid down that the Settlement Officer is to record their objections if any. Nothing is said as to what action he is to take after he has recorded them. Rule 5 then provides that if the Settlement Officer considers it expedient with the consent of the parties to make any modifications in the existing pattis he shall record the modifications he makes in a certain form. This rule is evidently the result of the clause in Sec. 185, "after making with the consent of the parties such modifications in the pattis as he thinks necessary." Then Section 186 says what is to happen if the Settlement Officer decided to unite mahals or pattis instead of separating them, and it is significant that in that case he is specially given power to consider the objections if any of the proprietor. Thus when we consider the elaborate provisions that are provided for settling disputes at the time of an imperfect partition and even when the Settlement Officer decides to unite the mahals or pattis instead of separating them, the absence of any provision for settling disputes at the time of the division of the mahals or pattis in a perfect partition must be intentional. This is especially so when we consider the circumstances of a settlement. The Settlement Officer at the time of a settlement has to record the particulars of all the villages in the area under settlement. If it were necessary for him to go into and decide the disputes in each village at such a time and in particular about the perfect partition of the village or if he had to wait until those disputes had been resolved in the Civil Court, the settlement would be almost interminable. For these practical reasons therefore it appears that the Settlement Officer has not been given the power to decide disputes which arise at the time of a perfect partition.

It is true that in the present instance he has, or rather the ultimate Revenue Court of Appeal has, decided the dispute and has made the partition in accordance with the manner in which that decision has been given. It is not for us to say whether in doing so the Revenue Court has acted ultra vires or not. We agree however with the learned Judge in his view that whether the decision of the Revenue Court is intra vires or ultra vires the Civil Court's jurisdiction has not been barred for the purpose of declaring the titles of the parties. We also agree with the learned Judge that the other provisions of the Land Revenue Act point to the same conclusion. Thus under S. 69 at the time of settlement the Settlement Officer has been directed to ascertain and determine the extent of all land held as khudkast and record it as such. The second declaration which the plaintiffs seek in the present case challenges the Settlement Officer's decision on this point, and whereas the Settlement Officer has been empowered by S. 72 summarily to decide the question, S. 80 preserves the right of the aggrieved party to go to the Civil Court and have the question decided definitely. We are therefore in agreement with the learned Judge in the view he has taken of the case, and the result is that the appeal must be dismissed. Costs of the Letters Patent appeal will be paid by the appellants; other costs will abide the result as already ordered.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 7

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Meherban Lalli Pinjara — Plaintiff— Appellant.

v.

Yusufkhan Kallu Pinjara — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 360 of 1936, Decided on 13th September 1938, from appellate decree of Second Additional Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 30th April 1936.

(a) Adverse possession—Burden of proof—Suit for possession of property—Plaintiff's title as well as defendant's possession for more than 12 years before suit established—Plaintiff's plea that he has let in defendant as tenant not established—Defendant pleading adverse possession—Burden of proof is on him—If he does not discharge it, plaintiff is entitled to decree.

Where in a suit for possession of property, the title of the plaintiff, as well as the possession of the defendant for more than 12 years before suit are established and the plaintiff pleads that he has let the defendant in possession as a tenant but that has not been proved and the defendant pleads adverse possession, the burden of proof, in such a case, is on the defendant, and if he does not establish adverse possession, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession : 25 All 256 (F B); 25 All 498 (F B) and A I R 1935 Mad 754, Rel. on. [P 9 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142, 144—Applicability — Before Art. 142 can apply, it must be shown either that plaintiff was dispossessed or that he discontinued possession — Unless that is done case cannot come under Art. 142 and Art. 144 will apply.

In a case which falls under Art. 142, the plaintiff must prove not only title but also possession within 12 years of suit. But before that Article can apply, it must be shown, either that the plaintiff was dispossessed, or that he discontinued the possession. This can be established either by the facts admitted in the plaint or pleadings, or if not admitted there, then by the facts actually found. But unless that is done the case cannot come under Art. 142 and so the residuary Art. 144 would apply. [P 9 C 1, 2]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142—Terms 'dispossession' and 'discontinuance' explained—Wrongful possession cannot be assumed against true owner when he himself handed over possession and was not deprived of it by other side.

The term 'dispossession' applies when a person comes in and drives out others from the possession. It imports ouster, a driving out of possession against the will of the person in actual possession. This driving out cannot be said to have occurred when according to the case of both sides the transfer of possession was voluntary, not against the will of the person in possession but in accordance with his wishes and active consent. The term "discontinuance" however implies a voluntary act, an abandonment of possession followed by the actual possession of another. It implies that the person discontinuing has given up the land and left it to be possessed by any one choosing to come in. There must be an intention to abandon title before there can be said to be a discontinuance in possession. But this cannot be assumed. It must be either admitted or proved. So strong in fact is the position of the rightful owner that even when he has been dispossessed by a trespasser and that trespasser abandons possession either voluntarily or by vis major, for however short a time, before he has actually perfected his title by 12 years' adverse possession, the possession of the true owner is deemed to revive and he gets a fresh starting point for limitation. Wrongful possession cannot be assumed against the true owner when the facts disclose that he himself voluntarily handed over possession and was not deprived of it by the other side : 35 Bom 79; A I R 1923 Cal 1; (1881) 14 Ch D 537; 29 Cal 518 (P C); 6 Cal 311 and 9 Cal 698, Rel. on. [P 9 C 2; P 10 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115 — Person building on land belonging to another has no equitable right to possession of land on ground that owner stood by and allowed construction to proceed, unless it is shown that he supposed land to be his own.

Before a person building on the land of another can be said to have an equitable right to possession of the land, on the ground that the true owner stood by and allowed the construction to proceed, it is necessary, first, that the stranger must have supposed it to be his own, and in the second place, there must have been a standing by : 2 N L R 4, Rel. on. [P 10 C 2]

M. Adhikari and J. Sen — for Appellant.

K. B. Tare — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's case is that he purchased the house in suit from one Sakharam for Rs. 100 on 4th May 1914 under the sale deed, Ex. P-5. He thereupon rented it to the defendant in the year 1918 at a rental of Re. 1 a month. The rent was duly paid till May 1934 and was thereafter defaulted. When the plaintiff demanded the rent for the months of June to October 1934 inclusive, the defendant repudiated the plaintiff's title and set up one in himself. Therefore the plaintiff served the defendant with a notice on 26th November 1934 calling upon him to quit by 1st January 1935 at the conclusion of the month of December 1934 and also to pay the rent due for the months of June to October 1934. The defendant has not complied, so the plaintiff sues for possession and for arrears of rent for seven months. The defendant sets up a title in himself. He admits the plaintiff's purchase from Sakharam and also Sakharam's right to sell but he says the plaintiff himself sold the house to him in 1914 for a sum of Rs. 50. He denied the lease and set forth various acts of ownership which he said he had exercised to the plaintiff's knowledge for a number of years. The first Court upheld the plaintiff's claim but the lower Appellate Court dismissed it after coming to the following findings. The learned Judge accepted, as of course he had to accept because the defendant himself had admitted it, the title of the plaintiff under his sale deed of 4th May 1914. But he held that the lease which he had pleaded was not proved. He also held that the sale which the defendant had pleaded was not proved either but he accepted the defendant's story that he had rebuilt the house in 1926. Then he came to the following curious and inconsistent findings. First of all he stated :

> The facts on record clearly show that the appellant (defendant) has been exercising acts of absolute ownership over the house at least since about 1926 and evidently to the knowledge of the respondent (plaintiff).

Then in the very next sentence he said:

> I believe the appellant (defendant) has not done these things by way of asserting a title adverse to that of the respondent after entering into the possession of the house as a tenant. Because the respondent would have in that case got him ejected immediately.

It is admitted by both sides that the title originally resided in the plaintiff. It is also admitted that the defendant was let into possession by the plaintiff. There was therefore no way in which the title which admittedly had originally resided in the plaintiff could have passed to the defendant except by the sale pleaded, or by adverse possession. The sale has been negatived and an assertion of a hostile title has also been negatived. It follows, the plaintiff is entitled to possession. Even if it be accepted that the lower Appellate Court has found that acts of absolute ownership were exercised by the defendant to the knowledge of the plaintiff and that there was therefore a clear assertion of a hostile title, this was only from September 1926 when the house was rebuilt after the flood and that is within 12 years of suit. Therefore even on that finding the plaintiff's title was not displaced before suit and so he is entitled to possession. Cases of this nature have twice been considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court. In both, the title of the plaintiff was established as well as possession of the defendant for more than 12 years before suit. In both, the plaintiff had pleaded that he had let the defendant in possession as a tenant and the Courts found that that was not proved. In both, the defendant pleaded adverse possession. The High Court held that in those circumstances the burden was on the defendant, and since he had not established it in either case, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession. These decisions are to be found in 25 All 256[1] and 25 All 498.[2] A similar view was taken in A I R 1935 Mad 754.[3] It is also my view.

There can be no doubt that in a case which falls under Art. 142, Limitation Act, the plaintiff must prove not only title but also possession within 12 years of suit. But before that Article can apply, it must be shown either that the plaintiff was dispossessed or that he discontinued the possession. This can be established either by the facts admitted in the plaint or pleadings, or if not admitted there, then by the facts actually found. But unless that is done, the case cannot come under Art. 142 and so the residuary Art. 144 would apply. The meaning of the term dispossession has been considered in 35 Bom 79[4] at p. 89. It is pointed out there on the authority of an English case that the term applies when "a person comes in and drives out the others from possession." It imports ouster, a driving out from possession against the will of the person in actual possession. This is also the view in 50 Cal 49[5] at p. 63. It is impossible to hold that this driving out occurs when, according to the case of both sides, the transfer of possession was voluntary: not against the will of the plaintiff but in accordance with his wishes and with his active consent. Turning now to the question of discontinuance, that implies a voluntary act, an abandonment of possession followed by the actual possession of another. The words "dispossession" and "discontinuance of possession" are taken from the English Statute of Limitation (Sec. 3 of 3 & 4 William IV, Ch. 7) and have been defined by Fry J. in (1881) 14 Ch D 537[6] as follows:

> In my view the difference between dispossession and discontinuance of possession might be expressed in this way: the one is where a person comes in and drives out the others from possession, the other case is when the person in possession goes out and is followed into possession by others.

This definition has been applied in India in 35 Bom 79[4] at p. 90 where Chandavarkar J. states that discontinuance implies > that the person discontinuing has given up the land and left it to be possessed by anyone choosing to come in.

It is obvious then that there must be an intention to abandon title before there can be said to a discontinuance of possession. But this cannot be assumed. It must be either admitted or proved. So strong in fact is the position of the rightful owner that even when he has been dispossessed by a trespasser and that trespasser abandons possession either voluntarily or by vis major, for however short a time, before he has actually perfected his title by 12 years' adverse possession, the possession of the

1. Abdul Ghani v. Mt. Babni, (1903) 25 All 256 =1903 A W N 18 (F B).
2. Balmakund v. Dalu, (1903) 25 All 498 = 1903 A W N 112 (F B).
3. Sulaiman Rowther v. Dawood Khan Sahib, (1935) 22 A I R Mad 754=156 I C 581.
4. Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna Thite, (1911) 35 Bom 79 = 8 I C 639 = 12 Bom L R 956.
5. Charu Chandra Pramanik v. Nahush Chandra Kundu, (1923) 10 A I R Cal 1 = 74 I C 630= 50 Cal 49=36 C L J 35.
6. Rains v. Buxton, (1881) 14 Ch D 537 = 49 L J Ch 473=43 L T 88=28 W R 954.

true owner is deemed to revive and he gets a fresh starting point for limitation. This is what happened in 6 C W N 617[7] and their Lordships of the Privy Council held at pp. 622 and 623 that when land is inundated by floods "the constructive possession is (if anywhere) with the true owners" and that therefore they obtain a fresh starting point of limitation. So also in 6 Cal 311[8] at p. 314 where an owner of property placed some of his relations in possession as an act of charity and allowed them to remain there for more than 12 years, it was held that this did not constitute "discontinuance of possession" within the meaning of Art. 144 because no intention to abandon title could or ought to be presumed in such circumstances. As the Calcutta High Court observed in 9 Cal 698[9] at page 702 :

> You cannot say that an owner is out of possession unless you can say that a third party is in wrongful possession.

Of course that must be read in conjunction with the facts of that case, otherwise it would be too widely stated. There would be discontinuance of possession for example in the case of an invalid gift or in any other case where an unequivocal intention to abandon title can be deduced. But when no such circumstances are present, as here, then those observations apply ; you cannot assume wrongful possession against the true owner when the facts disclose that he himself voluntarily handed over possession and was not deprived of it by the other side. In these circumstances the fundamental right of which the Judicial Committee speak in 39 Mad 617[10] at pages 631 and 633 must prevail. There is also another reason why the plaintiff must succeed. The defendant admits that he did not obtain possession till 1920 though the plaintiff puts it at 1918. He also admits that the house was washed away by floods in 1926. He had not perfected his title by then, even assuming his possession to have been adverse ; therefore according to the decision of the Privy Council in 6 C W N 617[7] the title of the plaintiff revived during the period when occupation was rendered impossible by reason of the floods. The suit has been brought within 12 years of 1926 and so is within time.

I have been referred to Ex. D-1 but it does not contain any unequivocal admission of the defendant's title. Of course, it is relevant as a piece of evidence and has been so used by the lower Appellate Court. But, it is no higher than that. It does not establish the fact of sale either in 1918 or in 1920, nor does it establish adverse possession for more than 12 years, nor does it establish "dispossession" or "discontinuance of possession." It was argued on behalf of the defendant that in that event he has an equitable right to possession because the plaintiff stood by and allowed him to reconstruct the house in September 1926. The law as regards this is enunciated in 2 N L R 4[11] at p. 6. First of all, the stranger building on the land must have supposed it to be his own. If the defendant's sale is not proved, then no explanation has been forthcoming as to how the defendant could have supposed the land to have been his own. In the second place, there must have been a standing by and none has been pleaded. On the contrary, the plaintiff asserted that he gave the defendant notice not to build and that it was ignored. This case has been set up for the first time in second appeal and since it involves questions of fact which have not been pleaded and which have not been investigated, I cannot allow it to be raised now at this late stage. The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside in so far as it dismisses the claim for possession, and that of the first Court, in so far as it decrees the claim for possession, is restored.

R.M./R.K. Appeal allowed.

7. Secy. of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta, (1902) 29 Cal 518=29 I A 104=8 Sar 269=6 C W N 617 (P C).
8. Gobind Lall Seal v. Debendronath Mullick, (1881) 6 Cal 311=7 C L R 181.
9. Lutchmeeput Singh v. Sadaulla Nushyo, (1883) 9 Cal 698=12 C L R 382.
10. Secretary of State v. Chellikani Rama Rao, (1916) 3 A I R P C 21=35 I C 902=39 Mad 617=43 I A 192 (P C).
11. Mohan Lal v. Chunni Lal, (1906) 2 N L R 4.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 10

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Mt. Jasodabai, w/o Ramkishan Gujarathi Mod — Objector — Appellant.

v.

Firm Shrikishan Radhakishan — Creditors — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 325 of 1935, Decided on 15th August 1938, from appellate order of Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 19th March 1935.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 21 (2), 28 (2) and 56 (3)—Position and powers of insolvency Court before and after adjudication explained.

There is a wide difference between the position and powers of the Insolvency Court before and after adjudication. Before adjudication the debtor continues in possession of the property and is subject to the provisions of the Act, entitled to deal with it like any other owner. Therefore in order to prevent alienations and waste, the Insolvency Court is empowered under Sec. 21 (2) to order attachment by actul seizure of the whole or any part of the property "in the possession or under the control of the debtor," provided the conditions laid down in the Proviso obtain. But these powers of attachment are limited to the position before adjudication and they are not as wide as powers of attachment conferred upon a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. After adjudication the position changes entirely. Under S. 28 (2) the whole of the insolvent's property immediately vests in the Court or the receiver, and when there is no receiver, the Court is invested with all the rights and is authorized to exercise all the powers conferred on a receiver by the Act under S. 58. One of these rights is the right to actual physical possession of the insolvent's property by the receiver, and in order to enforce that right the Court is empowered under S. 56 (3) to remove any person who is in possession or custody of the insolvent's property from such possession or custody subject to the Proviso of that Section. [P 11 C 2; P 12 C 1]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 56 and 4 — Powers of Insolvency Court after adjudication when insolvent's property is in custody of third person and he sets up title —Procedure for recovering possession of such property — Creditor proceeding with Court's permission is Court's agent — Property, if recovered, passes to Court — To third party's proceedings for recovering back possession all creditors are not necessary parties.

Court has no power under S. 56 summarily to direct a third person to deliver up possession of property of which he is in possession if he sets up a title, however flimsy, to it. The only power the Court has in such circumstances is to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not under S. 4. But, before that can be done, a proper application has to be presented by the receiver, when there is one, or by such one of the creditors or other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate as the Court authorizes to act when there is not. But, the person who proceeds is either the Court or the receiver and not a creditor. Even when a creditor is authorized to act he is acting as an agent of the Court and has no right or title to the property itself, not even a right to possession. If he succeeds, the property passes to the Court and not to the creditor who conducted the proceedings. In such cases, if the third party is not present or does not object when the receiver or such creditor takes possession and he is therefore obliged to institute proceedings against the receiver or the creditor acting for the Court, for recovering back the possession of such property, the whole body of creditors need not be joined in such proceedings : A I R 1923 Mad 363, Rel. on. [P 12 C 1, 2]

(c) Practice — Party should not suffer for error of Court.

It is a cardinal rule of justice that no party should suffer for an error or omission of the Court when a duty is cast on the Court itself for acting or refraining from acting. [P 13 C 1]

A. V. Wazalwar — for Appellant.

R. Kaushalendra Rao—for Respondents.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of an insolvency petition in which one Ramkishan was adjudged insolvent. The facts are as follows: After the adjudication, the firm of Shrikishan Radhakishan, the respondent here, applied for the attachment of certain properties alleging that they belonged to the insolvent. The appellant objected claiming that the property was her own property and that she was in possession of it and her objection was overruled. She appealed to the lower Appellate Court and joined in her appeal as respondent not only the firm of Shrikishan Radhakrishan which had applied for the attachment but also the other scheduled creditors. The lower Appellate Court threw out the appeal on the ground that the objection petition in the Insolvency Court was incompetent because it was directed against only one of the creditors, namely the firm of Shrikishan Radhakrishan, and that the other creditors had not been joined though they ought to have been. The learned Judge, however, added that it would be open to the objector to file a fresh petition impleading all the necessary parties "if the property has not already been brought to sale." It is against this decision that the objector has appealed here.

In my opinion the position has been misconceived throughout. The provisions of S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, have been overlooked. It has been forgotten that on the making of the order of adjudication the whole of the insolvent's property vests in the Court, or in the Receiver when there is one under S. 28 (2), and that thereafter, except as provided by the Act, no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under the Act has during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt or can commence any legal proceeding except with the consent of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose. It follows that the creditors have no locus standi whatever in these matters except in so far as the Court permits.

There is a wide difference between the position and powers of the Insolvency Court before and after adjudication. Before adjudication the debtor continues in possession of the property and is, subject to the provisions of the Act, entitled to deal with it like any other owner. Therefore, in order to prevent alienations and waste, the Insolvency Court is empowered under S. 21 (2) to order attachment by actual seizure of the whole or any part of the property "in the possession or under the control of the debtor", provided the conditions laid down in the Proviso obtain. But, these powers of attachment are limited to the position before adjudication and it will be observed that they are not as wide as the power of attachment conferred upon a Civil Court under the Civil Procedure Code, nor is it possible to resort to the wider powers of the Civil Courts under S. 5, because that Section applies the procedure of the Civil Courts "subject to the provisions of the Act." After adjudication the position changes entirely. As I have said under Sec. 28 (2) the whole of the insolvent's property immediately vests in the Court or the receiver and when there is no receiver, the Court is invested with all the rights and is authorized to exercise all the powers conferred on a receiver by the Act under S. 58. One of these rights is the right to actual physical possession of the insolvent's property by the receiver and in order to enforce that right the Court is empowered under S. 56 (3) to remove any person who is in possession or custody of the insolvent's property from such possession or custody, subject however to this important Proviso :

> Provided that nothing in this Section shall be deemed to authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove.

It will be observed that these provisions are the same as those to be found in O. 40, R. 1 (d) and R. 2, Civil P. C. The receiver's rights, and therefore the Court's when there is no receiver, are exactly the same as those of a receiver under O. 40, Rule 1, when the property is in the hands of a third party. It is clear then that the Court has no power under Sec. 56 summarily to direct a third person to deliver up possession of property of which he is in possession if he sets up a title however flimsy to it. The only power the Court has in such circumstances is to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not under Sec. 4. But before that can be done a proper application has to be presented by the receiver, when there is one, or by such one of the creditors or other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate as the Court authorizes to act when there is not : see 50 M L J 180[1] at pages 181 and 182.

If the insolvent is in possession no question of attachment arises. An inventory of the property will already have been furnished either under S. 22 or under Sec. 13 and all the property mentioned therein will automatically vest in the Court. If any item of property is omitted then all that the Court has to do is to order the insolvent to produce it and to hand over possession. Trouble can only arise when the property is in the possession or control of a third person. In that event the proper course is to proceed against such person under S. 4 using the powers of attachment before judgment conferred by the Civil Procedure Code read with S. 5 if necessary. But the person who proceeds is either the Court or the receiver and not a creditor. Even when a creditor is authorized to act, he is acting as an agent of the Court and has no right or title to the property itself, not even a right to possession. If he succeeds the property passes to the Court and not to the creditor who conducted the proceedings. Cases may arise in which the Court or the receiver enters into possession without obstruction because the person claiming the right to the property is not present to object or because for some other reason he has omitted to do so, and then he is obliged to institute proceedings for the recovery of possession. What these proceedings should be, whether by application or by separate suit, need not be considered here, but, in either case they will be under S. 4, and in either case they will have to be directed against the person or authority in whom the property has vested. In no conceivable circumstances can this be either against an individual creditor or the whole body of creditors taken together. Therefore to direct the appellant in this appeal to file fresh objections in which the whole body of creditors is impleaded is both unnecessary and wrong.

The true position is this. It is clear from the fact that attachment was asked for that the property was neither in the possession or in the control of the insolvent. Therefore in the absence of a receiver it was the duty of the Court to institute proceedings under S. 4 against the appellants who were in actual possession and, if necessary, to attach the property before judgment. But as this would lead to complications, the more convenient course was clearly to authorize one of the creditors to conduct the proceedings on its behalf under Sec. 28 (2). Now, this is what should have been done and in substance what has been done, though it is clear that neither of the Courts below has applied its mind to these facts or issued any express order of authority to the respondent firm of Shrikishan Radhakrishan to act on behalf of the Court. But defects or irregularities of procedure which do not affect the merits can be cured or waived under S. 99, Civil P. C., and in any case it is a cardinal rule of justice that no party should suffer for an error or omission of the Court when a duty is cast on the Court itself for acting or refraining from acting. Therefore, what I now have to see is whether prejudice has been caused to any party or whether there has been a miscarriage of justice.

1. Chittammal v. Ponnuswami Naicker, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 363=92 I C 573=49 Mad 762 =50 M L J 180.

It appears from the proceedings that the firm of Shrikishan Radhakrishan is the principal creditor. It also appears that this firm is the only creditor who has been attending the hearings with any attempt at regularity and who has been taking any real interest in the insolvency. In the circumstances had the law been present to the mind of the learned trial Judge, there is no other creditor whom he could more suitably have selected for conducting the proceedings on behalf of the Court. I am satisfied that the rights of the remaining creditors were safe in this firm's hands. In the circumstances since this firm has actually been conducting the proceedings its actions must be deemed to have been with the requisite authority and permission. That being so, when the case reached the stage of appeal the only person who need have been joined as a party to the appeal was the creditor who has been permitted to conduct the proceedings in the lower Court and who in the eye of law was only an agent of the Court itself. The other creditors had no locus standi and were unnecessary parties to the appeal. The appeal is allowed and the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside. It will now proceed to hear and determine the appeal before it and decide it according to law. In view of the fact that the appeal here was not opposed and that all that both sides wanted was a clear pronouncement as to the correct procedure, and also in view of the fact that the respondent firm was acting on behalf of the Court in place of a receiver, I direct that the appellant's costs of this appeal be paid from the insolvent's estate. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 13

NIYOGI AND GRUER JJ.

Muktawandas Ajabdas and others
Appellants.
v.
Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 64 of 1938, Decided on 19th May 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Raipur, D/- 18th February 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Duty of prosecution to call witnesses—Eye witnesses when not numerous must all be examined.

Witnesses essential to the unfolding of a narrative on which the prosecution is based must be called by the prosecution whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution. [P 16 C 1]

Where there are not numerous eye-witnesses all of them must be examined by the prosecution and none of them can be treated as redundant because being eye-witnesses each of them is likely to throw some light on the facts of the case : A I R 1936 P C 289, Rel. on; A I R 1915 Cal 545 ; A I R 1934 All 908 ; A I R 1923 Pat 413 ; A I R 1922 Cal 461 and A I R 1922 Cal 382, Ref. [P 16 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 155 (3) and 145—Oral statements made to witnesses by others — Questions to witnesses about those statements are legally admissible.

Section 145 does not control S. 155. Hence questions proposed to be put to prosecution witnesses about oral statements made to them by other witnesses are legally admissible, although the Court may refuse to place any reliance on them on the ground that they had not been put to these witnesses for explanation. To disallow such questions may therefore be prejudicial to the accused: A I R, 1934 Sind 100, Not foll.; A I R 1928 P C 2, Ref. [P 16 C 1, 2]

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and T. G. Chobles — for Accused No. 1.

T. J. Kedar, R. K. Rau, R. G. Rau, S. W. A. Rizwi and W. C. Dutt — for Appellants Nos. 2 to 14.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Order.—The fourteen appellants have all been convicted of rioting and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment.

Appellant 1, Muktawandas, has also been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C. The decision is attacked on the merits, and it is also argued that it is vitiated, firstly, because of the failure of the prosecution to examine certain eye-witnesses and secondly, because certain questions which it was proposed to put to court witnesses 1 and 2, Ghoundul and Asaram, have been wrongly ruled out as inadmissible by the Sessions Judge, thereby causing prejudice to the appellants. In this order we shall deal with these points of law, but first we propose to consider the merits of the conviction for rioting.

The conviction under S. 147, I. P. C., is said to be wrong, firstly, because the rice crop in that field belonged to and was in the possession of Muktawandas and his bataidar Hiraman, so that its removal by Muktawandas and his servants was justified, and secondly, because the prosecution has not made out that the assembly of the accused was guided by any common unlawful object or did any unlawful act. The transactions which resulted in the exchange of this field [No. 1564/2 (c)] for other land out of Muktawandas's block of 55 acres is not disputed. It is also common ground that through the mediation of the Chakbandhi Inspector accused Muktawandas agreed to pay Rs. 11-4-0 to Firanta as compensation for 30 cartloads of manure which he had spread on this field. This sum was not paid. Muktawandas says that the reason was that Firanta had removed the manure himself while Firanta denied that. This point has not been cleared up. The Consolidation Officer, Mr. Mishra (P. W. 1), has stated that the point as to who should be in possession in case the price of the manure was not paid was neither raised nor decided. According to law, the exchange scheme would come into effect on 1st June 1938, but the tenants voluntarily agreed that they would start their possession from the date of the scheme according to the allotments made. Bodhrai (P. W. 3) has admitted that he cultivated all the land allotted to him in the Chakbandhi, which he got in exchange. He also admits that accused Muktawandas had given this Munshi Newar field on adhia to Hiraman. He says that there was a quarrel between him and Hiraman over the sowing of this field. He also says: "All the tenants know that I had sown Munshi Newar field and that I did all the other operations."

The case of the prosecution is that in spite of taking the field in exchange Firanta determined to retain possession of this field for that year and appropriate the crop in lieu of the sum of Rs. 11-4-0, which had not been paid to him. We need not discuss whether Firanta was right or wrong in taking up this attitude. The question is how far the prosecution has made out that the rice crop which Firanta and his son were reaping that day was in their possession and belonged to them. The evidence on the point seems to us to be of somewhat inconclusive nature. Ex. P-17 is a copy of the roznamcha embodying a complaint made to the police station by Firanta on 2nd July 1937. This report is admissible under S. 32 (3), Evidence Act, so far as it contains a statement against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of Firanta. Such a statement is the one that Muktawandas had rooted out the dhan sown by Firanta and sowed other dhan in its place. There being no allegation or proof that this sowing of Muktawandas was again uprooted and replaced by Firanta it would seem that the crop which was reaped that day had been sown by Muktawandas. Apart from Bodhrai's statement there is no good evidence about who looked after the crop between sowing and reaping times. It is said that the bataidar Hiraman at least has not come forward, and he may have decided to leave this field alone. Mr. Mishra (P. W. 1) stated that the said field was found recorded in the jamabandi in the name of Firanta so far as he remembers, but as the jamabandi has not been produced nor has the patwari been questioned about it, this statement is useless as evidence. That Firanta was by no means sure about his rights over this dhan is, according to the defence, to be deduced from the fact that he arranged to reap it when it was barely ripe. His son Bodhrai says that it was ready for cutting being an early variety, although dhan in other fields was not ready. But Hirabai admits that it was a little unripe so that it does look as if the reaping was begun hastily in order to checkmate the other side.

It would therefore appear that this crop was sown by or on behalf of Muktawandas and it is uncertain how it was looked after when it was growing. The prosecution then has not made out satisfactorily that this crop belonged to and was in the possession of Firanta. We are inclined to hold that it was in the possession of Muktawandas. It follows that it would be unsafe to conclude that Muktawandas's party would be committing a wrongful act in removing it. That being so they should not have been convicted of rioting. On the second point urged our decision must also be in favour of appellants 2 to 14. Even taking it that the crop belonged to Firanta, had these servants good reason for thinking that their master had not a bona fide claim to it? They knew that the land had been given to him in exchange and that possession had been taken all round in accordance with that exchange. They may also have known that he had succeeded in making the final sowing of the land. It would not then be obvious to them that they would be committing theft in removing the crop. Then too their attitude as a whole was not violent. The first batch of them which came with the kotwar did nothing against Firanta, who was merely advised to stop the reaping. They quietly sat down on the boundary of the field. Then according to the prosecution, the rest of the appellants who were ploughing in a neighbouring field were brought up by Muktawandas. Unless they knew definitely that they were to be ordered to commit an offence were they not bound as servants to follow their master, and when they got there what illegal act did they do? According to the prosecution, two of them, Ghendram and Fundwa, caught hold of Firanta's arms when ordered to do so. Unless this was done in pursuance of a common object it would not turn the others into rioters. At the most, Ghendram and Fundwa could be convicted of simple assault.

It is said however that after Muktawandas had attacked Firanta he was surrounded by all the appellants. Bodhrai says so, but he does not say that even then these appellants did anything against Firanta, while his wife Hirabai does not mention this surrounding of Firanta at all. The preparations to remove the dhan were also not continued, and it was left where it was. It thus appears that the body of the appellants took up a passive attitude and are at least entitled to the benefit of the doubt on the question of their being animated by a common illegal object. We conclude then that the charge of rioting has not been satisfactorily made out. It may be said that Ghendram and Fundwa were guilty of assault, but we think that they have already been sufficiently punished, and there is no need to record a conviction against them under a different Section. We set aside the conviction of all the appellants under Sec. 147, I. P. C., and direct the release of all of them except Muktawandas in whose case alone the appeal has yet to be determined on the charge of murder.

We now turn to the points of law which were said to undermine the whole prosecution case. Undoubtedly, according to the prosecution, both the wives of the chief witness Bodhrai were present in the field when Bodhrai's father Firanta was attacked. One wife, Hirabai, is examined as P. W. 4; the other, Ruhi, is not examined. Her name does not even appear in the police challan and there is no explanation why she was not called. It is now suggested by the learned Advocate-General that the prosecution may have thought her evidence redundant. The other two alleged eyewitnesses are Mawa, daughter of Bodhrai, and a boy Bhunesar. It is not clear from the record how much, if any, of the marpit they saw. According to Mt. Hirabai (P. W. 4) they were grazing cattle about 200 yards away. Still they may have seen something or might be able to state who came to the spot. Certain cases have been quoted to us about the duty of the prosecution to examine eyewitnesses. In 42 Cal 422[1] it was held that all available eyewitnesses, even though they give different accounts, should be brought before the Court. In 57 All 267[2] the Court went even further in holding that a witness who had given evidence supporting a plea of alibi taken by one of the accused ought, beyond all doubt, to be produced by the prosecution. On the other hand, in 2 Pat 309,[3] it was ruled that the police are not bound to send up as a witness a person whose statement they believed to be false or whose evidence they believed to be unnecessary. Rulings to the same effect are to be found in 49 Cal 277[4] and 49 Cal 358.[5] The point has recently been considered by their Lordships of the Privy

1. Ram Ranjan Roy v. Emperor, (1915) 2 A I R Cal 545=27 I C 554=42 Cal 422=19 C W N 28=16 Cr L J 170.
2. Emperor v. Nem Singh, (1934) 21 A I R All 908=1934 Cr C 1167=152 I C 741=57 All 267=36 Cr L J 152.
3. Ramjit Ahir v. Emperor, (1923) 10 A I R Pat 413=74 I C 705=24 Cr L J 801=2 Pat 309.
4. Emperor v. Reed, (1922) 9 A I R Cal 461=69 I C 630=49 Cal 277=23 Cr L J 742.
5. Emperor v. Balaram Das, (1922) 9 A I R Cal 382=71 I C 685=49 Cal 358=24 Cr L J 221.

Council in a case in 164 I C 545.[6] Their Lordships, observing that no rule can be laid down to fetter the discretion of the prosecution to call witnesses which is dependent on the particular circumstances of each case, go on to say that they do not in general approve of the idea that a prosecution must call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, but that witnesses essential to the unfolding of a narrative on which the prosecution is based must of course be called by the prosecution whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution.

Applying these principles to the present case we observe that the eyewitnesses are certainly not numerous. Mt. Ruhi should not have been treated as a redundant witness. There is also nothing to show that she is unreliable, although possibly the prosecution may be afraid that she has been influenced by her father Ghoudul (C. W. 1). We think that the evidence of this Ruhi should certainly have been taken. The two children were probably not examined as it was thought they were not eyewitnesses, but it appears that they too may be able to throw some light on the facts. We are of opinion that the evidence of these three witnesses should now be recorded so that we may have it before us in deciding the case on the merits.

It was proposed to question the two court witnesses about certain statements said to have been made to them by Bodhrai, Hirabai and Ruhi. These questions were disallowed as the questions had not been put to these three persons themselves. So far as Ruhi is concerned, we think that the objection is sound. As she is not a witness no question of contradicting her arose and to repeat what she said would be merely hearsay. The questions would not be admissible under S. 32, Evidence Act, as there was nothing to prevent Ruhi from being called. We must also hold S. 6 inapplicable including Illus. (a) to that Section, as the questions were not with regard to what these witnesses said so shortly before or after the marpit as to form part of the same transaction.

The admissibility of the statements made by Bodhrai and Hirabai depends on whether S. 155 (3), Evidence Act, is governed by S. 145 of the same Act. Prima facie it does not appear to be so, as S. 145 speaks only of previous statements in writing whereas the statement with which we are concerned was an oral one. There are some cases in which it is said that there can be no distinction in principle on this point between a statement in writing and an oral statement, and hence a witness cannot be contradicted by his previous oral statement if his attention has not been drawn to it as required by S. 145, Evidence Act. In Sarkar's Evidence Act, Edn. 5, page 1141, the analogy of the English Statute, 28 & 29 Vic., Ch. 18, S. 3, is quoted. In A I R 1934 Sind 100[7] such a statement was ruled to be not admissible but no reasons were given. We agree with the learned counsel for the appellants that the question is not one of admissibility but of the weight to be attached to such a statement if it is not put to the witness to whom it is ascribed. In a very recent Privy Council case reported in 55 I A 18[8] at p. 23 their Lordships dealing with the construction of Indian Statutes said that it was the duty of the Court > to examine the language of the statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law or of the English law upon which it may be founded.

We must take S. 145 as we find it. It makes no mention of oral statements. It therefore cannot control S. 155. Hence the proposed questions about statements made by Bodhrai and Hirabai were legally admissible, although the Court might have refused to place any reliance on them on the ground that they had not been put to these two witnesses for explanation. We agree that the procedure adopted may have been prejudicial to the accused. For instance, if Bodhrai had admitted making a statement inconsistent with what he now states in the witness-box, the accused might argue that he is unreliable. For these reasons also we consider that the record should be sent back to the lower Court to have these gaps in the case filled up. The two court witnesses be recalled and the defence be permitted to put the disallowed questions to them with reference to statements made by Bodhrai and Hirabai. As Ruhi is also to be examined similar questions about her may 6. Ceylon Stephen Seneviratne v. The King, (1936) 23 A I R P C 289=1936 Cr C 900=164 I C 545 = 37Cr L J 963 (P C).

7. Mt. Misri v. Emperor, (1934) 21 A I R Sind 100=1934 Cr C 825=151 I C 437=35 Cr L J 1332.

8. Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalawati Kuer, (1928) 15 A I R P C 2=107 I C 14=7 Pat 221=55 I A 18 (P C).

now be put. The defence will also be given an opportunity to cross-examine Bodhrai, Hirabai and Ruhi on the answers to these questions, and if they fail to do so an inference may be drawn against them. The record with this extra evidence be returned to this Court within two months when a fresh date will be fixed for further hearing of the appeal of Muktawandas against his conviction under S. 302, I. P. C.

N.S./R.K. Appeal partly allowed.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 17

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Gowardhan Shewaram Marwari — Appellant.

v.

Hargovind Sitaram Marwari and another — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 92 of 1937, Decided on 15th September 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 17th February 1937.

 Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 53—For attachment of decree to be effective notices to judgment-debtor and decree-holder are imperative.

When a decree-holder seeks to execute his decree by attachment of another decree, in order that the attachment may be effective notices to the decree-holder and judgment-debtor of the attached decree are imperative and the mere order communicating the fact of attachment to the Court passing the decree is not enough: A I R 1927 Mad 728, Disting. [P 18 C 2]

V. V. Kelkar and M. R. Bobde — for Appellant.

E. M. Joshi — for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment. — The appellant Gowardhan Shewaram, who opposes the recording of an adjustment in these proceedings, obtained a decree against respondent 1, Hargovind, in Civil Suit No. 20-B of 1934, for something over Rs. 6000. In Civil Suit No. 89 of 1931, Hargovind obtained a decree against respondent 2, Gowardhan Hajarimal, for Rs. 1600 and it was attached in execution of the appellant's decree. The order of attachment was made on 22nd November 1935 and notice was issued to the Court which passed the decree on 2nd December 1935. It was received on 4th December 1935. Notices were also issued to the two respondents to this appeal, the order being passed on 4th January 1936. The notice to respondent 1 was served on him on 27th February 1936 but he refused to accept it. Respondent 2 was out when the process server arrived and the notice was affixed to his house on 3rd March 1936. A second notice was then issued and was served on him personally on 9th April 1936. In the meanwhile, namely on 27th December 1935, the decree in Civil Suit No. 89 of 1931 was, according to the two respondents, adjusted and they applied on 2nd January 1936 to have the adjustment certified and satisfaction recorded. They filed Ex. A-1 which embodies the terms of the adjustment. Its genuineness was attacked in the lower Courts by the appellant but both Courts hold it was genuine and made in good faith. There is evidence on which the finding can be based and so that question is now concluded.

We are left then with a question of law, namely whether the attachment becomes effective the moment the order is communicated to the Court passing the decree or whether notices to the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are also necessary. It will be observed that the order was served on the Court on 4th December 1935, that is to say before the adjustment, whereas notice of the attachment was not received by the parties to the decree till later, namely on 27th February 1936 in the one case, and on 9th April 1936 in the other. Both the lower Courts hold that notices to the parties are necessary and therefore hold that the adjustment can be certified and satisfaction of the decree recorded. O. 21, R. 53, Civil P. C., governs this case. It states (omitting the local amendment which does not apply) that the attachment in such cases shall be made by > the issue to such other Court of a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, requesting such other Court to stay the execution of its decree unless and until, etc.

Sub-rule (6) then states:

> On the application of the holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree, the Court making an order of attachment under this rule shall give notice of such order to the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached; and no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force.

It is clear that the order must be read as a whole and that sub-r. (6) cannot be ignored. It makes the issue of notice to the judgment-debtor of the decree attached imperative and states that no adjustment after the receipt of notice either through the Court or otherwise shall be recognized. It follows that until the receipt of notice is proved, any adjustment made in ignorance of it is not effective, at any rate against the person entitled to notice under the rule, that is to say against the judgment-debtor.

The whole scheme of attachment under the Code is this: to devise a set of rules under which property which judgment-creditors have a right to pursue is not placed beyond their reach and beyond the reach of the Court. When the property can actually be seized by the Court, that is to say when it takes the shape of moveables (other than agricultural produce) and is in the possession of a person over whom the Court has direct control and authority, namely the judgment-debtor, (or in a case of attachment before judgment, the defendant), and also in the case of negotiable instruments the attachment is effected by actual seizure: O. 21, Rr. 43 and 51. In every other case notice to the person or body which has effective control is made essential, that is to say notice to the person in whose power it lies to place the property beyond the reach of the Court or to prevent it from being so placed. Thus in the case of agricultural produce, a copy of the warrant is affixed to the place where the produce is bodily situate and also on the outer door or on some other conspicuous part of the house in which the judgment-debtor ordinarily resides, etc.: O. 21, R. 44. The produce is thereupon "deemed to have passed into the possession of the Court." Then follow cases of other kinds of property (except immovable) which is not in the possession of the judgment-debtor: O. 21, Rule 46. In the case of a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument notice of the prohibitory order to the debtor is made essential, that is to say notice to the person in whose control the disposal of the debt lies. In the case of a share in the capital of a corporation, to the proper officer of the corporation, that is to the authority which can effectively prevent both a disposal of the share as well as payment of the dividends. In the case of other kinds of moveable property, to the person in possession, that is to say to the person who is in an effective position to prevent the property from being placed beyond the reach of the Court. The same underlying principle is observed in O. 21, Rr. 48 and 49, cases of attachments of salaries and allowances of public officer, and of partnership property.

In the case of immovable property, direct service upon the judgment-debtor has been made unnecessary but elaborate precautions are taken to ensure wide publicity of the fact of attachment, and it is necessary for a copy of the order to be affixed upon some conspicuous part of the property. Ordinarily persons do not purchase immovable property without going down to the place where it is situate and looking it over, and if they omit to do so in the face of this rule, they have only themselves to thank if they lose it; and so far as the Court is concerned, the important fact is that the property cannot disappear and be placed physically beyond its reach. When therefore we find a similar principle in Order 21, R. 53 it seems to me impossible to say that sub-r. (6) can be ignored and treated as a superfluity. The learned counsel for the appellant relied on a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in 50 Mad 677,[1] but it does not support him. What is stated there is that attachment is effective without service of notice but that an adjustment made in good faith by a judgment-debtor who had no notice must be recorded notwithstanding the effective attachment: see page 686. Sub-rule (6) states that:

> No payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise shall be recognized, etc.

The rule therefore clearly recognizes cases in which the attachment is effective even though notice has not been served on the judgment-debtor through the usual processes of the Court. But that is not the question at issue here. I am not called upon to decide when the attachment is effective but whether it is effective against the judgment-debtor when he has no notice either through the agency of the Court "or otherwise". On that I agree with the Madras decision. Since both the lower Courts find on the evidence that the adjustment was made in good faith and since the only notice alleged here is the notice served through the agency of the Court and that it was served after the adjustment, it follows the lower Courts were right in recording the adjustment. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

1. Lakshminarasimham v. Lakshminarasimham, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 728=103 I C 502=50 Mad 677=53 M L J 150 (F B).

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 19

GRUER J.

Dr. Baretto — Applicant.

v.

T. R. Pruce — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 540 of 1937, Decided on 13th July 1938.

(a) Sale of Goods Act (1930), S. 4—Contract to make and deliver set of false teeth is contract for sale of goods.

Where a contract is for a chattel to be made and delivered, it is clearly a contract for the sale of goods. A contract to make and deliver a set of false teeth is therefore contract for the sale of goods and the principles of the Sale of Goods Act apply to such a contract : (1861) 121 E R 716, Foll.

[P 19 C 2]

(b) Revision—Revision application from Small Cause Court decision—Findings of fact are to be accepted, unless they are perverse or unreasonable.

In a revision application against a Small Cause Court decision, the findings of fact are to be accepted, unless they are perverse or unreasonable and it has also to be remembered that the depositions of the witnesses are not taken down in full.

[P 19 C 2]

(c) Sale of Goods Act (1930), S. 16 (1)—Purchaser finding goods to be not reasonably fit for purpose for which they are required is entitled to reject them.

According to S. 16 (1), there is an implied condition that the goods should be reasonably fit for the particular purpose for which they are required and a purchaser, if he does not find the goods to be reasonably fit for the purpose for which they are required, is legally entitled to reject them.

[P 20 C 1]

M. R. Bobde and Mandlekar — for Applicant.

R. Kaushalendrarao — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This small cause case was brought by Dr. Baretto, a dental surgeon, for the recovery of Rs. 175, the price of a set of artificial teeth made by him for the defendant, T. R. Pruce. The defendant contended that no definite price was fixed for the teeth, that after fitting on 25th they were found to be unsatisfactory and so he took them for a trial of two days at the plaintiff's request, that he found them to be so defective for various reasons specified by him, that he returned them with the letter (Ex. D-1) dated 27th May 1935 and again with a letter on the following day (Ex. D-3) but that the plaintiff sent them back on both the occasions. The trial Court has found that the price was not fixed at Rs. 175, that the set was given on trial and that it was found not fit (which evidently means unsatisfactory and defective). The suit was therefore dismissed and plaintiff comes up in revision.

The chief point urged is that the transaction was not one of sale of goods but one of work and labour and hence the Sale of Goods Act is not applicable. Counsel for the applicant was not able to cite a case in point, while for the non-applicant an English case which is on all fours with the present case was brought to my notice. This is Lee v. Griffin[1], a report of which is to be found in English Reports 121 E R 716.[1] The learned Judges there said that where a contract is for a chattel to be made and delivered it is clearly a contract for the sale of goods. The supplying of a set of false teeth was said to bear strong resemblance to that of a tailor supplying a coat, the measurement of the mouth and fitting of the teeth being analogous to the measurement and fitting of the garment. I have no hesitation in following this case and holding that the principles of the Sale of Goods Act should be applied. Applicant further contends that if there were defects in the set he should have been given an opportunity to remedy them; they were such as could have been put right and the plaintiff was even prepared to make a new set as he said in his letter. That party, it is said, is in the wrong who does not give facility to the other to perform the contract. The finding that the set was given on trial or approval is also said to be erroneous.

It must be kept in mind that this is a revision application against a Small Cause Court decision. Hence the findings of fact are to be accepted unless they are perverse or unreasonable, and it has also to be remembered that the depositions of the witnesses are not taken down in full. Applicant would also question the finding about the price settled saying that in the letter of 28th the non-applicant speaks of paying 25 per cent. of the price fixed. The fact appears to be that Rs. 175 was the price fixed by the applicant but the non-applicant did not definitely say that he accepted it. The point is not of much importance. The finding that the dentures were defective will have to be accepted. Dr. Baretto himself in his reply to the defendant's letter detailing them did not deny them but said: "I am prepared to rectify all defects you are experimenting (experiencing?) with the new set" (Ex. D-2). And again in Ex. D-3, "I shall do my very best to satisfy you even by making a new set if necessary". The appearance of the teeth could be judged by the Court including the statement in the pleadings that the enamelled surface of the teeth had been filed down so as to be hard and gritty. The Court was also entitled to believe the defendant's deposition about the discomfort he felt when using the teeth. I must also accept the finding that the set was given on trial. Such an arrangement might be unusual, but according to defendant, who has been believed, the plaintiff spent two or three hours on the 25th in trying to adapt the set but defendant was not satisfied and rejected them when plaintiff persuaded him to give them a trial from Saturday to the following Monday. Plaintiff himself in his pleading says that delivery of the set is given when the purchaser certifies that it is satisfactory and that defendant took delivery on the 25th after he was satisfied completely with the workmanship. This last assertion has not been believed.

1. (1861) 1 B & S 272=121 E R 716.

Plaintiff was certainly inaccurate in stating that the set was not returned to him by the defendant. It may well be that when he gave the teeth on trial for two days the plaintiff did not anticipate that the defendant would reject them, but the question is whether in law he was not entitled to do so. According to S. 16 (1), Sale of Goods Act, there is an implied condition that the goods should be reasonably fit for the particular purpose for which they are required. It was found that they were not so reasonably fit. The plaintiff had an opportunity on the 25th to make them fit but had not succeeded. Even if some of the defects could have been removed if defendant had been more patient and allowed plaintiff a further opportunity it cannot be said that they could all have been put right. The applicant's offer to make a new set confirms this. In law the defendant was not obliged to give any more opportunities. His offer to pay 25 per cent. compensation leads one to think that he honestly believed the set would never be suitable, and it is hardly fair to suggest that he merely wanted to go back on his bargain. In my opinion, the plaintiff would have been well advised to accept the offer made to him by the defendant reflecting that his failure to give satisfaction in one case does not necessarily mean that his work as a whole is not up to standard. I can find no valid ground for interference and dismiss this application. Pleader's fee will be Rs. 30.

R.M./R.K. Application dismissed.

Acc. No 177227

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 20

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Pandurang Ganpatrao Tidke — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Vishwanath Pandurang — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 362 of 1936, Decided on 15th September 1938, from appellate decree of Third Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 23rd March 1936.

(a) Contract—Right of third party to sue.

The person beneficially entitled under the agreement can sue even though not a party to the agreement itself: 32 All 410 (P C), Rel. on. [P 21 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 92, Proviso 1—Illustrations are not exhaustive.

The Illustrations to Proviso 1 to S. 92 are not meant to be exhaustive: A I R 1917 Cal 186, Rel. on. [P 22 C 1]

 (c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 92, Proviso 1—One party to sale deed showing that he did not receive consideration — Other party can show that consideration was paid in full not in cash but in kind by proving contemporaneous oral agreement to that effect.

If one party to a document shows that he did not receive the consideration specified though the document recites that he did, the other party can show that the consideration was paid in full, not in cash, but in kind. The two are ejusdem generis. It is true that a contemporaneous oral agreement to be paid in kind may not be enforceable because that would be varying the contract, but once the consideration is actually paid and accepted in kind in full discharge of an obligation expressed as payable in cash, then that can be proved because a discharge of the obligation "entitles a party to a decree." It would not matter whether this other transaction preceded the written contract or was contemporaneous with it or succeeded it. The test is whether the consideration is still executory or has been executed: A I R 1921 Nag 51; 30 Mad 231; A I R 1914 P C 27; 12 M I A 157 (P C); 11 Cal

486 (P C); 18 All 168; A I R 1914 All 298; 3 Bom 159; 11 Mad 213 and A I R 1926 Mad 35, Rel. on. [P 22 C 1, 2]

D. T. Mangalmurti — for Appellant.

M. B. Kinkhede and A. R. Kulkarni — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sues for possession on the basis of a sale deed Ex. P-1 dated 7th January 1931. According to its terms the defendant purported to sell to the plaintiff the plaint property for a sum of Rs. 2000, but possession was not to be given till 1st March 1934. Till then the defendant was to remain in possession and was to take the crops for the intervening years 1931-32, 1932-33 and 1933-34. When the date for delivery of possession arrived, the defendant refused to put the plaintiff in possession. Hence the suit. The principal defence to the action, at any rate so far as this Court is concerned, is that no part of the consideration passed and so the defendant states that delivery of possession must be made subject to the payment of the Rs. 2000 due to him under the deed of sale. The plaintiff's reply is that full consideration passed though not in cash. It appears that one Bajirao had sued the defendant for possession of the fields now in suit and that the claim was compromised. Under it the defendant was to hand over possession to Bajirao at the expiry of three years after enjoying the crops for the years 1931-32, 1932-33 and 1933-34. Bajirao was then indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Rs. 3000. Bajirao therefore agreed with the plaintiff to get those fields sold to him provided he (the plaintiff) would defer taking possession for three years and provided the plaintiff would agree to relieve Bajirao from Rs. 2000 of his debt.

At the same time Bajirao agreed with the defendant that he would get his suit against him dismissed if the defendant would agree to sell the fields to the plaintiff instead of to him (Bajirao), there being the same condition about delivery of possession three years hence with the defendant's right to enjoy the crops in the meanwhile. The plaintiff and the defendant were both agreeable and accordingly Bajirao, instead of obtaining a decree for possession (with delivery at the end of three years) as he would have been entitled to under his compromise, allowed his suit to be dismissed. Therefore, reduced to its simplest terms, the contract in essence was this: the defendant said to Bajirao if you will agree to get your suit against me dismissed, I will sell these fields to the plaintiff and will undertake to deliver possession to him at the end of three years.

Bajirao agreed and got the suit dismissed and the defendant duly executed the promised sale deed. Of course, the negotiations were more complicated than this and the initiative must have proceeded either from Bajirao or the plaintiff but all that is irrelevant in considering the validity of the contract ; all that we require for that is the essence of its terms reduced to a legal formula. It will be seen thus that the consideration which the parties valued at Rs. 2000 moved from Bajirao and that of course is permissible under S. 2 (d), Contract Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided that in such cases the person beneficially entitled under the agreement can sue even though not a party to the agreement itself : 32 All 410[1] at p. 413. The law in India is different from the English law on this point and the definition of consideration has been drafted accordingly in Sec. 2 (d). But here the sale deed was in the plaintiff's favour and he was a consenting party to the agreement. In these circumstances it is immaterial whether the plaintiff really owed Bajirao Rs. 3000 or not. That is a matter between Bajirao and himself and his right of suit is unchallengeable. As the learned trial Judge remarks even if Bajirao owed nothing, it would make no difference so long as Bajirao and he are both satisfied with the arrangement.

The contention of the learned counsel for the defendant, who is the appellant here, is that this amounts to an oral variation of the contract and so cannot be proved. He relies on Ss. 91 and 92, Evidence Act. There can be no doubt about the two fundamental propositions which these Sections embody, namely (1) that the terms of a contract or disposition of property which have been reduced to the form of a document can only be proved by the document itself unless one of the exceptions specified in S. 91, which are not in point here, apply; and (2) that once that is done, no oral evidence which contradicts or varies the document can be admitted. But these rules are subject to exceptions and one of them is contained in Proviso 1 to S. 92. It runs as follows :

1. Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam, (1910) 32 All 410=7 I C 237=37 I A 152=7 A L J 871 (P C).

Any fact may be proved which would . . . . entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto such as . . . .

and then a number of Illustrations are given. The present case does not fall exactly within the purview of any of the Illustrations, but the wording of the Proviso and especially the use of the words "such as" show clearly that the Illustrations are not meant to be exhaustive, and this was so held in 20 C W N 1067.[2] What is significant is that matters relating to consideration have also been expressly included, namely the want or failure of consideration. What then does that mean? At least this: that though the document says there was consideration and states exactly what it was, a party may contradict that and show that there was none or that it has failed; that though the document sets forth that the consideration has fully passed and though a party to the document admit that by signing it, nevertheless he can turn round afterwards and contradict the document and show that he did not receive a pie: Illus. (i). If then one party to a document can show that he did not receive the consideration specified though the document recites that he did, I can see no reason why the other party should not be allowed to show that the consideration was paid in full, not in cash but in kind. The two are ejusdem generis. That fact would, in the language of the Proviso, "entitle him to a decree or order."

It has to be remembered that a person is not bound to receive payment in cash even though his bond entitles him to it. He can, if he so chooses and the other side agrees, be paid in kind. A contemporaneous oral agreement to be paid in kind may not be enforceable because that would be varying the contract, but once the consideration is actually paid and accepted in kind in full discharge of an obligation expressed as payable in cash, then that can be proved because a discharge of the obligation "entitles a party to a decree." If I may express this as a formula, it is this: X sells his house to Y for Rs. 500 by a written and registered sale deed. A contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that X had agreed to accept a horse in lieu of the Rs. 500 cannot be proved so long as the consideration remains executory. X cannot be compelled to receive the horse. Y cannot be compelled to deliver it. That is 38 Mad 514[3] at p. 517. But once the horse is delivered by Y and accepted by X in full satisfaction of Y's undertaking under the agreement to pay Rs. 500 to X, it can be proved because that establishes a discharge of the obligation which Y owes X and thus entitles Y to a decree. It would not matter in the view I take whether this other transaction preceded the written contract or was contemporaneous with it or succeeded it. The test is whether the consideration is still executory or has been executed. This was the view in 17 N L R 111[4] at p. 113, in 30 Mad 231[5] at p. 232 and in 42 Cal 801.[6] I fully agree. The underlying principle has been broadly stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 12 M I A 157[7] at p. 185:

> The rules of evidence, and the law of estoppel, forbid any addition to, or variation from, deeds or written contracts. The law however furnishes exceptions to its own salutary protection; one of which is, when one party, for the advancement of justice, is permitted to remove the blind which hides the real transaction . . . . In such cases the maxim applies, that a man cannot both affirm and disaffirm the same transaction, show its true nature for his own relief, and insist on its apparent character to prejudice his adversary. This principle, so just and reasonable in itself, and often expressed in the terms, that you cannot both approbate and reprobate the same transaction, has been applied by their Lordships in this Committee to the consideration of Indian appeals, as one applicable also in the Courts of that country, which are to administer justice according to equity and good conscience. The maxim is founded, not so much on any positive law, as on the broad and universally applicable principles of justice.

The principle has also been stated in a narrower form, more appropriate to the present case, in this way, namely that it is open to a party to a transaction to show that the true and real consideration was, even if that means contradiction, other than that stated in the deed: 11 Cal 486[8]

2. Nadir Chand v. Birendra Nath, (1917) 4 A I R Cal 186=37 I C 126=20 C W N 1067.

3. Adityam Iyer v. Ramakrishna Iyer, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 868=21 I C 458=38 Mad 514=25 M L J 602.

4. Sambhu v. Tikaram, (1921) 8 A I R Nag 51=59 I C 240=17 N L R 111.

5. K. Bapanamma v. K. Kristnamma, (1907) 30 Mad 231=17 M L J 30.

6. Mahomed Fusa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli, (1914) 1 A I R P C 27=28 I C 930=42 Cal 801=42 I A 1 (P C).

7. Mukhun Lall v. Sree Kishen Singh, (1867-69) 12 M I A 157=11 W R 19=2 Beng L R 44=2 Suther 190=2 Sar 403=20 E R 299 (P C).

8. Lala Himmat Sahai Singh v. Llewhellen, (1885) 11 Cal 486 (P C).

at p. 490, 18 All 168[9] at p. 171, 36 All 537[10] at p. 539, 3 Bom 159[11] at p. 160 and 11 Mad 213[12] at p. 215. In 49 M L J 414[13] at p. 417 the rule was put in still another way :

> What the first party tries to prove in such a case is failure of consideration and that brings it under Proviso (1) ; the second party can then clearly prove in rebuttal of the first party's case that there was in truth no failure of consideration and for that purpose show what the real consideration was.

But, it does not much matter how the rule is viewed. The proposition itself is in my opinion beyond doubt. It is significant that both Ameer Ali and Sarkar reproduce the rule in the words given by me without comment : see Ameer Ali's Evidence Edn. 9th, p. 660 and Sarkar's Evidence, Edn. 7, pp. 680 and 681. In 22 All 370[14] at pp. 375 and 376, the Judicial Committee allowed a collateral agreement under which the purchase price of a sale was to remain in the vendee's hands to be proved notwithstanding the fact that the sale deed recited that the consideration of Rs. 30,000 had been fully paid. The decision affords yet another illustration of the general rule. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

9. Indarjit v. Lal Chand, (1896) 18 All 168=1896 A W N 16.
10. Chunni Bibi v. Basanti Bibi, (1914) 1 A I R All 298=24 I C 661=36 All 537=12 A L J 969.
11. Hukumchand v. Hiralal, (1878) 3 Bom 159.
12. Kumara v. Srinivasa, (1888) 11 Mad 213.
13. Ramaswami Chettiar v. Lodd Govindoss Krishnadoss, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 35=91 I C 612=49 M L J 414.
14. Sah Lal Chand v. Indarjit, (1900) 22 All 370=27 I A 93=7 Sar 702=4 C W N 485 (P C).

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 23

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Ramnath Hajarimal Marwadi — Appellant.

v.

Mohanlal Radhakisan Marwadi — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 250 of 1936, Decided on 1st September 1938, from appellate decree of 3rd Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 17th February 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (12), O. 21, R. 63 —Plaintiff in claim suit establishing his title to property — Possession of auction-purchaser becomes wrongful so far as mesne profits are concerned—Plaintiff is entitled to claim mesne profits from him.

The essence of a claim to mesne profits is the wrongful possession of the defendant. Where the plaintiff in a claim suit establishes his title to the property claimed by him, the possession of the auction-purchaser purchasing the property in execution of the decree becomes wrongful so far as mesne profits are concerned; the plaintiff is therefore entitled to claim mesne profits from the auction-purchaser. Possession which may be rightful for certain limited purposes as against the judgment-debtor may be wrongful as against third parties, and the mere fact that the possession was obtained through the instrumentality of the Courts will not avail either the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser as against persons who were not parties to the decree. The ordinary rule is that an owner of property who is wrongfully kept out of possession is entitled to mesne profits and however rightful the auction-purchaser's possession may be as against parties to the suit, if it can avail him nothing as against third parties in regard to the right to possession, it cannot avail him in respect of other matters which directly flow out of these rights : 10 All 166 (P C) ; 14 Cal 18 (P C) ; 18 Cal 164 (P C) and 17 Mad 251, Ref.; 27 Cal 951 (P C) and 21 Cal 142 (P C), Expl.; A I R 1921 Nag 132 and 18 W R 318, Disting. [P 25 C 2 ; P 26 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (12) — Term "wrongful" is used in special sense — Meaning of term explained.

The term "wrongful" in S. 2 (12) is used in a special sense. It does not mean possession which is wrongful for all purposes. It only means that the person who has no right to possession as against the party claiming it, is in wrongful possession as against that party for certain purposes including mesne profits, but not wrongful for all purposes. Thus he is not liable for all losses, which the party kept out of possession may have sustained, but only for such profits as he actually received or which with due diligence he might have received. [P 26 C 2]

(c) Hindu Law — Debts — Father — Decree passed against father in joint Hindu family — It can be executed against son's share although father is sued in personal capacity.

Where a decree is passed against the father in a joint Hindu family, it can be executed against the son's share in the family, even though the father is sued in his personal capacity and not as manager or as representing the family : A I R 1934 Nag 88, Foll. [P 25 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 63—Plaintiff in claim suit basing his claim on mortgage decree obtained against member of joint Hindu family, alleging that member was sued in representative capacity—Whether burden of proving so, which lies on him, is discharged, when he establishes that father and son were joint and that suit was against father (Quære).

Where the plaintiff in a claim suit, who bases his claim on a mortgage decree, obtained against a member of a joint Hindu family alleges that the member was sued in a representative capacity as manager of the joint family, the burden of proving his allegation is primarily on him. But the question is whether that burden is discharged the moment the plaintiff establishes that the father and son were joint and that the suit was against the father : 6 I A 233 (P C) ; A I R 1935 Nag 14 and AIR 1934 Nag 88, Ref. [P 24 C 2 ; P 25 C 2]

(e) Pleadings — Amendment — Limitation — Amended plaint filed when suit is barred by limitation, merely furnishing particulars and introducing no new cause of action — No question of limitation arises.

Where an amended plaint, which is filed at a time when the suit is barred by limitation, does no more than furnish particulars and introduces no new cause of action, no question of limitation arises. [P 25 C 1, 2]

J. R. Mudholkar—for Appellant.

N. T. Mangalmurti—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant 1 Ramnath. Originally he was defendant 2, but the person who then figured as defendant 1 was struck out during the course of the proceedings and Ramnath has stepped up into his place in the array of defendants and has become defendant 1. The suit is a claim suit seeking the usual declaration and is also for possession of two fields, Survey Nos. 66 and 129 of Mouza Dahigaon and for mesne profits. The plaintiff claims to derive his title under a mortgage from the following three persons: (1) Bhagwan, defendant 2 ; (2) Hari, the father of defendant 3, Nathu, and (3) Ganpat, the husband of defendant 4, Saru. (I am giving the numbers as they now exist. Originally these defendants had different numbers for the reasons given above.) This mortgage was foreclosed in due course in the plaintiff's favour and he was given possession on 26th November 1929. Two persons, Bansilal and Asaram, who originally figured as defendants 1 and 3 but who were later struck out, obtained simple money decrees against Bhagwan, Nathu, Saru and Narayan who now figure as defendants 2 to 5. They attached the properties now in suit in execution and had them brought to sale. They were purchased at the auction by defendant 1 who, as I have said, is the appellant here, on 22nd February 1930. The plaintiff objected, but his objection was disallowed on 22nd March 1930 and so he now brings this claim suit. He succeeded in the Courts below and so defendant 1 appeals.

The first question raised in appeal relates to defendant 5, Narayan's interest in the property. He is a son of defendant 2 Bhagwan but was not a party either to the mortgage or to the mortgage decree. It is urged that since it has not been shown that defendant 2 was sued in a representative capacity, the rights of the son were not affected by the mortgage and consequently the plaintiff obtained no rights to his interest in the property. The extent of this interest is 1/6 and so it is claimed that the plaintiff's suit is bound to fail at least to the extent of that share. It is to be observed that this plea was not taken by defendant 1 in either of the lower Courts nor is it among the grounds of appeal here. Defendant 5 raised it but made no attempt to substantiate it ; in fact the case proceeded ex parte against all the defendants after the stage of pleadings. The plaintiff pleaded that defendant 2 Bhagwan was described as the manager of the family consisting of the mortgagors and Bhagwan's son Narayan and that the decree was obtained against him in that capacity. But here again no attempt has been made to substantiate this plea. Defendant 5 admitted that he was joint with his father but denied that the father was the manager. He claimed to be the manager himself. The question then resolves itself to this : Where does the burden of proof lie ? It may be conceded at the outset that the suit being a claim suit in which the plaintiff has failed at the objection stage, the primary burden is on him. But the question is whether that burden is discharged the moment the plaintiff establishes that the father and son were joint and that the suit was against the father. Their Lordships of the Privy Council appear to have stated unequivocally in 5 C L R 477[1] at p. 479 that that is all a creditor need prove. This is what they say :

> It appears to their Lordships that, acting on the principle which follows from their finding that this family was joint, it must be assumed that Mosaheb Dass is sued as a representative of the family, and that it must further be assumed that Nath Daso, in taking the lease of the mouzah, here referred to Ramnugger, in respect of which the rent was due, must be assumed to have taken it on behalf of the family, and that the debt must be deemed to be a debt from the family. . . . .Their Lordships have, therefore, come to the conclusion that, although there may have been some irregularity in drawing up these decrees, they are substantially decrees in respect of a joint debt of the family and against the representative of the family, and may be properly executed against the joint family property.

1. Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh, (1881) 6 I A 233=5 C L R 477=4 Sar 76=3 Suther 686 (P C).

But I pointed out in 31 N L R 352[2] at p. 356 that this appears to conflict with the ratio decidendi in 30 N L R 248[3] and so the question will have to be considered afresh some day. But, the difficulty disappears in this case because defendant 5 is the son. Staples A. J. C. holds in 30 N L R 248[3] that when the decree is against the father > it will be executed against the son's share of the family property even though the father is sued in his personal capacity and not as manager or as representing the family.

Following that ruling, I hold that defendant 5's share also passed to the plaintiff under his foreclosure decree. The next question is about non-joinder. The decree-holders Bansilal and Asaram who originally figured as defendants 1 and 3 were given up by the plaintiff when they stated that they claimed no interest in the property and so they were discharged. It is argued that they were necessary parties and so the suit is bad for non-joinder. O. 1, Rule 9, Civil P. C., states that no suit shall be defeated by reason of non-joinder and that the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. O. 1, R. 13 states that > all objections to non-joinder must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

The earliest possible opportunity was on 21st September 1931 when these persons were discharged. The latest time for objections was on 29th April 1932 when the issues were settled. As a matter of fact, the question was again raised on 24th October 1933 and even then no objection was taken. It is clear then that this objection must fail. Another objection is on the score of limitation. An amended plaint was filed on 20th July 1931 at a time when the suit was barred by limitation and it is argued that the suit must date from the filing of this plaint. A perusal of the two plaints however will show that the amended plaint does no more than furnish particulars. It introduces no new cause of action. The amendment ought really to have been made in the original plaint itself or alternatively furnished separately as particulars. No question of limitation therefore arises.

The real question for decision is whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits. Defendant 1 contends that he took possession under the process of the Civil Courts: that he did nothing to initiate the proceedings: and that he purchased in good faith. Therefore he contends that his possession was not wrongful, at any rate till it was declared to be so by a Court of competent jurisdiction. There can be no doubt that the essence of a claim to mesne profits is the wrongful possession of the defendant. It is not necessary to travel beyond the definition in S. 2 (12), Civil P. C., to determine that. Therefore, what we have to see is whether the possession of an auction purchaser is wrongful. I do not see what else it can be, for, otherwise the plaintiff would have no right to immediate possession. But it is argued, their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in 27 Cal 951[4] at p. 967 that mesne profits are "in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the nature of the case," and in another case, 21 Cal 142[5] at p. 148, their Lordships laid great stress upon the question of good faith and based their decision upon justice, equity and good conscience. They also held that the plaintiff who was in possession under a decree of the Court was in rightful possession so long as the decree stood. Therefore, it is urged the matter is concluded. But their Lordships also pointed out that as he had been wrongfully obstructed the balance of accounts was against him. In those circumstances their Lordships held that since there was no rule to prevent the plaintiff from recovering the loss he had suffered, the rules of justice, equity and good conscience should apply. But they also made it clear that though the plaintiff's possession was rightful in one sense of the term it was wrongful so far as mesne profits were concerned. It is true, they were not deciding this question there, and it is equally true that the plaintiff had conceded his liability to account but their Lordships' observations cannot be altogether ignored. Then again it must be remembered that

2. Madhodas v. Gangabai, (1935) 22 A I R Nag 14=154 I C 333=31 N L R 352.
3. Bhagwan v. Ramdayal, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 88=148 I C 768=30 N L R 248.
4. Grish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy, (1900) 27 Cal 951 = 27 I A 110 = 7 Sar 687=4 C W N 631 (P C).
5. Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy, (1894) 21 Cal 142=20 I A 160=6 Sar 366 (P C).

those observations were made with reference to parties to the suit. The contest there was between the same set of parties in both suits. The situation changes the moment the rights of strangers intervene. Possession which may be rightful for certain limited purposes as against the judgment-debtor may be wrongful as against third parties, and the mere fact that the possession was obtained through the instrumentality of the Courts will not avail either the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser as against persons who were not parties to the decree.

This clear cut distinction between parties and strangers is seen in an extreme form in the case of stranger auction-purchasers. Even if the decree under which the sale was held is afterwards reversed, the title of a stranger auction-purchaser is not affected as against a party to the suit : see 10 All 166[6] at page 172 and 14 Cal 18[7] at p. 25. But it avails him nothing as against persons who are not parties to the suit. So far as they are concerned, the rule of caveat-emptor applies and so the auction-purchaser, even though a stranger to the decree under which he purchased, would have to yield up possession to the true owner provided he also was not a party to the decree : see 18 Cal 164.[8] That being so, I cannot see how the rule about mesne profits can be any different. The ordinary rule is that an owner of property who is wrongfully kept out of possession is entitled to mesne profits and however rightful the auction-purchaser's possession may be as against parties to the suit, if it can avail him nothing as against third parties in regard to the right to possession, I do not see how it can avail him in respect of other matters which directly flow out of those rights.

In 17 Mad 251,[9] a purchaser who entered into possession on the strength of a sale under the Madras Recovery Act of 1864 was held to be in rightful possession until the decree was set aside but was nevertheless held to be accountable for mesne profits for the entire period of occupation. Here again the use of the words rightful and wrongful require explanation. The truth of the matter is that the word wrongful in S. 2 (12), Civil P. C., is used in a special sense. It does not mean possession which is wrongful for all purposes. It only means that the person who has no right to possession as against the party claiming it is in wrongful possession as against that party for certain purposes including mesne profits but not wrongful for all purposes. Thus he is not liable for all losses which the party kept out of possession may have sustained but only for such profits as he actually received or which with due diligence he might have received.

As regards the rulings cited, A I R 1921 Nag 132[10] related to a case of a purchaser from a Hindu widow with a limited estate. There is of course no difficulty there because the purchaser has a title good against all the world including the reversioner up till the moment the reversioner chooses to set aside the alienation. Possession of that kind is of course not wrongful. In 18 W R 318[11] the defendant was prevented by virtue of a decree obtained by the plaintiff himself from realizing the profits and it was held that that did not give rise to the right because the wrongful possession contemplated in cases of mesne profits means a possession in which the party has power and control over the property. I need not refer to the other rulings cited, nor need I say much about the passages cited in Mayne on Damages, Edn. 10, p. 434. The position contemplated there is much the same, having regard to the differences between the Hindu and the English law, as the position in A I R 1921 Nag 132,[10] referred to above. It is not in point here. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

6. Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan, (1888) 10 All 166 = 15 I A 12 = 5 Sar 129 (P C).
7. Rewa Mahton v. Ramkishen Singh, (1887) 14 Cal 18=13 I A 106=4 Sar 746 (P C).
8. Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima, (1891) 18 Cal 164=17 I A 201=5 Sar 507 (P C).
9. Perumal Udayar v. Krishnama Chettiyar, (1894) 17 Mad 251.
10. Maroti v. Abhiman, (1921) 8 A I R Nag 132= 61 I C 543.
11. Ram Pershad Dass v. Shah Wajid Ali, (1872) 18 W R 318.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 27

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Gulam Husain and another—Plaintiffs — Appellants.

v.

Mir Jakirali and another—Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 119 of 1935, Decided on 5th September 1938, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 6-8-1935.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Minor — Guardian — De facto guardian cannot alienate minor's immovable property without Court's permission.

A de facto guardian has no power to transfer any right or interest in the immovable property of the minor. Such a transfer is not merely voidable but void and cannot be ratified. If the de facto guardian thinks that alienation of property is necessary for the wants of the minor he has to get the permission of the Court for the alienation : A I R 1918 P C 11, Expl.; A I R 1932 P C 76 ; 34 All 213; A I R 1936 All 837 and A I R 1937 Pesh 74, Ref.; A I R 1932 Bom 23, Dissent. [P 27 C 2; P 28 C 2; P 29 C 2]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 65 — Transfer void under law — Suit to recover consideration —Time runs from date of agreement.

When a transfer is void owing to a provision of law, so that a cause of action to recover the consideration under S. 65, Contract Act, arises, time runs, in the absence of special circumstances, from the date of the agreement : A I R 1923 P C 189 and A I R 1933 P C 63, Rel. on; A I R 1922 P C 403 and 30 Cal 539 (P C), Ref. [P 31 C 1]

Fida Husain — for Appellants.

J. Sen — for Respondent 2.

Judgment. — This is an appeal by the plaintiffs who have brought against two defendants a suit on a mortgage which suit has been dismissed. The circumstances are very hard for the plaintiffs. The difficulty in their way is a legal difficulty. There is no question of their good faith. There is no dispute about the consideration. The mortgage in question is attacked because it was made by a lady, the mother of defendant 1, a Mahomedan, purporting to act as guardian for defendant 1, then a minor. It is said that she had no power to bind the estate. The circumstances of the loan are said to be as follows :

Defendant 1 Jakirali is the son of one Rehmat Bi. A question was raised as to whether he is legitimate or illegitimate and that depended upon whether Rehmat Bi was the wife or the mistress of Abbas Ali. That question was raised by defendant 2, Mt. Sugrabi, who was the sister of Abbas Ali, in a suit for apportionment of shares of the estate left by Abbas Ali. Clearly Sugrabi's share would be much larger if Jakirali was not a shareholder, i. e. illegitimate. So it was part of her case that she was entitled to a large share because Jakirali was entitled to no share. His mother in that case acted as his guardian ad litem and, as it is alleged in this case, in order to obtain money to fight that case, borrowed money on the suit mortgage. It should be made clear that she was guardian ad litem appointed by the Court but that she did not, as she could have done and should have done, apply to the Court as guardian ad litem for the leave of the Court to alienate part of the property of the minor for the purpose of obtaining the necessary finances proper to conduct the litigation. Had that been done, doubtless, different considerations would have arisen to those pertinent to this case. Instead of acting as guardian ad litem she, as guardian de facto, made this mortgage. Before us there has been no dispute as to the wide difference that exists in Mahomedan law between the powers of a de jure and a de facto guardian. It is not disputed that she executed this mortgage acting as a de facto guardian. Nor is it contested by Mr. Fida Hussain before us that the powers of a de facto guardian with regard to the alienation of immovable property are different from, and less than, the powers of a de jure guardian. But he argues, on the authority in 45 Cal 878[1] at p. 897 that the matter is expressed too broadly when it is said, as it is said in the late Sir Dinshah Mulla's work on the Principles of Mahomedan Law (Edn. 11), para. 265, that > a de facto guardian has no power to transfer any right or interest in the immovable property of the minor. Such a transfer is not merely voidable but void.

He says that that proposition is wrong in both its branches : it is too wide in its first branch because in certain cases a de facto guardian has power to alienate or encumber; it is wrong in its second part because such an act is not void but voidable. The latter is important here because there is some evidence of ratification by defendant 1, the minor, after he came of age. That criticizm of a broad proposition on the alienation of immovable property by the de facto guardian of a Mahomedan minor is founded upon one of the Mahomedan books of authority known as the Hedaya. The passage that is relied on is to be found quoted in 45 Cal 878[1] at p. 895.

1. Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, (1918) 5 A I R P C 11=47 I C 518=45 Cal 878=45 I A 73 (P C).

The argument runs as follows. Admittedly a de facto guardian has only a limited power of alienation. This power of alienation only arises in certain circumstances. For the purpose of this case one looks at the second proposition from the Hedaya cited in 45 Cal 878[1] at p. 895 and one finds that even a de facto guardian has power to alienate where it is necessary to do so owing to the wants of an infant. There is no difference—if the wants of the infant demand the alienation—between the alienation of immovable property and moveable. Here the want of the infant was of a nature within the principle contained in that proposition. His whole estate was being challenged, nay even his status was being attacked. He ran the risk of leaving the Court a bastard without property. To save him from that fate it was necessary to defend the case. To enable that to be done, it was imperative to raise money. Thus, here you have got a case where, in order to save the whole estate of the minor, money must be obtained and therefore the second proposition applies and therefore one is within the narrow range of cases where even a de facto guardian can raise money by alienating not merely moveable but also immovable property.

As we read 45 Cal 878[1] at pp. 896 to 898, their Lordships considered the proposition referred to from the Hedaya and sharply distinguished between the alienation of moveables and immovables. The main paragraph on page 896 referring to the second proposition ends up with the observation :

> Under such circumstances, power is given to the lawful guardian to incur debts or to raise money on the pledge of the minor's goods and chattels . . . . and this power, in the absence of a de jure guardian, the law extends to the person who happens to have charge of the child and of the child's property, though not a constituted or authorized guardian.

Then they observe :

> There is no reference to the pledge or sale of immovable property, as the power of dealing with that class of property is confined to the de jure guardians.

We apprehend that what their Lordships were saying is this: that even in the cases which we have been examining and which are mentioned in the Hedaya (proposition 2) so far as immovable property is concerned the de facto guardian has no power of alienation though even a de facto guardian in such a case may pledge or sell the minor's goods or chattels. That is how we read the Privy Council decision on this point and that being our conclusion it directly follows that we are in agreement with the way the matter is expressed in Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan law. We desire to add however that it is manifest that cases could arise when for the mere sustenance of a Mahomedan minor it would be necessary to sell his land and we apprehend that this practical difficulty is overcome by the fact that a de facto guardian has power in such circumstances to sell the land with the authority of the Court. It is only necessary to go to the Court and get authority and then the matter falls within para. 264 of Mulla. In this case there really is no practical difficulty because here the mother was guardian ad litem and had only to apply to the Court for leave to realize to make the resulting alienation perfectly good. 7 Luck 1,[2] another decision of the Privy Council, is distinguishable on its facts from the present, but so far as it goes it is in the same direction.

The next major point is whether Ex. P-2, which purports to be a ratification of this transaction by defendant 1 when he came of age, is effective for any purpose. As a transfer, it has no effect not being registered. It is necessary to link it up with the original mortgage, Ex. P-1, by ratification in order to give it any effect. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 Cal 878[1] at page 897 have, in our opinion, made the matter quite clear at page 901. They had been considering whether a transaction such as the present by a guardian de facto is void or voidable, suspended or dependent, and they expressed the view that the word "suspended" as used by Mr. Baillie in his Mahomedan Law of Sale really means dependent upon ratification, but they observe that the question of ratification is only applicable where you are dealing with an act done on behalf of another who is an adult, i. e. sui juris, and capable of himself acting. In such a case as that the person sui juris can ratify the act of the person purporting to act as his agent, whereas if he is not an adult, not sui juris, there is no question of agency and there can be no question of ratification. They observe:

> The Hanafi doctrine about fazuli sales appears clearly to be based on the analogy of an agent who acts in a particular matter without authority, but whose act is subsequently adopted or ratified by the principal which has the effect of validating it from its inception. The idea of agency in relation to an infant is as foreign, their Lordships conceive, to Mahomedan law as to every other system.

2. Mohammad Biaz Husain v. Mohammad Iftikhar Hussain, (1932) 19 A I R P C 76 = 136 I C 97=7 Luck 1=59 I A 92 (P C).

This was relied on by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in I·L R (1937) All 195,[3] where the conclusion was arrived at that a transaction of this kind is void ab initio, but we would prefer to put it in the way that their Lordships of the Privy Council put it though it may well be that the practical effect in the case of infants is the same. Reliance is placed by counsel for the appellants on a passage in the judgment reported in 33 Bom L R 603[4] at the bottom of p. 606 and the top of p. 607. With respect, we are unable to agree with the view there expressed that a transaction of this kind might be justified by cases of extreme necessity. We do not read the Privy Council decision in 45 Cal 878[1] at p. 897 as expressing that view, though their Lordships do say that so far as moveable property is concerned, alienation could be justified in the case of the necessity referred to in the Hedaya. As regards the case referred to in A I R 1937 Pesh 74[5] and relied on by counsel for the appellants, that is a decision to the effect, relying upon two Privy Council decisions, 34 All 213[6] and 45 Cal 878,[1] that a transfer made by a de facto guardian of a Mahomedan minor is not wholly void because it is the minor who can avoid it. In 34 All 213[6] their Lordships held that a mortgage by a de facto guardian was, under Mahomedan law, in precisely the same case as a mortgage by a totally unauthorized person. Their Lordships in 45 Cal 878[1] indicate a sort of case where the act of the mother might not be without effect, for example, if believing she is vested with authority as her husband's executrix she alienates not as guardian de facto but as executrix and the purchaser is let into possession and the minor when he comes of age does not deny the authority, then in such a case the alienation would be effective. But we apprehend that that turns on the fact that the mother is not purporting to act as a guardian de facto, nor as a guardian at all, but as an executrix. Such a case would not be helpful in determining what the position is when she purports to act as a guardian and it turns out that she is merely a guardian de facto. In 34 All 213[6] it was indicated that acquiescence or an act working an estoppel might prevent the minor from taking up the position that the act was by an unauthorized person but that in the case there under consideration he was not estopped and was not debarred from redeeming, apparently no question of avoiding the mortgage arose. It follows from the above, in our opinion, that the transaction could not be ratified, that Ex. P-2 has no effect and, accordingly, that the mortgage is not binding on defendant 1.

Next it is said that although this be so, the plaintiffs have an equity against defendant 2 to get a money decree on the ground of total failure of consideration. Apart from the difficulties which we later examine when considering defendant 1's position, there is a fatal and simple difficulty in the way of any such relief against defendant 2. Defendant 2, though she happens to be the aunt of defendant 1, is at the present moment the owner of this property not because she is his aunt, not because she is in any way connected by relationship but because defendant 1 having been sued and a decree having been given against him in a money suit this particular item of property in execution of that decree was brought to sale and bought by defendant 2. The learned Judge, in our opinion, is wrong when he says in para. 14 of his judgment that defendant 2 represents defendant 1. She in no way represents defendant 1. Her title is entirely distinct from that of defendant 1 except that she is a purchaser from him. Although defendant 1 or rather his guardian de facto may have received from the plaintiffs money and the plaintiffs have got in return for those moneys no security, that does not in any way work an equity against defendant 2, a purchaser at court auction. Incidentally, we observe that she is the person to fight whom the money was borrowed. Therefore we are unable to give the plaintiffs any relief as against defendant 2. Whether such a relief can be given against defendant 1 we consider later.

There remains another point. It is said that Rehmat Bi being the wife of Abbas

3. Mt. Anto v. Reoti Kuer, (1936) 23 A I R All 337=166 I C 61=I L R (1937) All 195=1936 A L J 1099 (F B).

4. Shidlingava v. Rajava, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 23 =134 I C 366=33 Bom L R 603.

5. Jawahir Singh Mahtab Singh Saran Singh v. Kohat Municipality, (1937) 24 A I R Pesh 74 =170 I C 63.

6. Mata Din v. Ahmadalli, (1912) 34 All 213= 18 I C 976=39 I A 49=9 A L J 215=15 O C 49 (P C).

Ali was entitled to a widow's share when Abbas Ali died. In point of fact although she was the guardian ad litem in the litigation launched by Sugrabi against Jakirali and his grandmother Asabi, she did not make any claim to any share and accordingly the estate was parcelled out between Jakirali, Sugrabi and Asabi. Now it is said that in truth Rehmat Bi was entitled to Re. 0-1-8¼ share and if this mortgage fails against the minor it should at least succeed against the person who purported to make it. That argument is founded on the wording of the mortgage, Ex. P-1. It is founded upon that part of the mortgage relating to the property alienated which is stated to be Rupee 0-8-4 share in the estate. In point of fact we are told the minor's share, according to Mahomedan law, is Re. 0-6-3¾. The position after the suit brought by Sugrabi was as follows: There were three persons amongst whom the estate was divided, Sugrabi, Asabi and Jakirali. Sugrabi got Re. 0-4-8, Asabi Re. 0-2-8 leaving Re. 0-8-8 to Jakirali. In point of fact this mortgage is dealing with Re. 0-8-4, but it is said that Re. 0-8-8 was not Jakirali's proper share because Rahmat Bi was entitled to a share and she was entitled to Re. 0-1-8¼ and Jakirali was entitled to Re. 0-6-3¾ which totals Re. 0-8-0 and not Re. 0-8-8. We have not pursued the eight pies to find out what becomes of that.

In our opinion, for the present argument to succeed, it would be necessary to infer from the fact that the mortgage purported to be for Re. 0-8-4 share, which was more than Jakirali's proper share, that Rahmat Bi must have been also mortgaging her own share. In other words, one would have to read into this mortgage an implied term, the implied term being that the mother was mortgaging her own interest. Such an implied term, in our opinion, is impossible where there is an express term which denies it. There is an express term. In fact the whole tenor of the mortgage, the language used, the fact that the verbs used are masculine and singular show that the mortgagor was the minor son and that what was being mortgaged was his share. The fact that that share was over-stated, at a time, it may be observed, when Sugrabi's right to a share was being challenged, does not make it possible, in face of the express words of the document, to say that the guardian was not mortgaging as a guardian solely but partly personally and was not mortgaging her minor son's property only but she was also mortgaging some of her own property. Therefore this point also, in our opinion, fails. The result is that with some regret, because unquestionably the plaintiffs have suffered the loss of their money through perhaps no fault of their own, the appeal fails as against defendant 2.

We are asked to give, in any event, a personal decree against defendant 1 to the extent of the money advanced, this relief being sought either because there has been an advance of money on a total failure of consideration or on equitable grounds. This alternative claim has not been argued by counsel for the appellants at any length possibly because owing to the present circumstances of defendant 1 any decree given against him would be infructuous. But we have had the advantage of the valuable argument from Mr. Sen as amicus curiae, defendant 1 not being represented before us, and in our opinion that argument shows that this is not a case in which any such decree can be given. At p. 549 of 30 Cal 539[7] their Lordships of the Privy Council cite with approval an observation of Romer L. J. at page 13 of (1902) 1 Ch 1[8] (see on appeal (1903) A C 6[9] to the following effect:

> The short answer is that a Court of equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which, as against that person, the Legislature has declared to be void.

That was a case of a contract purporting to be made on behalf of an infant. It was not a case under the Mahomedan law and it does not raise the nice distinction which might posssibly apply here between a void contract and a contract made by a person not authorized to act. But we think the same considerations apply to this case as to that.

It was indicated in argument before us that the only possible grounds under which money could be ordered to be returned would be under S. 65 or S. 68, Contract Act, or S. 38 or S. 41, Specific Relief Act. As to the latter two Sections the return would only be ordered as a term imposed upon a person seeking equitable relief. But here

7. Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose, (1903) 30 Cal 539=7 C W N 441=30 I A 114=8 Sar 374 (P C).
8. Thurstan v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society, (1902) 1 Ch 1=71 L J Ch 83.
9. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Thurstan, (1903) A C 6=72 L J Ch 134=87 L T 529=51 W R 273=67 J P 129.

there is no question of a person seeking equitable relief. This is not a case in which defendant 1 is seeking the cancellation of the mortgage but a case in which the mortgagees are seeking to enforce a mortgage. As to S. 68, Contract Act, assuming that the loan was used for the infant's necessaries (and there is a finding to the contrary) the proper remedy would be to sue for the return of the money under the powers conferred by S. 68, Contract Act. The time for doing that would be within three years of the advance. The advance was in 1918 and this suit is in 1933. As to S. 65, Contract Act, and generally, we have considered whether it would be possible to regard this as a case falling within the observations in 45 All 179.[10] That was a case where it was not known until the result of certain litigation was ascertained (to which the purchaser was not a party) whether the vendor had or had not title. It then appeared, as a result of that litigation, that the vendor had no title and the Judicial Committee in a suit claiming alternatively the return of the money paid by way of price held that limitation dated from the date it was known that title was defective, not from the date the money was paid. But, in our opinion, that mode of approach fails in consequence of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in 50 Cal 929[11] and 54 All 1067[12] to the effect that when a transfer is void owing to a provision of law, so that a cause of action to recover the consideration under S. 65, Contract Act, arises, time runs, in the absence of special circumstances, from the date of the agreement. At the date of the agreement the parties thereto presumably knew the Mahomedan law, knew that his mother was incapable of making an effective mortgage on behalf of her minor son and must be deemed in law to have known that they were advancing their money without any effective security. They accordingly should have sued within three years from the date of the advance. Those cases together with 30 Cal 539[7] appear to us to make it now impossible to pass a personal decree against defendant 1 based either on equitable grounds or on the view that he has received for his necessities a certain sum of money. The result, is the appeal is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

10. Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh, (1922) 9 A I R P C 403=71 I C 629=45 All 179=50 I A 69=26 O C 223 (P C).
11. Ananda Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick, (1923) 10 A I R P C 189=74 I C 499=50 Cal 929=50 I A 289 (P C).
12. Hansraj Gupta v. Dehra Dun Mussoorie Electric Tramway Co. Ltd., (1933) 20 A I R P C 63=142 I C 7=54 All 1067=60 I A 13 (P C).

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 31

GRUER J.

Suwalal Vemichand — Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Fazle Hussain Rajabali Bohra and another — Defendants — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 847 of 1937, Decided on 19th October 1938.

(a) Partnership Act (1932), Ss. 22 and 25 — Surety executed by partner held on behalf of firm and hence binding on other partners.

A managing partner of a firm gave surety, and the letter under which the surety was given read as follows: "Please accept the salutations of Rajab Ali Muhammadali. This is to write to you that please keep a khata of the goods of Rupees 200, in words two hundred rupees, of Adam Ali Nazar Ali of mouza Sirpur. The responsibility for Rs. 200 is ours. Sambat 1985, miti Kartak Sudi 3, Thursday, dated 15th November 1928. Rajab Ali Muhammad Ali by the pen of Fajli Hussain" :

Held that the executant clearly purported to act on behalf of the firm. The act had been done so as to bind the firm in the manner mentioned in Sec. 22, Partnership Act. The other partners were therefore liable under Sec. 25 of the Act. [P 32 C 1]

(b) Surety—Continuing guarantee for limited amount for supply of goods on credit — Goods worth more than amount mentioned in bond supplied on credit — Surety is liable to extent mentioned in bond.

Where a surety has given a continuing guarantee for a limited amount for the supply of goods on credit to the principal debtor it does not prohibit the advancing of goods beyond that sum and if the goods are supplied to the debtor exceeding that amount the surety would not be discharged but would be liable to the extent mentioned in the bond : A I R 1937 Mad 360, Rel. on. [P 32 C 1]

 (c) Surety — Continuing guarantee — Acknowledgment by principal debtor does not save limitation against surety.

An acknowledgment by the principal debtor does not save limitation against the surety, unless it is shown that the latter allowed himself to be represented by the person who made the payment. This principle will apply to the continuing guarantee also : 28 Bom 248 ; A I R 1924 Nag 411 ; A I R 1917 Mad 895 and A I R 1931 Lah 691, Applied; 14 M I A 86 (PC), Disting. [P 32 C 2]

R. N. Padhye — for Applicant.

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Opposite Party.

Order. — Two points emerge in this application. The first is, whether the surety given by non-applicant 1, Fajli Hussain, is binding against his partner Hasanali in the firm of Rajabali Muhammadali, and the second is whether the acknowledgment (kabuli hisab) dated 18th June 1933 which kept the debt alive against the principal debtor does so against the surety. The first point is not difficult to answer. Ex. P-3, the letter under which the surety was given, clearly purports to be on behalf of the firm. It reads as follows:

Please accept the salutations of Rajab Ali Muhammadali. This is to write to you that please keep a khata of the goods of Rs. 200, in words two hundred rupees, of Adam Ali Nazar Ali of Mauza Sirpur. The responsibility for Rs. 200 is ours. Sambat 1985, miti Kartak Sudi 3, Thursday, dated 15th November 1928. Rajab Ali Muhammad Ali by the pen of Fajli Hussain.

The executant clearly purports to act on behalf of the firm. He is said to be the managing partner. The act has been done so as to bind the firm in the manner mentioned in S. 22, Partnership Act. The other partners are therefore liable under S. 25 of the Act. On the second point the plea is first taken that the undertaking in Ex. P-3 ceased to be binding as soon as goods more than Rs. 200 in value were given on credit. There is no suggestion of such a plea on the record. Fajli Hussain himself does not suggest such an interpretation of the suretyship, either in his pleadings or in the witness-box. The letter is of course not artistically worded, but it seems to give a continuing guarantee for a limited amount of Rs. 200. It does not prohibit the advancing of goods beyond that amount. The position is similar to what it was in A I R 1937 Mad 360[1] and the result would be that the surety would be liable to the extent mentioned in the bond.

The main point is the effect of the acknowledgment. It is admitted that but for this acknowledgment the debt in suit would have been time-barred. There is good authority for holding that a payment by a principal debtor does not give a fresh starting point against the surety: 28 Bom 248,[2] A I R 1924 Nag 411[3] and 32 I C 608.[4] The same reasoning would apply to an acknowledgment and it was held in 13 Lah 240[5] that an acknowledgment by the principal debtor does not save limitation against the surety, unless it is shown that the latter allowed himself to be represented by the person who made the payment. These cases may not refer to continuing guarantees, but does that alter the position? The learned counsel for the applicant maintains that when such a guarantee extending to a series of transactions is given, no question of limitation arises so far as the surety is concerned. He even goes to the length of saying that even if the creditor had allowed the items to become finally barred against himself the surety would still be liable. He says that as the debt has been kept in time by virtue of the acknowledgment it cannot be said to be not due against the principal debtor.

According to Sec. 128, Contract Act, the liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, but this implies that the liability of the surety must not be extended to his detriment. Now if the debtor and the creditor had not agreed between themselves to take this acknowledgment the debt would have been time-barred and the surety would have been released. I cannot accede to the proposition that the surety could be called on to pay a time-barred debt. The surety was entitled to expect that the creditor would recover payment within time and not that he should be called upon to make good items taken years previously. I find that the principle in the above cases will apply to the continuing guarantee also. Counsel refers me to 14 M I A 86,[6] but that case is distinguishable as it dealt with a "contract of indemnity" (see S. 124, Contract Act) there being surety bonds against embezzlement which were renewed at different periods. These bonds remained in force and were not given up and further they were in favour of Government; so no question of limitation was raised. I hold then that the lower Court was correct in saying that the acknowledgment did not save limitation against defendant 3 or defendant 4. The application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

1. Hajee Moosa v. Abdul Kareem, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 360=167 I C 1006=(1937) 1 M L J 143.
2. Gopal Daji v. Gopal, (1904) 28 Bom 248 = 5 Bom L R 1020.
3. Abde Ali v. Askaran, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 411 =84 I C 199=20 N L R 140.
4. Kothandaraman Chetty v. Shunmugam Chetty, (1917) 4 A I R Mad 895=32 I C 608.
5. Dialu Mal v. Nandu Shah-Dev Raj, (1931) 18 A I R Lah 691=132 I C 590 = 13 Lah 240= 33 P L R 59.
6. Lala Banshidhar v. Bengal Government, (1870-72) 14 M I A 86=16 W R 11=2 Suther 448=2 Sar 689=9 Beng L R 364 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 33

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Garamlal Punaji Lodhi —
Defendant No. 2 — Appellant.

v.

Tularam Amritlal Lodhi —
Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 478 of 1935, Decided on 16th August 1938, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Chindwara, D/- 2nd July 1935.

Hindu Law—Minor and guardian—Guardian as manager can bind minor's estate—Where guardian is not manager, minor is not liable for debts contracted by guardian.

A guardian as manager can in a proper case bind, charge, incumber and/or alienate the estate, but the estate cannot be reached simply because the guardian purports to bind the minor because it is as manager that he binds the estate. If the estate is to be bound there must be something which causes the estate to be bound, generally there must be some document binding the estate though sometimes the estate may be reached because it has been enriched as a consequence of the transaction in question. But where the guardian of the minor is not the manager of the estate and does not purport to bind the estate by his acts, the minor is not liable for debts contracted by the guardian on behalf of the minor : Case law discussed. [P 34 C 1; P 35 C 1]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellant.

Abdul Razak Khan — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal, in which defendant 2 is the appellant, raises the question whether an infant can be made liable in contract by his mother and guardian. The case raises the opposing views which have been expressed on this point by various Courts in India in an unusually clear way because the alleged liability is created by a bond which the guardian executed purporting to act on behalf of her minor sons, defendants 1 and 2. The bond was given to raise money to pay off debts incurred by the father of the sons and which debts were due to the payee under the bond. The plaintiff's case was that both the sons at the time were minors but the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact (by which finding this Court in second appeal is admittedly bound) that at the time the bond was executed, defendant 1 was a major. Being a major he was at that date the managing coparcener and his mother, it is said, had no power to bind the estate and, in any case, had no power to contract on behalf of her minor son. In the result if the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is upheld the elder son is not liable for anything, for his mother could not contract on his behalf he being a major and she not appearing to be his agent but purporting to act as guardian which she could not be. On the other hand, the lower Appellate Court has held the younger son liable for the whole because his mother and guardian can bind him contractually and the contractual liability is several as well as joint and is for the whole amount of the bond and not for half.

In our opinion, there is nothing ambiguous about the decision of the Board in 11 Bom 551[1] at p. 561. That case does not turn upon any difference between a contractual liability arising from a covenant in a conveyance and any other contractual liability. Their Lordships say that there is not in Indian law any rule which gives a guardian and manager greater power to bind the infant ward by a personal covenant than exists in English law. That proposition was admitted by a very accomplished lawyer, Mr. Mayne, who had a long experience not only before their Lordships' Board but in Madras and was the author of one of the most highly regarded works on Hindu law. Their Lordships accepted it. They add :

> Their Lordships . . . conceive that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward . . . .

It is indeed difficult to see how a guardian can make contractually bound a minor who cannot by his contract bind himself, though clearly a manager can bind the minor's estate not qua agent or guardian of the minor but as manager of the minor's estate. It is true that a minor can be made liable in certain cases which fall within S. 68, Contract Act. But, this liability is a statutory liability springing out of the fact that the person claiming has supplied the minor with necessaries suited to his condition in life. As Pollock A. J. C. observed in A I R 1933 Nag 285[2] if money is supplied and expended on necessaries it can be recovered back whether a bond is given or not. Thus it does not matter, in such a case, whether the guardian or minor or neither executes the bond. The liability springs from the advance and the use, not from the bond. Difficult questions can arise as to what cases fall within S. 68. In 18 firm of Rajabali Muhammadali, and the second is whether the acknowledgment (kabuli hisab) dated 18th June 1933 which kept the debt alive against the principal debtor does so against the surety. The first point is not difficult to answer. Ex. P-3, the letter under which the surety was given, clearly purports to be on behalf of the firm. It reads as follows:

1. Waghela Rajasanji v. Shekh Masludin, (1887) 11 Bom 551 (P C).
2. Shriniwasrao v. Baba Ram, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 285=145 I C 350.

Please accept the salutations of Rajab Ali Muhammadali. This is to write to you that please keep a khata of the goods of Rs. 200, in words two hundred rupees, of Adam Ali Nazar Ali of Mauza Sirpur. The responsibility for Rs. 200 is ours. Sambat 1985, miti Kartak Sudi 3, Thursday, dated 15th November 1928. Rajab Ali Muhammad Ali by the pen of Fajli Hussain.

The executant clearly purports to act on behalf of the firm. He is said to be the managing partner. The act has been done so as to bind the firm in the manner mentioned in S. 22, Partnership Act. The other partners are therefore liable under S. 25 of the Act. On the second point the plea is first taken that the undertaking in Ex. P-3 ceased to be binding as soon as goods more than Rs. 200 in value were given on credit. There is no suggestion of such a plea on the record. Fajli Hussain himself does not suggest such an interpretation of the suretyship, either in his pleadings or in the witness-box. The letter is of course not artistically worded, but it seems to give a continuing guarantee for a limited amount of Rs. 200. It does not prohibit the advancing of goods beyond that amount. The position is similar to what it was in A I R 1937 Mad 360[1] and the result would be that the surety would be liable to the extent mentioned in the bond.

The main point is the effect of the acknowledgment. It is admitted that but for this acknowledgment the debt in suit would have been time-barred. There is good authority for holding that a payment by a principal debtor does not give a fresh starting point against the surety: 28 Bom 248,[2] A I R 1924 Nag 411[3] and 32 I C 608.[4] The same reasoning would apply to an acknowledgment and it was held in 13 Lah 240[5] that an acknowledgment by the principal debtor does not save limitation against the surety, unless it is shown that the latter allowed himself to be represented by the person who made the payment. These cases may not refer to continuing guarantees, but does that alter the position? The learned counsel for the applicant maintains that when such a guarantee extending to a series of transactions is given, no question of limitation arises so far as the surety is concerned. He even goes to the length of saying that even if the creditor had allowed the items to become finally barred against himself the surety would still be liable. He says that as the debt has been kept in time by virtue of the acknowledgment it cannot be said to be not due against the principal debtor.

According to Sec. 128, Contract Act, the liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, but this implies that the liability of the surety must not be extended to his detriment. Now if the debtor and the creditor had not agreed between themselves to take this acknowledgment the debt would have been time-barred and the surety would have been released. I cannot accede to the proposition that the surety could be called on to pay a time-barred debt. The surety was entitled to expect that the creditor would recover payment within time and not that he should be called upon to make good items taken years previously. I find that the principle in the above cases will apply to the continuing guarantee also. Counsel refers me to 14 M I A 86,[6] but that case is distinguishable as it dealt with a "contract of indemnity" (see S. 124, Contract Act) there being surety bonds against embezzlement which were renewed at different periods. These bonds remained in force and were not given up and further they were in favour of Government; so no question of limitation was raised. I hold then that the lower Court was correct in saying that the acknowledgment did not save limitation against defendant 3 or defendant 4. The application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

1. Hajee Moosa v. Abdul Kareem, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 360=167 I C 1006=(1937) 1 M L J 143.
2. Gopal Daji v. Gopal, (1904) 28 Bom 248 = 5 Bom L R 1020.
3. Abde Ali v. Askaran, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 411 =84 I C 199=20 N L R 140.
4. Kothandaraman Chetty v. Shunmugam Chetty, (1917) 4 A I R Mad 895=32 I C 608.
5. Dialu Mal v. Nandu Shah-Dev Raj, (1931) 18 A I R Lah 691=132 I C 590 = 13 Lah 240= 33 P L R 59.
6. Lala Banshidhar v. Bengal Government, (1870-72) 14 M I A 86=16 W R 11=2 Suther 448=2 Sar 689=9 Beng L R 364 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 33

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Garamlal Punaji Lodhi —
Defendant No. 2 — Appellant.

v.

Tularam Amritlal Lodhi —
Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 478 of 1935, Decided on 16th August 1938, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Chindwara, D/- 2nd July 1935.

Hindu Law—Minor and guardian—Guardian as manager can bind minor's estate—Where guardian is not manager, minor is not liable for debts contracted by guardian.

A guardian as manager can in a proper case bind, charge, incumber and/or alienate the estate, but the estate cannot be reached simply because the guardian purports to bind the minor because it is as manager that he binds the estate. If the estate is to be bound there must be something which causes the estate to be bound, generally there must be some document binding the estate though sometimes the estate may be reached because it has been enriched as a consequence of the transaction in question. But where the guardian of the minor is not the manager of the estate and does not purport to bind the estate by his acts, the minor is not liable for debts contracted by the guardian on behalf of the minor : Case law discussed. [P 34 C 1 ; P 35 C 1]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellant.

Abdul Razak Khan — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal, in which defendant 2 is the appellant, raises the question whether an infant can be made liable in contract by his mother and guardian. The case raises the opposing views which have been expressed on this point by various Courts in India in an unusually clear way because the alleged liability is created by a bond which the guardian executed purporting to act on behalf of her minor sons, defendants 1 and 2. The bond was given to raise money to pay off debts incurred by the father of the sons and which debts were due to the payee under the bond. The plaintiff's case was that both the sons at the time were minors but the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact (by which finding this Court in second appeal is admittedly bound) that at the time the bond was executed, defendant 1 was a major. Being a major he was at that date the managing coparcener and his mother, it is said, had no power to bind the estate and, in any case, had no power to contract on behalf of her minor son. In the result if the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is upheld the elder son is not liable for anything, for his mother could not contract on his behalf he being a major and she not appearing to be his agent but purporting to act as guardian which she could not be. On the other hand, the lower Appellate Court has held the younger son liable for the whole because his mother and guardian can bind him contractually and the contractual liability is several as well as joint and is for the whole amount of the bond and not for half.

In our opinion, there is nothing ambiguous about the decision of the Board in 11 Bom 551[1] at p. 561. That case does not turn upon any difference between a contractual liability arising from a covenant in a conveyance and any other contractual liability. Their Lordships say that there is not in Indian law any rule which gives a guardian and manager greater power to bind the infant ward by a personal covenant than exists in English law. That proposition was admitted by a very accomplished lawyer, Mr. Mayne, who had a long experience not only before their Lordships' Board but in Madras and was the author of one of the most highly regarded works on Hindu law. Their Lordships accepted it. They add :

> Their Lordships . . . conceive that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward . . . .

It is indeed difficult to see how a guardian can make contractually bound a minor who cannot by his contract bind himself, though clearly a manager can bind the minor's estate not qua agent or guardian of the minor but as manager of the minor's estate. It is true that a minor can be made liable in certain cases which fall within S. 68, Contract Act. But, this liability is a statutory liability springing out of the fact that the person claiming has supplied the minor with necessaries suited to his condition in life. As Pollock A. J. C. observed in A I R 1933 Nag 285[2] if money is supplied and expended on necessaries it can be recovered back whether a bond is given or not. Thus it does not matter, in such a case, whether the guardian or minor or neither executes the bond. The liability springs from the advance and the use, not from the bond. Difficult questions can arise as to what cases fall within S. 68. In 18

1. Waghela Rajasanji v. Shekh Masludin, (1887) 11 Bom 551 (P C).
2. Shriniwasrao v. Baba Ram, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 285=145 I C 350.

N L R 119[3] moneys borrowed to satisfy a decree passed against the minor in respect of his liability under the pious obligation rule to pay his father's debts were held not to be necessaries. In 24 N L R 54,[4] on the other hand it was held, following the majority view expressed in 42 Mad 185,[5] that a minor's estate was liable in respect of the contractual liability springing out of a simple money bond executed by the guardian to pay off the father's debts. This view was not concurred in by Pollock A. J. C. in the case above mentioned who founded the liability, if any, upon S. 68: see also 2 N L R 25.[6]

If the estate is to be bound there must be something which causes the estate to be bound, generally there must be some document binding the estate though sometimes the estate may be reached because it has been enriched as a consequence of the transaction in question. See as to this 13 N L R 109[7] and 32 All 325.[8] In 13 N L R 109[7] following the single Judge decision in 20 Bom 767[9] and the Full Bench case in 26 Bom 206,[10] (see also 34 Bom 72[11]) the liability of an ancestral business the ownership of which was, by survivorship, in a minor and the management in his guardian was put as a special case, the obligation being imposed on the family estate because, in such a case the manager, the guardian, is deemed, as such, empowered to bind the estate. On the other hand in 35 Cal 320[12] the broad proposition enunciated by the Privy Council was made subject to a modification. The guardian may bind the minor personally to pay if the promise to pay is made "merely to keep alive a debt for which the ward's property was liable." There is a considerable number of Madras cases to the same effect. The most recent one is to be found in A I R 1937 Mad 1,[13] a single Judge decision which contains a reference to most of the cases. The matter, so far as Madras is concerned, can be expressed (on this point) in the words of Curgenven J. in 54 Mad 163[14] at p. 183, quoted by Ramesam J. in 58 Mad 735[15] and by Venkataramana Rao J. in A I R 1937 Mad 1,[13] when speaking of the minor's liability under the personal law (i. e. Hindu law); see also 42 Mad 185[5]:

> Its effect is that any liability to which the minor would be subject under the Hindu law is not the less a liability because it was incurred by his guardian on his behalf.

As we understand this proposition, it means that if the minor's estate could be reached had the guardian done nothing it can still be reached though the guardian has purported to act and by his act has, for example, turned a debt by a father into a debt by the son. We incline to the view that this proposition must be subject to several restrictions. In the first place it is not immaterial to consider what action is being brought. Is it an action based on the pious obligation rule (to which a variety of defences are open) or is it an action on a bond given on behalf not of a father but a son, not of a major but a minor? If the former, certain considerations arise; if the latter, other and different ingredients must be present if the action is to be well founded. In both cases the liability, if any, fastens on the estate, not the minor. In the first case it so fastens because the father has incurred a liability for which the estate even when in his son's hands is, subject to certain exceptions, liable. In the second case it so fastens because, and if, the person giving the bond is able to, and does in fact, bind the estate. It appears to be reasonably plain that a person may be a guardian of a minor without being manager of the estate. The present is a case in point. But if a manager (the elder brother in this case) holds out a younger brother's guardian as the manager doubtless then the estate could be reached by the law of estoppel. But the liability would then be on the

3. Nilkanth v. Chandrabhan, (1922) 9 A I R Nag 247=64 I C 851=18 N L R 119.
4. Lalchand v. Narhar, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 31 =89 I C 896=24 N L R 54.
5. Ramajogayya v. Jagannadham, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 641=49 I C 872=42 Mad 185=36 M L J 29 (F B).
6. Tukaram Manaji v. Ramchandra Hari, (1906) 2 N L R 25.
7. Jhitibai v. Tejmal, (1916) 3 A I R Nag 11=41 I C 35=13 N L R 109.
8. Nandan Prasad v. Ajudhia Prasad, (1910) 32 All 325=5 I C 413=7 A L J 236.
9. Rampartab Samrathrai v. Foolibai, (1896) 20 Bom 767.
10. Sakrabhai Nathubhai v. Maganlal Mulchand, (1902) 26 Bom 206=3 Bom L R 738 (F B).
11. Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay, (1910) 34 Bom 72=2 I C 173 = 11 Bom L R 255.
12. Bhawal Sahu v. Baijnath Pertab Narain Singh, (1908) 35 Cal 320=12 C W N 256.
13. Muthuswami v. Annamalai, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 1=169 I C 261.
14. Zamindar of Polavaram v. Maharaja of Pittapuram, (1931) 18 A I R Mad 140=135 I C 17 =54 Mad 163=60 M L J 56.
15. Satyanarayana v. Mallayya, (1935) 22 A I R Mad 447 = 155 I C 581 = 58 Mad 735 = 68 M L J 540 (F B).

estate because (as in the Hindu trading family cases above cited) a person acting as, or held out as, the manager had, as such, and within his powers as such, bound the estate. If he has not bound the estate, the estate is not bound. The estate cannot, we think, be reached simply because the guardian purports to bind the minor. It is as manager that he binds the estate and this, we think, is implicit in 1 N L R 66.[16]

We accordingly are unable to accept the proposition in the broad terms used (relying on authority derived from Bengal, viz. 35 Cal 320[12] and Madras) by Trevelyan in his 'Law Relating to Minors' (Edn. 6), p. 169. Cases such as 13 Lah 399[17] (incumbrance) and 57 Bom 40[18] (alienation) do not help. It is not disputed that a guardian as manager can in a proper case bind, charge, incumber and/or alienate the estate. The difficulty here is that the guardian was not the manager, or, even if one waives all rules of pleading and regards the guardian as held out as manager and capable of binding the estate as such, she did not purport to bind the estate. Her act amounted to the entering into a contract whereby money was lent. For that contract her minor son is not liable. This case has not been fought as one where the estate in the hands of the son is sought to be made liable under the pious obligation rule. It is a simple suit on a bond : see para. 8 of the plaint. The money advanced is not stated to have been utilized to pay a father's debt but to have been used to repay a loan (to whom, as distinct from by whom, made is not stated) advanced for the marriage of the minor and the management of the estate. In our opinion the appeal succeeds and the suit must be dismissed against defendant 2. As the case is a hard one we fix the costs at Rs. 5.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

16. Seth Ghasiram v. Mt. Binia, (1905) 1 N L R 66.
17. Kundan Lal v. Beni Pershad, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 293 = 137 I C 115 = 13 Lah 399 = 32 P L R 861.
18. Tulsidas Vaghela v. Raisingji (1933) 20 A I R Bom 15 = 141 I C 17=57 Bom 40=34 Bom L R 1483 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 35

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Jainarayan Ramgopal Marwadi — Defendant 4 — Appellant.

v.

Balwant Maroti Shingore and another, Plaintiffs 1 and 2 and others, Defendants 1, 2 and 3 — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 141 of 1936, Decided on 15th August 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Ellichpur, D/- 21st January 1936.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), Ss. 174, 176 — Oral sale which is ineffective as sale under Transfer of Property Act may operate to transfer some portion of vendor's interest in holding within the meaning of S. 176 and may amount to sale giving rise to right of pre-emption — Intention of parties is determining factor.

The word 'sale' as used in S. 176, Berar Land Revenue Code, must not be construed in the narrow sense in which it is used in the Transfer of Property Act. An oral sale which is ineffective as a sale under the Transfer of Property Act for want of writing and registration, may nevertheless operate to transfer some portion of the vendor's interest in the holding within the meaning of S. 176, Berar Land Revenue Code, and may amount to a sale. [P 38 C 2 ; P 39 C 1]

In each case the intention of the parties must form the determining factor. Where the intention was to 'sell', to transfer all the interest which the 'vendor' had to the 'vendee' and possession was given and the price was paid and the only reason why a registered sale deed was not executed was to try and frustrate the cosharer's right of pre-emption, interest contemplated by Ss. 174 and 176 passes, so as to give rise to a right of pre-emption : 16 All 344 (F B) ; A I R 1923 P C 41 ; 7 All 482 (F B) ; A I R 1922 All 46 ; A I R 1922 Bom 124 and 35 Cal 575, Rel. on. [P 39 C 1]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 174 (1) — All questions of pre-emptions in Berar must be governed by the Code—Reference may be made to Mahomedan law to elucidate matters upon which Code is silent.

All questions of pre-emption in Berar must be governed by the Berar Land Revenue Code and not by Mahomedan law on which the Code is, in part, based. S. 174 (1) itself indicates that; but reference may be made to Mahomedan law to elucidate matters upon which the Code is silent : A I R 1938 Nag 59 and A I R 1936 Nag 278, Rel. on. [P 37 C 1]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 54— Mere contract of sale does not of itself create interest in or charge upon property when Transfer of Property Act applies.

An unregistered contract of sale of property is an agreement to sell and so gives rise to a right to enforce specific performance, but unlike the English law where an equitable estate is created by a mere agreement to sell, in India a mere contract of sale does not of itself create any interest in or charge upon the property when the Transfer of

Property Act applies: A I R 1916 P C 139, Rel. on. [P 37 C 1]

(d) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 174 —Pre-emption rights conferred by Code can be interpreted in sense in which they are used in S. 7, Para. vi, Court-fees Act, and in Art. 10, Limitation Act.

When considering the rights of pre-emption conferred by the Berar Land Revenue Code, it is legitimate to interpret them in the sense in which they are used in Para. (vi) of S. 7, Court-fees Act and in Art. 10, Sch. 1, Limitation Act. [P 37 C 2]

(e) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 10 —'Sale' in Art. 10 is to be understood in sense in which it is used in Mahomedan law.

The word 'sale' in Art. 10 is to be understood in the sense in which it is used under the Mahomedan law of pre-emption and not in the limited sense in which it is referred to in the Transfer of Property Act : A I R 1932 P C 41, Rel. on. [P 38 C 1]

(f) Interpretation of Statutes — Codified law —Construction of.

It is a recognized canon of construction that when a law is merely being codified, and especially when it is being transferred almost bodily from one Code to another, departure is not to be presumed unless it is made in express terms. [P 38 C 1]

(g) Pre-emption—Suit for—Word 'sale' when used in connexion with pre-emption must be construed in wider sense in which it is used in Art. 10, Limitation Act and S. 7 (vi), Court-fees Act.

The word 'sale' when used in connexion with the general law of pre-emption in India, is not to be construed in the narrow sense in which it is used in the Transfer of Property Act. It must be used in that wider sense in Art. 10, Limitation Act and S. 7 (vi), Court-fees Act. [P 38 C 2]

Dr. D. W. Kathalay and K. V. Brahma — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye and S. P. Kotval — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a suit for pre-emption. Survey No 64/1 had two sets of cosharers each owning 8 annas in it. One-half belonged to Jainarain, defendant 4, and the other to Gulabchand and Madangopal, defendants 2 and 3. On 10th May 1933, defendants 2 and 3 orally sold their half of the field to defendant 1, Surajkaran, for Rs. 1700. This is the sale which the plaintiff seeks to pre-empt. After this, on 13th March 1934, defendant 1 is said to have sold, again orally, the half share he had purchased as above to defendant 4 who thus got the entire pot-hissa. This sale has been challenged by the plaintiff who says that the transaction was a fraudulent one and that it did not take place till after the institution of his suit and was then antedated. On 15th June 1934, the plaintiff instituted this suit for pre-emption. On 22nd August 1934 the plaint was amended and defendant 4, Jainarayan, who was not originally a party, was added. Both the lower Courts find that the sale to defendant 4 did not take place on 13th March 1934 but after the institution of the suit and that it was a fraudulent device to defeat the plaintiff's claim. They were particularly impressed with the evidence which established that on 16th June 1934, three months after the alleged sale to defendant 4, defendant 1 appeared before the patwari and asked for mutation in his name in respect of the sale of 10th May 1933 and said nothing about the subsequent sale to defendant 4. If the defendant's story about the sale to defendant 4 on 13th March 1934 is true, it is obvious that defendant 1 had then no interest left in the property. They also took into consideration the fact that defendants 1 and 4 are brothers. In the circumstances there is ample evidence to support these findings which are purely one of fact.

It is argued however that the presumption arising from the correctness of the Record of Rights entry in Ex. 4 D-1 has been ignored, but, I do not think that that is of much consequence in this case. The burden of proof has been placed aright and the decisions of the lower Courts are based on the positive evidence of the patwari. The only question of importance which arises here is not what the entry says but when it was made. It is clear from Ex. 4 D-8 that it was not made till 29th August 1934, that is to say more than two months after the present suit had been filed and at a time when both sides to the mutation had ample motive for giving the Revenue Officers false information. The fact that neither Court has referred to this document though they have referred to other documents seems to indicate that it was not relied on by the defendants during their arguments. But however that may be, I am satisfied that the omission, if omission it is, has not affected the findings. They would have been just the same even if this document had been expressly mentioned in the judgments. That, of course, means that defendant 4's rights can be ignored because apart from all else they accrued during the pendency of the lis. The real difficulty in the case is one of law. The sale which the plaintiff seeks to pre-empt is one which according to the defendant had no binding force because it was oral, and it is contended that the word 'transfer' in S. 183, Berar Land Revenue Code, must be strictly construed to mean one of the transfers contemplated by Ss. 176, 177 and 178, and that the word 'sale' in S. 176 must be construed in the sense in which it is used in the Transfer of Property Act.

Now there can be no doubt that all questions of pre-emption must be governed by the Code and not by the Mahomedan law on which the Code is in part based : S. 174 (1) itself indicates that ; but it is equally true that reference may be made to the Mahomedan law to elucidate matters upon which the Code is silent. Both these propositions are to be found in I L R (1937) Nag 469[1] and I L R (1937) Nag 108[2] at p. 109. Turning now to S. 183 (1) we find that when no notice of transfer has been given, a right of pre-emption is conferred when an occupant . . . . transfers his interest, or any portion thereof by any of the transfers contemplated in Ss. 176 etc. . . .

Section 176 which is the relevant Section here, deals with a case in which an occupant in a survey number "proposes to sell the whole or any portion of his interest", and it requires the intending vendor to intimate, among other things, "the extent of the interest to be sold." What I have to determine therefore is whether an oral sale which is ineffective as a sale for want of writing and registration nevertheless operates to transfer some portion of the vendor's interest in the holding. So far as the Transfer of Property Act is concerned I am clear that it does not.

Section 54 states that a sale of immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards can only be effected by a registered instrument and in no other way. Therefore, an oral sale of immovable property worth more than Rs. 100 does not transfer any interest in it : see 19 Cal 623.[3] Of course an unregistered contract of sale of property is an agreement to sell and so gives rise to a right to enforce specific performance, but unlike the English law where an equitable estate is created by a mere agreement to sell, in India a mere contract of sale does not of itself create any interest in or charge upon the property when the Transfer of Property Act applies : 44 Cal 542[4] at p. 552. So also the protection afforded by part performance does not apply because S. 53-A requires an instrument in writing signed by the vendor or by some one on his behalf, and here we have no writing at all but only an oral sale. Therefore there can be little doubt that if the word "sale" mentioned in Sec. 176 of the Berar Land Revenue Code is to be given the interpretation which it bears in the Transfer of Property Act, no right of pre-emption can arise. But the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents argues that as the Code is silent on this point, no definition of sale having been given, we are entitled to look to the Mahomedan law on which this part of the Code is based to gather what was meant by the word 'sale', and if we do that, then it will be found that the word includes an oral as well as a registered transaction. There is, I think, considerable force in this contention. Sec. 174 (1) of the Code states that :

The rights conferred by this Chapter upon the occupants in a survey number in respect of transfers of interests in that survey number shall be deemed to be rights of pre-emption within the meaning of Para. (vi) of S. 7, Court-fees Act 1870, and of Art. 10, Sch. 1 Limitation Act 1908.

The Section then continues "and they shall be enforceable only in the manner and to the extent provided by this chapter." There is thus a clear-cut distinction between the rights conferred and the manner in which they can be enforced. In the former case we are referred to the Court-fees and the Limitation Acts, in the latter to the Code itself. It seems to me therefore that when considering the rights of pre-emption conferred by the Code it is legitimate to interpret them in the sense in which they are used in the provisions referred to above of the Court-fees and the Limitation Acts. S. 7 (vi), Court-fees Act, speaks of pre-emption generally and not merely of statutory pre-emption. Art. 10 is even more general :

To enforce a right of pre-emption whether the right is founded on law or general usage or on special contract.

Column 3 then states :

When the purchaser takes under the sale sought to be impeached physical possession of the property sold, or where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession when the instrument of sale is registered.

1. Namdeo v. Kesheo, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 59=172 I C 701=I L R (1937) Nag 469.
2. Kisen v. Gangabai, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 278=167 I C 592=I L R (1937) Nag 108.
3. Makhan Lal Pal v. Bunku Behari Ghose, (1892) 19 Cal 623 (F B).
4. Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn, (1916) 3 A I R P C 139=38 I C 938=44 Cal 542=44 I A 15 (P C).

Now the word 'sale' has not been used here in the strict technical sense in which it is construed in the Transfer of Property Act. Though there is a difference of opinion among the High Courts on this point, there are cases in which it has been held that the word 'sale' is to be understood in the sense in which it is used under the Mahomedan law of pre-emption and not in the limited sense in which it is referred to in the Transfer of Property Act, and this view has now been endorsed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 Bom 1056.[5]

It must be remembered that the Mahomedan law of pre-emption existed and was acted on for centuries before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act and also that the law of pre-emption all over India is largely traceable to and based upon it : see Agarwala's Law of Pre-emption, p. 56. Even where it has now found statutory expression, the Legislature has done no more than codify, after such modifications as it saw fit, the already existing practice, and that is certainly true of the Berar Land Revenue Code as the cases which I have already cited show. It must also be borne in mind that the Berar Land Revenue Code of 1896 which first codified the law of pre-emption for Berar was passed long before the Transfer of Property Act had been applied there and at a time when oral sales were permissible. Therefore, it is clear that the expressions "transfer of an interest," "sale" and the like which we find in Ss. 205 and 206 of the old Code could not have been used in the sense in which the Transfer of Property Act uses them. That Act was not applied to Berar till 1907, that is to say not till 11 years later. Of course, the Act was in force in Berar when the new Land Revenue Code of 1928 was passed, but since the chapter on pre-emption incorporates the old law with hardly any change so far as the points now under consideration are concerned, it is legitimate to assume that the expressions "transfer of an interest" and "sale" which have been incorporated bodily from the one Act into the other were used in the same sense in both the Codes. It is a recognized canon of construction that when a law is merely being codified and especially when it is being transferred almost bodily from one Code to another, departure is not to be presumed unless it is made in express terms. That is not the case here and so I can only presume that the expressions we are considering were not used in the sense in which they are used in the Transfer of Property Act. In the Allahabad Full Bench case, 16 All 344,[6] Edge C. J. said at page 351:

> To import into the Mahomedan law of pre-emption the definition of the word 'sale' coupled with the restriction of the transfer of ownership contained in S. 54 of Act 4 of 1882, would be materially to alter the Mahomedan law of pre-emption and to afford to fraudulent persons a means of avoiding successfully the obligation of that law, the object of which was to enable cosharers and near neighbours, if they so desired, to exclude strangers from the enjoyment of immovable property to which the Mahomedan law of pre-emption applied . . . . I cannot think that it was the intention of the Legislature in passing Act 4 of 1882 to alter directly or indirectly the Mahomedan law of pre-emption as it existed and was understood for centuries prior to the passing of Act 4 of 1882, by substituting for the sale referred to in that law, the "sale" coupled with the restriction of Sec. 54 of Act 4 of 1882.

These remarks are, in my opinion, peculiarly apposite here if we substitute the words "Berar Land Revenue Code of 1896" for the words "Mahomedan law", and if we remember that the Code is based on the Mahomedan law and that the Transfer of Property Act was not in force there when the Code was made law. The latter portion of the extract which I have quoted was quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 Bom 1056[5] at page 1063 and so that ought to conclude the matter. In addition there are the following cases: 7 All 482,[7] 44 All 239[8] at p. 241 and 46 Bom 302.[9] It is true there are decisions to the contrary : they have been collected by Dr. Kathalay in his learned treatise on the Law of Pre-emption at pp. 61 and 62 and at pp. 135-37 ; but the position that the word "sale" when used in connexion with the general law of pre-emption in India is not to be construed in the narrow sense in which it is used in the Transfer of Property Act, has now, I think, been placed beyond the realm of controversy by the Judicial Committee. That being so, it must be used in that wider sense in Art. 10, Limitation Act and in S. 7 (vi), Court-fees Act and since

5. Sitaram Bhaurao v. Jiaul Hasan Sirajul Khan, (1923) 10 A I R P C 41=64 I C 826=45 Bom 1056=48 I A 475 (P C).

6. Begam v. Muhammad Yakub, (1894) 16 All 344=1894 A W N 101 (F B).

7. Janki v. Girijadat, (1885) 7 All 482 = 1885 A W N 97 (F B).

8. Ramsukh v. Mrs. L. E. O'Neal, (1922) 9 A I R All 46=65 I C 103=44 All 239=20 A L J 59.

9. Abdulla Avjal Momin v. Ismail Mugal Foda, (1922) 9 A I R Bom 124=64 I C 913=46 Bom 302=23 Bom L R 1079.

Sec. 174 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code expressly states that the rights conferred by Ch. 14 of the Code in respect of transfers of interest in a survey number shall be deemed to be rights of pre-emption within the meaning of those provisions, there is no escape from the position that the word "sale" as used in S. 176 must not be construed in the narrow sense for which the learned counsel for the appellant contends.

The next question therefore is whether the transaction in this case amounts to a sale within the meaning of the wider definition now given to it. Here also, their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down an important test, though it is possibly not the only test. They state that in each case the intention of the parties must form the determining factor : see 45 Bom 1056[5] at p. 1063 upholding 35 Cal 575.[10] In the present case, there can be no doubt whatever that the intention was to "sell", to transfer all the interests which the "vendor" had to the "vendee". Possession was given and the price was paid; and the only reason why a registered sale deed was not executed was to try and frustrate the cosharers' rights of pre-emption. These are the findings of the Courts below and being ones of fact are binding here. I need not dilate upon the question whether an intention to frustrate is necessary and whether the interest contemplated by Ss. 174 and 176 would pass even when there is no transfer of possession. It is enough to state that both these elements are present in this case and that when they are there, the rule applies. The decisions of the lower Courts are upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

10. Jadu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer, (1908) 35 Cal 575.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 39

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Purushottamdas Sakalchand — Appellant.

v.

Devkaran Kesheoji and others — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 32-B of 1935, Decided on 31st August 1938, from order of Fourth Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 25th April 1935.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Sec. 2 (2), 104 and O. 43 — Order that appeal or cross-objection abates is appealable.

An order that a suit abates is appealable as a decree : Case law relied on. [P 40 C 1]

On the same principles it can be held that an order directing that an appeal or cross-objection abates is also appealable : A I R 1914 P C 66 and A I R 1937 Pat 349, Disting. [P 40 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, Rule 22 (4) — Cross-objection cannot be heard when appeal abates.

A cross-objection is part of an appeal and if an appeal goes out for any extraneous reasons the cross-objection must ordinarily go out with it. Therefore a respondent has no right to be heard on his cross-objection when the appeal in which he took the cross objection has abated : Case law discussed ; A I R 1931 Rang 38, Rel. on. [P 41 C 1, 2]

V. K. Rajwade — for Appellant.

M. D. Khandekar — for Respondent 1.

Order.—Purushottamdas brought a suit for accounts against four defendants in the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Akola. That Court passed a decree to the effect that defendant 1, Kesho, should pay Rs. 415 odd to the plaintiff. Kesho appealed and during the pendency of his appeal he died. The present respondent, Deokaran, is his son. After Kesho had filed his appeal the plaintiff put in cross-objections. Kesho's legal representatives failed to make any application for the substitution of their names in place of the deceased Kesho and so the Court held that the appeal abated. Purushottamdas claimed that in spite of the abatement of the appeal his cross-objections should still be heard and decided, but the Subordinate Judge, by his order dated 25th April 1935, held that the appeal having abated the cross-objections must be held to have abated also and he therefore dismissed them. Purushottamdas has therefore come up in appeal against the order dismissing his cross-objections. The respondent Deokaran has taken a preliminary objection that no appeal lies as the order is not a decree and has not been made appealable as an order under S. 104 or O. 43, Civil P. C. He is certainly correct in saying that the order has not been made appealable as an order. The question is whether it amounts to a decree under the definition in Sec. 2 (2), Civil P. C. That Section defines a decree as follows :

"Decree" means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within S. 47 or S. 144, but shall not include

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default.

There is ample authority for the view that an order that a suit abates is appealable as a decree: vide 18 Mad 496,[1] 10 Bom 220,[2] A I R 1916 Lah 245,[3] A I R 1916 Mad 1068,[4] A I R 1917 Mad 285,[5] A I R 1920 Mad 580,[6] 1 Lah 493,[7] 1 Lah 582,[8] A I R 1921 Cal 551,[9] A I R 1925 Lah 456,[10] 9 Lah 526[11] and 10 Pat 471.[12] That being so, it would seem that an order that an appeal abates is also appealable as a decree and if so there is no reason why an order that the cross-objection abates should not be held to be a decree for the same reasons. There is no doubt that the order has conclusively determined the rights of the plaintiff on his cross-objections. In fact the Additional District Judge has said in his order that the cross-objection is dismissed. The respondent relies on 36 All 350[13] and A I R 1937 Pat 349.[14] 36 All 350[13] was not a case of abatement; it was a case where an appeal had been dismissed for want of prosecution. Such a case is easily distinguished from this. The order dismissing a suit for want for prosecution stands on quite a different footing from an order dismissing a suit or an appeal or a cross-objection because the case is held to have abated. Similarly, A I R 1937 Pat 349[14] is a case of dismissal for default of appearance under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. That case moreover draws a distinction between a dismissal under O. 41, R. 11 (1) and O. 41, Rule 11 (2) and says that an order of dismissal under O. 41, R. 11 (1) is appealable as a decree. We hold therefore that an appeal lies.

Next on the merits. The question is whether a respondent has a right to be heard on his cross-objection even though the appeal in which he took the cross-objection has abated. The decision of this question turns on the interpretation of O. 41, R. 22 (4). That rule is to the following effect:

22 (4). Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this Rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit.

On the face of it, the Rule only applies to cases where an appeal is withdrawn or dismissed for default. The appellant however contends that the Rule is not exhaustive, but covers cases ejusdem generis where for some reason the appeal cannot be heard. The learned counsel for the appellant has conceded that the weight of the case law is against him on this point, but he urges that the cases which hold the opposite view to that to which he is submitting are distinguishable on their facts. The lower Appellate Court has relied on 44 Mad 828,[15] 10 Lah 208[16] and 28 N L R 25.[17] 44 Mad 828[15] decides that:

Where a person sued for damages for malicious prosecution and obtained a decree but preferred an appeal claiming more damages than he had been awarded and died pending the appeal, the appeal abates. After such abatement any memorandum of objections filed by the respondent cannot be heard.

The appellant distinguishes that case by saying that a claim for damages for malicious prosecution is a personal claim which dies with the plaintiff. We cannot see however in what way that makes any difference to the point of law which we are

1. Subbayya v. Saminadayyer, (1895) 18 Mad 496 =5 M L J 63.
2. Bhikaji Ramchandra v. Purshotam, (1886) 10 Bom 220.
3. Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussain, (1916) 3 A I R Lah 245=34 I C 822=128 P R 1916 =146 P L R 1916 (F B).
4. Subramania Iyer v. Venkataramier, (1916) 3 A I R Mad 1068=31 I C 4.
5. Suppu Nayaken v. Perumal, (1917) 4 A I R Mad 285=34 I C 372=30 M L J 486.
6. Rahimunnissa v. Srinivasa Ayyangar, (1920) 7 A I R Mad 580=54 I C 565=38 M L J 266.
7. Ram Sarup v. Moti Ram, (1920) 7 A I R Lah 8 =57 I C 137=1 Lah 493.
8. Udmi v. Hira, (1920) 7 A I R Lah 338=60 I C 111=1 Lah 582.
9. Bhutnath Jana v. Tara Chand Jana, (1921) 8 A I R Cal 551=59 I C 177=33 C L J 115= 25 C W N 595.
10. Raghbir Saran v. Mt. Sohan Debi, (1925) 12 A I R Lah 456=86 I C 104=26 P L R 32.
11. Roop Chand v. Sardar Khan, (1928) 15 A I R Lah 359=110 I C 281=9 Lah 526=29 P L R 626.
12. Barju Biswal v. Kunja Behari Mahapatra, (1931) 18 A I R Pat 353=133 I C 767=10 Pat 471=12 P L T 909.
13. Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal, (1914) 1 A I R P C 66=23 I C 649=36 All 350 (P C).
14. Jamuna Prasad Rai v. Rajballam Rai, (1937) 24 A I R Pat 349=169 I C 359=18 P L T 321.
15. Murugappa Chettiar v. Ponnusami Pillai, (1921) 8 A I R Mad 405=62 I C 757=44 Mad 828=41 M L J 304.
16. Mul Chand Ganga Bishen v. R. M. Downie & Co. Ltd., (1928) 15 A I R Lah 596 = 110 I C 910=10 Lah 208.
17. Ajmersingh v. Ramsingh, (1932) 19 A I R Nag 41=137 I C 156=28 N L R 25.

called upon to decide. The decision in 44 Mad 828[15] is based on an earlier Full Bench decision of the same High Court in 41 Mad 904.[18] 10 Lah 208[16] is to the same effect as 44 Mad 828.[15] In 28 N L R 25,[17] it was held that where a memorandum of appeal is rejected as insufficiently stamped, no cross-objection can be entertained or heard. It was there pointed out by Subhedar A. J. C. that the provisions of R. 22 (4) of O. 41 must be interpreted strictly and not extended beyond their obvious scope. We would add to the cases mentioned by the Additional District Judge 8 Rang 538,[19] which has been referred in 28 N L R 25.[17] The appellant relies on 34 All 140[20] which holds:

> A respondent may file cross-objections and the Appellate Court may act upon them notwithstanding that the appeal in which such objections are filed is not maintainable.

That case has been discussed in 8 Rang 538[19] at p.543, and we fully agree with what Ottar J. has there said. Another case relied on by the appellant is A I R 1925 Mad 725,[21] but that is a case of an appeal being dismissed in default, a position which has been specifically mentioned in O. 41, R. 22 (4) as giving the respondent a right to be heard on the cross-objection. The third case relied on by the appellant is A I R 1931 Mad 133.[22] There it was held that the word "default" occurring in the Rule [O. 41, R. 22 (4)] includes any default made by the appellant which would amount to non-prosecution of the appeal and consequently includes the non-payment of deficit court-fee by the appellant in spite of the express order of the Court directing him to pay it and entailing the dismissal of the appeal and in such a case the respondent is entitled to have his memorandum of objections heard. The case to which we have already referred in 8 Rang 538[19] was on the same point but decides it in the contrary sense. We think that the correct view is that held in the latter case.

It seems to us clear that a cross-objection is part of an appeal and that if an appeal goes out for any extraneous reasons the cross-objection must ordinarily go out with it: the only exceptions are those mentioned in sub-r. (4) of O. 41, R. 22. The reason for those exceptions being made is evident. It would be grossly unfair if the appellant having appealed and the respondent having filed cross-objections the appellant should be allowed to resile from his appeal after the period of limitation for the respondent to file an appeal had expired and thereby prevent the respondent from appealing. It is argued on behalf of the appellant before us that it does not make much difference whether it was the appellant or his legal representatives that allowed the appeal to go out. Although the distinction may be small we think it is clear. Obviously the appellant did not die deliberately in order to defeat the respondent and until he died his legal representatives were nowhere.

After his death they were quite at liberty to consider whether the appeal was worth pressing or not; and if they considered that it was not, it cannot be considered that they refused to press it merely in order to defeat the respondent's cross-objection. Ordinarily, an appellant in the lower Appellate Court has 30 days in which to appeal. If his opponent appeals, he obtains under O. 41, R. 22 (1), 30 days from the date of service on him of the notice of appeal in which to file a cross-objection. He thus obtains an extended right of appeal. If X is the length of time that it takes his opponent to serve him with notice of appeal then, whereas he has only 30 days to appeal himself, he has 30 plus X days to file his cross-objection. Now, if notice of appeal had been served on him after the period for appealing himself had expired there would obviously be no equitable reason for keeping alive his cross-objection when for any reasons other than those mentioned in Rule 22 (4) his adversary's appeal went out. In such a case, as he does not appeal himself within the period of limitation, he is clearly satisfied with the decree as it stood and it was only because of his adversary's appeal that he comes forward to urge cross-objection. The position is different however where he has been served with notice of appeal before his right of appeal has expired. He may quite justifiably say to himself then:

> Although I was going to file an appeal I do not need to do so now. I can file a cross-objection and will obtain additional time.

18. Alagappa Chettiar v. Chockalingam Chetti, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 784=48 I C 203=41 Mad 904=35 M L J 236 (F B).
19. U Shin v. Maung Tha Gywe, (1931) 18 A I R Rang 38=129 I C 500=8 Rang 538.
20. Shankar Lal v. Sarup Lal, (1912) 34 All 140=13 I C 19=8 A L J 1297.
21. Bhimasena Row v. Venugopal, (1925) 12 A I R Mad 725=88 I C 443=48 Mad 631=48 M L J 384.
22. Ayilu Reddi v. Venkata Reddi, (1931) 18 A I R Mad 133=130 I C 657.

Which position arises here we do not know and it is outside the scope of this appeal. This will be a matter for consideration by the lower Appellate Court if and when the respondent files an appeal together with an application for extension of time under S. 5 and / or S. 14, Limitation Act. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We allow Rs. 45 for counsel's fee.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 42

NIYOGI J.

Gulabchand Kanhayalal — Plaintiff— Appellant.

v.

Kishanlal Kanhayalal Teli—Defendant — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 111 of 1937 Decided on 22nd September 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 8th March 1937.

Central Provinces Courts Act (1 of 1917), Sec. 26 — Presentation of appeal in Additional District Judge's Court must be regarded as appeal filed in District Court.

The Additional Judge is clearly a Judge of the District Court although his power to exercise the jurisdiction of the District Court is restricted. Whenever the Additional Judge hears and determines an appeal, the appeal would be deemed to be heard and determined by the District Court to which he is an Additional Judge. [P 43 C 2]

A decree which had been passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Khamgaon, was transferred for execution to the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Khamgaon. The Court disposed of certain matters under Section 47, Civil P. C. The decree-holder who was aggrieved by that order presented an appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge. The Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, finding that the order having been passed in execution of a decree in a suit tried by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, involving the claim exceeding Rs. 1000 returned the appeal to the decree-holder for proper presentation. The decree-holder pursuant to that order presented it in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Akola :

Held that the appeal filed in the office of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, must be regarded as having been presented to the District Court, West Berar, Akola, and hence to the proper Court. Although the presiding officer of that section of the District Court which had its venue at Khamgaon had himself no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, it could not be held to have been presented to an improper Court. All that the Additional District Judge had to do was to submit the appeal to the District Judge who was the Chief Judicial Officer in charge of the District Court of Akola, and to have it transferred to a Judge of that Court competent to hear and determine the appeal. Instead of doing so he returned the appeal to the appellant for being presented to the Additional District Judge, Akola, but that returning of the appeal and its representation at Akola could not impair the validity of the original presentation of the appeal. The appeal was merely transferred from one section of the District Court to another and not from one Court to another Court : A I R 1928 Nag 199 and A I R 1937 Nag 80, Rel. on. [P 43 C 1, 2]

A. V. Wazalwar — for Appellant.

D. N. Choudhary — for Respondent.

Order.—This is an appeal from an order dated 8th March 1937 passed by the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 42-B of 1936, dismissing the appeal as barred by time. The facts are that a decree which has been passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Khamgaon, in Civil Suit No. 35 of 1932, decided on 31st October 1934, was transferred for execution to the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Khamgaon, for the reason that the decree was for Rs. 537-8-0 that is less than Rs. 1000 in value. That Court disposed of certain matters under S. 47, Civil P. C. The decree-holder who was aggrieved by that order presented an appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, on 29th June 1936. Under an office order issued by the District and Sessions Judge, West Berar, Akola, on 23rd September 1933, the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, was empowered to hear civil appeals not over Rs. 1000 in value. The Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, found that the order having been passed in execution of a decree in a suit tried by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, involving a claim exceeding Rs. 1000 it rightly returned the appeal to the decree-holder for proper presentation on 25th September 1936. The decree-holder pursuant to that order presented it in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Akola, on 26th September 1936. The lower Appellate Court found that the appeal was barred by time as it was presented beyond time and no explanation was given to account for the mistake on the part of the senior pleader who had first presented the appeal in the Additional District Judge's Court at Khamgaon, on 29th June 1936. The lower Appellate Court was unable to persuade itself that the error was the outcome of any bona fide mistake on the part of the appellant's counsel and therefore declined to condone the delay by giving the appellant benefit of Section 5 or Section 14, Limitation Act.

It appears to me that, before any question of bona fide mistake can arise, it has first to be determined whether the presentation of an appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, was not a presentation of appeal to the proper Court which in this case was the District Court. In my opinion the presentation of appeal in the Additional District Judge's Court at Khamgaon, was a presentation of appeal to the District Court, West Berar, Akola. In A I R 1928 Nag 199,[1] and I L R (1937) Nag 219[2] appeal was presented to the District Judge, whereas it ought to have been presented to the Additional District Judge and in both these cases it was held that the presentation of the appeal was made to the proper Court and that when the District Judge transferred the appeal to the Judge who was empowered to hear and determine the appeal, the District Judge was merely transferring the appeal from one section of the Court to another. In this case it is urged by the learned counsel for the respondent that presentation of an appeal to the Additional District Judge's Court cannot be deemed to be presentation of appeal to the District Court. I am unable to assent to this argument in view of the plain provisions of the Central Provinces Courts Act. Sec. 14 of that Act, enumerates three classes of Subordinate Civil Courts, (a) the District Court, (b) the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class, and (c) the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Class. It is clear that there are only three Courts as opposed to the Judges who are the presiding officers thereof. Now the District Court may be presided over by one Judge or by more than one. When the District Court is presided over by more than one Judge the Chief Judge of that Court is called the District Judge and the others are called Additional District Judges who are appointed by the Local Government under Section 26, C. P. Courts Act. The wording of that Section is significant :

> Whenever it is considered necessary or expedient so to do, the Local Government may appoint an Additional Judge or Judges to any District Court and the High Court may appoint an Additional Judge or Judges to the Court of a Subordinate Judge (of either Class); and any such Additional Judge shall exercise the jurisdiction of the Court to which he is appointed and the powers of a Judge thereof, subject to any general or special orders of the authority by which he is appointed as the class or value of suits and appeals which he may try, hear and determine and subject also in respect of the distribution of the business of the Court to the control of the Judge thereof.

Now that Section makes a distinction between the District Court and the jurisdiction of the Additional Judge to that Court. The Additional Judge is clearly a Judge of the District Court although his power to exercise the jurisdiction of the District Court is restricted. Whenever the Additional Judge hears and determines an appeal, the appeal would be deemed to be heard and determined by the District Court to which he is an Additional Judge and from his decision, as being the decision of a District Court, an appeal lies to the High Court under Sec. 20 (c) of that Act. That clearly shows that the Judge must be contradistinguished from the Court. Suits or appeals are presented not to the Judges but to the Courts and therefore when the appeal in this case was first presented on 29th June 1936, in the office of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, it must be regarded as having been presented to the District Court, West Berar, Akola. Although the presiding officer of that section of the District Court which had its venue at Khamgaon, had himself no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, it could not be held to have been presented to an improper Court. All that the Additional District Judge had to do was to submit the appeal to the District Judge who was the Chief Judicial Officer in charge of the District Court of Akola, and to have it transferred to a Judge of that Court competent to hear and determine the appeal. Instead of doing so, he returned the appeal to the appellant for being presented to the Additional District Judge, Akola, but that returning of the appeal and its representation at Akola, could not impair the validity of the original presentation of the appeal on 29th June 1936. The appeal was merely transferred from one section of the District Court to another and not from one Court to another Court. Therefore the appeal must be regarded as having been presented on 29th June 1936 which was done within time and must be deemed to be pending in the District Court since that day. It would therefore appear that no question of limitation in reality arises in the case. If there was any mistake in presenting the appeal at

1. Sirajuddin v. Sonilal, (1928) 15 A I R Nag 199 =109 I C 79.
2. Zumbarlal Chhotelal v. Sitaram, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 80=171 I C 871=I L R (1937) Nag 219.

Khamgaon, instead of at Akola, it was not a fatal mistake; an entry by a wrongdoer will not make the entry any the less an entry into the right Court. It was a mistake of procedure and not of jurisdiction. It is unnecessary therefore to go into the question whether that mistake was bona fide or not.

The result is that the lower Appellate Court's order is set aside and the case is sent back to that Court for being heard on merits. The costs of this appeal will abide the issue. Counsel's fees Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Case remanded.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 44

NIYOGI AND GRUER JJ.

Madhao Gopal Shirsalkar — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Secretary of State — Defendant — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 16 of 1936, Decided on 29th August 1938, from appellate decree of Stone C. J., in S. A. No. 111-B of 1933, D/- 17th April 1936.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code (1896), Secs. 178, 38—Rules for disposal of Government building site made by Chief Commissioner in 1906, were valid and operative although not published in Gazette as required by S. 178—Plaintiff acquiring occupancy rights in land on condition that rent fixed at future settlements should be 33 per cent. of letting value of land—Town survey officer assessing rent accordingly in 1928—Assessment challenged by plaintiff—Assessment officer held to have jurisdiction to revise assessment—Plaintiff held to be bound by his agreement.

The rules for the disposal of Government building sites made by the Chief Commissioner in 1906 were valid and operative, notwithstanding that they had not been published in the Gazette as required by Sec. 178. The general rules contemplated in S. 38 took effect by virtue of their having been sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner and became operative de hors their publication in the Gazette under Sec. 218. They were valid because they were sanctioned by a competent authority in accordance with law and not because they had the force of law. Publication was a condition subsequent to the making of the rules and therefore directory. The non-observance of that condition would not prevent the rules from taking effect. [P 45 C 1; P 46 C 1]

The plaintiff by an agreement executed by him in accordance with R. 37 of the rules for the disposal of Government building sites made by the Chief Commissioner in 1906, acquired occupancy rights in a plot, rental Rs. 3-8-0, on condition that the rent fixed at the future settlements should ordinarily be 33 per cent. of the letting value of the land. In the town survey made in 1928, the Town Survey Officer assessed the plot to Rs. 24 per annum. That was varied to some extent by the Commissioner whose order was affirmed by the Governor in Council. It was contended by the plaintiff that the rules of 1906 had no force of law for want of publication in the C. P. Gazette as required by Sec. 178 and that the revision of the assessment could only be made under Rule 8 of the rules of 1894 :

Held that the rules of 1906 were valid and operative. The plaintiff when he accepted the certificate of grant of occupancy rights and executed an agreement under Rules of 1906 must be deemed to have waived that objection to the validity of the rules. Even supposing that the plaintiff had entered into the agreement under the mistaken notion that the rules had force of law, when they had not, that mistake of law could not invalidate the contract (S. 21, Contract Act). The plaintiff, having by his free will, chosen to accept the terms, could not legally repudiate the agreement, and the Settlement Officer had jurisdiction to revise the assessment : (1901) 1 K B 673, Rel. on. [P 46 C 2; P 47 C 1]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), Sections 41 (3), 192 (1), Proviso—Person acquiring occupancy right under rules for disposal of Government sites in 1906, disputing right of Government to enhance assessment of the land—Dispute decided against him by Revenue Officer—He is entitled to sue under S. 41 (3) to establish his right—Suit also comes under S. 192 (1), Proviso—Civil Court has jurisdiction to try it.

The question whether or not a Civil Court has jurisdiction to try a particular suit must be determined by averments made in the plaint. Where a person, who has acquired occupany right in land by an agreement executed by him in accordance with R. 37 of the rules for disposal of Government building site made by the Chief Commissioner in 1906, disputes the right of the Government to enhance the assessment on his land and that dispute is decided by the Revenue Officer against him, he is entitled to sue for establishing his right under Section 41 (3) of the Code. Such suit involves the interpretation of the certificate granted to the plaintiff and his agreement and the determination of their legal effect and as such falls under Proviso to S. 192 (1) as also under S. 41 (3). The Civil Court has jurisdiction to try such a suit. [P 47 C 2]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Construction.

It is an elementary rule of construction that nothing is to be added to or taken from a statute : (1910) A C 409, Rel. on. [P 45 C 2]

V. K. Rajwade — for Appellant.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent by the plaintiff, arising out of his suit instituted for obtaining a declaration that the revised assessment of land revenue made on his land was ultra vires and void. In 1909 the plaintiff, by an agreement executed by him in accordance with R. 37 of the rules for the disposal of Government building sites made by the Chief Commissioner in 1906, acquired occupancy rights in plot No. 23, area 28 gunthas, rental Rs. 3-8-0, situate in Akola Town, on condition that the rent fixed at future settlements should ordinarily be 33 per cent. of the letting value of the land. Town Survey of Akola was ordered under Notification No. 234-XVI, dated 5th April 1926 issued under Section 83, Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896. It was completed after the amended Berar Land Revenue Code was passed in 1928. The Town Settlement Officer, by an order passed on 7th February 1929, held that the old assessment was due for revision in pursuance of the aforesaid Rules of 1906 and assessed the plot to Rs. 24 per annum. That was varied to some extent by the Commissioner whose order was affirmed by the Governor in Council. The contention raised by the plaintiff was twofold : (i) That the Akola town survey ordered by the Notification in 1926 was not a fresh revenue survey within the meaning of Sec. 93 (1), Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, and that it could not invest the Settlement Officer with jurisdiction to revise the old assessment. (ii) That the Rules of 1906 had no force of law for want of publication in the Central Provinces Gazette as required by S. 178 of the Code of 1896 and that the revision of the assessment could be made only under R. 8 of the Rules of 1894 (Resident's Book Circular 20 of 1894).

The primary question which arises upon this appeal is whether the Rules of 1906 could not take effect for want of publication in the Central Provinces Gazette. In our opinion they were valid and operative notwithstanding that they had not been published in the Gazette as required by Sec. 178, Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, for the reasons which follow. The appellant does not deny that the occupancy rights were granted to him in 1906 under the provisions of S. 38 of the Code of 1896. The material part of that Section runs as follows :

And the Deputy Commissioner may subject to the orders of the Commissioner, dispose of them in such manner as he may deem fit or as may be authorized by general rules sanctioned by the Resident.

N. B.—In accordance with the Government of India Foreign Department Notification No. 4246-I-B, dated 11th September 1903, the terms, Berar, the Chief Commissioner and the Central Provinces Gazette, were substituted for the terms, the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, the Resident and the Hyderabad Residency orders, respectively, which occur in the edition of the Code of 1896 issued in 1906.

The Rules of 1906 governing the disposal of buliding sites were appended to the Code of 1896 in its first edition issued in 1906. They purport to be rules made under S. 38 of the Code of 1896 : see p. 92, Berar Land Revenue Code 1896, edition 1906. The appellant contends that these rules not having been published in the Central Provinces Gazette did not acquire the force of law. The appellant's contention assumes that the general rules mentioned in Sec. 38 refer to those made under Sec. 178 of the Code of 1896 but that assumption is unfounded. There are no bonds in the Section which attribute to S. 178. It is an elementary rule of construction that nothing is to be added to or be taken from a statute. As observed by Lord Mersey in (1910) 79 L J K B 905[1] at p. 911 :

It is a strong thing to read into an Act of Parliament words which are not there and in the absence of clear necessity, it is a wrong thing to do.

In S. 38 of the Code of 1896 the words used are "as may be authorized by general rules sanctioned by the Resident" (i. e. the Chief Commissioner). It is not denied that the Rules of 1906 were sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner, (and it may be noted that the plea that the Rules of 1906 were void for want of sanction of the Government of India was withdrawn), but what is urged is that they ought to have been published in the Gazette as required by Sec. 178 of that Code. It is impossible to assent to this argument without following a course reprobated by the recognized principle stated above. Nor does it appear that the author of the Code while enacting that Section inadvertently omitted to make express reference to Sec. 178. The words "general rules sanctioned" are important. S. 178 contemplates rules "made" by the Chief Commissioner and not those "sanctioned" and it does not describe the rules "made" under it as "general rules." A similar expression occurs in Ss. 40, 121 (2) and 154 (2) where the word "sanctioned" is used. Examining the several Sections of the Code it is evident that when the Code intends that the rules or instructions referred to in particular Sections of it should mean those made under S. 178 or S. 216, it expressly says so. Reference may be made to Ss. 179, 180, 181, 183, 186, 187, 188, 191 and 193 in each of which one finds the expression

1. Tompson v. Goold and Co., (1910) A C 409=79 L J K B 905=103 L T 81=26 T L R 526.

"subject to any rules made under S. 178." Turning one's attention to Ss. 20, 32, 52 (b), 56, 59 (b), 63 (3), 64 and 83 (2) one finds the expression "subject to any instructions given under S. 216" or words to that effect. The absence of such words in S. 38 gives a clear indication that the Section has no reference to Sec. 178 or Sec. 216. The words "general rules sanctioned" must be read with their context "subject to the orders of the Commissioner" and so read clearly indicate that they were intended to be administrative rules for guidance of the Revenue Officers. It is true that the rules of 1906 happen to be published along with others under a common caption "Rules under the Berar Land Revenue Code 1896" (p. 85 of Edition 1906). But that heading is misleading as will be apparent by reference to pp. 128, 129 where the "orders" of the Chief Commissioner referred to in S. 115 and S. 117 and to p. 130 where the declaration referred to in S. 126 are printed. Manifestly they could not be regarded as rules made under S. 178 simply because they are there under the heading "Rules." S. 178 occurs in Ch. 16 which speaks of Procedure of Revenue Officers, and the Chief Commissioner is empowered to make rules :

for regulating the procedure of Revenue Officers under this law in cases in which a procedure is not prescribed by the law and for otherwise carrying into effect the objects of the law.

"General Rules" contemplated in S. 38 are not rules of procedure but rules to guide the Revenue Officers in the disposal of Government lands. Since the power to "sanction" such rules is given by S. 38 itself, it is unnecessary to invoke the general power conferred by S. 178 in the last clause of the passage extracted above. It is thus clear that the general rules contemplated in S. 38 took effect by virtue of their having been sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner and became operative de hors their publication in the Gazette under S. 218. They were valid because they were sanctioned by a competent authority in accordance with law and not because they had the force of law. Publication was a condition subsequent to the making of the rules and was therefore directory. The non-observance of that condition would not prevent the rules from taking effect : see (1901) 1 K B 673.[2]

2. Jones v. Robson, (1901) 1 K B 673=70 L J K B 419=84 L T 230=65 J P 278=19 Cox C C 651.

It is however urged that the rules of 1894 having had the force of law, their authority could not be impaired by the general rules under S. 38 which had not the force of law. S. 38 does not refer to the rules of 1894 and it makes only those rules effective which are sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner. It does not restrict the power of the Chief Commissioner in making assessment of building sites, as the Proviso to R. 8 of the Circular of 1894 did. When the Chief Commissioner sanctioned the rules under S. 38, the old rules of 1894 must be deemed to have been impliedly repealed. It may be conceded that the Rules of 1894 would remain operative until the Chief Commissioner sanctioned the rules under S. 38 but when he sanctioned the latter in 1906, the former cannot hold the field. It is pertinent to notice here that Part 1 of the 1894 Circular was reproduced as Rr. 30 to 45 in the new Rules of 1906 with the most important variation regarding the enhancement of the annual ground rent from 20 per cent. of the letting value of the land to 22 per cent. The old rules were in reality adopted with this modification. If the Rules of 1894 had the force of law, their authority was exhausted by their fresh promulgation, not by publication in the Gazette, which was redundant, but by their incorporation in the 1906 edition of the Code. It is contended that the modification was ultra vires of the Chief Commissioner. It cannot be so because he was invested with power to enhance the ground rent from 20 per cent. to 33 per cent. by S. 38 of the Code of 1896. That was not a matter of procedure and consequently S. 178 and S. 218 could not come into play.

Granting for the nonce that the Chief Commissioner was not competent to do so except by making a rule under S. 178 and publishing it in the Central Provinces Gazette, it must be observed that he had inherent power (conferred by S. 178) to make such a rule and he must be presumed to have made the rule under S. 178 (rather than under S. 38), and the publication of the rule by incorporating it in the 1906 edition of the Code of 1896 instead of doing so in the Gazette was but a formal irregularity. The plaintiff was fully aware of this irregularity when he accepted the certificate of grant of occupancy rights and he executed an agreement under the Rules of 1906. He must therefore be deemed to have waived that objection to the validity of the rules. The present case is not, strictly speaking, one of ultra vires action as the Chief Commissioner's competency is not contested, but even if it were, that would not help the plaintiff in shaking off his obligation which he has incurred under the rules. It is true that an ultra vires statute cannot be validated by acquiescence but it is equally true that an acquiescing party may be estopped from questioning it : see The Doctrine of Ultra Vires, Street, p. 436, Edition 1930.

Now the important question is : Can the plaintiff resile from his own agreement of 1909? Even supposing that he entered into it under the mistaken notion that the rules had the force of law when they had not, that mistake of law cannot invalidate the contract : see S. 21, Contract Act. The parties dealt with each other at arms length. The plaintiff, who is himself a legal practitioner, must be presumed to have read the rules of 1906 as incorporated in the authorized edition of the Code of 1906 and he does not deny that he read them before he entered into the transaction. The land was owned by the Government and the Revenue Officer concerned offered the occupancy rights to him on the conditions embodied in the Rules of 1906 which the Chief Commissioner as head of the Government had full power to sanction. The plaintiff was free to accept or to reject the terms so offered. He by his free will chose to purchase the occupancy rights on those terms. He could not legally repudiate that agreement as he accepted the Rules of 1906 without protest. The next question is whether or not the Settlement Officer had jurisdiction to revise the assessment. If the Rules of 1906 were valid, as we have held already, the plaintiff must be held bound by R. 35 of those rules That says that the rent was assessed for the unexpired portion of the current settlement subject to the condition that at future settlements it would be 33 per cent. of the letting value of the land. The Notification issued in 1926 would be deemed to have been issued under the Code of 1928 by virtue of S. 195 of the Code of 1928. It was open to the Settlement Officer to enhance the assessment even up to 50 per cent of the estimated letting value of the land disregarding the appellant's claim to hold land on privileged terms. The Government was however bound by the terms of the plaintiff's agreement made in 1909 and recognizing this obligation, ordered revised assessment to be made on the basis of the old contract (see Ex. D-2) with the result that the appellant was substantially benefited.

On behalf of the respondent, it was urged that the suit being one which in effect contested the amount of assessment was not triable by the Civil Court. It must be observed that the Revenue Member in his order referred the plaintiff to the Civil Court and he had manifestly good reason to do so. The plaintiff's case was that the Government had no right, under the terms of the grant made in 1909 which were void, to revise the assessment. That involved interpretation of the terms of the certificate (Ex. P-2) and the plaintiff's agreement (Ex. D-1) and determination of their legal effect. The question whether or not the Civil Court has jurisdiction must be determined by the averments made in the plaint. They leave no room for doubt that the case falls under the Proviso to S. 192 (1) as also sub-sec. 3 of S. 41 of the Code of 1928. Sub-s. 1 of S. 41 does not merely contemplate questions of title but of rights as well, i.e. rights in respect of any property of the Government. The plaintiff disputed the right of the Government to enhance the assessment on his land and that dispute was decided by the Revenue Officer against the plaintiff. He was therefore clearly entitled to sue for establishing his right under sub-s. 3 of S. 41 of that Code. The appeal stands dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 200. The costs of the Courts below and of appeal before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, will be borne by the parties.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 47

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Bapuji Ramji Patil — Appellant.

v.

Gangaram Madhorao Deshpande and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 373 of 1936, Decided on 7th October 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 27th April 1936.

(a) Hindu law—Adoption—In Berar, Bombay rules about adoption apply.

In Berar, the Bombay rules about adoption apply; that is to say a widow has authority to adopt in the absence of express permission from the husband. [P 48 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Adoption—Mother's power to adopt terminates when her son dies leaving widow.

Mother's power to adopt is completely extinguished the moment her son dies leaving a widow, and it is immaterial whether that widow attained the age of full legal competence or not : A I R 1934 Nag 183 and A I R 1938 Bom 20, Foll.; A I R 1929 Nag 98 (F B) ; A I R 1936 Nag 65 and A I R 1938 Nag 423, Expl. [P 50 C 1]

M. B. Kinkhede and V. R. Dhoke — for Appellant.

B. R. Mandlekar — for Respondent 2.

Judgment.—This is a case from Berar where the Bombay rules about adoption apply, that is to say, a widow has authority to adopt in the absence of express permission from the husband. The relationship between the parties is shown in the following genealogical tree.

Bhiwaji died in 1912 leaving two widows Girjabai and Gopibai, and a son Kondba and a daughter Pisibai. Kondba died in 1918 and four months later his widow Mt. Laxmi remarried. Thereupon his mother Gopibai adopted the first defendant Dattu. This was in the year 1921, and the only question here is whether such an adoption is legally valid. Plaintiffs 1 and 2 are transferees from plaintiffs 3 and 4 who are the sons of Pisibai, and who but for the adoption would be entitled to succeed. The remaining defendants are transferees from defendant 1. All these facts are either admitted or proved. There are four Nagpur decisions which deal with this matter. In 17 N L J 57[1] at p. 59 Pollock A. J. C. held that such an adoption was invalid. He interpreted the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 59 Bom 360[2] to mean that the mother's power of adoption ceases for all time the moment the son dies leaving a widow. It is a decision on all fours with the present case. The other rulings are two Full Bench decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court. The earlier of the two, namely 25 N L R 144[3] came to the same conclusion though for different reasons, but the later one, 31 N L R Sup 180,[4] overruled it on the ground that the Privy Council in 59 Bom 360[2] had impliedly overruled the old view. Pollock A. J. C. was an assenting member of this Bench but no reference was made to his earlier decision. The fourth ruling is that of a Division Bench of this Court which takes the same view as the later of the two Full Bench decisions. It is (1938) N L J 237.[5]

We have therefore a Full Bench decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and that of a single Judge holding that the mother has no power. We also have a second Full Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court overruling the first and we have a Division Bench of this Court following the second Full Bench. If these two later rulings had been exactly in point, there would have been an end of the matter, but the facts are slightly different in both, and it is argued on behalf of the defendant-respondent that that makes the observations on this point obiter. What I have to see therefore is whether the principle enunciated in the two later rulings applied equally to the facts there as well as to those here or whether there is any point of differentiation. Dealing first with 31 N L R Sup 180[4] it will be convenient to set out the family tree of the parties there. It was as follows :

The family was unfortunate and all except Tulsi died within a few days of each other as shown above. They were all joint and Motya was the last male survivor. After him the property devolved on his mother Mt. Putai and after her to Tulsi,

1. Vithoba v. Amrita, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 183=150 I C 1032=17 N L J 57.
2. Vijaysinghji v. Shivsangji, (1935) 22 A I R P C 95=155 I C 493=59 Bom 360= 62 I A 161 (P C).
3. Uttamrao v. Daulat, (1929) 16 A I R Nag 98 =116 I C 499=25 N L R 144 (F B).
4. Ramchandra v. Mt. Yamuna Bai, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 65=162 I C 571=31 N L R Sup 180 (F B).
5. Mt. Draupadi v. Vikram, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 423=1938 N L J 237.

the widow of a predeceased male co-parcener. She adopted Ramchandra, who was the plaintiff there, after the property had vested in her and the question was whether she could do so. It was held that she could. The learned Judicial Commissioners interpreted the Privy Council ruling in 12 Pat 642[6] to mean that the restriction on adoption was imposed on the mother and not on the widow of a gotraja sapinda, and even as regards the mother the restriction applied only when the son died leaving a widow or a son. This is what they say :

> Their Lordships pointed out that in all those cases it was the existence of the son's widow that stood in the way of adoption and that in none of them was there any suggestion that the same rule would apply if the heir in whom the property had vested were someone other than her.

In the case before them it was not the mother who adopted but the son's widow —the exact converse of the position before their Lordships. They held therefore that the prohibition contained in the Privy Council decision did not extend to the case before them. It is true, they overruled the earlier Full Bench decision in 25 N L R 144[3] but not on this point. The facts in the earlier decision were as follows. Again, I append a tree.

Krishnaji=Mt. Sitabai.
|
Zaboo
(Mt. Bainabai).

Krishnaji and his son Zaboo were members of a joint Hindu family. Zaboo died and Krishnaji succeeded by survivorship. On Krishnaji's death, his widow Sitabai succeeded and after her Bainabai. Bainabai then adopted a son and the question was whether such an adoption could be made. The Full Bench proceeding upon the theory that the power of adoption was dependent upon the vesting of the estate held that she could not. It decided that unless the widow succeeds directly to the estate of her husband no adoption can be made. This, the later Full Bench held was wrong. It pointed out that under the Privy Council decisions, and also under the Hindu law texts, the power of adoption was not dependent upon the vesting of the estate and held that the only restrictions which the Privy Council imposed was upon the mother when the son leaves a widow. In neither of these cases was the adoption by the mother. The decision of Pollock A. J. C. was a case of a mother and is exactly in point. It has not been overruled. In the Division Bench decision of this Court the facts were as follows. I reproduce for convenience the tree given in that judgment. The material dates are also to be found there.

LAXMAN (d. 1896)
|
Ramji (d. 12-1-1906) W. Draupadi — Krishnaji (d. 27-4-1906) W. Tulsai.
|
Sakharam (d. 1912) (adopted by Draupadi on 28-6-1907) — Vikram (plaintiff) (adopted by Tulsai on 3-6-1930)

As will be seen there were two adoptions and the last male holder before these adoptions was Krishnaji. He succeeded by survivorship. When he died the only members of the joint family left were the two widows, Draupadi and Tulsai. Draupadi adopted Sakharam in 1912 and when he died Tulsai adopted the plaintiff. The suit was against Draupadi, and the question was whether these two adoptions were valid. It was held that both were valid and it was again pointed out at p. 244 that "the limit indicated in 12 Pat 642[1] may be regarded as the only limit."

It will thus be seen that of the four Nagpur decisions only that of Pollock A. J. C. is exactly in point and that the later Full Bench and the Division Bench take the same view of the Privy Council in 12 Pat 642,[1] as he did. It is true, their observations are in a sense obiter but it was necessary in both cases to examine the true meaning and extent of the Privy Council decisions, and I fully agree with them that whatever else their Lordships may have meant they clearly decided that the mother cannot adopt when the son dies leaving a widow who can. It was argued however that their Lordships have left at large the question whether the rule would apply when the son's widow has not attained "full legal capacity" and that as Laxmi was at the outside 15 years and 3½ months at the date of Kondbha's death, she had no power to adopt and consequently the mother's power revived when Laxmi remarried. These arguments are based on two passages from their Lordships' judgment. The one which is said to deal with the age of "full legal capacity" states that "the test is to be whether these conditions exist at the time of the son's death." And the other relating to the capacity of the son's widow states :

6. Amarendra Mansingh v. Sanatan Singh, (1933) 20 A I R P C 155=143 I C 441=12 Pat 642=60 I A 242 (P C).

Whether in order to bring this principle into play it is essential that the son's widow should herself be clothed with the power of adoption (the italicized is mine) is left open.

So far as the latter passage is concerned I agree with 39 Bom L R 599[7] at page 604 that it does not relate to the question of "full legal capacity" but to another matter. There are parts of India, the Central Provinces among them, where a widow cannot adopt unless she has been given the necessary permission to do so by her husband. When that has not been done, she is not "clothed with the power of adoption". I agree that that is what their Lordships had in mind. The change in language between this passage and the other passages where their Lordships deal with "full legal capacity" and "ceremonial competence" is in my opinion significant. When dealing with the latter they were interpreting words used in the former judgments of the Board and I can hardly think that they would have altered their phraseology in this way if they had been dealing with the same matter here. It is to be observed also that whereas their Lordships have dealt at page 658 with two cases in which the mother's power to adopt comes to an end, namely where there is a grandson or a son's widow they have left only one of these two positions at large at page 659. It would hardly be likely that their Lordships meant to indicate that the power would be at an end when there is a grandson whether he has attained full legal competence or not but might not be so when there is a son's widow. Clearly what applies in the one case must apply in the other. Therefore the interpretation which the Bombay High Court places upon this decision seems to me to be right.

As regards the other passage it does not relate to the son's widow but to the son himself. Their Lordships decide that when the son dies before attaining full legal competence and does not leave either a widow or a son or an adopted son, then the power of the mother which was in abeyance during the son's lifetime revives, but the moment he hands the torch on to another the mother can no longer retake it. Whether he has handed it on or not is of course a matter which must be determined with respect to the state of affairs existing at the date of his death. But whether the person to whom it has been handed on is of full legal competence or not is immaterial. Therefore, following 39 Bom L R 599,[7] I hold that Gopibai's power to adopt was completely extinguished the moment her son Kondbha died leaving a widow, and that it is immaterial whether that widow had attained the age of full legal competence or not. The decision appealed from is upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

7. Ramchandra Narayan v. Murlidhar Yeshwant, (1938) 25 A I R Bom 20=173 IC 36=39 Bom L R 599.

 * A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 50

FULL BENCH

STONE C. J., VIVIAN BOSE AND CLARKE JJ.

Motiram and others — Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 — Applicants.

v.

Daulat, Plaintiff and another — Defendant No. 1 — Non-Applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 542 of 1937, Decided on 5th September 1938, against order of Sub-Judge, Second Class, Katol, D/- 22nd July 1937.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit for declaration that plaintiff is reversioner and for injunction and appointment of receiver comes under S. 7 (iv) (c) (Per Niyogi J.)

Where in a suit it is prayed that it should be declared that plaintiff is the next reversioner, and that a permanent injunction be granted restraining defendant from committing acts of waste and that a receiver be appointed to manage the property, the reliefs of injunction or the appointment of receiver are consequential reliefs and the suit therefore comes within the purview of S. 7 (iv)(c): A I R 1937 Nag 14, Foll.; A I R 1932 All 114 and A I R 1930 Cal 686, Expl. [P 51 C 2]

(b) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c)—In considering meaning of S. 7 (iv) (c) it is necessary to consider Suits Valuation Act, S. 8 and Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 11.

In construing a statute, one should endeavour to give it a meaning, in all cases of ambiguity, which will make it consonant to, rather than in disagreement with, other Acts. Hence in considering the meaning of S. 7 (iv) (c) it is necessary to consider S. 8, Suits Valuation Act and O. 7, R. 11, Civil Procedure Code. [P 52 C 2; P 53 C 1]

(c) Suits Valuation Act (1887), S. 8—Suits coming under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act valued at different figures for purposes of jurisdiction and court-fees—Court can challenge one of those values.

The value for court-fee purposes and the value for jurisdiction must be the same, and if the plaintiff values the suit at one figure for the purposes of jurisdiction and at another figure for court-fee purposes in a suit coming under Sec. 7 (iv) (c),

Court-fees Act, the Court is at liberty to challenge one of those values at any rate : A I R 1920 Nag 243 ; 7 N L R 190 and A I R 1932 Lah 132, Rel. on. [P 54 C 2]

 * (d) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) —In valuing suits coming under S. 7 (iv) (c) principle that value of suit is value of property affected by relief asked for cannot be adopted as test.

The principle that where the subject-matter is so related to things which have a real money value that the relief asked for will affect these, then the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction is to be taken as the market value of the property affected, cannot be adopted as the test for valuing suits of the type coming under S. 7 (iv) (c), because it is not the value of the thing affected that settles the value of the relief sought. It is the value of the relief sought which has to be determined : A I R 1927 Mad 563, Ref. [P 55 C 2]

 * (e) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) —Valuation put by plaintiff, if arbitrary and unreasonable, Court can interfere and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C.—A I R 1937 Nag 14=165 I C 106, Overruled.*

It is true that under S. 7 (iv) (c), the plaintiff may put any valuation on the relief but such value is not binding on Court and it can refuse to accept that figure. There is nothing in the Court-fees Act which shows that in cases coming under S. 7 (iv) (c), the power which the Court is given by O. 7, R. 11, Civil P, C., is taken away. If the valuation put by the plaintiff is arbitrary and unreasonable, in other words if the disparity is so great as to show that the plaintiff has not endeavoured to fix a fair value at all but has simply set down a figure which is unreasonable and bears no relation to the value of the right litigated, the Court can interfere and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. : A I R 1937 Nag 14=165 I C 106, Overruled ; A I R 1918 P C 135, Expl. ; 7 N L R 190 ; A I R 1928 Nag 243 ; A I R 1924 Nag 295 and (1938) N L J 130, Approved; Case law referred. [P 52 C 2; P 56 C 1; P 57 C 2]

J. R. Mudholkar — for Applicants.
M. R. Rajkarne and K. B. Tare — for Non-Applicant No. 1.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Niyogi J.—This is a defendants' application in revision against an interlocutory order passed on 22nd July 1937 in Civil Suit No. 124-A of 1937, by the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Katol. The plaintiff instituted the suit seeking relief as follows :

(a) It be declared that the plaintiff is the next reversioner and a permanent injunction restraining defendant 1 from committing any acts of waste in future be granted ;

(b) it be declared that the acts complained of are waste and not binding on the plaintiff next reversioner after the death of defendant 1 ;

(c) a receiver be appointed to manage the estate;

(d) costs of this suit be decreed against the defendants ;

(e) any other relief the Court deems fit be also granted.

These reliefs can be summarized into three : (i) It be declared that the plaintiff is the next reversioner. (ii) That permanent injunction be granted to restrain defendant 1 from committing acts of waste. (iii) That a receiver be appointed to manage the property.

The defendants raised the objection that it was not open to the plaintiff to put his own valuation on the several reliefs claimed by him. The lower Court overruled the contention which is again pressed here in revision by the defendants. It is urged on behalf of the defendants that the relief of injunction or the appointment of receiver was an independent and substantive relief and that it should be paid for separately. On that basis it is urged that the suit for the purposes of court-fees does not fall under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. Reliance is placed on 54 All 232[1] and 58 Cal 281.[2] In the first mentioned case the plea such as is raised here was in fact overruled. It was held that the relief with respect to the appointment of a receiver was a relief consequential on the granting of the plaintiff's relief for a declaration of the plaintiff's title. The suit which was one for a declaration of title and appointment of a receiver was treated as one falling under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. It was further held that it was open to the plaintiff to put his own valuation upon the relief sought by him. In 58 Cal 281[2] the plaintiff had paid separate court-fees for the relief of declaration and for the relief of injunction, exactly as is contended for by the defendants in this case, but their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court held that the relief of injunction was consequential on the relief of declaration and held that the suit fell under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. It was also pointed out that it was at the option of the plaintiff to fix any value he likes on the reliefs that he claims in the suit.

I have no doubt as I held in A I R 1937 Nag 14,[3] that the reliefs of injunction or the appointment of receiver are consequential reliefs and that the case comes within the purview of S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. In respect of such suits there has been much divergence of opinion as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to put arbitrarily low valuation on the consequential relief or not. In A I R 1937 Nag 14[3] I had occasion to deal with this point and I expressed my opinion that the Court is not authorized until proper rules are framed under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act, to interfere with the valuation put by the plaintiff even though it may appear to be capricious and unreasonable. In that case my view was expressed in these terms :

1. Mt. Chhatarpati v. Mt. Kalap Dei, (1932) 19 A I R All 114=135 I C 237=54 All 232=1931 A L J 837.
2. In re Kalipada Mukherji, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 686=131 I C 587=58 Cal 281=34 C W N 870.
3. Secy. of State v. Dadoo Ghanshyam Singh, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 14=165 I C 106.

There was formerly some divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether Sec. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, authorizes a plaintiff to value his relief in an arbitrary manner, but lately the opinion of all the High Courts appears to converge on the view that it leaves it open to the plaintiff to attach his own value to the relief claimed by him and that the Courts have no power to revise the plaintiff's valuation even though it may appear to be capricious. The Calcutta High Court had held in 40 Cal 245[4] and 11 C W N 705[5] which was followed by the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur in 7 N L R 190[6] that a plaintiff was not at liberty to assign an arbitrary value to the relief sought by him. The Calcutta view did not find favour in Bombay (see 33 Bom 307[7] and 45 Bom 567[8]), and was departed from by the Calcutta High Court itself in later cases : see 58 Cal 281[2] and 61 Cal 796.[9] The cases in 13 Lah 788,[10] 38 Mad 922,[11] 4 All 320[12] and 10 Pat 432[13] took the same view as the later Calcutta cases.

In the sequel I observed :

It may well be that in certain cases the plaintiff may deliberately undervalue the relief in order to save court-fees, but this can be remedied by framing appropriate rules under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act, as suggested by Mukerji J. in A I R 1930 Cal 473.[14] To deprive the plaintiff of his right to state his own valuation, however arbitrary or unreasonable it may be, would result in nullifying the words of the Section.

In another case of this Court reported in A I R 1937 Nag 316,[15] Pollock J. expressed his opinion to the contrary saying that it was, no doubt, not open to the plaintiff to put an arbitrary value on his claim. On a question of fiscal importance and frequent occurrence, such as the present, it is desirable that there should be no divergence of opinion in our Court. It is therefore expedient that the question formulated below should be referred to a Bench of this Court for its opinion.

"Whether the Court is authorized to interfere with any value put on a relief sought by the plaintiff in a suit which falls under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, if the valuation so put by the plaintiff appears to be arbitrary and unreasonable."

OPINION

Stone C. J.—The following question has been referred to a Bench for its opinion :

Whether the Court is authorized to interfere with any value put on a relief sought by the plaintiff in a suit which falls under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, if the valuation so put by the plaintiff appears to be arbitrary and unreasonable.

Owing to the practical importance of the question and the divergence of opinion in this and the other High Courts in India it was considered desirable to place this matter before a Full Bench. The difficulty arises owing to the wording of S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. That Section provides inter alia as follows :

The amount of fee payable under this Act in the suits next hereinafter mentioned shall be as follows :

(iv) In suits . . . . . .

(c) To obtain a declaratory decree or order, where consequential relief is prayed . . . . . according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal [with a minimum fee of Rs. 5 in the case of suits falling under Cl. (c)] . . . . . In all such suits the plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought.

In considering the meaning of the above provisions it is necessary to consider two other Acts because in construing a statute one should endeavour to give it a meaning, in all cases of ambiguity, which will make it consonant to, rather than in disagreement

4. Raj Krishna Dey v. Bipin Behari Dey, (1913) 40 Cal 245=17 I C 162=16 C L J 194=17 C W N 591.
5. Mt. Bibi Umatul v. Mt. Nanji Koer, (1907) 11 C W N 705=6 C L J 427.
6. Devidas v. Ramlal, (1911) 7 N L R 190=13 I C 864.
7. Vachhani Keshabhai v. Vachhani Nanbha, (1909) 33 Bom 307=1 I C 108=11 Bom L R 30.
8. Govind Krishna v. Hanmaya Lingaya, (1921) 8 A I R Bom 65=59 I C 777=45 Bom 567=22 Bom L R 1450.
9. Narayan Ganj Central Co-operative Sale and Supply Society, Ltd. v. Mafijuddin Ahmad, (1934) 21 A I R Cal 448=149 I C 3=61 Cal 796=59 C L J 233=38 C W N 589 (F B).
10. Jhanda Singh v. Gulab Mal-Bhagwan Das, (1933) 20 A I R Lah 246=137 I C 240=13 Lah 788=33 P L R 488.
11. Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangaswamy Pillai, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 948=28 I C 79=38 Mad 922=28 M L J 118 (F B).
12. Jogal Kishore v. Tale Singh, (1882) 4 All 320 =1882 A W N 44 (F B).
13. Kamala Prasad v. Jagarnath Prasad, (1931) 18 A I R Pat 78=130 I C 46=10 Pat 432=13 P L T 155.
14. Pannalal v. Abdul Gani, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 473=127 I C 665=34 C W N 321.
15. Sadasheorao v. Vasantrao, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 316=174 I C 90=ILR (1938) Nag 302.

with, other Acts. The first of the other Acts is the Suits Valuation Act, S. 8 of which provides inter alia as follows :

> Where in suits [within the above sub-section] .... court-fees are payable ad valorem under the Court-fees Act, 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same.

The second is the Civil Procedure Code (O. 7, R. 11), Sch. 1 to which provides inter alia as follows :

> The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases :
>
> . . . . . .
>
> (b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so.

The question assumes that the suit in question is of the above type and that the valuation appears to be arbitrary and unreasonable. It is argued on the one hand that Sec. 7 (iv) (c) gives to the plaintiff the right to put what value he likes upon a suit of this nature and if he values it at a trifling figure that valuation cannot be challenged and the consequence will be that that value will be taken to be the value under the provisions of Sec. 8 Suits Valuation Act, as the value for jurisdiction purposes, it being assumed in the argument that the value for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction must be the same. On the other hand, it is said that if one traces this Act back to its beginning one finds that originally after the words "in all such suits the plaintiff shall state the relief sought" there appeared words which preserved the Court's powers now conferred by Order 7, Rule 11 (b) and therefore it is argued that although the plaintiff is required to state the amount at which he values the relief sought and although that value prima facie controls the amount of court-fee and also will control the jurisdiction still it is not a value that is binding on the Court and, when the plaint comes before the Court, if the Court is of opinion that it is a clearly unreasonable valuation, the Court can reject the plaint and leave the plaintiff to correct the valuation or have the suit rejected.

Which of the above is the correct view has perhaps been the subject of as much dispute as any subject relating to the construction of a statute. On the view that the valuation is whatever the plaintiff cares to make, arbitrary or otherwise, reasonable or unreasonable, are the following decisions : 111 P R 1913,[16] 13 Lah 788,[10] 38 Mad 922,[11] 4 All 320,[12] 45 Bom 567,[8] 118 I C 357,[17] A I R 1930 Cal 686,[2] 50 Mad 646[18] A I R 1937 Mad 449[19] and A I R 1937 Nag 14.[3] On the other hand for the view that the plaintiff cannot fix whatever value he likes but the Court has power of supervision there are : 7 N L R 190,[6] A I R 1924 Nag 295,[20] A I R 1928 Nag 243,[21] A I R 1937 Nag 316,[15] A I R 1934 Pat 234,[22] 13 Lah 391,[23] 1938 N L J 130,[24] 11 Pat 161,[25] 42 C W N 504,[26] 39 C W N 250,[27] 11 C W N 705,[5] 31 Sind L R 442[28] and 2 Pat 198.[29] One important case, 61 Cal 796,[9] has been relied on by both sides.

As the foundation of many of the decisions which say that the plaintiff can fix an arbitrary figure is the Privy Council decision in 43 Bom 376[30] and it is obvious that if that decides the point in question that is the end of the discussion. It is therefore necessary to see whether that case does so decide. 43 Bom 376[30] was concerned with a question of limitation. The point here under consideration was touched upon at page 382 in the following words :

> From that decree the defendants appealed to the High Court at Bombay. For the necessary purpose of that appeal they applied for copies of the judgment of the trial Judge, but did not obtain them

16. Barru v. Lachhman, (1914) 1 A I R Lah 214=22 I C 503=111 P R 1913=23 P L R 1914 (F B).
17. Official Trustee of Bengal v. Gobardhan Guchait, (1929) 118 I C 357=33 C W N 231.
18. Vasireddi Veeramma v. Butchayya, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 563=101 I C 379=50 Mad 646=52 M L J 381.
19. Vallabhacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 449=171 I C 889.
20. Kalicharanlal v. Shivshankar Sahai, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 295=79 I C 113.
21. Pratab Singh v. Nanhelal, (1928) 15 A I R Nag 243=110 I C 163.
22. Krityanand Singh v. Dinu Manjhi, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 234=149 I C 109.
23. Sri Kishan Das v. Sat Narain, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 132=13 Lah 391=32 P L R 729.
24. Mt. Thamabai v. Lalsingh, (1938) N L J 130.
25. Ramcharitar Panday v. Basgit Rai, (1932) 19 A I R Pat 9=133 I C 687=11 Pat 161=12 P L T 656.
26. Anath Nath v. Kalimata, (1938) 25 A I R Cal 865=I L R (1938) 2 Cal 64=42 C W N 504.
27. Radha Sundar Roy v. Saktipada Roy, (1935) 62 Cal 479=39 C W N 250.
28. Lakhomal Deepchand v. Deepchand Tolaram, (1937) 24 A I R Sind 241=171 I C 420=31 S L R 442 (F B).
29. Ram Sekhar Prasad Singh v. Sheonandan Dubey, (1923) 10 A I R Pat 137=68 I C 316=2 Pat 198=4 P L T 71.
30. Sunderbai v. Collector of Belgaum, (1918) 5 A I R P C 135=52 I C 897=43 Bom 376=46 I A 15 (P C).

until 11th June 1910. They presented their appeal to the High Court on 19th July 1910, which if the appeal lay to the High Court was well within the 90 days allowed for an appeal to the High Court. On objection taken on behalf of the defendants, the High Court on 11th March 1912, rightly decided that the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge of Belgaum and not to the High Court, and affirmed a principle, which had been previously applied by the High Court at Bombay, that—'Where a plaintiff sues for a declaratory decree and asks for consequential relief, and puts his own valuation upon that consequential relief, then for the purposes of court-fee, and also for the purposes of jurisdiction, it is the value that the plaintiff puts upon the plaint that determines both.' The High Court directed that the memorandum of appeal should be returned to the defendants for presentation to the District Judge of Belgaum, and the learned Judges intimated in this judgment that the appeal would be removed into the High Court.

In our opinion that means that the High Court was right in deciding that appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge. The question whether the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge or to the High Court depended upon what was the true value for purposes of jurisdiction. The true value for purposes of jurisdiction is the value, as we have seen from S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, at which the suit is valued (in a suit of this character) for the purpose of court-fee. The plaintiff had valued it at so much, therefore the jurisdictional limit was that amount and therefore appeal lay to a particular Court. That is the chain of reasoning which their Lordships approved. That, in our opinion, does not decide what is the position if, at the time of presentation, a plaint containing such a valuation is rejected by a Judge on the ground that the valuation is unreasonable. No one disputes that in the first place the plaintiff can value his plaint. No one contests that if he does value his plaint for court-fee purposes that will be the value for jurisdictional purposes. Nor does anyone contest that that value will control the matter if when that plaint is presented it is accepted not only as regards court-fees but also as regards jurisdiction. We therefore are of the opinion that their Lordships of the Privy Council were not considering the position that arises when a plaintiff unreasonably undervalues his plaint and the Court rejects it as improperly valued. Thus we are not relieved by the binding nature of that decision of the duty to come to our own conclusion.

Unfortunately, owing to the conflict of judicial opinion in considering this question, precedent and authority are of very little assistance, for the cases disclose admirable reasons leading to conflicting results. It can hardly be doubted however that it is not desirable to permit a litigant to place fanciful values on his suit and thereby not merely deprive Government of revenue but also get an important action in a Court of limited jurisdiction with the consequential result that the powers of appeal, however important the matter may be, will be strictly limited. On the other hand, undoubtedly, one is here construing a statute which imposes a pecuniary obligation upon a subject and which should therefore be construed strictly, and one is concerned with a type of suit the value of which is uncertain and consequently about which opinions can differ.

In our opinion, it is desirable that where opinions can differ one should delimit the scope of dispute as to value as far as practicable and the purpose of the Court-fees Act would appear to be to give to the plaintiff the right to fix the value, subject, in our opinion, to the right of a Court to prevent an abuse of its processes by declining to accept an unreasonable value. There are possibly many cases in which it would be impossible for anybody to say, however small the value assigned was, that it was unreasonable because although the subject-matter might be substantial the plaintiff's interest therein or the relief that the plaintiff sought in relation thereto might be of a very small value. At the same time there are other cases that arise in which, however the matter is regarded, it is clear that the value of the suit to the plaintiff is substantial. The question we have to consider is whether in such a case it is still open to the plaintiff to put a nominal value, say Re. 1, as the value of the suit. If the plaintiff so values a suit can he say, when the Court, on presentation of the plaint, says it is undervalued : "The Court has no power to consider this question. The law gives me the right to say what the value is. I have said the value is Re. 1 and that concludes the matter."

There can at least be no doubt that the value for court-fee purposes and the value for jurisdiction must be the same, and if the plaintiff values the suit at one figure for the purposes of jurisdiction and at another figure for court-fee purposes in a suit of this type the Court is at liberty to challenge one of those values at any rate :

see 16 N L R 84,[31] 7 N L R 190[6] and 13 Lah 391.[23] Particular stress has been laid on a recent Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, in 61 Cal 796.[9] That case decided that the Court under O. 7, R. 11 (b) has power to require the plaintiff to correct the valuation, but the answer to that question proceeds as follows :

> . . . . But, so long as there are no rules framed under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1887), the Court would have no standard before it, on which it may regard the plaintiff's valuation as an undervaluation, and its powers of correction would have to be exercised on that footing.

Costello J. in agreeing generally, expressed the view that it was never intended to give the plaintiff liberty to assign any arbitrary value he chose to the suit, that it was intended that the Court should be in a position to exercise control but he saw practical difficulties in the way of the Court interfering unless and until appropriate rules were made under the powers conferred by S. 9, Suits Valuation Act. Jack J. agreed with the view expressed by Costello J., and Mallik and Ghose JJ. agreed with the opinion expressed by Mukerjee J. whose judgment in that case is the main judgment. Not unnaturally that case has been cited on behalf of both parties before us. We apprehend that the meaning of that judgment is this : that the Court has the right to challenge the valuation but, it cannot usefully do so in a case where the value is uncertain because in such a case it would not be within the power of anybody, the value being uncertain, to say that the value assigned is too low. In Bengal, there is a local amendment to the Court-fees Act, and the added Section (S. 80) was the one under which the Court acted in 42 C W N 504.[26] It seems difficult to see how that Section adds substantially to the powers conferred on the Court by the Civil Procedure Code. If the Court cannot say, there is an undervalue when exercising the powers given it by O. 7, R. 11, it presumably cannot say there is an undervalue when exercising the powers conferred by S. 80, Court-fees Act. Rules have been made in this province under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act, but they do not touch S. 7 (iv) (c) and therefore do not advance the matter any further. In 50 Mad 646[18] the following general principle was expressed :

> The general principles deducible for valuation for purposes of jurisdiction where no special method of valuation has been provided by statute . . . . .
>
> (1) . . . where the subject-matter of a suit is wholly unrelated to anything which can be readily stated in definite money terms, then the plaintiff, having to put some money value for the purpose of jurisdiction, must put a more or less arbitrary value, and there being no factors in the case from which the Court can say his valuation is wrong, or dishonest, the Court will accept that valuation . . . . . .
>
> (2) . . . where the subject-matter is so related to things which have a real money value that the relief asked for will affect these, then the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction is to be taken as the market value of the property affected, such, for example, as a suit for a declaration of fishery rights . . . .

We are not prepared to adopt the latter as the test for valuing suits of the type under discussion. It is not, in our opinion, the value of the thing affected that settles the value of the relief sought. It is the value of the relief sought which has to be determined. Clearly, if it is impossible to state what that value is, the value must be a notional one settled by somebody's caprice, and the Act, in our opinion, enables the plaintiff to fix it, but it does not, in our opinion, follow that in a case where though the value is uncertain it is manifestly great, the plaintiff is at liberty, not merely to fix what value he likes but to maintain that value when a Court says it is unreasonable. We wish it to be clearly understood that a Court should not endeavour to correct the plaintiff's valuation except in a clear case where the disparity is so great as to show that the plaintiff has not endeavoured to fix a fair value at all but has simply set down a figure which is unreasonable and bears no relation to the value of the right litigated. In our opinion on the true construction of the Act the matter can be expressed as follows :

The amount of fee is computed ad valorem according to the value fixed in the plaint and the plaintiff is required to state that value. That value controls the value for court-fee purposes and controls the jurisdiction. That value (like any other of the values which should appear in a plaint) is not necessarily final. If another of the sub-sections of S. 7, for example sub-s. (iii), be looked at it will be seen that in suits for moveable properties the value is the market value at the date of presenting the plaint. That market value may be stated by the plaintiff as Rs. X. The Court may consider, on objection taken by the other side, that it exceeds Rs. X and can reject the plaint as undervalued.

31. Baldeoprasad v. Ghasiram, (1920) 7 A I R Nag 248=56 I C 360=16 N L R 84.

In a case under S. 7 (iv) (c) though the plaintiff values it at a certain figure the Court can refuse to accept that figure. The difference between the two cases lies in this: that in the first case the Court has something definite to go on, whereas in a suit to obtain a declaration it is difficult to determine what the true value of the relief sought is. Therefore a Court in such a case, even where objection is taken (see A I R 1934 Pat 234[22]) should not lightly disturb the plaintiff's valuation and should only do so if it is apparent that that valuation could not have been given by any reasonable man as the valuation of the relief sought. In other words, unless the relief sought can be given some sort of a value and unless that value which any reasonable man would give is altogether disparate from the value that the plaintiff has given the plaintiff's valuation stands. In other words we do not understand S. 7 (iv) (c) to demand a construction which would be appropriate if the relevant part of the Act above quoted ended with the words "and such value shall be binding on the Court." There is nothing in the Court-fees Act which shows that in this type of case the power which the Court is given by the Civil Procedure Code to challenge an undervaluation is taken away. The only difficulty is the practical difficulty of saying what is an undervalue. In many cases, it would be impossible to say what is an undervalue for the relief sought might be of such a nature that no one could say with any definiteness whether the value is great or small. But, although there are such cases, and in such cases the plaintiff's value must be accepted, there are other cases we apprehend (otherwise the question put is meaningless) in which it would be possible to say that the value assigned is unreasonable though it might be impossible to say with precision what the true value is, for a value can be great or a value can be small without one being able to say with certainty exactly how many rupees are involved. In such a case, if the Court thought that the value assigned was unreasonable we see no reason why it could not treat that unreasonable valuation as an undervaluation and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11.

But, in our opinion, that is the only power which the Court has, and if it accepts the plaint that is an end of the matter and thereafter all the proceedings must be controlled by the valuation fixed by the plaintiff. This, we understand, is what their Lordships intended to express approval of in 43 Bom 376.[30]

The majority of the decisions in this High Court tend in the direction we have indicated. On the other hand there is the decision of the referring Judge reported in A I R 1937 Nag 14[3] to the effect that:

> Section 7 (iv) (c) leaves it open to the plaintiff to attach his own value to the relief claimed by him and the Courts have no power to revise the plaintiff's valuation, even though it may appear to be capricious.

In that case the case-law was reviewed. On the other hand, the same learned Judge in 1938 N L J 130[24] decided that in a suit under Sec. 7 (iv) (c) the plaintiff cannot be allowed to put an arbitrary value on his claim but that case turns on the fact that the suit was of such a nature that a value could be assigned and therefore the plaintiff could not give an arbitrary value. In I L R (1938) Nag 302,[15] Pollock J. decided that where a plaintiff sues for a declaratory decree and asks for a consequential relief and puts his own valuation upon that consequential relief, it is the value that the plaintiff puts upon the plaint that determines the value both for court-fees and for jurisdiction, provided that the value put by the plaintiff is not arbitrary. Unfortunately, the important restriction on the general power of the plaintiff that he must not put an arbitrary value occurs in a single sentence of the judgment and is not supported by any authority. His general proposition is founded upon Privy Council decision above-mentioned. In 7 N L R 190[6] it was decided that when a suit is brought by a minor for a declaration that a mortgage deed executed in his name by the plaintiff's mother is not binding on the plaintiff and for consequential relief of cancellation and injunction the valuation of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction depends on the amount of the plaintiff's liability under the deed as stated in the plaint and the plaintiff cannot be allowed to assign an arbitrary value for purposes of jurisdiction. We think that it is clear that as above stated, the Court must be able to challenge a valuation for court-fee purposes if that valuation disagrees with the valuations given in the plaint for other purposes. But we do not limit the power of the Court in this way.

We take A I R 1928 Nag 243[21] as an example to show what we think can and cannot be done. That was a suit by the next heir to an inalienable estate for a declaration which would have the effect of preventing a threatened alienation of the estate for Rs. 40,000. A Division Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court held that the court-fee was an ad valorem fee on Rs. 40,000. The plaintiff had valued it at a figure which made the court-fee payable Rs. 10. We think with respect that it was clearly wrong to hold that the value of the relief sought in that case was Rs. 40,000. It was, in our opinion, manifestly very much less. As the learned Judges appear to indicate if the estate was inalienable whether it was or was not alienated would not affect the next heir when he came into the estate. The next heir (the plaintiff) might never come into the estate, he might die before he entered upon his inheritance. The plaintiff was thus, even if successful, getting something that was very much less in value to him than Rs. 40,000. On the other hand, it might be — but we express no view as to that — that he was litigating a matter which had greater value than that on which Rs. 10 court-fee was properly payable. That would be a matter for the Court to consider. If it thought that the reasonable value and the stated value were not greatly disparate, it would not regard the plaint as undervalued even though the proposed alienation was for a large sum of money. In A I R 1924 Nag 316,[32] it was held on the authority of 45 Bom 567,[8] which was treated as following 43 Bom 376[30] which case was regarded as concluding the matter, that the plaintiff has a right to put what value he likes on the relief claimed and the Court is bound to accept that value. As above stated, we are of opinion that the Privy Council did not lay down any such rule. In A I R 1924 Nag 295,[20] a Judge who was a member of the Bench which decided A I R 1924 Nag 316[32] held, following 7 N L R 190,[6] that the valuation cannot be an arbitrary valuation but has to accord with the value of the subject-matter of the suit and in case of dispute is to be determined by the Court. The learned Judge had before him 43 Bom 376[30] and he observed:

> That question itself does not appear to have been before their Lordships, and no specific finding on the correctness of the principle referred to is to be found in the judgment of the case.

With that observation we agree. We answer the question in affirmative. Referred back for disposal accordingly.

D.S./R.K. Answered in affirmative.

---

32. Krishnarao v. Mt. Chandrabagabhai, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 316=79 I C 668.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 57

FULL BENCH

STONE C. J., VIVIAN BOSE AND CLARKE JJ.

Jageshwarprasad Onkar Prasad and others — Plaintiffs — Appellants.

v.

Mulchand and others — Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 4 of 1935, Decided on 18th October 1938, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, First Class, Jubbulpore, D/- 22nd October 1934.

(a) Estoppel — Evidence — Plot of land in another district included in mortgage to enable registration in such district—Mortgagor intending to work fraud not on registration law but upon mortgagee — Mortgagor estopped from contending that transfer of plot was not intended.

If a mortgagor puts in the mortgage bond a plot of land situated in another district in order to work a fraud, not on the registration law but upon the mortgagee, by persuading the mortgagee to accept so small an item to register the mortgage in the district in which the item is found, he is estopped from giving evidence that he did not intend the document to relate to the plot. [P 61 C 1]

 (b) Registration Act (1908), S. 28—Fraud on registration law—Piece of land not intended to be transferred but included in mortgage to give jurisdiction to Registrar amounts to fraud on registration law — If property so included found not to exist within jurisdiction of Registrar, registration is invalid.

When a small portion of land is included in a mortgage only with the intention of getting it registered at one place rather than at the other, fraud will not be inferred if as a matter of fact there was a mistake made and the party who seeks to rely on the registration really intended that the mortgage should relate to the item even though there was no item if he honestly thought there was and intended it to be transferred : A I R 1914 P C 67, Rel. on. [P 61 C 1, 2]

But once it is established that the motive for the inclusion is to give jurisdiction then that is a fraud on the registration law and no intention to transfer can be inferred. And, if in such a case the portion of land so included to give jurisdiction to the registrar is afterwards found not to be existing within his jurisdiction, then whatever may be the intention of the parties, the Registrar has no jurisdiction to register the document and the registration is therefore invalid : A I R 1914 P C 67; A I R 1921 P C 8; A I R 1934 P C 157 and AIR 1936 P C 91, Explained and Relied on. [P 61 C 2 ; P 63 C 2]

(c) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 28 and 29— To see whether document falls under S. 28 or S. 29 it must be regarded as a whole — Mortgage bond falling under Sec. 28, but registered in wrong office cannot be treated as registered bond falling under S. 29.

In considering what class a document falls within, one has to regard it as a whole. The Court cannot reform it by notionally cutting out most of the clauses which the parties let in and then say that thus altered this has ceased to be a mortgage and become a bond. [P 63 C 2]

Where a mortgage bond began and ended as a mortgage, it is compulsorily registrable under Sec. 28. It cannot be treated only as a registered bond and as such optionally registrable under S. 29 simply because it was registered in a wrong office : A I R 1928 Nag 1, Foll.; A I R 1937 Cal 347, Ref.; A I R 1923 Mad 447, Not foll. [P 63 C 2]

M. B. Kinkhede and A. R. Kulkarni — for Appellants.

J. Sen and M. Adhikari — for Respondents 1 to 5.

Judgment. — This appeal raises two points both of which have been the subject of conflict in the various Courts of British India though the first point may now be regarded as settled by the Judicial Committee, the only difficulty being as regards that part of the case, the application of the law to the facts. The two points are as follows : (1) Does the mortgage deed in question in this suit relate to a small piece of land referred to as a dih so as to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar of the Seoni District ? (2) If the document is incapable of being proved as a mortgage owing to the registration being in a registry the officer in charge of which had no power to register, can it be sued on as a registered bond so as to make the period of limitation six years ?

As to the first point the Judicial Committee has considered cases of this kind on four occasions at least and the conclusions arrived at are to be found in 41 Cal 972,[1] 48 Cal 509,[2] 56 All 468[3] and 59 Mad 539.[4] In order to see exactly what those cases decide, it is desirable to consider the facts and conclusions somewhat carefully. 41 Cal 972[1] was a case in which the plaintiff's claim was based on a mortgage decree. That decree had been made by the High Court of Calcutta on its Original Side on a mortgage. The Court had no jurisdiction unless a part of the property mortgaged was situate in Calcutta and the mortgage which was registered in Calcutta was not properly registered unless a portion of the property was situate in Calcutta. Thus both mortgage and decree depended upon whether a part of the property mortgaged was situate in Calcutta. The item in question was parcel No. 28 in the schedule and that was described as 25, Guru Das Street. It appeared that in point of fact there was no such place as 25, Guru Das Street, and that being pointed out in the mortgage suit the Court directed an amendment and the description was altered to No. 25, Ashutosh Dey Lane which was in Calcutta and was comprised within the same boundaries as parcel 28 of the schedule to the mortgage deed. In the suit which their Lordships of the Privy Council were considering, i. e. the suit based on the mortgage decree, no evidence was given either by the mortgagor or by the mortgagee to show that there had been any mistake. It was proved on the other hand by the defendants that the property contained within the boundaries of parcel 28 did not and never did belong to the mortgagor. The Courts below like the High Court in the suit on the mortgage found without any evidence that there had been a mistake in the entry and held that part of the property being in Calcutta the deed had been properly registered there and that the decree in the mortgage suit had been rightly made and within jurisdiction.

One difficulty in their Lordships' way was the fact that there was a concurrent finding that there was a mistake and that it was binding on them. That was brushed on one side on the ground that the finding was based on no evidence at all and that the decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law. They therefore considered themselves free to decide whether there was a mistake and the conclusion arrived at was that there was no mistake at all, that the entry was a fictitious one, that the mortgagee knew it was fictitious and that it was therefore a fraud on the registration law the fictitious item having been included simply to enable the mortgage to be registered in Calcutta where it could not have been registered had

1. Harendra Lal v. Haridasi Debi, (1914) 1 A I R P C 67 = 23 I C 637=41 Cal 972=41 I A 110 (P C).
2. Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan, (1921) 8 A I R P C 8=60 I C 833=48 Cal 509 = 48 I A 127 (P C).
3. Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal, (1934) 21 A I R P C 157=150 I C 545=56 All 468=61 I A 286 (P C).
4. Venkatarama Rao v. Sobhanadri Appa Rao, (1936) 23 A I R P C 91=161 I C 29=59 Mad 539=63 I A 169 (P C).

it not been for the fictitious entry. Their Lordships made it quite clear that had the mistake been proved, different considerations would have arisen. Their Lordships observe at page 986 as follows :

> It may well be that the above is sufficient to preclude any rectification of the mortgage bond. If the mortgagor intended it to stand, as it appears in the deed, there is no question of mutual mistake.

Again :

> Considering that he (the mortgagee's agent) was acting on behalf of the mortgagee, the fact that he took no steps to ascertain whether the mortgagor had any title in this property points strongly to the knowledge of the mortgagee that the entry was a fictitious one. Coupling this with the fact that neither this witness nor the plaintiff gave any evidence as to there being any mistake or as to their knowledge and belief as to the existence of the property at the date of the mortgage (although these issues were plainly raised in the pleadings of both the defendants), their Lordships decline to accept the suggestion that there was a mistake on the part of the mortgagee any more than that there was a mistake on the part of the mortgagor. The fact that neither the mortgagee nor the mortgagor gave evidence in support of the suggestion of a mistake has great weight with their Lordships. The defendants having proved that the house which purported to be mortgaged did not exist, and that the property contained in the metes and bounds mentioned in parcel 28 was property of strangers in which the mortgagor had not and never had any interest had proved all that was necessary to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the entry of this parcel was not a fictitious entry. He might have done this by showing mistake or otherwise, but he did not do so.

From that we infer that even though there be an entry of a parcel which does not belong to the mortgagor and even if it, under its misdescription, does not exist, though if correctly described it would exist within the jurisdiction, then if the mortgagee can prove that it was entered under a mistake — even unilateral — he thinking that it did exist as described and did belong to the mortgagor and was being mortgaged, then the entry would not, so far as he was concerned, be a fictitious entry but so far as he was concerned would relate to a property to which the mortgage deed related because he intended the property as correctly described to be mortgaged. But the burden according to 41 Cal 972[1] at p. 987 would be on the mortgagee to prove that the entry was not fictitious :

> He might have done this by showing mistake or otherwise, but he did not do so, but abstained from giving any evidence whatever on the subject.

48 Cal 509[2] is also a mortgage case. The subject-matter was a seven annas share in a village in one district and one kauri share in another district. The kauri share was of small value the allegation being that it was bought for Rs. 50. It is in this case that the question of possession passing first comes into prominence and it comes in the following way : At the time of the mortgage negotiations the mortgagor admittedly did not own this kauri share and he acquired it only in order to have some property, which he could put in the mortgage, in the district which it was desired to register the mortgage instrument in. He accordingly, it was said, had acquired by purchase the kauri share for Rs. 50. The instrument of transfer was not registered. It need not have been registered because the subject-matter was under Rs. 100. But under S. 54, T. P. Act, even in the case of immovable property of less than Rs. 100 in value the transfer is ineffective unless either the instrument of transfer was registered or possession of the subject-matter of the transfer was delivered. In point of fact delivery of possession was not made. Therefore as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out, there was no effective transfer, and the mortgagor had no title. The inference drawn from this fact was (page 515) :

> There was neither registration nor delivery. Why? Only one reason can be given. There was no intention really to acquire this kauri share in the Kolhua property. All that was wanted was the use of its name for the purposes of registration, and it was for this use that the sum of Rs. 50 was paid.

Their Lordships concluded that neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee intended the property to pass to the mortgagor (see p. 516, and the use of the word 'parties' in the judgment of Cox J. referred to); nor did they intend that the kauri share should be mortgaged. The so-called sale was a mere device. Their Lordships observe at page 516 :

> This case differs toto cælo from the case suggested in argument of a mere failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument, and which both parties had intended should form part of the security.

Again at page 517 :

> . . . . . the mortgagor had no interest in it, and the parties to the mortgage never intended that it should form part of the security.

That case differs from this in that here the transfer of the dih was by registered deed; possession was therefore a matter of no conveyancing importance, the title would pass to the mortgagor assuming, of course, that the vendor had title. 56 All 468[3] is concerned with a number of points the discussion of the one at present under consideration commencing at p. 491. Their Lordships observe at page 492 :

The facts raising the question (similar to the question here present) are clear enough. The inferences to be drawn from them are not so clear. The deed purports to transfer as one parcel four villages of the Majhauli estate, and, as a separate item of property, a one-third share in a sitting-room in a garden appertaining to the Majhauli kothi in Mohalla Dandpar, Gorakhpur. As compared with the value of the four villages this property is insignificant, almost derisory.

Having considered the facts and the evidence their Lordships at p. 495 observe :

. . . . . one of two inferences alone is possible : either that it was never intended by either party that the sitting-room should, for any purpose other than that of registration, be subject of sale at all, or that the vendor only included it because he knew that it never could become an effective subject of enjoyment or occupation by the purchasers. The word 'fictitious' used in 41 Cal 972[1] is not confined to non-existing properties. It is satisfied if the deed does not 'relate' to a specified property for any effective purpose of enjoyment or use.

The case there was not one of mortgage but of sale and their Lordships concluded that this was at least as strong a case as 41 Cal 972[1] or 48 Cal 509[2] (p. 495 bottom):

. . . paraphrasing the words used in the latter case, the circumstances here leave in their minds no doubt that the parties never intended that this undivided share of this sitting-room should really be sold. The so-called sale was a mere device to evade the Registration Act.

It should be observed that in that case there was a concurrent finding in the lower Courts. The finding was that this insignificant item of property was never contemplated as really forming a part of the consideration and was entered in the sale deed presumably for the only object of getting the deed registered. Despite that finding however both the Courts had held that the registration was good because the item in fact existed and being the property of the vendor its inclusion in the sale deed was not a fictitious entry so as to bring the case within 41 Cal 972[1] or 48 Cal 509.[2] It was this conclusion which their Lordships reversed.

In 59 Mad 539[3] the facts were that the registration was in a district in which no item of the sale transaction existed excepting a square yard of land. That square yard did exist and did belong to the vendor though the title of the vendor to it was doubtful. It was not proved to what use it was to be put. No use was made of it in fact and their Lordships came to the conclusion from all the circumstances that it was not intended that ownership to it should pass and therefore that the sale deed did not relate to it. At p. 544 their Lordships observe :

Before their Lordships it is asserted on the one side that the deed was a real conveyance of one yard of land in Vundoor (as the High Court held), and that although the motive of its inclusion was no doubt to allow of registration in a place convenient to the vendor, this did not affect the validity of the transaction. It is on the other hand, contended for the appellant that the Vundoor land was a fictitious item which was never intended by either party to the transaction to pass under the deed and (translating this into the language of the Act) that the document did not in reality 'relate' to any land in the Godavari registration area.

The question put in 59 Mad 539[3] is found at p. 546 and is as follows :

Whether, upon the facts established by the evidence, the parties intended this one yard of land to pass under the deed. The motive may be immaterial as the respondent contends, if the requirements of the law have been complied with ; but of this the intention is critical. They are satisfied that in the present case no such intention existed.

Their Lordships there considered as material in arriving at this conclusion as to intention the following points: (1) The document as originally prepared contained no reference to the item ; (2) when it was brought in no value was placed upon it; (3) no part of the consideration was assigned to it ; (4) the purchaser neither lived in Vundoor nor did he own any property in Vundoor, and what possible use he could have had for a single yard of land in that village is unexplained ; (5) it is doubtful if the parcel belonged to the vendor ; (6) it is doubtful whether it is in fact identifiable; (7) the purchaser never made any attempt to take possession of it ; (8) in a subsequent partition no notice was taken of it ; (9) it was shortly afterwards built over by another person with whom the vendor was living. Their Lordships regarded the inevitable conclusion from those facts to be that the vendor did not intend to sell and the purchaser did not intend to buy. Their Lordships in that case had further to consider whether the consideration money should not be returned. They did not examine this point at any length because it appeared on the facts of that case that the consideration money had not got into the hands of the appellants and both Courts below had found against him on that point.

We are not clear how far the Judicial Committee's decisions go. Our impression is that these cases turn very largely on the facts and that all one has to determine is whether on the facts the proper inference is that the document related to the transaction. If it related to the transaction then of course the registration is good. Whether it related to the transaction or not is a question of intention assuming the property exists within the jurisdiction. The difficulty is to be clear as to whose intention is involved and what facts it is necessary to establish to prove intention. Is it sufficient if the mortgagee alone intended while the mortgagor did not intend? In other words, if the mortgagor put this in order to work a fraud, not on the registration law but upon the mortgagee, by persuading the mortgagee to accept so small an item to register the mortgage in the district in which the item is found and then turned round, as he has done here, and said that the Registering Officer had no jurisdiction because we find in fact the item in question did not belong to him or the item in question was wrongly described or that it was never intended by him to mortgage the item, what is the position? We are of opinion that the mortgagor would be estopped from taking up any such position. This is not estoppel against statute. The estoppel is against giving evidence that he did not intend the document to relate to the plot. If this be so, and placing pleading difficulties on one side, it would suffice if the mortgagee, while fully intending that this item should be included and relying on the mortgagor's representation, included an item which in point of fact did not belong to the mortgagor. In other words the mortgagee's or the transferee's intention is the vital intention and there is no intention to defraud the registration law, but on the contrary an intention to take a transfer of the item, if in point of fact the mortgagee did intend that the item should form part of the security.

We observe that here there is no evidence whatever that there was any fraudulent intention on the part of the mortgagor. It is perfectly clear that all concerned—vendor, purchaser, mortgagor and mortgagee—put this item in wholly and solely with a view to enabling registration to be made at Seoni. But we apprehend from 56 All 468[3] that the motive, the reason for the inclusion, does not matter so long as there was an intention to transfer, and we gather from 41 Cal 972[1] that a fraud will not be inferred if as a matter of fact there was a mistake made and the party who seeks to rely on the registration really intended that the mortgage should relate to the item even though there was no item if he honestly thought there was and intended it to be transferred. It may be however that we are wrong in regarding unilateral error as sufficient and that it would be necessary for both parties to intend the document to relate so that there could be rectification and, if necessary, re-registration of the rectified instrument. But it is clear that either both parties do so intend or one is committing a fraud on the other. Here there is no suggestion of fraud and we can only infer that either both and indeed all put this item in merely as a device to defraud the registration law knowing that it was not intended either to sell it or mortgage it, or they all intended to convey it though their motive was to enable registration to take place in a particular district.

We desire to observe that the motive in such a case is often considerable. In a country like India with its long distances and, in places, paucity of communications, with its months of wet or hot weather when movement about is not easy, with its occasional attacks of epidemic diseases restricting movement, its ceremonies of great social and religious significance, it frequently happens that persons would give a considerable sum of money to be relieved of the onerous burden of travelling hundreds of miles. The journey involved in the present case is not one of any especial difficulty; it would involve a journey by road of some 80 miles and then a train journey of 40 miles. It would involve being away about two days and would cost probably Rs. 40 to Rs. 50, though there is evidence to the effect that it cost much more. But the principle applicable would be the same whether the journey was easy or difficult, short or long, trifling in cost or burdensome if that principle be that once it is established that the motive for the inclusion is to give jurisdiction then that is a fraud on the registration law and no intention to transfer can be inferred. There are many places in the Central Provinces apparently near together which involve great difficulties if one would get from the one to the other. Many roads are impassable, many bridges covered to a depth of 20 feet in the rains. There are thousands of square miles of jungle. Often a reasonable man would willingly give away a small piece of land rather than undertake an arduous, if not actually dangerous, journey in order to register the transfer. It is true that their registration can be effected by agents suitably authorized. It is not everybody however who has a trustworthy agent available.

We observe that no ill results from registration in one place rather than another. If the deed relates to several items of property in several districts the routine of the Registration Officer's work requires that the particulars will be sent by the Registering Officer to every sub-registry concerned with the result that the transaction will appear in the registers of each sub-registry and, if registration sub-districts A, B, C are involved, it makes no practical difference whether the document is taken to A or B or C by the parties. Whichever be chosen the books of all three will show the transaction. It is clear from counsel's argument in the above cases that this was present to the minds of their Lordships and it can never have been their intention to nullify a transaction because the parties choose a mode which harmed nobody. Their decisions proceeded rather on the basis that in all these cases there was a deliberate intention to work a fraud on the registration law. We are not prepared to infer any such fraud, any more than any other fraud, unless the facts compel us to do so.

The broad facts here can be very shortly stated. A is the vendor, B the vendee-mortgagor, C the mortgagee. A and B are related, C is a stranger. A is at Seoni, B at Sihora, C nearer Sihora than Seoni. The property originally agreed to be sold and mortgaged is at Sihora. A says that he cannot come to Sihora but that to enable the transaction to go through he is prepared to add to the subject-matter of the sale a small site in Seoni. That will avoid the necessity of his going to Sihora to register because then the deed can be registered in Seoni. To this the purchaser is agreeable. But the purchaser is not in a position to pay cash and so there is proceeding, side by side with the sale discussions, negotiation for a mortgage. Both the mortgagor and mortgagee would find it more convenient to register at Sihora but the mortgagor explains the difficulty raised by the vendor and how that is being overcome whereupon the mortgagee agrees to come to Seoni if the mortgagor includes in the mortgage the property which the vendor has included in the sale in order to give jurisdiction to the Seoni Sub-Registrar. Obviously in such circumstances something of the kind had to be done or the whole thing would have gone off. Clearly the mortgagee would have to be present at the registration of the sale deed, for it was his money that was buying the property to a very large extent. He could not have thought that the vendor was putting in an imaginary piece of property because that was useless. 41 Cal 972[1] and 48 Cal 509[2] had been reported fourteen and four years respectively before this transaction. It is true the mortgagee says: "I did not know before that Seoni property could not be registered for mortgage at Sihora;" but it is clear from his evidence that everybody understood that in order to register these deeds at Seoni it was necessary to include in them a property at Seoni. The only question is: Did the mortgagee understand and believe that there was this Seoni property and did he intend it to be conveyed? His motive doubtless was to enable the deed to be registered at the same place and time as the sale deed.

The vendor is P. W. 2. He has been treated throughout as a man of position and respectability. His evidence is to the effect that the original arrangement necessitated the registration of the sale deed at Sihora but he, the vendor, said he could not go because he had to attend a marriage party. It was then said that if some land of Seoni was included the sale deed could be registered at Seoni and then a small plot of land at Seoni was included. This land was worth about Rs. 50 or Rs. 60. He was then shown the sale deed which he identified. He then identified the dih, the item in question. He says that its boundaries are not known to him and that it belonged to one Dada Ramlal and that he, the witness, got it by inheritance. He says that he has seen it but cannot give evidence about it. It was in a low quarter of the town: "This dih was in a mohalla where I did not go and no good man goes." He says that it is situated in Seoni town and is recorded in the Town Nazul; he cannot swear whether the boundaries in the sale deed are correct or not. He also gives evidence to the effect that it is still in his possession, that it came into his possession some 15 or 20 years ago, that there are houses around it and that a patwari has included a part of this dih according to the report of his agent, in his house. The plaintiff's evidence is quite frank. He did not see the dih. No valuation of it was made. It was included in order to get the mortgage deed registered at Seoni. He considered the two villages, the subject-matter of the mortgage, along with the dih, as sufficient security. There was clearly no talk about the dih until after the failure to come to Sihora. He did not ask what its value was. He did not ask whether there was any dih in existence. He trusted the vendor P. W. 2's word. P. W. 3 says that this dih near the mosque was included. He did not go to see it. He did not inquire on which part of the mosque it was and he does not know near which mosque this dih was. He does not know in whose possession it now is. The Nazul Surveyor and the Patwari, D. Ws. 1 and 2, are not helpful. They are persons who must rely to a large extent upon their records. They failed to bring their records. The Patwari's evidence as to the settlement number of Seoni village (khas) which he says is 441 and that there is no abadi (resident side), let alone a mosque, in the village is relevant. If settlement No. 441 is in Seoni village it is reasonably plain that this dih which is described as in settlement No. 441 is not in the town of Seoni. It is in the village of Seoni which is a different place and in the village of Seoni if there is no abadi it is highly improbable that there is any mosque, and if there is no mosque then the boundaries of this dih as stated in the mortgage deed are imaginary. In order to clear up this matter we sent for the records of Seoni town and village. It appears that settlement No. 441 relates to Seoni village in which there is no site for habitation and no mosque. As a consequence we find great difficulty in differing from the conclusions which the learned trial Judge has arrived at, that there is in fact no such item of property.

It will be noticed that the original security did not include this item, that no portion of the consideration has been allocated to the item, that no value has been assigned to the item, that no possession or use has been taken or made of it, that no inquiry was made into the existence of the item. It is therefore, in our opinion, exceedingly difficult to differentiate this case from 59 Mad 539[4] though we are satisfied (1) that the plaintiff relied on the representations of P. W. 2, a respectable and responsible man who was not the mortgagor but the vendor to the mortgagor, (2) relying on those representations the plaintiff was entitled to believe and did believe that the dih existed and was a property of the vendor and was included in the sale deed and would pass under the sale deed and was so included wholly and solely in order that the sale deed might relate to an item of property in Seoni District, (3) that he made no inquiry and assigned no consideration because he was not including this item for any other purpose than to enable registration to be effected in Seoni. As however the item did not exist we are unable to distinguish this from the above cases. Whatever the intention if the property is non-existent it would seem that the Registrar has no jurisdiction.

It has been urged that even if the deed is a nullity as a mortgage owing to non-registration it is good as a registered bond. That depends on which of the conflicting views expressed respectively in 23 N L R 143[5] (see also A I R 1937 Cal 347[6]) and 46 Mad 435,[7] is correct. Having considered the provisions of the Act and the case-law thereunder we have no doubt that 23 N L R 143[5] was rightly decided. Sec. 18 deals with the documents compulsorily and Sec. 19 with those optionally, registrable. Sec. 29 only applies to documents "other than a document referred to in S. 28." The document here is clearly one which falls under Sec. 28. It cannot change to another class simply by being registered in the wrong office. It began and ended as a mortgage. As such it is compulsorily registrable document, registrable under S. 28; it cannot be treatad as an optionally registrable document falling within S. 29. In considering what class a document falls within, one has to regard it as a whole. The Court cannot reform it by notionally cutting out most of the clauses which the parties let in and then say: Thus altered this has ceased to be a mortgage and become a bond, has ceased to fall within Sec. 17 and falls within Sec. 18, has ceased to be subject to S. 28 and become subject to S. 29.

There remains the question of equitable relief. Their Lordships in 59 Mad 539[4]

5. Vyankatesh v. Annasa, (1928) 15 A I R Nag 1 =107 I C 517=23 N L R 143.
6. Sailendra Nath v. Keshab Chandra, (1937) 24 A I R Cal 347=171 I C 965=41 C W N 783.
7. Rama Rao v. Vedayya, (1923) 10 A I R Mad 447=73 I C 188=46 Mad 435=44 M L J 373.

indicated that such relief might lie (they did not decide that it would) had it been shown that the respondents had received any part of the consideration. Here the facts are that Ramgopal was the mortgagor, that he borrowed Rs. 6250 (out of Rs. 6700) expressly for the purpose of paying the purchase price of 8 annas share in the villages Kumhi and Hardi. Defendants 1 and 2 are his sons. The other defendants would appear to be members of the joint Hindu family. Some or all of the defendants have thus been directly enriched by the money advanced by the plaintiffs. It is not until it appeared, in the course of this case, that contrary to the representations made by or on behalf of the mortgagor, that there is no such item that the mortgagees could be aware that anything was wrong. There is however a difficulty in the way of following the course indicated as possible in 59 Mad 539.[4] This is not a case of putting a person seeking relief upon terms. It would be necessary here for the plaintiff to found his claim upon some ground that would attract the relief sought. An example of such a ground would be fraud. That is not alleged in this case. Another possible remedy would be rectification based on mistake. Whether or not either of these remedies or any other is available we do not consider it desirable to say. That is a matter for the plaintiff and his advisers. As the case stands at present and without amendment of the pleadings such remedies do not arise. We are however prepared to consider any application for amendment that the plaintiff may, on consideration, think fit to make and for that purpose give liberty to apply to the first Division Bench in this suit within one month.

Subject to any such application, which we are not to be taken as advising, the appeal is dismissed. In the circumstances we are not prepared to award any costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 64

GRUER J.

Jagannath Tarachand Marwadi — Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Surajmal Punamchand Marwadi and another — Defendants — Non-applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 841 of 1937, Decided on 21st September 1938.

(a) Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Suit is not one for accounts, merely because some accounts have to be gone into.

The suit is not one for accounts and so not cognizable by a Small Cause Court, merely because some accounting has to be gone into : A I R 1930 Nag 82, Ref. [P 65 C 1]

(b) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Sch. 2, Art. 41 — Suit by co-sharer against others for contribution in respect of payment made under joint decree falls under Art. 41.

Where a co-sharer sues his other co-sharers for contribution in respect of the payment made by him under a decree passed against all the co-sharers, the suit falls under Art. 41 and is not therefore cognizable by Small Cause Courts : A I R 1918 All 167; A I R 1915 Cal 278 and A I R 1920 Cal 995, Disting.; A I R 1918 All 9, Not foll. [P 65 C 1]

(c) Practice—Revision—Incorrect view of law — High Court will interfere only when law is well-known.

It is the practice of the Nagpur High Court to interfere in revision against an incorrect view of the law only when the law is well-known. [P 65 C 2]

V. K. Rajwade — for Applicant.

W. B. Pendharkar — for Non-applicant No. 1.

Order.—The Judge, Small Cause Court, has held that the suit of the plaintiff-applicant as framed is not maintainable and also that it is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. The plaint was therefore returned for presentation to the proper Court. The suit as framed is one for contribution. Plaintiff and the two defendants had a decree against three persons, Yeshwant Tukaram, Narayan Tukaram and Pandhri Kashinath, transferred to them jointly, obtained substitution of their names as decree-holders and attached a motor car of the three judgment-debtors in execution. The purchaser of a share in that car, one Sukhdeo, put in an objection and then filed a regular suit which was finally decided in his favour in second appeal and the three decree-holders were ordered to pay all his costs. Plaintiff says that he alone paid costs to the extent of Rs. 209-15-0, and he claims equal contribution from the defendants. Now the view taken by the lower Court upholding the objections of the defendants is that a number of points would have to be decided before the plaintiff could get any decree, for instance, the amount of consideration paid by each party for the transfer deed of the decree and all the realizations and expenditure in the course of execution and in the litigation with Sukhdeo. Plaintiff, it is held, ought to have disclosed what realizations had been made by him before he could claim contribution, and secondly the transaction of the transfer of the decree is a partnership transaction and the suit is excluded from small cause jurisdiction by Art. 29, sub-cl. (b), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Plaintiff's learned counsel now contends that this decision is wrong in law. Plaintiff is entitled to frame the suit for contribution as he likes. The cause of action stated by him is complete. It is not necessary that previous transactions leading up to the contribution should be gone into. The suit is not one for accounts merely because accounts have to be to some extent gone into: 29 N L R 115.[1] The relationship between the plaintiff and the defendants is not of partnership; they are merely co-owners. On the other hand, the argument for the non-applicants is that the whole transaction is one, and the Court was right in saying that complete accounts have to be taken. At any rate, it will have to be found what share each party holds in the decree and that would raise the question of the amount contributed. Even if the parties are regarded as co-owners, justice could not be done to all parties except by taking an account and so the suit should not be disposed of in the Small Cause Court : 6 Cal 551.[2]

I agree that the plaintiff and the defendants are not properly described as partners, and the suit should not be treated as one for the taking of partnership accounts. I am also not prepared to say that because some accounting might have to be gone into the suit on that ground is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. However, it appears to me that Art. 41, Sch. 2 would be applicable. It has been held in a number of cases that when one co-sharer sues his other co-sharers for contribution the suit falls under this Article even though the payment was made under a decree. The other view is that in such a case the rights of the co-sharers merge into their rights and liabilities as co-judgment-debtors, and so Art. 41 does not apply. Cases in support of either view will be found at pp. 208, 209 and 211, Mitra's Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Edn. 7, Art. 41. Mitra seems to prefer the first view. The cases quoted are mostly unreported. There are two reported cases of the Allahabad High Court. 40 All 135[3] is distinguishable on the facts as there the brother who brought the suit was alone liable to make the payment under the terms of the decree and so the suit could not be treated as one for contribution. 41 All 51[4] is no doubt in point but the learned Judges who decided it give no grounds for their opinion. 18 C W N 1308[5] is similarly distinguishable on the facts. Plaintiff there denied his liability to contribute. In 62 I C 504[6] the parties were simply joint tortfeasors, but not co-sharers in the land — one being tenant and the other landlord. I think the present suit as brought is decidedly one for contribution based on the fact that the parties are sharers in the decree. Plaintiff refers to the 2/3 share and says that they are equally responsible for the payment of the amount. Their position as co-judgment-debtors liable for costs cannot therefore be divorced from their position as co-sharers which resulted in this liability.

I should hold that the decision is correct because Art. 41 applies. At any rate, it is the practice of this Court to interfere in revision against an incorrect view of the law only when the law is well known. Here no prejudice can be caused to the parties by a trial of their suit in a regular Court. I therefore dismiss the application with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

N.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

1. Radhakisen v. Motilal, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 82=147 I C 1103=29 N L R 115.
2. Ramtonu Acharjee v. Pearymohun Acharjee, (1881) 6 Cal 551=7 C L R 557.
3. Ant Ram v. Mithan Lal, (1918) 5 A I R All 167=45 I C 560=40 All 135=16 A L J 44.
4. Mahmud Ali v. Tamizunnissa Bibi, (1918) 5 A I R All 9=47 I C 842=41 All 51=16 A L J 787.
5. Satya Bhusan v. Krishna Kali, (1915) 2 A I R Cal 278=24 I C 259=20 C L J 196=18 C W N 1308.
6. Govinda Sunder Singh v. Mohesh Chandra Gope, (1920) 7 A I R Cal 995=62 I C 504.

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 65

NIYOGI J.

Anjuman Mufiddul Islam—Plaintiff— Appellant.

v.

Zal Rustomji Madan and others — Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 315 of 1936, Decided on 21st September 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 4th March 1936.

 Easement — Landowner granting right of easement over his land — Grant reserving right of revocation — Land subject to easement subsequently sold — Right to revoke easement reserved in the grant passes to purchaser — Right of easement can be enjoyed against the purchaser only to the extent of condition in grant.

The right of easement cannot be isolated from the land; so far as the dominant tenement is concerned, it is a privilege and as affecting the servient tenement it is an obligation. That privilege or obligation is never personal but is always attached to the land. When a right of easement originates in grant the extent and duration of the rights are determined by the terms of the grant. The assignment may be a grant in perpetuity or for a limited length of time with or without conditions. If any conditions are attached to the enjoyment of the right of easement the right to that extent becomes diminished or restricted. The conditions which clog the enjoyment of the right either in point of extent or duration can no more be dissociated from the land than the right of easement itself. When an owner of land parts with a portion of his right to enjoy his own land by creating an easement in favour of another he does not part with his interest in the property and if he makes any contract entitling him to revoke his grant that contract would be made in his capacity as the owner of the land and not merely in his personal capacity. Any reservation made by him while granting the right of easement is made for the beneficial enjoyment of his land. Consequently, the right which he reserves in his own favour would be a right in the land (not merely in respect of the land) and that right forms part of the totality of his rights which are compendiously known as ownership.

It must therefore follow that when the owner of a servient tenement disposes his right of ownership in the tenement the right reserved by him while granting the right of easement in respect of that tenement would also pass to the purchaser unless of course he had expressly excluded it out of the scope of the conveyance. The right of easement is to be exercised against the purchaser only to the extent and subject to the conditions imposed by the original grant. The dominant owner cannot improve his right by the mere fact that the servient tenement has been transferred and cannot be freed from the conditions imposed by the grant unless he was in some way released from them: Case law referred. [P 68 C 1, 2]

V. K. Rajwade — for Appellant.

N. V. Gadgil — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal from the concurring judgment of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, in Civil Appeal No. 35-A of 1935 decided on 4th March 1936. One Ahemadali Bohara, father of defendants 4 to 8 who are not parties to this appeal, sold his field No. 101, P. H. 2, area 13 acres 14 gunthas, at mouza Khamgaon, to the appellant by a registered conveyance executed on 12th May 1930. On 26th July 1929, Ahemadali had granted to Rustomji, the father of respondents 1 to 3, a right of passage across the abovementioned field for a consideration of Rs. 400. The registered document, by means of which the right had been granted, contained a clause whereby Ahemadali reserved to himself the right to revoke the grant in the event of his getting a vendee of the entire field within a period of five years. In the sale deed dated 12th May 1930, which Ahemadali executed in the appellant's favour there is no recital expressly assigning to the vendee the right to revoke the grant of the right of passage. The appellant however tendered the amount of Rs. 500 on 22nd April 1934 to the respondents and asked them to release the right of easement which they had acquired under the deed dated 26th July 1929. As they refused to accede to the appellant's demand they filed a suit out of which this appeal arises for specifically enforcing that agreement. They deposited Rs. 500 in Court.

Two issues arose out of the pleadings of the parties: (1) whether Ahemadali sold to the appellant the entire land which he owned at the time when he granted the right of way to Rustomji, and (2) whether the appellant acquired as a result of the conveyance in his favour dated 12th May 1930 the right to revoke the grant of the right of way. On both the issues, the two Courts have found against the appellant. The case has been argued at some length in this Court. The points which arise for determination are, (1) whether the right reserved by Ahemadali in the deed of assignment dated 26th July 1929 made in favour of Rustomji was a purely personal contract or one that was appurtenant to the land, (2) whether it was a right which was capable of being assigned to the appellant, and (3) whether it was in fact assigned. Before examining the authorities, it would be necessary to refer to the terms of the deed of assignment dated 26th July 1929, Ex. P-1 and the sale deed dated 12th May 1930, Ex. P-12. Ex. P-1 recites that the right of way as described there is granted to Rustomji and in para. 3 embodied the following stipulation :

If in five years from this date I get one purchaser of the entire field I will be entitled to take back the above right of way given to you by paying you Rs. 500. After five years you will become the full owner of the entire right in respect of the way from generation to generation as mentioned in para. 2 above.

In Ex. P-12 reference is made in para. 5 to the right of way already granted to Rustomji in these terms :

A way for passing to and fro has been given to Rustomji Yadalji Madan, Parsi, resident of Khamgaon, and the way has been given for taking the carts. So he has a right of way according to the deed executed in his favour in respect thereof.

The question is what was the nature of the right which Ahemadali reserved to himself in respect of the easement that he had granted to Rustomji. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that it was a covenant running with the land and that it was not a mere personal contract. It may be conceded that a right of easement is a right in rem as was pointed out by Lord Watson in (1881) 6 A C 740[1]:

In one sense every easement may be regarded as a right of property in the owner of the dominant tenement, not a full or absolute right but a limited right or interest in the land which belongs to another, whose plenum dominium is diminished to the extent to which his estate is affected by the easement.

That means that the person in whose favour easement is granted is entitled to exercise certain rights on the land belonging to another by virtue of his being the owner or occupier of a certain building or land; but that does not serve to explain the nature of the right reserved by the grantor. Can it be said that the right of revocation which the grantor had reserved was for his own benefit and not for the benefit of the land to which the right of way so granted was appurtenant. On this crucial point the authorities cited in the course of the argument presented in this Court do not lend any direct assistance. All the decisions referred to here relate to cases of re-conveyance which though they do not bear directly on the point serve by analogy to throw light on the principle. In A I R 1927 Cal 41[2] a proprietor of the land created a putni lease and it was provided that if the proprietor required certain of the lands leased out these would be reconveyed or assigned to him by the putnidar so that the lands in the hands of the putnidar were subject to that obligation. The putnidar in his turn leased out the lands with the same condition about reconveyance as in the putni lease. The successor in interest of the proprietor wanted back some of the lands for the purpose of a market and a college and he sued the lessees for a reconveyance of the lands which he required. It was held that the reservation of the right in favour of the proprietor was not a covenant running with the land, as it was a positive covenant and not restrictive of the user of the lands. In that view it followed a decision of the Judicial Committee in 6 Pat L J 163.[3]

In 49 Mad 387[4] the vendee, on the same day on which a sale deed of certain lands was executed in his favour, agreed, by a document, to convey the same to the vendor on the latter wishing to have them on his paying the specified price, in a certain month of the 30th year from the date of the agreement. The vendor having died, his son assigned the rights under the document to a stranger who tendered the full amount to the vendee within the agreed time. On the latter refusing to execute a conveyance, the assignee sued the vendee for specific performance of the agreement; the latter pleaded that his undertaking was not a contract but only a standing offer and was not assignable. It was held that the undertaking by the vendee was an executory contract giving a right to the vendor to get the conveyance from the vendee and was assignable by the vendor. Spencer J., referred to S. 23 (b), Specific Relief Act and held that there was no personal element in that transaction which would make the contract incapable of being specifically enforced under Sec. 21 (b), Specific Relief Act. Ramesam J. adverted to S. 54, T. P. Act and expressed his opinion that even as a right ex contractu it was assignable and that it did not create any interest in the land. That case went up to the Privy Council and the decision of the Madras High Court was affirmed on the ground that the option reserved by the vendor was a contract which was assignable and that it was enforceable by the assignee of the vendor against the purchaser.

In A I R 1930 All 101,[5] it was held that a right to repurchase reserved by the vendor was not a right which was appurtenant to the land but was only a personal right and that it was not assignable. In 35 Bom 258[6] the same view was taken. In 42 Bom

1. Dalton v. Angus, (1881) 6 A C 740=50 L J Q B 689=44 L T 844=30 W R 196.
2. Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Asaba Khatun, (1927) 14 A I R Cal 41=98 I C 46=44 C L J 220.
3. Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Bal Chand, (1922) 9 A I R P C 165=61 I C 702 = 48 I A 376= 6 Pat L J 163 (P C).
4. Munuswami Nayudu v. Sagalaguna Nayudu, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 699 = 100 I C 339=49 Mad 337=51 M L J 229.
5. Gobardhan v. Raghubir Singh, (1930) 17 A I R All 101=124 I C 405=1930 A L J 799.
6. Gurunath Balaji v. Yamanava Nalarao, (1911) 35 Bom 258=10 I C 814=13 Bom L R 240.

344[7] it was held on the construction of the terms of the agreement that the vendor and his descendants alone had the privilege of re-purchasing of the land on the conditions stipulated between the parties and the assignee outside the family could not enforce the contract specifically. In A I R 1934 Bom 171[8] Shingne J., on examination of the previous authorities deduced the conclusion that where a person sells his land or house to another person and the latter enters into a contract to convey the property back to the vendor or his heirs, the right to obtain a reconveyance from the vendee or his heirs is ordinarily assignable even to a stranger who can enforce it by a suit, but that where the intention of the parties is that the vendor or his heirs alone should be given the right of re-purchasing the property, the assignee outside the family cannot enforce the contract specifically. Thus, it appears from the authorities reviewed above that there is no hard and fast rule as to the option of repurchase being invariably a personal right. If it is a completed contract, the contract is assignable unless the terms of the agreement indicate that the agreement was founded on certain personal considerations between the parties.

There appears to me material difference between a case of option to repurchase and a case such as the present. The right of easement is never enjoyed in gross but always as appurtenant to land. When an owner of a land grants in favour of owner or occupier of any land or building a right of way over his own land he parts with a right which is incidental to his ownership of the land. The right of easement cannot be isolated from the land; so far as the dominant tenement is concerned, it is a privilege and as affecting the servient tenement it is an obligation. That privilege or obligation is never personal but always attached to the land. Now when a right of easement originates in grant the extent and duration of the rights are determined by the terms of the grant. The assignment may be a grant in perpetuity or for a limited length of time with or without conditions. If any conditions are attached to the enjoyment of the right of easement the right to that extent becomes diminished or restricted. The conditions which clog the enjoyment of the right either in point of extent or duration can no more be dissociated from the land than the right of easement itself. That being the nature of the right of easement it must differ from the nature of the rights and interests which are conveyed by a sale. When a man sells his land outright he ceases to have any interest in the land and when he sells with the reservation of the option of repurchase he reserves to himself by virtue of a contract with the purchaser a personal right which being of a contractual nature is assignable. When however an owner of land parts with a portion of his right to enjoy his own land by creating an easement in favour of another he does not part with his interest in the property and if he makes any contract entitling him to revoke his grant that contract would be made in his capacity as the owner of the land and not merely in his personal capacity. Any reservation made by him while granting the right of easement is made for the beneficial enjoyment of his land. Consequently the right which he reserves in his own favour would be a right in the land (not merely in respect of the land) and that right forms part of the totality of his rights which are compendiously known as ownership.

It must therefore follow that when the owner of a servient tenement disposes of his right of ownership in that tenement the right reserved by him while granting the right of easement in respect of that tenement would also pass to the purchaser unless of course he had expressly excluded it out of the scope of the conveyance. In para. 5 of the sale deed dated 15th May 1930 the vendor Ahemadali merely indicates that a right of way had been granted by him by a deed but does not expressly say that the right was unconditional. The fact that he refers to the right as a right of way according to the deed would indicate that it was such right as was clogged with the conditions specified in the deed. The right of way was to be exercised against the purchaser and it could only be exercised to the extent and subject to the conditions imposed by the original grant. The dominant owner could not improve his right by the mere fact that the servient tenement had been transferred and cannot be freed from the conditions imposed by the grant unless he was in some way released from them. It therefore appears to me that the right reserved by Ahemadali to revoke the grant within five years was of the nature of a covenant running with the land and that it must be deemed to have been assigned to the purchaser along with the right of ownership.

7. Vithoba Madhav v. Madhav Damodar, (1918) 5 A I R Bom 158=46 I C 734=42 Bom 344=20 Bom L R 654.

8. Harkisandas v. Bai Dhanee, (1934) 21 A I R Bom 171=151 I C 536=36 Bom L R 290.

The right of revocation which Ahemadali reserved to himself when he granted the easement was one capable of assignment. It is urged that he did not assign it to the appellant in the conveyance executed in his favour for the reason that he excluded the piece of land over which he had granted the right of way from the land conveyed. This contention is no doubt countenanced by the words used in the sale deed dated 12th May 1930, viz. "After excluding the sites as mentioned in paras. 1 to 6, the remaining site has been sold to you", but they have to be read in conjunction with the recital which follows: "The entire site within the said boundaries has been sold to you along with stones, etc." The land in dispute falls within these boundaries and as the vendor had no use left for this strip of land after he transferred the entire land, it cannot reasonably be assumed that he intended to reserve his ownership of it. On the other hand, the reference to the right of easement which he had granted already in para. 5 of the sale deed as a "right of way according to the deed" indicates that the vendor gave notice to his vendees of the restricted nature of the easement. It is true that the vendor did not expressly assign the right of revocation. But as I have held that the right was attached to the land, it must be deemed to have passed to the vendees. The lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and the appellant's suit is decreed in terms of para. 10 of the plaint providing a month's time, with costs. Pleader's fees Rs. 30.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 69

STONE C. J.

Nathuram — Appellant.

v.

Kalu and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 119 of 1934, Decided on 18th August 1936, from appellate decree of District Judge, Nimar, D/- 2nd January 1934.

Easements Act (1882), S. 15—Law presumes that user is as of right if it is proved that user was open and notorious.

A plaintiff has to establish user for the statutory period. He has to establish that the user is as of right, but the law presumes that it is as of right, that is to say that it has a lawful origin, if the plaintiff proves open and notorious user. That presumption however is rebuttable and the defendant may show, if he can, that the facts are such that the user was not as of right, e. g. he can show that the user was under license not amounting to a grant, or he can show fraud in the sense it is used in relation to this subject or he can show force, or he can show secrecy. These latter would go to destroy the effectiveness of the user; the former would go to show that it was not as of right: Case law relied on. [P 71 C 1]

S. B. Gokhale — for Appellant.

R. Kaushalendra Rao—for Respondents.

Judgment. — Counsel for the appellant has in my opinion said everything that could possibly have been said in support of this appeal which nevertheless fails. It is urged that according to the Easements Act it is not sufficient to show user to establish a right of easement, but it is necessary to show, in the words of Sec. 15, that a right of way or other easement has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by the person claiming title thereto as an easement and "as of right" without interruption and for 20 years. It is said that that is stressed in para. 2 of the plaint and that it is necessary for a person alleging user "as of right" to lay the foundation of fact by alleging the facts on which the legal conclusion is to be based that it was as of right. That has not been done in this case and the learned Appellate Judge has made no findings as to it. It is quite true (and I wish it were better appreciated in these Provinces) that the purpose of a pleading is to allege facts. It is also true that it is not necessary to allege law. It is true again that if the allegations of fact made by one side are embarrassing as being too vague, it is the duty of the other side to ask for further particulars and if the other side goes into Court without knowing what case is going to be made against him, that is his mistake. But here, in my opinion, if there be a defective pleading at all, it is one that had no substance in the course of the trial. The material issue raised was:

> Whether the plaintiffs have acquired the right of easement to flow their nistar and rain water through the drain at X as shown in the map over the defendant's land as shown in the map.

I understand "nistar" in this connexion to mean that water which, if it remained, would be contrary to good management. On that issue the contest raged as to along what channel the water which went from the plaintiff's land flowed : Did it go along the line the defendant said ? Did it go along the line the plaintiffs said ? Both Judges have concurred in taking the view that it went along the line the plaintiffs said. That question of fact once having been established, nobody seems to have imagined that there could be any other conclusion but that the answer to Issue 1 was in the affirmative. Now however I am pressed with 56 Cal 927[1] at p. 930 where a Bench of the Calcutta High Court observe :

The contention of Mr. Mukherji that the finding of the lower Appellate Court, that there had been user for a very long time, was sufficient for an easement by prescription is untenable on another ground. For the creation of a right of easement by prescription, there must not only be a peaceable and open enjoyment without interruption for 20 years, but that enjoyment must be an enjoyment as of right. In the present case, there is no finding that the enjoyment was of that character. It was contended on behalf of the Pal defendants that long user was sufficient for a finding of an enjoyment as of right. This is a proposition of law to which I am unable to accede. Whether an enjoyment is as of right or not is, in my opinion, a pure question of fact, and enjoyment as of right cannot be inferred as a matter of course from a finding of user only.

It is pointed out however that the proposition abovementioned was obiter as in that case there was no peaceful enjoyment for 20 years. The question as to what precise meaning is to be given to the words "as of right" has agitated the Courts both in England and in India. Perhaps the fullest consideration of these words is to be found in the judgment in 43 R R 358[2] at p. 362 where Lord Denman examined the various possible alternatives. He has been considering the various possibilities and rejecting a variety. His conclusion is as follows :

It seems therefore that the 'enjoyment as of right' must mean an enjoyment had, not secretly or by stealth, or by tacit sufferance, or by permission asked from time to time, on each occasion or even on many occasions of using it ; but an enjoyment had openly, notoriously, without particular leave at the time, by a person claiming to use it without danger of being treated as a trespasser, as a matter of right, whether strictly legal by prescription and adverse user or by deed conferring the right, or though not strictly legal, yet lawful to the extent of excusing a trespass, as by a consent or agreement in writing not under seal, in case of a plea for forty years, or by such writing or parol consent or agreement, contract or license, in case of a plea for twenty years.

In (1880) 12 Ch D 261[3] at p. 265 Fry J. (as he then was) observes :

Where there has been a long enjoyment of property in a particular manner it is the habit, and, in my view, the duty of the Court, so far as it lawfully can, to clothe the fact with right.

In 23 W R 52[4] Markby J. considers the difference between the English and the Indian Acts. He observes :

The Moonsif seems to think that the words 'as of right' in S. 27 of that Act, mean user without trespass. I think those words do not mean that, and that they mean user in the assertion of a right. There is ground, no doubt, for the Moonsif's opinion in the view that has been taken of the same words under the English Prescription Act, but after much consideration I think that the words in the Indian Act mean what I have above stated. If the observations of Lord Wensleydale in the judgment in (1834) 1 Cr M & R 211[5] at p. 219 be compared with the observations of the same learned Judge in (1840) 11 A & E 688[6] at page 693 it will be seen what were the difficulties which arose upon that interpretation of those words in English Act. I think we ought to do our utmost to prevent the introduction of those difficulties here. And giving to the words "as of right" what I consider to be their true meaning, and also their accustomed meaning (for they are a well known legal expression) I think they signify no more than (as I have said) that the enjoyment must be by a person in the assertion of a right.

In 38 Mad 1[7] at page 3 it is observed :

The enjoyment is required to possess two properties, viz. that it must be as of right without interruption and it must be as an easement. The first quality is intended to show that enjoyment by license or under a contract which would not amount to a grant of an easement, would be ineffectual to create a right by prescription.

In 45 Mad 633[8] it was held that there is a presumption that the user was of right where long user is proved. The same view was taken in A I R 1926 Lah 522[9] where it was decided that an open user continued without interruption for a long time and not shown to be attributable to any

1. Siti Kanta Pal v. Radha Govinda Sen, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 542=119 I C 293=56 Cal 927=33 C W N 517.
2. Tickle v. Brown, (1836) 4 A & E 369 = 6 N & M 230=1 H & W 769=5 L J (N S) K B 119=43 R R 358.
3. Moody v. Steggles, (1880) 12 Ch D 261 = 48 L J Ch 639=41 L T 25.
4. Alimooddeen v. Wazeer Ali, (1875) 23 W R 52.
5. Bright v. Walker, (1834) 1 Cr M & R 211=4 Tyr 502=3 L J (N S) Ex 250=40 R R 536.
6. Flight v. Thomas, (1840) 11 A & E 688=3 P & D 442=52 R R 468.
7. Konda v. Ramaswami, (1916) 3 A I R Mad 718=17 I C 112=38 Mad 1.
8. Kunjammal v. Rathnam Pillai, (1922) 9 A I R Mad 5=66 I C 11=45 Mad 633=42 M L J 417.
9. Piare Lal v. Ishaq Lal, (1926) 13 A I R Lah 522=95 I C 269.

permission on the owner's part is prima facie evidence of enjoyment as of right, and the presumption is that the user is as of right. So also in A I R 1926 Pat 460[10] it was held that the plaintiff claiming a right of way must prove enjoyment for the statutory period, and that he has done so as of right. The view expressed by Banerji J. in 8 C W N 359[11] which is not dissimilar to that expressed in 56 Cal 927[1] was not followed for although the learned Judges agreed with the citation they made, they observed that that learned and distinguished Judge proceeded to say that although no case of permissive user may be set up by the defendant, still it is for the plaintiff to establish that the user has been of right. The question is really one of fact and in my opinion it is not possible, to the extent to which Banerji J. did go in that case. The rule is well established in England that a party enjoying an easement acted under a claim of right until the contrary is shown : see Gale on Easements, Edn. 10, p. 227. Now the rule under what circumstances an easement can be acquired is the same in England as here. In order to establish a right of way in England it must be proved that the claimant has enjoyed it for the full period of 20 years and that he has done so as of right; but if it should be the case of the defendant that the enjoyment was by violence or by stealth or by leave asked from time to time, it is for the defendant to allege that case and establish that case. In A I R 1934 Pat 11[12] it was held that where there is evidence of long enjoyment in a particular way, it is the habit and duty of the Court, so far as it lawfully can, to clothe the fact with right.

That directly follows the above citation from the judgment of Fry J. in the well-known case in (1880) 12 Ch D 261.[3] Bearing in mind the above cases, it appears to me that the following represents the law in India. A plaintiff has to establish user for the statutory period. He has to establish that the user is as of right, but the law presumes that it is as of right, that is to say that it has a lawful origin, if the plaintiff proves open and notorious user. That presumption however is rebuttable and the defendant may show, if he can, that the facts are such that the user was not as of right, e. g. he can show that the user was under license not amounting to a grant, or he can show fraud in the sense it is used in relation to this subject, or he can show force, or he can show secrecy. These latter would go to destroy the effectiveness of the user; the former would go to show that it was not as of right. In the old case in (1803) 3 East 294[13] it was held that where there was no evidence to show that the way over another's land had been used by permission such user over 20 years exercised adversely and under a claim of right was sufficient to enable the jury to raise the presumption of a grant. In 4 M L W 128,[14] Sir John Wallis, the then Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, observed in a passage quoted in 45 Mad 633[8] :

On the other hand the user of the plaintiffs may be presumed to be as of right and to have a lawful origin, and if a lawful origin of the plaintiff's right can be suggested such an origin can be presumed.

In my opinion, therefore, on the facts here found it follows that as a matter of law the presumption applies that there was not merely a user for the requisite period, but a user as of right. I arrive at that conclusion while respectfully agreeing with the remarks of Markby J. in 23 W R 52[4] whose conclusion as to the meaning of the term "as of right" I prefer to that part in 43 R R 358[2] which appears to suggest that for the person to be using as of right, he must be using in some capacity that removes him from the danger of being treated as a trespasser. I find it difficult to see how during the period before the statutory period has expired any person using a way over another's land or exercising an easement over another's land without any grant could be free from the danger of being treated as a trespasser. The attitude of the law, as I apprehend it, is to raise after a certain period, that is to say the period prescribed in the Limitation Act, an irrebuttable presumption that the person exercising the easement for that period has been granted a right. But, until that period has come to an end, there is no such presumption, and in the great majority of cases it would be open to the owner of the servient tenement, in the absence of the statutory presumption, to show that there was no such grant and to show in effect that the acts of the person claiming a dominance amounted to a trespass. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

10. Nazir Husain v. Aulad Haider, (1926) 13 A I R Pat 460=96 I C 1010.
11. Shaikh Khoda Buksha v. Shaikh Tajuddin, (1904) 8 C W N 359.
12. Radha Kishun v. Sunder Mal, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 11=148 I C 215.
13. Campbell v. Wilson, (1803) 3 East 294=7 R R 462.
14. Saminatha Mudaly v. Velu Mudaly, (1917) 4 A I R Mad 386=35 I C 749=4 M L W 128.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 72

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Maroti Laxman Koshti and others—Defendants—Appellants.

v.

Jagannathdas Lachhmandas Gadewal and another — Plaintiffs — Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 5 of 1936, Decided on 19th September 1938, from Judgment of Vivian Bose J. in S. A. No. 264 of 1934, Decided on 10th July 1936.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 43—Right of party concluded by previous judgment can be proved by production of the judgment.

A judgment is not admissible to prove the truth of the fact which it states, much less is any fact, stated as part of the reasoning in arriving at the fact in issue, evidence of the truth of that fact. Where, however, the right of a party has already been concluded by a previous judgment, the fact can be proved by production of the judgment since in such circumstances the existence of the judgment itself is relevant : Case law discussed.

[P 74 C 2]

A. R. Kulkarni — for Appellants.

R. N. Padhye — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the judgment of Bose J. dated 10th July 1936 in Second Appeal No. 264 of 1934 in which he upheld the lower Appellate Court's judgment which itself upheld the trial Court's judgment giving the plaintiffs a decree for possession of a piece of land. The plaintiffs claim title to this land under a sale deed dated 22nd May 1931 from one Premdas. The defendants deny the plaintiffs' title and claim title themselves by adverse possession. Admittedly the defendants are in possession of the land since 15th November 1933 if not earlier and therefore the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove their title. They admitted that the land originally belonged to the defendants' family, but they alleged that the defendants lost the land in 1901 when it was sold by court auction in Civil Suit No. 1210 of 1900 to Maroti Ramchandra who held a decree against defendant 1 and his brother Suknia. Defendant 1 is the father of the other defendants before us. This link in the plaintiffs' title is now concluded by concurrent findings of the Courts below. It is the next link which forms the crux of this appeal as also of the appeal before Bose J. The plaintiffs say that Maroti Ramchandra and one Sitaram formed a joint Hindu family and that there was a partition in the family as a result of which this piece of land was allotted to the share of Sitaram. Subsequent links in the chain from Sitaram to the plaintiffs are not now in dispute. The difficulty in connexion with Sitaram's title is because the evidence of it consists of two judgments in a case to which the defendants-appellants were not parties. These judgments originated as follows. Two persons, Baktawarchand and Jagannathdas, had obtained decrees against this same Sitaram and attached this piece of land. Sitaram's brothers and father unsuccessfully objected to the attachment and therefore they brought Civil Suit No. 135 of 1928 against Baktawarchand, Jagannathdas and Sitaram for a declaration of their title to the land. Ex. P-7 is the judgment in the lower Court in the suit and Ex. P-8 is the judgment of the Appellate Court. Both Courts dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that Sitaram held possession by virtue of a partition. If these judgments can be used as evidence of the exclusive title of Sitaram to the property, then the appeal must fail. In the trial Court the admissibility of these judgments as evidence of a partition appears to have been taken as a matter of course. It was only in the lower Appellate Court for the first time that this point of law was taken and decided against the defendants. It has now become the important point of law which has been held to justify permission being granted to file a Letters Patent appeal. The law relating to the admissibility of judgments in evidence is to be found in Ss. 40 to 43, Evidence Act ; of these Sections only S. 43 is to the point:

43. Judgments, orders or decrees, other than those mentioned in Ss. 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree is a fact in issue, or is relevant under some other provision of this Act.

The respondents claim that the other provision of the Act which makes these judgments relevant under S. 43 is S. 13 of the same Act :

13. Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant :

(a) any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, asserted or denied, or which was inconsistent with its existence ;

(b) particular instances in which the right or custom was claimed, recognized or exercised, or in which its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from.

The appellants rely on 6 Cal 171,[1] 16 Pat 258,[2] 58 Cal 1187[3] and 26 N L R 33.[4] 6 Cal 171,[1] if it were still good law, would appear to support the appellants' contention. It was followed by another Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 13 Cal 352.[5] That view has however been modified by 22 Cal 533.[6] The Privy Council decision shows that in certain circumstances a previous judgment may be admissible. That the view held in 6 Cal 171[1] and 13 Cal 352[5] has been modified by the Privy Council decision is admitted by a later Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court itself in 25 Cal 522.[7] Of the cases cited by the appellants the most difficult for us to get over, if we are to support the judgment of Bose J., is 26 N L R 33,[4] a Full Bench ruling of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, because of the wide terms in which the reference was made and answered. The question referred therein was:

> A judgment was not in rem, nor relating to matters of public nature, nor between the parties to a subsequent suit. Is the fact that the Court by that judgment decided a point in a particular way relevant for the purpose of the decision of the same point in a subsequent suit ?

and the unanimous decision of the Bench was that the question should be answered in the negative. If that decision is taken at its face value, it would necessitate our deciding the point now before us in the appellants' favour. It seems to us however that the question was referred in terms which were wider than was necessary for the decision of the question then before the Court. Pro tanto the decision is obiter. From the reasoning of Macnair O. J. C. given at p. 36 it seems clear that all that the Judges intended to decide therein was that the previous judgment was not evidence of the truth of the facts which it decided. This passage was as follows:

> Again it is surely a fundamental principle of law that the opinion of any person however eminent regarding the validity of a claim is irrelevant for the purpose of a decision whether or not that claim is valid. A judgment is a judicial opinion rendered on the claims of the parties. The fact that the case has been heard and finally decided may render the question res judicata in a subsequent suit : but if it does not, surely this fundamental principle must apply.

In 24 Bom 591[8] it is laid down that judgments are admissible in evidence to show the conduct of the parties or particular instances of the exercise of a right or admissions made by ancestors or to show how the property was dealt with previously. The case before us falls into the last mentioned category. In 12 All 1[9] Straight J. pointed out at p. 25 that although S. 43, Evidence Act, declared judgments, orders and decrees other than those mentioned in Ss. 40, 41 and 42 irrelevant, qua judgments, orders and decrees, it did not make them absolutely inadmissible when they were the best evidence of something that might be proved aliunde. That case went up to the Privy Council in 15 All 261[10] and their Lordships did not say anything to suggest that the opinion of the Full Bench as to the admissibility of previous judgments in the circumstances of that case was wrong. Here the fact that there had been a partition could probably have been proved aliunde, but the respondents preferred to put in the judgments as the best evidence and we think that they were right. In 15 Mad 12[11] in a suit to establish the plaintiff's title to certain land, he put in evidence (1) a conveyance in favour of his father, (2) a sale certificate issued to his father's vendor, (3) an order made in certain execution proceedings in which was recited a petition by his father asserting his title, (4) a judgment obtained by his father in which his title was recognized. Neither the defendants nor their predecessors were parties to any of these instruments or proceedings: it was held that all these documents were relevant.

The other two cases cited by the appellants were the Privy Council cases in

1. Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall, (1881) 6 Cal 171=6 C L R 439.
2. Kesho Prasad Singh v. Mt. Bhagjogna Kuer, (1937) 24 A I R P C 69=167 I C 329=16 Pat 258=31 S L R 242 (P C).
3. Gobindanarayan Singh v. Shyamlal Singh, (1931) 18 A I R P C 89=131 I C 753=58 Cal 1187=58 I A 125 (P C).
4. Shankar v. Kesheo, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 1 = 121 I C 644=26 N L R 33 (F B).
5. Surender Nath Pal v. Brojo Nath Pal, (1886) 13 Cal 352 (F B).
6. Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh, (1895) 22 Cal 533=22 I A 60 = 6 Sar 530 (P C).
7. Pepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das, (1898) 25 Cal 522=2 C W N 501.
8. Lakshman v. Amrit, (1900) 24 Bom 591=2 Bom L R 386.
9. Collector of Gorakhpur v. Palakhdhari Singh, (1890) 12 All 1 (F B).
10. Palakdhari Singh v. Collector of Gorakhpur, (1883) 15 All 261=6 Sar 378 (P C).
11. Venkatasami v. Venkatreddi, (1892) 15 Mad 12.

16 Pat 258[2] and 58 Cal 1187.[3] 16 Pat 258[2] was a case in which the question was as to whether certain land formed part of Naubarar or Gangbarar. The owner of Naubarar had previously brought a suit against a large number of cosharers of Gangabarar claiming a tract of land as belonging to Naubarar. His opponents in the later suit were not parties to the earlier suit. A map was drawn in the earlier suit showing the boundaries between Naubarar and Gangbarar and the decree was based on that map. In the subsequent suit the trial Court, relying on the map and decree in the previous suit, held that the land was in Naubarar. The Second Appellate Court however held that the owner of Naubarar had not proved his title. Before the Privy Council it was argued for the owner of Naubarar that the decree in the previous suit and the map though not binding on his opponents were evidence against them under Ss. 11 and 13, Evidence Act. Their Lordships said that it was an accepted principle of English law that a judgment (or decree) is not admissible in evidence against a stranger to a suit of the truth of the matter decided but that there were exceptions and that the same rule applied in India. They held that the previous judgment in the case before them together with the plaint were evidence of an assertion of a title by the owner of Naubarar and thus were admissible in evidence of the right. But the fact that a person not now in possession had previously claimed title was not serious evidence of his right especially since there was no lack of assertion on the other side also. That case therefore does not carry us any further.

In 58 Cal 1187[3] the question for decision was as to the coal-mining rights of the village named Dendua which formed part of the Achra estate which was itself part of the Pandra zamindari. The plaintiffs were the zamindars and the defendants the Thakurs of the Achra estate. As subsoil rights are assumed to be with the zamindar, any other claimant must prove the express inclusion of such rights in a grant from the zamindar to him. If nothing were proved except that the Achra estate formed part of the Pandra zamindari and had been held by a branch of the Pandra family subject to the annual payment to the zamindar, it would have to be held that the subsoil rights were with the zamindar. How the Achra estate originated was not known. The Thakurs said that they had come into it through a partition in the zamindari family. If that partition were proved, it would have to be held that the subsoil rights passed in the partition. The only way in which the Thakurs tried to prove the partition was by proceedings in a suit filed in 1793, to which the Thakurs were not parties, when the zamindar's nephews had claimed partition successfully, half of the zamindari going to each branch represented by the appellants before their Lordships. In order to prove that the estate was partible in the previous suit the Achra estate was mentioned as an instance where partition had taken place and the Court, as part of its reasoning for holding the estate to be partible, said that the Achra estate had come to the Thakurs by partition. That judgment was sought to be used as evidence of the partition of the Achra estate. Their Lordships said that this could not be done and that a judgment was only admissible under Ss. 13 and 43 to prove the particular transaction in which the partibility of the Pandra estate was asserted and recognized, namely the partition in the 1793 suit. This pronouncement supports the contention of the respondents in the case before us. As their Lordships stated in that case, the reasons upon which a judgment is founded are no part of the transaction and it was therefore no evidence that the Thakurs got Achra by partition. It is at most evidence that they might have done so which is not enough.

Accordingly, the conclusion to be reached from the case law on the subject would seem to be that a judgment is certainly not admissible to prove the truth of the fact which it states, much less is any fact, stated as part of the reasoning in arriving at the fact in issue, evidence of the truth of that fact. Where however as here, the right of a party has already been concluded by a previous judgment, that fact can be proved by production of the judgment since in these circumstances the existence of the judgment itself is relevant. In the present case if Sitaram's father and brothers were to allege in a suit that they still had a share in the property the judgments (Exs. P-7 and P-8) would be relevant against them. If they cannot now set up a title for themselves, it should be clear that third persons like the appellants cannot set up a case for them. We therefore hold that in the circumstances of this case the judgments in question are admissible in evidence, and, that being so, the appeal was rightly decided by Bose J.

In the event of our finding, as we have done, that the judgments in question are admissible we have been invited to remand the case to the lower Court for consideration of the judgments alongside of the oral evidence on the subject of the partition. In the circumstances of this case we see no necessity for taking up further time in remanding the case. The oral evidence consists of one witness for the plaintiffs and three for the defendants. The plaintiffs' witness is Tukaram, the brother of Sitaram, on whom the appellants particularly rely. It is true that he, like the defendants' witnesses, Madhorao (D. W. 1), Soma (D. W. 2) and Govinda (D. W. 3), have said that there was no partition. Tukaram was himself one of the contesting parties in the litigation, of which Exs. P-7 and P-8 are the judgments, and in that case he took up the position that there had been no partition. It is only natural that in this Court in the present case he would say the same thing. He is therefore highly interested in denying the partition and very little value can be given to his testimony. As regards the three defence witnesses, their testimony also will not carry much weight in the face of the judgments themselves, Exs. P-7 and P-8. We think therefore that it would be waste of time to remand the case for consideration of the oral evidence. Another argument was addressed before us, although somewhat half-heartedly, that another link in the plaintiffs' title should be held unsound, namely the alleged oral sale by Pandu in favour of Maroti Ramchandra. It is argued that the value of the property being over Rs. 100 no transfer can orally be made, a registered document being necessary to effect it. This argument has no force in view of the finding that there was no oral sale but that Pandu purchased benami for Maroti Ramchandra. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 75

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Mahadeo Nilkanth Patil — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Janardan Harbaji and another — Plaintiffs — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 403 of 1935, Decided on 7th April 1938, from appellate decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 23rd April 1935.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 192 — Suit for village profits — Lambardar or mukaddam can claim remuneration for services even for period preceding its fixation under S. 192.

In a suit for village profits, a lambardar or mukaddam is entitled to claim, whether as a plaintiff or as a defendant, remuneration for his services for such years prior to the year in which his remuneration has been fixed by the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of S. 192, Land Revenue Act, as are within the period of limitation : A I R 1937 Nag 411, Approved ; Case law discussed. [P 78 C 2]

V. V. Kelkar and B. R. Mandlekar — for Appellant.

M. D. Khandekar — for Respondents.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Grille J. — This second appeal by the defendant arises out of a suit for the share of village profits filed by the plaintiffs, two brothers, who are eight annas share-holders, against the lambardar, the remaining eight annas share-holder. The lambardar presented a statement of accounts, and several items were disputed. There was an appeal and a cross-objection in the lower Appellate Court, and there is an appeal and cross-objection here. The appeal and the cross-objection cover all the items in dispute, but in the cross-objection the only point that was pressed, and that half-heartedly, is the contention that the lambardar was not entitled to deduct Rs. 18 per annum on account of rent unrecovered on a share of sir land which had since become occupancy land of exproprietary tenant. This was but faintly pressed. The only point actually taken in the appeal was that the concurrent finding of both Courts below that the lambardar was not entitled to charge for lambardar and mukaddam dues is incorrect.

The remunerations of the lambardar and the mukaddam in this village were fixed by the Deputy Commissioner in the year

1934. The suit was for profits of years previous to this, and following the Divisional Bench decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 22 N L R 37,[1] both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that the defendant is not entitled to charge these sums, which have been determined by the Deputy Commissioner, in respect of the years previous to the year in which they were fixed. In second appeal Mr. Mandlekar has drawn my attention to a recent decision of Niyogi J. in A I R 1937 Nag 411[2] in which it is laid down that a mukaddam is entitled to recover his remuneration for a period prior to the order of the Deputy Commissioner fixing his remuneration under S. 192, Land Revenue Act. It is true that this case deals with the remuneration of a mukaddam, and 22 N L R 37[1] has been followed in 27 N L R 262[3] and also by Kinkhede A. J. C. in A I R 1928 Nag 68,[4] where the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner held that, as a lambardar is precluded from recovering by a suit his remuneration for services in that post unless fixed by a Revenue Officer so he is similarly precluded from retaining to himself a portion of the village income for that purpose by way of defence in a suit for village profits, which deals with the remuneration of a lambardar; but the law is the same for both. The point is one of considerable importance and one which will frequently arise. The decision of the Bench of Judicial Commissioner's Court which has been followed is now doubted in the recent decision which has not so far been published in the authorized reports, and I consider it desirable that the question should be determined by a Divisional Bench of this Court. I therefore forward the case to my Lord the Chief Justice with a view to forming a Bench to decide the following question:

In a suit for village profits, is a lambardar or mukaddam entitled to claim, either as a plaintiff or a defendant, remuneration for his services for years prior to the year in which his remuneration has been fixed by the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of S. 192, Land Revenue Act?

1. Anandrao v. Daulat, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 274 = 92 I C 909 = 22 N L R 37.
2. Shankar Rao Sadasheo v. Madho Narayanrao, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 411 = 173 I C 7.
3. Kesho v. Raoji, (1931) 18 A I R Nag 120 = 134 I C 264 = 27 N L R 262.
4. Harprasad v. Chhadami, (1928) 15 A I R Nag 68 = 105 I C 567.

OPINION

Stone C. J. and Bose J.—In this reference the following question is raised at page 28-C of the paper-book:

In a suit for village profits, is a lambardar or mukaddam entitled to claim, either as a plaintiff or a defendant, remuneration for his services for years prior to the year in which his remuneration has been fixed by the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of S. 192, Land Revenue Act?

The facts are that a suit has been brought for village profits and by way of defence the lambardar claims to be allowed his remuneration for his services. The remuneration for those services has been fixed by the Revenue Officer but was so fixed after the date of the written statement. The claim for village profits does not exceed a period of three years before the date of the written statement. The learned referring Judge felt some difficulty owing to the various cases that were considered or decided in regard to this matter, but, in our opinion, there is no case which is in conflict with the latest decision reported in A I R 1937 Nag 411.[2] The position will be clarified by stating what the decisions are. The first case in point is A I R 1923 Nag 164.[5] In that case Hallifax A. J. C. held that if S. 192, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, does not entitle a lambardar to get 5 per cent. of the revenue payable as costs of collection in the absence of any order by the Deputy Commissioner, he is entitled to get it on general principles of equity or under S. 70, Contract Act. In 20 N L R 142[6] Kinkhede A. J. C. decided that although S. 192 (1), Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, conferred exclusive jurisdiction on a Revenue Officer to fix the remuneration payable to a lambardar, it did not make such a fixing a condition precedent to his maintaining a suit for its recovery in a Civil Court. Accordingly, a lambardar who before the commencement of the Act had acted as lambardar and was receiving the lambardari dues, has a right to continue to receive those dues which right is expressly prescribed by S. 229 of the Act of 1917, and accordingly he can recover those dues. In other words, S. 192 applies to cases of lambardars who had no rights (usually because they were not then appointed) to receive dues at the time of the passing of the Act of 1917. Kinkhede A. J. C. also held that the Civil Court could entertain a claim by a lambardar for the recovery of arrears of remuneration. His judgment was based on the assumption set out at p. 144 that the lambardar claiming his dues on the old scale continues his duties as before: "if he must continue doing his duties as before, his remuneration must also continue as before." What the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner overlooked was that in the case before him the plaintiff who claimed the lambardari dues on the old scale was not performing the same duties as before. He was the sadar lambardar at that time and there was no such office under the old Act-when his remuneration was fixed. Also under the old Act there was only one lambardar for each mahal and so his remuneration was fixed on the assumption that he would perform the lambardari duties for the entire village.

5. Shankergir Guru Motigir v. Chinnuji, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 164=71 I C 140.
6. Janrao v. Baliram, (1925) 12 A I R Nag 129= 83 I C 172=20 N L R 142.

When the new Act came into force other lambardars were also appointed (the very fact that the plaintiff was the sadar lambardar shows that) and therefore the plaintiff's duties were to that extent curtailed and so he could hardly claim the right to be remunerated at a rate fixed on the assumption that he would do the whole work himself. Moreover this in itself indicates that the old office was abolished and a new set of appointments made, not of one lambardar as before but of several with a division of labour between them. In these circumstances a fresh order fixing a new scale of remuneration would clearly be called for. This was pointed out in 22 N L R 37[1] by a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and the previous decision was overruled to that extent. They held there in the case of a sadar lambardar that he cannot maintain his claim for remuneration until it has been fixed by the revenue authorities. It was pointed out that under the old Act there was no such office as sadar lambardar. The view was expressed that it could not be assumed that the sadar lambardar was entitled to the whole of the lambardar's remuneration. It may be observed that a sadar lambardar is only found where there is more than one lambardar. If the sadar lambardar is not entitled to the whole of the lambardar's remuneration, it is clearly necessary to determine what share he is entitled to and the only way to do that is the mode prescribed by S. 192. That being the view taken, it was not necessary for the Bench to consider the effect of S. 229 on existing rights. It may be however desirable to state that, in our opinion, as at present advised, Sec. 229 would have an important bearing if the lambardar in question had been lambardar immediately before the coming into effect of the Act of 1917 and continued to be the sole lambardar. Here however there is nothing to show that this lambardar held his lambardarship under the old Act. 22 N L R 37[1] at p. 42 concludes as follows:

> The plaintiff (the sadar lambardar) therefore cannot maintain his claim for remuneration until he gets it fixed by the revenue authorities.

That leaves it at large whether or not he could maintain retrospectively a claim for remuneration when he had got it fixed by the revenue authorities. In A I R 1928 Nag 68[4] the last-mentioned case was followed and Kinkhede A. J. C. stated as follows :

> I think the matter must be considered as concluded by the decision of the Bench of this Court in 22 N·L R 37[1] which lays down that in all appointments of lambardars the remuneration of that post, unless fixed by the revenue officer, is not recoverable by suit.

In our opinion 22 N L R 37[1] does not lay down a proposition in so broad a form. A difference might arise according as the appointment of the lambardar in question was before or after the Act of 1917 came into operation. In A I R 1937 Nag 411[2] Niyogi J. held that where a mukaddam of a village, who is not a lambardar, gets his remuneration fixed under S. 192, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, then subject to the Limitation Act, he may recover arrears and he is not restricted to recovering his remuneration from the date of the fixation.

It may be desirable to point out that before the Act of 1917 was passed, a variety of persons, including the lambardars, were entitled to remuneration. The lambardar's remuneration was fixed at a percentage that is to say, 5 per cent. That Act was repealed by the Act of 1917, S. 229 of which preserves inter alia all rights acquired; such rights would include, in our opinion, a right to receive that percentage. But in the case of the lambardars appointed after the passing of the Act of 1917 or in the case of sadar lambardars, an office newly created by the Act of 1917, their right to claim is made, in our opinion conditional upon their remuneration being fixed in the mode prescribed by S. 192 (1) which provides that the remuneration of the lambardar, lambardar-gumashta and mukaddam shall be fixed by the Deputy Commissioner and shall be recoverable by the lambardar from the proprietors of the mahal or patti for which he is appointed.

When, however, a lambardar has got his remuneration fixed by the Deputy Commissioner, he is entitled to recover not merely the remuneration from that date but from the date when he entered upon his office subject to limitation. We agree with Niyogi J.'s views as to this. A difficulty may arise if Sec. 197, Land Revenue Act came into operation owing to the Deputy Commissioner directing a lambardar to recover his dues as land revenue as provided by that Section, because in such a case it might well be that the period of limitation prescribed by S. 160 for land revenue suits would not apply because, where S. 197 is invoked, the question of a suit does not arise, the machinery of the recovery being not through a Court. Presumably, however, a Deputy Commissioner would only in very rare circumstances give such permission to resort to such exceptional machinery and it would be for the Deputy Commissioner to give his authority in a reasonable mode so as not to allow either (a) a double claim to be made or (b) the recovery of arrears for the period beyond that of limitation.

Were it held that arrears could not be recovered it would have the unjust result that a lambardar appointed immediately after the passing of the Act of 1917 or a sadar lambardar could not recover anything for his service unless and until his remuneration was fixed by the Deputy Commissioner. It would always take some months to obtain the Deputy Commissioner's directions and we can see no reason why such lambardars, who are presumably doing their work during those months, are to be left without remuneration for that period. This, it seems to us, is a consideration that mainly affected the judgment of Niyogi J. An officer having been appointed is entitled to be paid for the work and the payment is to be fixed as from the date when he entered upon his office. The quantum of the payment has to be fixed in a certain way. When fixed it relates back to the date of entry upon the office. In our opinion, it makes no difference whether this claim is being made by him as a plaintiff or whether it is being urged by him as a defendant by way of defence in a suit for accounts. It is an item which he is entitled to take into account if he is entitled to claim for it. In our opinion therefore the answer to the question is as follows :

In a suit for village profits a lambardar or mukaddam is entitled to claim, whether as a plaintiff or as a defendant, remuneration for his services for such years prior to the year in which his remuneration has been fixed by the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of Sec. 192, Land Revenue Act, as are within the period of limitation.

D.S./R.K. Answered in affirmative.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 78

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Udebhan Zangoji Patil — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Vithoba Ukandaji Dhangar — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 375 of 1936, Decided on 22nd September 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 16th April 1936.

(a) Burden of Proof—Question of onus if regarded as final factor in the case cannot be ignored.

When a Court examines only the case of one side and disbelieves his evidence and then dismisses his claim on the ground that he has not proved his assertions, it is clear that the case is being decided solely on the question of onus and no amount of lip service to a rule which is ignored in the letter and in the spirit will serve to turn what is then a question of law into one of fact. [P 79 C 1, 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114—Presumption — Document executed by ignorant and illiterate person — Usual presumption under S. 114 cannot be drawn.

In cases of documents executed by ignorant and illiterate persons who are likely to be dominated by the will of others, the usual presumption arising under Sec. 114 cannot be drawn : A I R 1937 P C 274, Rel. on. [P 80 C 1]

(c) Bond — Consideration — Executant may discharge onus of proving consideration by showing that presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, does not arise—Question whether onus is discharged is one of fact.

Once the execution of a bond is proved the burden of proving consideration is shifted on to the executant of the bond. He can discharge that burden by proving that the circumstances of the case were such that the usual presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, cannot arise. But the question whether he has succeeded in discharging this burden is one of fact and not of law : A I R 1938 Nag 152, Ref. [P 80 C 2]

M. R. Bobde and V. K. Rajwade — for Appellant.

M. B. Kinkhede and A. R. Kulkarni — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a suit for money due on a bond Ex. P-2 dated 28th May 1933 for Rs. 1700 executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. This Rs. 1700 was said to be due on a promissory note dated 20th June 1931 for Rs. 1800 also executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. There were certain repayments, according to the plaintiff's case, and the balance due on 28th May 1933 is said to be the Rs. 1700 which forms the consideration for the bond in suit. Both documents bear the defendant's thumb impression and he admits this fact, but he pleads that they were obtained from him by fraud. Both the lower Courts, throwing the burden on the plaintiff, have held that he has not proved execution and consideration and so have dismissed his suit. He appeals here. The lower Appellate Court stated at the outset of its judgment that the question of burden was not of much consequence because there is evidence on both sides and the matter turns largely upon the credibility of the witnesses. But having done lip service to the rule the learned Judge proceeded to consider the plaintiff's evidence alone, disbelieved his witnesses, and then stated :

> I feel no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the appellant (plaintiff) failed to prove that he advanced Rs. 1850 to the respondent and that the latter had executed the document Ex. P-1 knowing it to be a promissory note.

Now that is nothing more nor less than deciding the case on the question of onus. Had the learned Judge believed a single witness for the defendant or had he stated clearly in his judgment that such and such facts (setting them forth or indicating them) establish the fraud pleaded, there would have been an end of the matter. There would then have been a positive finding based on positive evidence and it would not have mattered where the burden lay. But when a Court examines only the case of one side and disbelieves his evidence and then dismisses his claim on the ground that he has not proved his assertions, it is clear that the case is being decided solely on the question of onus and no amount of lip service to a rule which is ignored in the letter and in the spirit will serve to turn what is then a question of law into one of fact. I have therefore to determine where the burden of proof lay. The learned counsel for the appellant relied on a decision of a Division Bench of this Court to which I was a party for the proposition that once it is established that a document bears the defendant's thumb impression or signature then the plaintiff is relieved of proving execution and consideration. The burden shifts to the defendant : I L R (1938) Nag 333.[1]

That is perfectly true of all ordinary cases but is not universally so. The rule given there is based on Sec. 114, Evidence Act, that is to say on a rebuttable presumption of fact. Consequently, it can only apply in circumstances where the presumption itself arises. We have explained at p. 337 that "the circumstances of the case may negative such an inference," and again that these facts constitute the deciding factor in a case only when "nothing else is known" beyond the fact that the document bears the thumb mark or signature in question and that it comes from proper custody. But here a lot more is known. We know that the defendant is ignorant and illiterate, an ordinary cultivator in an obscure village who has been described as "a simple minded fool likely to come under the influence of anybody" by the learned Judge who saw him in the witness-box. We know that the ordinary course of business was not followed because the promissory note which is said to have formed the consideration of the bond in suit was not torn or otherwise cancelled and was not handed back to the debtor but has been produced intact by the plaintiff himself. There may have been good reason for this, but it is not the usual course of business and the presumption we are discussing only applies when that has been observed. Moreover, there is another point. Ordinarily the law pays no heed to those who act at arms length and are able to look after themselves. If they make a sorry bargain, that is their affair. But as regards the weak and the helpless, those in a position of disadvantage, that is a very different matter. The law guards them with a special protective care and is jealous of those who bring claims against them. It then scrutinizes the transaction with a minuteness which it does not otherwise employ and throws the burden on the other side. Minors, pardanashin women, expectant heirs, those in a position of special disadvantage such as wards and others so situated as likely to be dominated by another's will, all are examples of that general rule; and to them can be added the ignorant and the illiterate when the circumstances are such that the usual presumption arising under Sec. 114, Evidence Act, cannot be drawn : see A I R 1937 P C 274.[2]

1. Dalchand v. Mt. Hasanbi, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 152=176 I C 315=I L R (1938) Nag 333.

But I am referred to the remarks at p. 339 of the ruling cited above where we have dissented from 20 N L R 7.[3] It is pointed out that that was also a case in which only a thumb-mark was taken and therefore one in which prima facie the defendant was illiterate and yet we have held that the burden was wrongly thrown on the plaintiff. But mere illiteracy standing by itself is not the point. In this country many men who cannot read and write conduct important businesses and manage large estates. They are not foolish, ignorant rustics but are usually shrewd men of the world liberally endowed with business instincts and acumen. They work through agents and take meticulous care to see that they are loyal to their employers. Men of that type do not affix their marks to documents without taking special precautions to ensure that they have a true and accurate knowledge of their contents. It would be ridiculous to wrap them up in a cloak of special tenderness. As I see it the decision in 20 N L R 7[3] did not turn on the fact that the executant of the document was ignorant and illiterate and that therefore because of his helplessness he had to be treated with special protective care. We know nothing about the defendant there except that he was in a position to employ at least one agent and actually did so. The decision turned solely on what was laid down as a general rule of law of universal application and it was that with which we were respectfully unable to agree in the later ruling.

As I have said before, everything depends on the circumstances, and this particular matter will not always amount to a question of law because the presumption in question is not an irrebuttable presumption of law but a rebuttable presumption of fact. The matter can only be one of law when the question of burden is used as the final deciding factor in the case, as it has been here, and when the presumption under Sec. 114 (when it can fairly arise) is altogether ignored. There can be no doubt that the primary burden is on the plaintiff. He must prove execution and consideration. But once he proves, or it is admitted, that the signature or thumb mark (it does not matter which, for I do not read the Privy Council as laying down a different rule) is the defendant's,then the presumption arises and the burden shifts to the defendant. He can discharge it either by showing that in spite of signing, the circumstances are such that he cannot be charged (fraud, undue influence, mistake, want or failure of consideration, etc.) or he can prove that the circumstances are such that the presumption under Sec. 114 cannot fairly arise. (This appears to have been the case before their Lordships : an illiterate Omanhene of the Australian bush.) If he succeeds in doing that, then the burden shifts back to the plaintiff. To that extent the matter is one of law. But whether he has succeeded on the evidence, or on the admitted facts, in discharging this burden is a question of fact and not of law.

In the present case the facts found by both the lower Courts (and of course they must be accepted as final here) show that the presumption under S. 114 cannot fairly arise in this case. That being so, the burden was rightly laid on the plaintiff, and once that is accepted then the remaining question, namely whether the plaintiff's evidence should be believed or not, becomes one of fact. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

---

2. Omanhene Kwamin Bassayin v. Omanhene Bendentu II, (1937) 24 A I R P C 274 = 170 I C 423 (P C).
3. Devidas v. Mamooji, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 103 =78 I C 104=20 N L R 7.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 81

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Shankarrao and others — Appellants.

v.

Hazarimal Nathuramji Agarwala — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 134 of 1935, Decided on 15th September 1938, from order of Addl. District Judge, Bhandara, D/- 30th September 1935.

Limitation Act (1908), Sec. 15—Stay of execution — Decree-holder obtaining stay of execution in previous suit against him by offering security of decree obtained by him against judgment-debtor whose estate was under management of Court of Wards — Court obtaining from decree-holder undertaking not to accept payment direct from Court of Wards— Order held did not amount to stay by injunction within meaning of S. 15.

A decree-holder was a judgment-debtor under the decree passed in a previous case which decree he was challenging in appeal. He applied to the Court for stay pending the disposal of the appeal. The Court ordered stay on terms as to security. There the judgment-debtor (decree-holder in subsequent decree) was offering as security a subsequent decree which he had by that date obtained. It was a decree for a sum and it was against a judgment-debtor whose estate had recently been taken under the management of the Court of Wards. The Judge considered the security proper and ordered that the officer in charge of the Court of Wards should be written to deposit the amount in Court. The order contained the following sentence : "the judgment-debtor undertakes not to accept any payment direct from the Court of Wards towards the satisfaction of his decree" :

Held that the order was not tantamount to a stay by an injunction or order within the meaning of S. 15 : 17 All 198 (P C); A I R 1933 P C 52; A I R 1932 P C 165 and A I R 1933 Mad 418 (F B), Rel. on. [P 82 C 1]

P. P. Deo — for Appellants.

W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a most unfortunate case. We find ourselves compelled to allow the appeal with the result that the unfortunate decree-holder loses a decree for a very substantial sum of money, we are satisfied, owing and only owing to a misapprehension of the obligations cast upon him by an order passed in another case on 15th September 1930. The point for determination is whether the present application for the execution of a decree obtained in C. S. No. 44 of 1924 is or is not within time. The Article is 182 of Schedule to the Limitation Act and the period is three years from the last order. The last order in C. S. No. 44 of 1924 was on 13th April 1928 and the application for execution was on 2nd April 1932. So quite clearly the application is out of time unless it is saved by Sec. 15, Limitation Act. In the course of argument we suggested that possibly S. 5 also would apply but when the proceedings are looked into and the Section is examined it is seen that Sec. 5 has no application to a matter of this nature and that that has already been so decided. S. 15 can only be used if the execution "has been stayed by injunction or order."

The decree-holder therefore endeavours to show that there exists here such an order. The order relied on is the one passed in C. S. No. 24 of 1919 in the following circumstances : The present decree-holder was a judgment-debtor under the decree passed in that case which decree he was challenging in appeal. He applied to the Judicial Commissioner's Court for stay pending the disposal of the appeal. The Judicial Commissioner's Court ordered stay on terms as to security. The matter was referred back to the trial Court for the trial Court to go into the question of security and on that matter coming before the trial Court the order (Ex. C-6) dated 15th September 1930 was passed. There the then judgment-debtor, now the decree-holder, was offering as security the present decree which he had by that date obtained. It was a decree for a sum of over Rs. 10,000 and it was against a judgment-debtor whose estate had recently been taken under the management of the Court of Wards. The learned Judge considered the security proper and seems to have ordered that the officer in charge of the Court of Wards should be written to deposit the amount in Court. The order contains the following sentence :

> The judgment-debtor undertakes not to accept any payment direct from the Court of Wards towards the satisfaction of his decree.

The judgment-debtor (the present decree-holder) in that suit seems up to that date to have been actively pursuing his remedies as decree-holder but from the moment that that order was passed he took no action at all to execute his decree in this suit, C. S. No. 44 of 1924, and we have no doubt whatever that the reason why he suddenly became supine was that he thought that he was ordered not to take any steps and that the Court was going to get the money by writing to the officer of the Court of Wards. As a result he made no application whatever until he thought that the estate had ceased to be under the management of the Court of Wards, and on 2nd April 1932 this application was made. In point of fact the estate did not cease to be under the management of the Court of Wards till some 14 days after the application. On those facts the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that although it is clear that the order in question contained no express prohibition against the executing of the decree still the Court did, as a matter of fact, prevent the decree-holder from executing the decree and its action was such as to amount to a stay of execution, for the decree-holder was obviously prevented from executing the decree in question unconditionally as he was otherwise entitled to. In other words he holds that the fact that in the previous matter the Court had taken an undertaking from the judgment-debtor not to accept any payment direct from the Court of Wards was tantamount to a stay by an injunction or order within the meaning of S. 15.

We think that that conclusion is probably an equitable one and would have the result of avoiding a serious loss to the decree-holder owing to a bona fide mistake. But in our opinion the authorities are too powerful to make it possible for us to uphold the judgment appealed from. The Privy Council has three times considered this kind of point: 17 All 198[1] at pp. 210 & 211, 12 Pat 195[2] at p. 201 and 60 Cal 1[3] at p. 7. This last decision was followed in a Full Bench case by the Madras High Court, 56 Mad 490.[4] Of these 12 Pat 195[2] is the nearest on the facts. Their Lordships observe at pages 200 and 201 :

> The point made by the appellant is this. They say that on 16th September 1922, the Judge in the Raj suit, ordered, according to the note in the order paper, their Lordships have not the order before them, that the decree-holders were to wait for some time for payment. That order was set aside on 16th April 1923. Therefore, there was an interval of seven months during which the order of 16th September 1922, was in operation. The appellants say that was a stay, and those seven months saved the situation for them, because if those seven months are not counted the present application was in time.

> Now the first thing to be observed is that at the time when that order was made, there was in fact no application for execution pending at all. [In the present case there was an execution pending.] It was an order, again made in the Raj suit and not in the rent suits; it was an order made on an application by the decree-holders seeking leave to proceed against property in the hands of the receiver, in the Raj suit. It was an order which did not stay execution at all, but simply said that so far as that application in that suit was concerned, the appellants were to wait. That seems to their Lordships not to be in any sense within the meaning of the Section a stay of the execution by injunction or order. This point also fails.

In 17 All 198,[1] (see pp. 210 and 211) the facts were that an order was passed which had the effect of restraining the defendant from receiving payment and the person liable to him from making payment to him or to anybody. Their Lordships observe :

> An order in those terms is not an order staying the institution of a suit. There would be no violation of it until the restrained creditor came to receive his debt from the restrained debtor. And the institution of a suit might for more than one reason be a very proper proceeding on the part of the restrained creditor, as for example in this case, to avoid the bar by time, though it might also be prudent to let the Court which had issued the order know what he was about.

In 60 Cal 1[3] their Lordships observe in relation to one of the Articles of the Limitation Act that equitable considerations are out of place in construing such Articles and what one is concerned with is the grammatical meaning of the words. In 56 Mad 490[4] a Full Bench of the Madras High Court had to consider whether those observations were applicable to Sec. 15. The matter is put very shortly by Mockett J., at p. 507 :

> The injunction or order must be express in its terms and I find no room for the suggestion that an application can be stayed by implication. The trend of the Privy Council decisions seems to be to this effect, and in the recent case in 60 Cal 1[3] their Lordships explicitly lay down that 'in construing questions of limitation equitable considerations are out of place'.

I am therefore constrained to join in expressing respectful dissent, if any of the Indian cases cited lend colour to the doctrine that although an injunction or order does not in its terms effect a stay, nevertheless it can be said to do so 'equitably' or 'by implication'.

It follows therefore that the appeal succeeds. No costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

---

1. Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah, (1895) 17 All 198=22 I A 31=6 Sar 551 (P C).
2. Kirtyanand Singh v. Prithi Chand Lal, (1933) 20 A I R P C 52=141 I C 760=12 Pat 195=60 I A 43 (P C).
3. Nagendranath De v. Sureshchandra De, (1932) 19 A I R P C 165 = 137 I C 529=60 Cal 1=59 I A 283 (P C).
4. Tripura Sundaramma v. Abdul Kadir, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 418=143 I C 1=56 Mad 490=64 M L J 664 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 83

NIYOGI AND GRUER JJ.

Dukhuram and others—Appellants.

v.

Khanderao and another—Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 198 of 1936, Decided on 31st August 1938.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), Section 203 (8)—Proprietor mortgaging his village share and house in abadi — After mortgage is foreclosed he cannot claim to retain possession of house.

If a proprietor mortgages his village share (without cultivating rights in sir) and his house in the abadi, he cannot after the mortgage has been foreclosed and he has become an exproprietary tenant, claim to retain possession of the house on the ground that under S. 203 he is entitled to a house-site in the abadi : A I R 1918 P C 84 and S. A. No. 452 of 1935, Expl.; A I R 1938 Nag 544, Rel. on. [P 83 C 2 : 85 C 1]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellants.

J. Sen and B. L. Gupta — for Respondents.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Pollock J. — The respondents Khande Rao and Ganpat Rao and their father mortgaged mahal No. 2 in mauza Chichirda, of which they were the proprietors, and a house in the abadi and certain khudkasht land. The mortgage was foreclosed and the decree-holder was placed in possession of the mortgaged property including the house. The mortgagors contend that when they lost their proprietary interest in the village, they became occupancy tenants of what had formerly been their sir land and that as tenants they are entitled to retain possession of the house. In a somewhat similar case in 14 N L R 165[1] at page 174, it was remarked :

> As regards houses in the abadi, the rights of the judgment-debtors now rest on the wajib-ul-arz, and the decree-holder, though undoubtedly owner of the soil and possibly, by operation of the law of mortgage, owner also of the houses standing on the soil, cannot evict them while they remain occupancy tenants.

In a recent case, Second Appeal No. 452 of 1935,[2] which appears to be indistinguishable from the present case, it was held that under Sec. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1917, the judgment-debtor as a tenant was entitled to a house-site of reasonable dimensions in the abadi free of rent and that until the site had been allotted and accepted or, if refused, the dispute had been settled by a Revenue Officer, the judgment-debtor had not got what he was entitled to and until then he could not be thrust out.

When 14 N L R 165[1] was decided, the C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1881 was in force which contained no provision similar to S. 203 of the present Act, and the decision in that case was based on the wajib-ul-arz. A proprietor is entitled to sell or mortgage his entire proprietary rights in the village including the abadi, excepting only the cultivating rights in sir which requires special permission. It is to me a somewhat surprising proposition that a proprietor can sell or mortgage his house in the abadi and then claim that he is still entitled to retain possession of it. The Legislature has accorded no such protection to houses as it has to cultivating rights in sir. Sub-s. (8) of S. 203 provides that nothing in this Section shall affect the terms of any contract between the proprietor and the holder of a site in the abadi, and it is, I think, arguable that this sub-section covers the present case and disentitles the judgment-debtor from relying on the other provisions of Sec. 203. The point is one of considerable importance and should, in my opinion, be decided by a Division Bench. I frame the question as follows :

"If a proprietor mortgages his village share (without cultivating rights in sir) and his house in the abadi, can he, after the mortgage has been foreclosed and he has become an ex-proprietary tenant, claim to retain possession of the house on the ground that under Section 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act, he is entitled to a house-site in the abadi?"

Let the case be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice.

OPINION

The following question has been referred to a Division Bench by Pollock J. :

> If a proprietor mortgages his village share (without cultivating rights in sir) and his house in the abadi, can he, after the mortgage has been foreclosed and he has become an exproprietary tenant claim to retain possession of the house on the ground that under S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act, he is entitled to a house-site in the abadi ?

The decree-holders, mortgagees in the case, had obtained possession of the house along with other property mortgaged when they foreclosed against their mortgagors,

1. Narayan Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram, (1918) 5 A I R P C 84=48 I C 141=46 Cal 76=45 I A 179=14 N L R 165 (P C).
2. Udho Mahara v. Pandit Sadasukh, Second Appeal No. 452 of 1935.

who were proprietors of the village. The mortgagors then claimed to get the house back on the ground that they had become expropriatory tenants of the sir land mortgaged, and as tenants were entitled to such a house. The lower Appellate Court following 14 N L R 165[1] at pp. 173 and 174 held that the accrual of the tenant right gave them a right to obtain the house. Pollock J. has pointed that when 14 N L R 165[1] was decided, the old Land Revenue Act of 1881 was in force, which contained no provision similar to S. 203 of the present Act, and the decision in that case was based on the wajib-ul-arz. He recognized that there is a recent case on all fours, Second Appeal No. 452 of 1935,[2] which supports the mortgagors, but he doubts whether the proprietor should be allowed to retain his mortgaged house in such conditions and thinks that on the analogy of S. 203 (8), Land Revenue Act, the terms of the contract between the parties should be given effect to.

The reported decision in 14 N L R 165[1] incorporates the judgment of the Privy Council but in that judgment their Lordships decided only whether the mortgagor had divested himself of his right as an occupancy tenant. They did not consider the question of the house mortgaged. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioners say that the order appealed against is silent as regards this and that it appears advisable to point out the law. Their view is that as regards houses in the abadi the rights of the judgment-debtors now rest on the wajib-ul-arz, and the decree-holder, though undoubtedly owner of the soil and possibly by operation of the law of mortgage owner also of the houses standing on the soil, cannot evict them while they remain occupancy tenants. These remarks are obiter, and with due respect we do not think that such a result can be upheld in law or equity. When a proprietor deliberately raises money by mortgaging his dwelling house how can he be allowed to turn round and say that that house is sacrosanct? In Second Appeal No. 452 of 1935[2] the learned Chief Justice was of opinion that until a site has been allotted to an ex-proprietor and accepted, or if refused the dispute has been settled by a Revenue Officer, the judgment-debtor has not got what he is entitled to, and until then he cannot be thrust out. He goes on to say:

> If the Revenue Officer allots this site, then again the judgment-debtor cannot be evicted, nor can the house be pulled down.

With all respect we think that in any case the mortgagor is entitled to the materials of the house mortgaged. What the mortgagor can claim under S. 203, Land Revenue Act, is simply a house site of reasonable dimensions in the abadi free of rent. Sub-s. (3) provides that the materials of any house erected shall be transferable. Then again how does it follow that because he is entitled to a house site he can claim to retain this particular house site? From an economic point of view, it would generally be desirable that the new proprietor of the village should take over also a house in keeping with his new status. When the exproprietor has contracted to mortgage his house also it is only just that he should be held to his contract the consequences of which he must have foreseen. His remedy is to arrange with the new proprietor for a new site or for the acquisition of a new house in the village as soon as he feels that foreclosure is inevitable. S. 49, Central Provinces Tenancy Act, preserves only rights as an occupancy tenant and does not deal with abadi sites and so cannot help the mortgagor. The rights of the mortgagee to this particular house and site are statutory, and S. 203, Land Revenue Act, cannot derogate from them. By O. 34, R. 3, Civil P. C., the mortgagee on obtaining his final decree is entitled to be put in possession of the property, and his debtor cannot claim to retain it simply because owing to his own improvidence or lack of foresight he finds himself for the time being homeless.

This question also arose recently before Bose J., in Mis. App. No. 204 of 1935,[3] and his view coincides with what we are now expressing. Bose J., also distinguishes 14 Nag L R 165,[1] and points out that S. 203, Land Revenue Act, relates to the house site and not to the materials of the house itself, and S. 203 (8) expressly exempts the terms of any contract between the proprietor and the holder of a site in the abadi. In the present case the proprietor and the holder of the site was the same person at the time of the contract, but the same principle would apply. He was empowered to contract himself out of any right to retain this site and superstructure in the event of foreclosure, and he must be held to his contract. For the above reasons we answer in the negative the question which has been put to us.

3. Ramadhin v. Sheodutt Rai, Reported in (1938) 25 A I R Nag 544.

D.S./R.K. Answered in negative.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 85

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Abdul Rahim Khan — Applicant.

v.

Mt. Pusia Bai, w/o Nanhu Patel and others — Non-Applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 199 of 1937, Decided on 16th August 1938, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Balaghat, D/- 23rd December 1936.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 476 and 195 (1) (c)— Courts mentioned in Sec. 476 can make complaint in respect of offence of forgery against persons, who are not parties to proceedings before it.

Section 476 does not inhibit the classes of Courts mentioned therein from making a complaint in respect of any of the offences specified in Sec. 195 (1) (c) against persons not parties to a proceeding before it, in which or in relation to which the offence was committed : Case law discussed; Allahabad, Madras and Calcutta view not approved. [P 85 C 1; P 87 C 1]

Fida Hussain and W. C. Dutt — for Applicant.

P. N. Rudra; G. R. Pradhan and W. B. Pendharkar and K. K. Gandhe — for Non-Applicants 1; 4, 6 and 7, and 8 respectively.

Order. — The question submitted for decision by this Bench by Niyogi J., is :

Whether S. 476, Criminal P. C., inhibits the classes of Courts mentioned therein from making a complaint in respect of any of the offences specified in S. 195 (1) (c) against persons not parties to a proceeding before it, in which or in relation to which the offence was committed ?

As Niyogi J. has pointed out, there is a a conflict of opinion between the various High Courts in this country on this point. The High Courts of Allahabad, Madras, Calcutta and Rangoon are in favour of an affirmative answer to the question, whereas the High Courts of Bombay, Lahore, Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of this Province are in favour of a negative answer. The question turns upon the interpretation of the wording of Sec. 195 (1) (c) and S. 476 (1), Criminal P. C. S. 195 (1) (c) lays down that :

No Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in S. 463 or punishable under S. 471, S. 475 or Sec. 476 of the same Code (Penal Code) when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except on the complaint in writing of such Court, etc.

The Sections of the Penal Code here concerned, are all connected with the offence of forgery or counterfeiting marks on documents. For the sake of clarity, instead of enumerating them again, whenever we have occasion to refer to them, we shall use the term "forgery". The plain meaning then of Sec. 195 (1) (c) is that when an offence of forgery of a document produced in Court is alleged to have been committed by a party to a proceeding in that Court a complaint by the Court itself is necessary before another Court can inquire into it. The Section does not say what is to happen when such offence is committed by a person other than a party to the proceeding. Omitting the portions of the Section which are unnecessary for our purpose, Sec. 476 provides that when any Court is of opinion that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in Sec. 195 (1) (b) or (c) which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may make a complaint, etc. The question then which arises out of this Section is what is the offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (c). Is it forgery or is it forgery by a party ? If the former, then no doubt the question which has been referred to us should be answered in the negative ; if the latter, it should be answered in the affirmative. The Patna High Court in 37 I C 487[1] states that the reference to S. 195 in S. 476 is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the Sections mentioned in S. 195. In S. 195 (1) (b) and (c) there are 18 Sections of the Penal Code mentioned and it is certainly a compendious method of enumerating them, if that is all the wording of S. 476 means. The reasoning of Addison J. in 9 Lah 678[2] at page 686 commends itself to us as sound and lucid :

It seems to me that unless the Legislature has specifically enacted that Courts should not take action against persons who are not parties, though they alone can take action against parties, it would not be proper to read such an intention into the Act especially as it gives rise to such inconvenient consequences. I am unable to discover anything in the Act definitely forbidding the presiding officer of a Court to make a complaint about an offence committed in connexion with a document produced in his Court when the person complained of is not a party. All that has been enacted is that he alone can do so if the alleged offender is a party to the proceeding.

1. Rajkumar Singh v. Emperor, (1916) 3 A I R Pat 97=37 I C 487=18 Cr L J 135=1 Pat L J 298.
2. Emperor v. Balmokand, (1928) 15 A I R Lah 510=110 I C 108=29 Cr L J 652=9 Lah 678.

The inconvenient consequences to which Addison J. draws attention in the above passage are pointed out at p. 686 : firstly since it is desirable that where a party to a proceeding in a Court has committed an offence and the offence has been abetted by persons who are not parties, all the persons concerned in the offence should be tried and not only those who are parties to the proceedings in which the offence was committed; secondly, since it would be possible for a private complainant to make a complaint against the persons who are not parties while the Court could make a complaint against the party, an anomalous state of affairs would arise, in that two different cases about the same transaction would have to be heard at the same time. It is also pointed out that although the Magistrate to whom the complainant of the Court goes might be able to take cognizance, under Sec. 190 (c), Criminal P. C., of the offence against the persons who were not parties, nevertheless the accused would have the option of asking that the case be sent to another Magistrate. Prideaux, Additional Judicial Commissioner also says in A I R 1927 Nag 14[3]:

It seems to me that an offence like forgery, committed in reference and to support any party in civil or criminal proceedings, is really an offence against public justice. It is fabricating false evidence and would, in any case, be punishable under S. 193, I. P. C., and the Court can proceed against the person responsible, under Sec. 476. But I do not think that the Legislature can have intended to prevent a Court from proceeding for an offence of forgery against the person committing it merely because he is not a party to the proceeding. It seems to me undesirable that proceedings for this class of offence should be restricted to those started by private persons.

It is to be noted that Sec. 476 uses the expression "offence referred to in Sec. 195, sub-sec. (1), Cl. (b) or Cl. (c)." The offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (c) is forgery. We agree with what Murphy J. says in 55 Bom 461[4] at page 472 :

In other words, in my view, by the words "offences referred to" the Section meant what it said, and not offences covered by the Section and committed in the qualifying circumstances mentioned in Sec. 195 (c), that is by a party to the proceeding.

Then again if the enumeration of offences in S. 195 (1) (c) is meant to be qualified for the purposes of S. 476 by the words: "when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court," it must also be qualified by the next clause "in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding," and if all these qualifying words be meant to be read with the Sections of the Penal Code for the purpose of interpreting S. 476, then it was unnecessary to add in Sec. 476 the words "which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court." It seems clear therefore to us that the High Court of Patna is right in thinking that reference in S. 476 to S. 195 was merely a compendious method of avoiding enumeration of the Sections of the Penal Code which have been enumerated in S. 195 (1) (b) and (c).

As regards the High Courts which hold the opposite view, there is a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court on the subject in 53 All 804.[5] The decision there was that the Legislature did not intend that the Courts should file complaints before Magistrates other than under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for the very good reason that the person prosecuted has no redress when such prosecutor is a Court of law. But we cannot see why that should be a good reason for holding that Sec. 476 is governed by S. 195 (1) (c). The inconvenience of coming to the conclusion their Lordships did was not considered at all. The argument also, which they put forward about there being no appeal if the contrary view to theirs is taken, does not commend itself to us since we fail to see how a right of appeal can be taken away from the persons who were not parties to the proceedings in which the forgery took place if an inquiry is made against them under S. 476. The decisions prior to 1923, of which there are several, are not so weighty because of the alterations in the wording of Sec. 476 which took place in that year. As matters stood before 1923, there was considerable force in the observations of Abdur Rahim J. in 40 Mad 100[6] to the effect that it might be possible for the offence of forgery to be committed without the forged document being intended to be used in connexion

3. Josaballi v. Ayub Karim, (1927) 14 A I R Nag 14=100 I C 529=28 Cr L J 305.
4. Emperor v. Balgaunda Ramgaunda Patil, (1931) 18 A I R Bom 305=1931 Cr C 561=133 I C 269=32 Cr L J 1017=55 Bom 461=33 Bom L R 296.
5. Emperor v. Kushal Pal Singh, (1931) 18 A I R All 443=1931 Cr C 715=134 I C 225=32 Cr L J 1105=53 All 804=1931 A L J 697 (S B).
6. In re Ramalingam, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 1033=31 I C 653=40 Mad 100=16 Cr L J 797.

with any proceeding in the Court which held the inquiry under Sec. 476, since the Court would have the right to make the inquiry if it was merely brought to its notice that an offence of that nature had been committed. But since the alteration of the wording of Sec. 476 that situation cannot arise. Therefore, a great deal of the force of the resaoning in 40 Mad 100[6] has disappeared. The Full Bench ruling in 42 Mad 540[7] was also before the alteration of 1923 in the Code of Criminal Procedure. 57 Mad 682,[8] it is true, is a decision after 1923, but it is based on earlier decisions which are said to be summarized in 28 M L W 769.[9] That is a ruling to which unfortunately we have not access. It is impossible therefore to say what was the ratio decidendi of that case. It is likely however that it is founded upon the Full Bench ruling already referred to: 42 Mad 540.[7] In 58 Cal 727[10] the conclusion was arrived at contrary to that to which we have come for the reason that under Sec. 195 (1) (c) it is not necessary where the persons concerned are not parties, for the Court to take action under Sec. 476. But that does not mean that the Court cannot do so if it wishes, as was pointed out in 9 Lah 678.[2] 58 Cal 727[10] gives one reason for thinking it undesirable that a Court should be able to file a complaint in such a case, namely that if it does so, an appeal might be brought, and whatever the result of those proceedings, it would be open to the Public Prosecutor or to any other member of the public to ignore the result altogether and file a complaint before a Magistrate, upon which the Magistrate would be obliged to take proceedings. This situation does not however seem very likely to arise and in any event it applies as much to parties as to persons who are not parties. The Public Prosecutor would never commence independent proceedings, when he knew that a Court of law was also seised of the matter, and a private person would also wait until the conclusion of the proceedings commenced in that Court, and if those proceedings failed he would be laying himself open to a charge of malicious prosecution if he proceeded to institute a fresh proceeding before a Magistrate.

For the above reasons we think that the view taken in this Province heretofore is right and we answer the question which has been referred to us in the negative.

N.S./R.K. Answered in negative.

---

7. Govind Iyer v. Emperor, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 7=50 I C 824=20 Cr L J 344=42 Mad 540 36 M L J 448 (F B).
8. Tulasi Ammal v. Danalakshmi, (1934) 21 A I R Mad 316=1934 Cr C 606=148 I C 851 =35 Cr L J 780=57 Mad 682=66 M L J 471.
9. Ponnuswami Udayar v. Emperor, (1929) 16 A I R Mad 115=115 I C 481=30 Cr L J 469 =28 M L W 769.
10. Provatranjan Barat v. Umashankar Chatterji, (1931) 18 A I R Cal 438=1931 Cr C 590=132 I C 241=32 Cr L J 883=58 Cal 727=35 C W N 98.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 87

GRILLE J.

Munna — Accused — Applicant.

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 401 of 1938, Decided on 30th November 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Summary trial—Object of—Warrant case—Accused, after his examination is entitled to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination.

The object of Chap. 22, Criminal P. C., is to shorten the record and the work of the Magistrate in making the record: it is not intended to deprive the accused person of any of the rights under Ch. 20 or 21, Criminal P. C. Hence in a warrant case tried summarily, an accused, after he is examined, is entitled to re-call prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination: A I R 1927 Mad 78, Foll.; A I R 1932 Oudh 242 and A I R 1926 Bom 226, Dissent. [P 88 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Procedure—Warrant case—Prosecution including evidence given on commission in other presidencies—Case should not be tried summarily (Obiter).

Warrant cases in which the prosecution includes evidence given on commission in other presidencies should not be conducted as a summary trial as the evidence so recorded militates in its very nature against the object of a trial by summary procedure. [P 88 C 1]

J. P. Dwivedi — for Applicant.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant, in the course of a trial by summary procedure, after he had been examined by the Magistrate in regular form by question and answer recorded, asked that he should be allowed to cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses after the charge. The Magistrate recorded the following order:

In summary cases no final charge being framed the accused has no right to call witnesses for further cross-examination. The application is therefore rejected.

Against this order the accused preferred an application to the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, asking that a reference should be made to this Court to have the trying Magistrate's order set aside. The learned Sessions Judge held that there was a conflict of view among the High Courts in the matter, the High Court of Bombay in A I R 1926 Bom 226[1] and the Oudh Chief Court in 7 Luck 699[2] holding that the accused had no right in a summary trial to recall the prosecution witnesses, and the Madras High Court in 50 Mad 740[3] holding that the accused had such a right. As the Bombay and Oudh decisions were made by a Division Bench the learned Sessions Judge held that they were of greater authority than that of a single Judge in the Madras High Court and declined to make a reference. The result is an application in revision by the accused to this Court.

In my view the application must succeed and with all respect the view of Jackson J. in the Madras case is preferable. The Lucknow and Bombay decisions are based on the proposition that, as in summary trials it is not necessary to frame a charge, the procedure laid down in Sec. 256, Criminal P. C., for warrant cases (and the case now under consideration is a case of theft which must be tried as a warrant case) does not apply. I am unable to see however that the absence of a formal charge necessarily involves the absence of a plea. The plain wording of S. 262 leads, in my opinion, to the conclusion that the accused in this case was entitled to have the prosecution witnesses re-called. I may incidentally say that it should have been obvious that the trial of this case should not have been conducted as a summary trial where the prosecution included evidence given on commission in the Madras Presidency, Bombay and the Punjab. Evidence so recorded militates in its very nature against the object of a trial by summary procedure. S. 262, Criminal P. C., says :

(1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons cases, shall be followed in summons cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases, except as hereinafter mentioned.

The exceptions of course occur in S. 263 and no where else. One of the exceptions, so far as a warrant case is concerned, is that it is not necessary to frame a formal charge ; but that does not mean that the accused does not have the circumstances of offence complained of explained to him. In a summons case (vide S. 242, Criminal P. C.) when the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him and he shall be asked, if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted ; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge. Now Sec. 263, Criminal P. C., also lays down that it is not necessary to frame a formal charge and also that it is not necessary to record the evidence of the witnesses, but it does not state that the particulars of the offence of which the accused person is accused shall be stated to him when he appears before a Magistrate, and thus the distinction between the procedure in a summons case and warrant case as to the time when the particulars of the offence are to be explained to the accused is maintained. In a summons case this is done directly the accused appears ; in a warrant case it is not ; and I find nothing in Ch. 22, Criminal P. C., which authorizes a demand from the accused to show cause why he should not be convicted immediately he is produced. The object of Ch. 22 is to shorten the record and the work of the Magistrate in making the record ; it is not intended to deprive the accused person of any of the rights under Ch. 20 or 21. In a warrant case tried by summary procedure, the accused is entitled to a discharge if the prosecution evidence appearing against him is insufficient to sustain a conviction without any explanation on the part of the accused, just as much as, in a case tried by the full and regular procedure. In a summary trial the accused is entitled, both in summons and warrant cases (in the former only if the Court thinks fit), to have processes to summon his witnesses ; he is equally entitled to have the prosecution witnesses re-called after the explanation, which takes the place of a formal charge, is made and that, in accordance with the procedure prescribed in warrant cases, does not take place until the prosecution has called its witnesses and satisfied the Court that there is sufficient material on which to charge the accused, or, in the case of a summary trial, to ask him to show cause why he should not be convicted on the evidence appearing against him. The order of the Magistrate in the present case would result in the accused being deprived of a valuable right which the law by S. 256, Criminal P. C., allows him, and the right cannot be abrogated by the assumption that in a warrant case tried by summary procedure the accused is to account for his actions to show cause why he should not be convicted before any of the evidence against him as heard.

1. Umaji Krishnaji v. Emperor, (1926) 13 A I R Bom 226=93 I C 159=27 Cr L J 431=28 Bom L R 95.

2. Gokaran v. Emperor, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 242=1932 Cr C 405=137 I C 684=33 Cr L J 506=7 Luck 699=9 O W N 334.

3. In re Raju Achari, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 78=99 I C 44=28 Cr L J 12=50 Mad 740=51 M L J 687.

The result is that the order of the Magistrate is set aside and the application made by the accused to have the prosecution witnesses resummoned must be granted.

N.S./R.K. Order set aside.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 89

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, Lucknow — Applicant.

v.

Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (Empress Mills) — Opposite Party.

Misc. Civil Case No. 118 of 1937, Decided on 18th October 1938.

Income-tax Act (1922, as amended in 1929), S. 58-K (2)—Meaning of the words "his share" explained.

The scheme of the Act is that the employer is to have the advantage of deductions in respect of money which he has contributed to the provident fund together with the increase to the fund which his money has earned prior to the time of the transfer of the fund to the trustees. He is not to have any benefit in respect of employee's contributions or interest thereon up to that time and he is not to have the benefit in respect of any interest that is earned by the fund after transfer. The words "his share" therefore mean the employer's contributions and interest thereon up to the date of transfer. [P 90 C 2]

D. N. Chowdhary — for Applicant.

A. V. Khare — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This matter comes before the Bench by way of a case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax on the petition of the assessee. It raises a point of construction of S. 58-K (2), Income-tax Act, and as one takes this view or that will depend whether the assessee is entitled to a deduction of Rs. 46,675-12-4 or not. The facts can be shortly stated.

Section 58-K, together with a number of other Sections, substantially altered the income-tax law relating to deductions that were permissible in respect of transfers of provident funds. Prior to the amending Act of 1929, where there had been established by an employer a provident fund not vested in any trustees but remaining in substance the employer's fund, if the employer constituted a trust fund and transferred that fund to trustees he was in effect transferring money from himself to trustees, and the sum so transferred was permitted to be treated as an expenditure that could be set against income in the year of transfer. After the amendments effected in 1929, of which S. 58-K is one, where there was such a transfer the employer (transferor) was not permitted so to deduct the amount of the fund transferred. In other words, the principle enunciated by the House of Lords in (1926) 10 Tax Cas 155[1] was given statutory effect in India. At the same time, although the employer was not permitted to make that deduction in arriving at his net income whenever out of that fund there was paid to members of the provident fund sums, those sums could with certain deductions be allowed as deductions from the employer's income. The question is: What deductions has one to make? Does one deduct the proportion of the sums so paid out referable to the employers's contributions prior to transfer, or does one deduct the proportion of the sums so paid out referable to the employer's contributions plus interest thereon earned up to the time of transfer? Put into figures, on the facts here present, that can be expressed: Is the correct deduction Rs. 72,534-2-11 or that sum plus Rupees 46,675-12-4? The relevant provisions of the Act are as follows [S. 58-K (2)]:

> When an employee participating in such fund is paid the accumulated balance due to him therefrom, any portion of such balance as represents his share in the amount so transferred to the trustee (without addition of interest, and exclusive of the employee's contributions and interest thereon) shall be deemed to be an expenditure by the employer within the meaning of Cl. (ix) of sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 10, incurred in the year in which the accumulated balance due to the employee is paid.

It is said on behalf of the Commissioner that the words > any portion of such balance as represents his share in the amount so transferred to the trustee (without addition of interest. . . .) . . .

1. British Insulated and Helsby Cables v. Atherton, (1926) A C 205=95 L J K B 336=134 L T 289=10 Tax Cas 155=42 T L R 187.

mean that you have to deduct in arriving at the employer's "share" the interest that has been earned by the employer's contributions. On the other hand it is said that the true construction is that when you transfer the fund to trustees you transfer a fund composed of two things: the employer's share and the employee's share. After that fund is so transferred the trustees would invest it and the fund would grow by interest on the invested fund so that in time one would have a fund comprising the old fund made up of employer's share and employee's share, interest on that fund, and new contributions to that fund. The new contributions do not enter into the story. The interest on that fund has not to be taken into account, but the employer is entitled to a deduction dependent upon the amount of his share in the old fund and that share comprises two things: his contributions and interest thereon up to the date of transfer.

The order of the Income-tax Officer, Nagpur, dated 27th November 1934, considers this question and it is apparent that the conclusion he arrived at is due to the fact that he considered that the words "without addition of interest" were words of exclusion shutting out not the interest added to the fund but the interest earned by the employer's contributions up to the date of transfer. His order uses, however, language, towards the end, which seems to point the other way, for, after setting out the interpretation now urged by the non-applicants, he observes:

> Such an interpretation is clearly untenable as the words accumulated balance in the provision mean the balance to the credit of an employee and the word interest therefore must refer to the interest on the amount transferred to the trustees. This interpretation is further supported by the fact that such interest is not taxable in the hands of the employee in the year of receipt.

It is the argument of the non-applicants that the words "without interest" mean "without taking into account the interest earned on the fund after it has been transferred to the trustees." We think that that is the proper construction, because, had it been intended to exclude the interest earned on the employer's contributions up to the time of the transfer the language would have been different in many particulars.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, commences his opinion in the following way:

> The accumulated balance due to an employee consists of the following 4 items:
>
> (a) employer's contribution,
> (b) interest on the above,
> (c) employee's contribution,
> (d) interest on the same.

We stop to observe that those four items, in our opinion, correctly represent not the accumulated balance but the transferred fund. To arrive at the accumulated balance one has to add a fifth ingredient, viz. the interest earned on the transferred fund. But apart from that criticizm we think that the Commissioner correctly breaks up the fund into those four parts. Of two of those parts the sub-section speaks when it excludes the employee's contributions and the interest thereon. It seems to be the scheme of the Act that the employer is to have the advantage of deductions in respect of money which he has contributed to the fund together with the increase to the fund which his money has earned prior to the time of the transfer of the fund to the trustees. He is not to have any benefit in respect of employee's contributions or interest thereon up to that time and he is not to have the benefit in respect of any interest that is earned by the fund after transfer. The words "his share" cannot be given the meaning "his contributions" without doing violence to the language of the sub-section. No reason can be given for using "his share" in the earlier part and "employee's contributions" later on in the same sub-section. If the Legislature was thinking in terms of contributions they would have said "his contributions." "His share" in our opinion means the first two of the four items which the Commissioner has mentioned, that is to say, the employer's contributions and interest thereon up to the date of transfer. That means that here this assessee was entitled to have taken into account not only the Rupees 72,534-2-11 but also Rs. 46,675-12-4.

The question raised in the case stated is answered as follows: The interpretation of Sec. 58-K (2) is as above indicated and the petitioners are entitled to allowance in respect of Rs. 46,675-12-4 in the year of account. The Rs. 100 deposited with the Commissioner will now be returned. Costs to be paid to the non-applicants Rs. 60.

N.S./R.K. Answer accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 91

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Daryaosingh Bhagwansing Chhatri — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Col. Krishnarao Vishnupant Kukde — Defendant—Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 8 of 1936, Decided on 21st September 1938, from appellate decree of Niyogi J., in S. A. No. 340 of 1934, D/- 12th August 1936.

(a) Landlord and Tenant — Principles of English feudal law are inapplicable to malguzar.

The principles of English feudal law are clearly inapplicable to a Hindu zamindar and the same can be said of a malguzar : 1 Cal 391 (P C), Rel. on. [P 92 C 2]

(b) Landlord and Tenant — Absolute occupancy tenancy — On death of tenant without heirs tenancy does not revert to landlord but Crown takes it by escheat.

The estate cannot revert as though a term had determined when it is an heritable estate, however commencing whether by contract, gift, or statute, for an estate to a man and his heirs is as large an estate as there can be so far as duration is concerned. The absolute tenancy is of a special kind, heritable and assignable. It springs out of Settlement and Statute. It does not amount to proprietorship, because it is subject to several fetters imposed by statute. On death of occupancy tenant without heirs the tenancy does not revert to landlord but Crown takes it by escheat : Case law referred. [P 93 C 1]

(c) Landlord and Tenant — Absolute occupancy tenant dying without heirs and leaving estate burdened with mortgage — Mortgage whether would be extinguished (Quære).

Whether, when an absolute occupancy tenant dies without any heirs but leaving the estate burdened with mortgage which the landlord could not avoid, the mortgage is extinguished : 3 N L R 185, Ref. [P 93 C 1]

(d) C. P. Tenancy Act (11 of 1898), S. 41 — Mortgage of tenancy made without notice to landlord is voidable—Landlord, if in possession, can treat alienation as nullity—Fact that decree for sale was obtained in mortgage suit to which landlord was not party cannot affect landlord's position.

On the true construction, Sec. 41 (7) appears to require notice to be given before a transfer is made to enable the landlord to decide what he will do. If that notice is not given and the transfer, for instance mortgage, is completed, then it is made in contravention of the provisions and is voidable. It is made in contravention for it is made without notice given and the Section requires that the transfer shall not be made until after a month from the date of the notice. The landlord if in possession can treat the alienation as a nullity as against him. If the mortgagee got possession then of course the landlord would have to take some active step to avoid otherwise the mortgagee would get title when the right to sue for possession was lost. The fact that a decree for sale was obtained in a mortgage suit to which the landlord was not a party cannot affect the landlord's position one way or the other. The fact that that decree was obtained against persons who appear to have had no interest also does not affect the matter : 34 Cal 329 (P C), Rel. on. [P 95 C 1, 2]

D. T. Mangalmurti — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye and D. R. Baxi — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal raised an interesting and unusual point of law. It also raises other points of more frequent occurrence. The plaintiff is a mortgagee under a mortgage granted by one Mt. Parvatibai. There has been a good deal of discussion before us as to Mt. Parvatibai's position, but owing to the way in which the case has been put in the lower Courts we think it clear that the matter has proceeded throughout on the basis that Mt. Parvatibai was in the position of an absolute occupancy tenant. We proceed on that basis. Mt. Parvatibai died without heirs. There was however living with her one Mt. Funda and a boy called Bisen. They were proceeded against by the malguzar and also by the mortgagee; the malguzar sued for possession; the mortgagee sued them as legal representatives. They were in fact intermeddlers and therefore legal representatives of the deceased within the meaning given to that term by S. 2 (11), Civil P. C. The plaintiff in each suit was successful with the result that the present defendant got a decree for possession and took possession, the plaintiff got a sale decree, purchased at court auction, sought to obtain possession, was resisted by the defendant, and now sues the defendant for possession. The defence takes several lines : (1) The mortgage was of a tenancy which came to an end with the death of the tenant without heirs ; (2) even if it still exists it is not binding on the defendant because it was effected while the Act of 1898 was in force and S. 41 (2) (7) enables the landlord to avoid the mortgage if made without notice and no notice was given here; (3) even if the mortgage has merged in the decree that does not affect the defendant who was not a party and does not prevent his avoiding now the mortgage as against him ; (4) the decree is of no effect against anybody having been obtained against persons who were not the legal representatives of the deceased.

The first point has raised an interesting discussion about the law of escheat. It is said, by the plaintiff, that an absolute occupancy tenancy, which is an heritable estate, can never come to an end for a Hindu can never be without heirs because, failing all others the Crown is the heir: Mitakshara II, VII, S. 6. Alternatively, if it be held that the Crown takes not as heir but by escheat then there is an escheat to the Crown, not to the landlord, (1 Cal 391),[1] and even if to the landlord, then the landlord would be burdened with the mortgage: 1 Cal 391.[1] The learned Judge, from whose judgment this appeal is brought, has examined at length the English law relating to escheat and has come to the conclusion that as absolute occupancy tenure is founded in contract, the law of escheat can have no reference to the matter despite suggestions to the contrary in 15 C P L R 89[2] and 15 C P L R 175.[3]

It is notoriously difficult to apply to one jurisdiction legal ideas foreign to that jurisdiction and derived from the history of another jurisdiction. It must however be observed that in the days when the law of escheat was being developed it would hardly have occurred to a lawyer to deny that a tenancy in fee simple arose out of contract any more than it would have occurred to him that a tenancy for a term of years did not arise out of contract. In the days of Glanvill (who was writing in low Latin in England a little after the Mitakshara was being compiled in India) the word "escheat" meant a falling in (excadere) when there were no heirs. In those days it was said "Only God makes heirs" and so the lord was not the heir in strict sense though Glanvill writes "Ultima hoeredes aliquoram sunt eorum domini," that is, the last heir of a feeholder is his lord. Before the statute of Quia Emptores, in the normal case, the "lord" was not the Crown but a subject who had bargained with another subject to grant to that subject, the tenant for a consideration and in return for certain undertakings, which generally related to services, a tenancy which would last as long as the tenant or his heirs existed. There was no question of such a tenancy reverting to the lord in the way that a limited estate falls in when the limited estate ends. A limited estate only falls in because it has been carved out of a larger estate and ends when it determines. The lawyers of mediæval England did not imagine the possibility of a tenure held by a man and his heirs being regarded as shorter than another estate in fee, simply because the heirs of the latter tenant happened to outlive the heirs of the former. Both estates were deemed equal in length and accordingly if the tenant's heirs failed one was faced with that impossibility—undisposed of property. The question was "To whom does it go?" The answer to that question was "To the lord of the tenant." If that lord were a subject (i. e. if granted by subinfeudation before Quia Emptores) then it went to the landlord; if the lord were the king, then it went to the king. In either case it went by escheat. In both cases the Crown or lord took it subject to burdens, e. g. mortgages, properly binding on the estate i. e. binding on the deceased tenant and his heirs. We have put the above propositions in the form of dogmatic statements because we believe them to be well established and to be inapplicable to this case so that our observations are merely obiter.

As their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out in 1 Cal 391,[1] "the principles of English feudal law are clearly inapplicable to a Hindu zemindar," we are of opinion that the same can be said of a malguzar. In that case, as in 8 M I A 500[4] and 11 M I A 619,[5] the "escheat" that was being considered was that which arises in consequence of the fact (which arises whether one looks with the eyes of the writer of the Mitakshara II, VII, Sec. 6, or with modern eyes) that where a man possessed of an absolute estate dies without heirs the property has got to go to someone and the question is: To whom does it go? The Judicial Committee decided in 1 Cal 391[1] that a mookarrari tenancy was an absolute estate and on the death of the tenant without heirs it did not revert to the zamindar (landlord). It followed from that that it did not go to the landlord. Therefore there was no reverter to the lord on failure of heirs to the tenant and that (page 401) where there is a failure of heirs, the Crown, by the general prerogative, will take the property by escheat, but will take it subject to any trusts or charges affecting it.

1. Sonet Kooer v. Himmut Bahadoor, (1875) 1 Cal 391=3 I A 92 = 25 W R 239=3 Sar 608 (P C).
2. Sheoshankarpuri v. Mt. Rukhma, (1902) 15 C P L R 89.
3. Ganpat v. Bhangi, (1902) 15 C P L R 175.
4. Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah, (1859-61) 8 M I A 500=2 W R P C 61=1 Suther 476=1 Sar 820 (P C).
5. Cavaly Vencata Narrainapah v. The Collector of Masulipatam, (1866-67) 11 M I A 619=10 W R 47=2 Suth 103=2 Sar 338 (P C).

Thus, in the present case there is either a reverter or the Crown takes by escheat. This case is distinguishable from 1 Cal 391,[1] in that no one suggests that an absolute occupancy tenancy is a proprietary estate. But though it is not a proprietary estate it is a heritable estate and it is manifestly undesirable that persons who bona fide lend money on or purchase an heritable estate, giving notice to the landlord and generally complying with all the requirements of the law, should find their security or the subject-matter of their purchase wholly destroyed because (owing, it may be, to a cholera epidemic which kills all the people in a village) the original tenant and all his heirs die off. We accordingly desire to reserve for consideration when it arises what would be the position if the heirs of the tenant at the time of the first settlement fail leaving the estate burdened by a mortgage which the landlord could not avoid. Would the mortgage go because the subject-matter, the tenancy, has determined the landlord getting by reverter? We are not in agreement at any rate, with the reason given by Stanyon A. J. C. in 3 N L R 185[6] for the view that the estate determines and reverts to the landlord. The reason there assigned was that the tenancy was created originally by contract. As above observed many absolute estates originate in contract followed by grant. There is nothing in 1 Cal 391[1] to show that the grant there did not originate in contract. What their Lordships appear to have considered and set aside in that case, on the ground that the estate was an absolute one, was the argument that the tenancy escheated to the lord. We apprehend that the estate cannot revert as though a term had determined when it is an heritable estate, however commencing whether by contract, gift or statute, for an estate to a man and his heirs is as large an estate as there can be so far as duration is concerned. The following position has to be kept in mind :

Suppose at the first settlement the tenant is A. Suppose in 1865 A sells to B with the landlord's consent. Suppose in 1930 A's heirs fail but B's heirs are still continuing. Is there a reverter? There is if the estate ends with the heirs of A for the heirs of A have failed. The fact that the landlord consented does not make the estate larger and does not therefore make it last for the heirs of A and the heirs of B. We do not think it was ever the intention to make such an estate determine with the heirs of A. The underlying idea appears to make the original grant (always provided the statutory restrictions have been complied with) equivalent to a grant to A, his heirs and assigns. In this connexion it would be necessary to bear in mind the following cases : 30 N L R 25[7] at page 28 which follows, on this point, 28 N L R 93.[8] That was a case relating to an occupancy tenancy and decides that either a mortgage or sub-lease determines with the tenant right. 28 N L R 93[8] in turn follows 10 C P L R 65.[9] In 28 N L R 93[8] after the mortgage with consent the mortgagor-tenant surrendered and so determined the tenancy but it was held that the tenancy must be deemed to continue : see 11 C P L R 5[10] and 12 C P L R 158[11] in order to work out the rights. This rule is as old, at least, as Coke upon Littleton. The view expressed by Ismay J. C. in 10 C P L R 65[9] (a case of absolute occupancy tenure) that > it is perfectly clear that (the absolute occupancy tenant) could mortgage nothing beyond his tenant rights and that those rights are extinguished

(if his heirs fail), is not supported by any authority or argument but carries the weight of the ipse dixit of a distinguished Judge. Cases (e.g. 6 C P L R 109[12]), which decide that a mortgage of an occupancy, as distinct from an absolute occupancy, tenancy comes to an end when the tenant dies without heirs are distinguishable. Even in such a case however it is a matter for consideration whether the mortgage does not subsist, if with the consent of the landlord, as being carved out of an estate equivalent to an estate to A, his heirs and assigns (subject to certain statutory restrictions) which would in equity subsist as long as the mortgagee or his heirs lasted. A mortgage is only a special kind of alienation. The distinguishing feature between such a tenancy and an absolute occupancy tenancy

6. Wasudeo Gharpure v. Ganu Kunbi, (1907) 3 N L R 185.

7. Shivlal v. Abdul Husain, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 255=148 I C 257=30 N L R 25.

8. Baldeoprasad v. Premnarain, (1932) 19 A I R Nag 107=139 I C 369=28 N L R 93.

9. Vithal Narain v. Ganpat Rao, (1897) 10 C P L R 65.

10. Diwan Maharajsha v. Abheram Gujar, (1898) 11 C P L R 5.

11. Saiyad Noor v. Ramji Patil, (1899) 12 C P L R 158.

12. Joharuddin v. Kesheorao, (1893) 6 C P L R 109.

is that assignability is much more restricted. We observe that so learned and experienced a Judge as B. K. Bose A. J. C., observed in 6 N L R 6[13] that (see page 10), > the title of the absolute occupancy tenant and that of his landlord rest on the same basis, namely a grant from the Government and again

> when the final decision to confer proprietary right was arrived at it was declared in the clearest terms that it was a 'free gift,' a 'creation' of the Government. The papers collected in the Settlement Code issued by Sir Richard Temple place the whole question beyond doubt or controversy.

It is urged that if this be so the absolute occupancy tenant is virtually in the same position as the malik makbuza. The answer is simple: he is subject to a variety of differences owing to the scheme of the settlement and the provisions of the various Tenancy Acts. Vis-a-vis the Crown the malguzar is what he always was as regards those lands—the person responsible for getting in the revenue. As Mr. Barway observes in his work on the Tenancy Law (Edn. 2), p. 148 "the absolute occupancy tenure is the creation of the settlement of the sixties." It may be remarked that the person later known as an "absolute occupancy tenant" was originally, in the Settlement and in the village papers (his rights were incorporated in the wajib-ul-arz), referred to as "absolute occupancy ryot." The conception of tenancy and landlord's rights did not enter into the matter. He could not be got rid of whether he did or did not pay rent; he could alienate his holding. It was heritable and assignable but between him and Government, doubtless for the better security of revenue, the malguzar, the quondam farmer of revenue, stood. The absolute occupancy tenant was not a proprietor because his landlord possessed a variety of rights, e. g. the right to pre-empt and the right, in some cases, to interfere with, or avoid, transfers or incumbrances.

The learned Judge attaches weight to the fact that an absolute occupancy tenant, under Sec. 89 of the present Tenancy Act (1920) [see S. 35 (1) of the Act of 1898 for the corresponding Section], surrenders his holding to the landlord and not to the Crown. Unquestionably the term "surrender" is a term well known in the English law and suggests the normal relationship of landlord and tenant; so also the definition of "tenant" and "landlord" suggests that the former holds land of the latter. The absolute occupancy tenant is a "tenant": S. 3. But equally clearly the "tenancy" is of a special kind, heritable and assignable. It springs out of Settlement and Statute. It does not amount to proprietorship, because it is subject to several fetters imposed by statute. One such fetter is that it cannot be mortgaged, so as to make the mortgage binding on the landlord, in certain circumstances here present, unless notice in writing has been given to the landlord: I L R (1937) Nag 208.[14] It is urged however that the right to avoid ended six years after the fact of the mortgage was known to the landlord or his predecessor-in-interest: 5 N L R 28.[15] Alternatively it is said that when the mortgage merged in the decree the right to avoid was lost, alternatively that thereafter the landlord's rights were controlled by the Act of 1920 (which was in force when the decree was passed) and not by the Act of 1898 (which was in force when the mortgage was made). Further it is said that S. 41 (7), which gives the right to avoid, only applies to a limited class of cases and the real remedy open to the landlord is to pre-empt. Sec. 41 is a Section that is very hard to construe. In the present Act it takes a very different form and sub-s. (7) finds no place. See Act of 1920, Sec. 6.

The scheme of the Section (we do not refer to sub-s. (1) which is logically unconnected with (2) to (8) and now forms a separate Section, (S. 5 in a very much modified form) so far as mortgages are concerned is to require mortgages above a certain figure, varying with rent, to be notified in writing to the landlord. The transfer is not to be completed until a month after notice given. The purpose of the notice is to enable the landlord to consider whether he will or will not pre-empt. If he decides to pre-empt then (sub-s. 4) he may "claim to purchase the absolute occupancy right at such value as a Revenue Officer, may on application made . . . . . fix." The Revenue Officer values on the basis of a property free from incumbrances. The landlord, if he buys at that price, gets the land free from incumbrance; the mortgagee gets a charge on the purchase money to the extent of the mortgage debt. The tenant is left with no land, but with a right to receive the purchase price subject to the mortgage debt. But "any transfer" (which includes sale, gift, or mortgage) "made in contravention of this Section," is voidable by the landlord (sub-sec. 7). If a tenant transfers possession to a third person in contravention of the provisions of the Section, and the landlord ejects the third person the tenant can apply to be reinstated on paying the costs incurred by the landlord. If the tenant does not apply or fails to pay within a limited time "his tenancy shall be deemed to have lapsed" (sub-s. 8). If a tenant-right has been mortgaged and is foreclosed the landlord has the right of pre-emption (S. 41 (5)).

13. Ragho v. Sadoo, (1910) 6 N L R 6=5 I C 428.

14. Ramkaran v. Kanhaiyalal, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 189=170 I C 71=I L R (1937) Nag 208.

15. Lukhmichand v. Ganpat, (1909) 5 N L R 28=1 I C 906.

All through the scheme appears to keep the land in the occupation of the tenant or failing him to give the landlord the right to acquire it at a fair market price. If that option is not exercised then the transfer is good. But into this scheme is imported the provision about avoiding. We can only say that on its true construction the Section appears to require notice to be given before a transfer is made to enable the landlord to decide what he will do. If that notice is not given and the transfer is completed then it is made in contravention of the provisions and is voidable. It is made in contravention for it is made without notice given and the Section requires that the transfer shall not be made until after a month from the date of the notice. It is argued that it is one thing to say that a landlord may avoid, another to say that a transfer is void against a landlord. In the first case the landlord must do something. Such a case would seem to fall under Art. 91 and not Art. 120 (though 5 N L R 28,[15] is against this) if the intervention of a Court is necessary. We think that here the landlord if in possession, as here, can treat the alienation as a nullity as against him: See 34 Cal 329.[16] If the mortgagee got possession then of course the landlord would have to take some active step to avoid, otherwise the mortgagee would get title when the right to sue for possession was lost. As to the argument that the provisions of the 1920 Act apply we are of the opinion that the fact that a decree for sale was obtained in a mortgage suit to which the landlord was not a party cannot affect the landlord's position one way or the other. The fact that that decree was obtained against persons who appear to have had no interest also does not in our opinion affect the matter. They were claiming to be heirs, they were intermeddlers and any rights the mortgagee had against the estate of the deceased he pursued by suing those intermeddlers to the same extent as if they had been the true representatives of the estate. There is no question of absence of good faith or collusion and we think that the resulting decree is binding on whoever gets the estate of the deceased. See A I R 1929 Mad 482[17] and 14 Lah 696[18] where the authorities are collected.

It follows from the above whatever may be the position if there be an escheat (which would be to the Crown) the landlord has the right to treat the mortgage as null as against him. That he has in effect done. He is in possession and can resist ejectment founded on the mortgage rights. It follows that we arrive at the same conclusion as the learned Judge though for different reasons. We agree with the view expressed that if the plaintiff wished to proceed on the basis that the mortgage bound the landlord and if he wanted to eject the landlord (who is in possession following upon a suit for possession) he should have impleaded the landlord in the mortgage suit and thus have given him, in any event, an opportunity to redeem. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

16. Bijoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi, (1907) 34 Cal 329=34 I A 87=5 C L J 334=11 C W N 424 (P C).

17. Govappa v. Govappa, (1929) 16 A I R Mad 482 =120 I C 65.

18. Mt. Karam Kaur v. Matwal Chand, (1933) 20 A I R Lah 380=141 I C 580=14 Lah 696= 34 P L R 511.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 95

GRILLE J.

Maroti Bansi Teli — Accused Applicant

v.

Emperor

Criminal Revn. No. 427 of 1938, Decided on 10th December 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Khamgaon, D/- 1st October 1938.

(a) Police Act (1861), S. 34 — Scope — Offence under S. 34 is cognizable offence.

If the power to arrest without a warrant is limited to any particular class of police officers, that does not prevent the offence being regarded as a cognizable one: 27 Cal 144 and A I R 1926 Bom 195, Rel. on.; 24 Cal 691, Ref. [P 97 C 1]

The phrase "it shall be lawful for any police officer to take into custody, without a warrant, any person who in his view commits any of such offences" is not to be construed as a conditional power : rather it limits the power to certain police officers, not by any category or class, but by the conditions existing at the time of the commission of the offence, and any police officer witnessing the offence has an unfettered power of arrest. Therefore an offence under S. 34 can be regarded as a cognizable offence. [P 97 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 56—Constable directed by station officer to arrest without warrant — Arrest cannot be effected without authority in writing required by S. 56.

Where a police constable is not acting independently but is acting on definite instructions from his station-house officer and is required by that officer to arrest a certain person without a warrant, the police constable cannot effect the arrest unless he has in his possession an authority in writing as required by S. 56 : A I R 1936 Rang 119, Foll. [P 97 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial — Practice — Accused assaulting police in uniform and declaring that he does not care for latter's authority—Matter should not be dealt with lightly.

To assault a constable in uniform, purporting to act in the execution of his duty with due moderation, and to declare that he (person assaulting) does not care for the authority of the police constable is a matter which should not be treated lightly. [P 97 C 2]

T. J. Kedar — for Applicant.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Order.—The facts found by the Appellate Court agreeing with the trial Court are as follows. In Malkapur town Abdulla, a police constable found one Subhan, a servant of the present applicant Maroti, causing obstruction on the road by unyoking a cart, an offence punishable under Sec. 34, Police Act. Abdulla attempted to take Subhan to the police station, but the latter declined to go and pointed out to Abdulla that he was in plain clothes and was not entitled to arrest him. Abdulla accepted this contention (whether he was right or wrong in so doing is immaterial) and went alone to the police station and reported what had occurred. The station-house officer then directed Abdul Samad, a constable in uniform, to accompany Abdulla and to effect the arrest. They waited for some time for the appearance of Subhan, who came with a laden cart and then Abdul Samad professed to arrest Subhan and explained that he could be released if he furnished bail. Subhan said that his master would furnish bail and called to Maroti, who came and instead of furnishing security abused the police and caught the uniformed constable Abdul Samad by the neck and struck him once or twice on the chest. Maroti has been convicted of offences punishable under Ss. 225 and 353, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 on each count, making a total of Rs. 200, with four months rigorous' imprisonment in default. It is contended in revision that no offence has been committed as the action of Abdul Samad was illegal, in the first place because the offence complained of was not a cognizable offence and secondly, that as Abdul Samad had been deputed to effect the arrest by the station-house officer, he should, in accordance with S. 56, Criminal P. C., have been furnished with written authority to effect the arrest, an authority which admittedly he had not got. The Magisterial Courts below have held that the offence was a cognizable offence, and the learned Additional District Magistrate held that Sec. 54, Criminal P. C., is not governed by S. 56 and that, although there was no written authority, the inherent right under S. 54 to arrest for a cognizable offence remained, and that Abdul Samad was aware of the commission of the offence by Subhan and that he was justified under Cl. 1 to S. 54 (1), Criminal P. C., in making the arrest.

The learned Additional District Magistrate has held that the offence is a cognizable one, although he has given no reasons for that view. It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the offence was not cognizable as under Sec. 34, Police Act, a police officer can only take a person into his custody without a warrant if any of the offences specified in S. 34 is committed within his view, and reliance is placed on the analogy of the decision in 24 Cal 691.[1] A cognizable offence is defined in S. 4 (f), Criminal P. C., as an offence for which a police officer may, in accordance with the Sch. 2 or under any law for the time being in force, arrest without warrant. We are not concerned here with the Sch. 2, Criminal P. C. In 24 Cal 691[1] it was held that, where any condition is attached to the power to arrest without warrant, the offence is not a cognizable offence, and that where, as under the Opium Act, the right of arresting without a warrant existed only in the event of the accused not furnishing the security required, a police officer could not lawfully arrest without a warrant and the offence is non-cognizable. It has been held in 27 Cal 144[2] and 50 Bom 344[3] that if the power to arrest without a warrant is limited to any particular class of police officers, that does not prevent the offence being regarded as a cognizable one; and it appears to me that the power which is given by Sec. 34, Police Act, falls within the latter category rather than the former. I do not consider that the phrase "it shall be lawful for any police officer to take into custody, without a warrant, any person who within his view commits any of such offences" is to be construed as a conditional power: rather it limits the power to certain police officers, not by any category or class, but by the conditions existing at the time of the commission of the offence, and any police officer witnessing the offence has an unfettered power of arrest.

1. Bahabal Shah v. Tarak Nath, (1897) 24 Cal 691.

On the second point however, the application is based on firmer ground, and the finding of the learned Additional District Magistrate that in this case the power to arrest existed independently of S. 56, Criminal P. C., cannot be upheld. The matter has been clearly set forth by Mosely J. in 13 Rang 754,[4] and I am in respectful agreement with the reasoning there advanced. Abdul Samad was in no way acting independently; no complaint had been made to him and no credible information had been received by him independently, but he was acting on definite instructions from his station-house officer to whom another constable had complained that he had been unable to effect the arrest. As he was acting under the orders of an officer in chrage of a police station and was required by that officer to arrest without a warrant, he should have been in possession of an order in writing. He was not in possession of such an order, and accordingly he had no authority to arrest Subhan. The argument advanced by the learned Advocate-General that the arrest was virtually one by Abdulla as he was present, cannot be maintained. Abdulla himself had considered that he had no authority to make the arrest, and it appears that his superior officer who was in charge of the station-house concurred in this view. Abdulla made no attempt to participate in the arrest, and he accompanied Abdul Samad for the purpose of pointing out the man to be arrested by the latter.

These facts however do not absolve the applicant. Although he is not guilty under Ss. 225 and 353, I. P. C., he is undoubtedly guilty of an assault and of causing hurt. The question of private defence does not arise as it has been found that no assault was made on him by Abdul Samad and he assaulted the uniformed constable without any provocation from him. Even if the activities of Abdul Samad had been directed against him personally, there would have been no right of private defence, since such right would have been debarred by the provisions of Sec. 99, I. P. C., as Abdul Samad was certainly acting as a public servant in good faith under colour of his office. The applicant was obviously aware that a constable in uniform was a public servant, and it may safely be postulated that he was quite unaware that Abdul Samad had technically no authority to make the arrest. Abdul Samad has stated that the applicant accompanied the assault with the remark that he would not recognise Government work and would not give security. This may be interpreted as meaning that he had no regard for what Government cared to do or ordered in respect of the arrest of his servant, and of the request that he should stand security for him. I consider that the applicant has been dealt with leniently. To assault a constable in uniform, purporting to act in the execution of his duty with due moderation, and to declare that he did not care for the authority of the police constable is not a matter which should be treated lightly. The conviction under Secs. 225 and 353 is altered to one under S. 323, I. P. C., as the blows to the constable must have caused bodily pain. The applicant is fortunate that he was not sentenced to a term of imprisonment. The fine of Rs. 200 will be maintained.

N.S./R.K. Conviction altered.

2. Empress v. Deodhar, (1900) 27 Cal 144.
3. Emperor v. Abasbhai, (1926) 13 A I R Bom 195=93 I C 967 = 27 Cr L J 503 = 50 Bom 344=28 Bom L R 272.
4. Mohamed Ismail v. Emperor, (1936) 23 A I R Rang 119=1936 Cr C 194= 161 I C 459=13 Rang 754=37 Cr L J 462.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 97

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Jagannath Ramkisan — Appellant.

v.

Jamnavallabh — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 7 of 1936, Decided on 26th September 1938, from appellate decree of Vivian Bose J., Reported in A I R 1936 Nag 218.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 6 (e) — Right to sue—Profits not due when attached becoming due and actually ascertained after attachment—Attached profits held mere right to sue and could not be transferred.

If what was attached had not accrued due at the date of the attachment, then what is later sold in virtue of that attachment is a mere right to sue. [P 98 C 1]

The profits in a certain village were attached on 12th May 1927. The profits became due on 1st June 1927 and were actually ascertained and paid by the lambardar to the cosharers on 25th January 1928. The profits attached were sold on 8th August 1928:

Held that as the subject-matter of the sale was a mere right to sue it could not be transferred: Case law discussed. [P 100 C 1]

K. B. Tare — for Appellant.

J. Sen and W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal from the judgment of Bose J., and the only grounds of appeal arise out of para. 7 of his judgment which is very short and can be put in extenso:

The last point urged, so far as this matter is concerned, is that even if the right to the profits had not accrued at the date of the attachment, it had certainly accrued at the date of the sale, and at the date of the suit, and therefore the present suit would lie. I do not agree. A Court cannot sell what has not been attached. If what was attached had not accrued due at the date of the attachment, then what is later sold in virtue of that attachment is a mere right to sue. That, as I have pointed out, is not allowed by law. Therefore the entire right has to be decided, with reference to the rights of the plaintiffs or their predecessors, as they existed at the date of the attachment.

Of that the critical sentence is: "A Court cannot sell what has not been attached." According to the argument of counsel for the appellants there is doubt as to the accuracy of this observation bearing in mind the decision in A I R 1926 Mad 211[1] and the case there cited. But we do not stay to consider that point because, in our opinion, there is no question here of a Court selling what has not been attached. There was an attachment and the question really is whether what was attached can be transferred.

Before we come to examine that question we set on one side an interesting argument that has been urged before us founded on the view that profits in a village share dissociated from the share are immovable property while yet unascertained. The argument is founded upon the General Clauses Act, Section 3 (25), which says that for purposes of that or other Acts immovable property means and includes "benefits to arise out of land." Therefore it is said that profits which arise out of land are immovable property and are attachable. In support of this argument Ss. 2 (13) and 60, Civil P. C., are referred to. Therefore, it is said that as these are benefits to arise out of land they cannot be regarded as "a mere right to sue" which cannot be transferred under Sec. 6 (e), T. P. Act. That is an entirely new point which clearly was never made in the Court below because Bose J., who is scrupulously careful to deal with every point that has been raised before him, has not mentioned this at all, and it is a point of such novelty that had it been raised any Judge would have adverted to it if only to set it on one side. We are therefore of the opinion that it is not open to the appellant in this Court in Letters Patent Appeal to take that point.

That leaves the question as to whether this was a property of such a kind that it can be transferred. It is conceded by counsel for the respondents that as in A I R 1926 Nag 396[2] (imperfectly reported in 22 N L R 108), the share-holder's right to recover from the lambardar his (the share-holder's) share of the profits collected by the lambardar is not a mere right to sue: 56 Bom 403.[3] There, there was a lambardar of a certain village and in that village he had as cosharer a malguzar owning a 4 anna share. The lambardar failed to render account. The 4 annas share-holder transferred his share to the plaintiff-appellant by a registered sale deed which comprised amongst other property also the vendor's right to recover his share of profits for the aforesaid years. The plaintiff subsequently sued. The defence taken was that the assignment of the right to recover the profits was void in view of Sec. 6 (e), T. P. Act. On those facts, it is conceded by counsel for the respondent that there you had not a mere right to sue; you had a right to sue linked up with the rights of a share-holder, and therefore the basis of the English rule that a mere right to sue is not transferable disappears. In (1920) 1 K B 399,[4] Warrington L. J., quoting Parker J., at p. 409 observes:

1. Subramania Ayyar v. Krishna Aiyar, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 211=92 I C 833=51 M L J 172.

2. Lachmi Narayan v. Dharamchand, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 396=97 I C 189.

3. Shankarappa v. Khatumbi, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 478=141 I C 488=56 Bom 403=34 Bom L R 991.

4. Ellis v. Torrington, (1920) 1 K B 399=89 L J K B 369=122 L T 361=36 T L R 82.

I have looked at a good many authorities on that point, and I am satisfied that the real reason why equity did not allow the assignment of a bare right of action, whether legal or equitable, was on the ground that it savoured of or was likely to lead to maintenance. . . . . The question was whether the subject-matter of the assignment was, in the view of the Court, property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, or was a bare right to bring an action either at law or in equity.

Again, (this time the learned Judge quotes Stirling L. J.):

An assignment of a mere right of litigation is bad, (1835) 1 Y & C Ex 481,[5] but an assignment of property is valid.

Scrutton L. J. observes at page 410:

On a careful consideration of the authorities, which have been cited to us, I find no principle of law to countenance the objection taken to this assignment. The objection is this: The appellant's lessor has assigned to the present owner of the property the right to sue on the appellant's covenant to keep the premises in repair or pay damages; it is said that this assignment is impossible because it contravenes the law of champerty and maintenance. It is elementary knowledge that for a long time Courts of common law and Courts of equity differed as to how far choses in action, and particularly causes of action, could be assigned. The common law treated debts as personal obligations and assignments of debts merely as assignments of the right to bring an action at law against the debtor and, except in a strictly limited number of cases, did not recognize any such assignments. Courts of equity always took a different view. They treated debts as property, and the necessity of an action at law to reduce the property into possession they regarded merely as an incident which followed on the assignment of the property. I am stating the effect of the judgment of Cozens-Hardy L. J. in (1905) 2 K B 364.[6] But there came a point on which both Courts would have agreed; to assign a bare right of action, a bare power to bring an action was not permitted in either Court; and the reason was as pointed out by Warrington L. J. that both Courts treated such an assignment as offending against the law of maintenance or champerty or both. But early in the development of the law the Courts of equity and perhaps the Courts of common law also took the view that where the right of action was not a bare right, but was incident or subsidiary to a right in property, an assignment of the right of action was permissible, and did not savour of champerty or maintenance.

It is true that in India there is no law against maintenance and the ratio decidendi of the long line of cases which restricts the assignability of bare rights of action in England is non-existent. But the Legislature in S. 6, T. P. Act, has enacted as follows:

Property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this Act, or by any other law for the time being in force. . . . . (e) A mere right to sue cannot be transferred.

A mere right to sue and a bare cause of action are, in our opinion, substantially the same things. Therefore a mere right to proceed against the lambardar for an account of profits and payment of the sum found due by a person who is otherwise uninterested in the estate from which those profits arise would appear to be non-transferable. That is what in fact was sold. It is to be noticed that this action by the purchaser founded on that transfer is against the lambardar for a decree for profits as may be found due on taking accounts. Of course, different considerations would arise had the sale been after the profits had become due and after they had been ascertained. Then this case would have fallen into the class of cases where a debt is assignable, it may be. However that may be here we are dealing with the following facts: The attachment of the profits was on 12th May 1927. The profits became due on 1st June 1927. They were actually ascertained and paid by the lambardar to the co-sharers on 25th January 1928. The profits attached were sold on 8th August 1928, and the suit was brought on 19th July 1929. It will be seen therefore that the sale was after the profits had become due and had been ascertained. The difficulty in the purchaser's way however is due to the fact that what was sold was what was attached. At least that would seem to be the case. But a clarification of that point is not easy owing to the fact that neither the sale certificate nor the warrant of attachment is in the paper book. We have had an informal translation made of them both and the warrant of attachment contains the following list of properties to be attached:

Rs. 300 is due by lambardar Radhaballabh, son of Jagannath, by caste a Brahmin, resident of Barakhadkala, Tahsil Seoni, on account of Samvat 1983. Profits of 7 annas 4 pies share of Mauza Barakhadkala belonging to the judgment-debtor may therefore be attached. It be not redelivered to the judgment-debtor or to anybody else until further orders of the Court.

It is that which, according to the certificate of sale, was sold:

Rs. 300 is due by the lambardar Radhaballabh, son of Jagannath, Brahmin of Barakhadkala, Tahsil Seoni-Malwa, on account of Samvat 1983 (1926-27 A.D.). Profits of 7 annas 4 pies share of Mauza Barakhadkala belonging to the judgment-debtor has therefore been sold by auction.

In 41 Cal 590[7] at p. 598 their Lordships of the Privy Council were considering whether a certain property was sold unencumbered or encumbered. It had been sold under a decree. It was described in the schedule to the application for execution and in the proclamation of sale as a 6 anna share subject to an existing mortgage. After the sale had been confirmed, the auction-purchaser applied for a certificate of sale alleging that a mistake had been made in the schedule by the omission of the word "not", and asked to have the purchased property declared to be a 6 anna share not encumbered by a mortgage. The alleged mistake was stated to have been corrected before the sale by an advertisement in the Calcutta Gazette. Their Lordships observed at page 598 :

5. Prosser v. Edmonds, (1835) 1 Y & C Ex 481 = 160 E R 196=41 R R 322.
6. Fitzroy v. Cave, (1905) 2 K B 364=74 L J K B 829=93 L T 499=54 W R 17=21 T L R 612.
7. Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari, (1913) 41 Cal 590 = 21 I C 936 = 41 I A 38 (P C).

> . . . this is a very plain case. That which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the Schedule to which the attachment refers. In the present case that property was six annas subject to an existing mortgage. The effect of the certificate of sale granted by the order of the Subordinate Judge is to make the sale that of a property not attached, namely, the six unencumbered annas, a property which could not be sold in such proceedings inasmuch as it was not the property attached.
>
> An attempt was made to treat the matter as a case of misdescription, which could be treated as a mere irregularity. But in this case we have to deal with identity and not description.

Applying that reasoning to this case here what was attached was the profits (which are stated wrongly to be Rs. 300 and which were found to be not Rs. 300 but some Rs. 190). The purchase price was Rs. 80. As we have above observed the subject-matter so described was "a mere right to sue." Therefore it could not be transferred. That makes it, in our opinion, unnecessary to refer to the very numerous cases that have been cited before us on this small but intricate matter in which the following points have been argued :

A sale without previous attachment is not wholly void : 21 All 311[8] at page 313, 18 Cal 188[9] and A I R 1926 Mad 211.[1] A distinction between assignable and non-assignable claims may depend in certain cases on whether the claim is for a liquidated sum, for a sum due in præsenti or in futuro, but will never include what is a mere claim for an account : 30 All 246,[10] 50 All 507,[11] 3 Rang 235,[12] A I R 1929 Cal 352,[13] 3 Pat 575,[14] 11 Pat 266,[15] 19 N L J 16,[16] 51 Cal 972,[17] 31 N L R 142,[18] 31 N L R 235[19] and 62 Cal 510.[20] Thus, for example, it was held by Niyogi J. in 31 N L R 142[18] that :

> The right to recover damages arising out of a breach of contract is a mere right to sue and is incapable of being assigned under law unless the amount of damages recoverable is in the nature of a debt being a liquidated sum or beneficial interest in any moveable property;

and again in 31 N L R 235[19] :

> A mortgagee's failure to discharge his liability under an agreement to pay part of the consideration of the mortgage to the mortgagor's creditor does not entitle the mortgagor to recover the amount as a debt but gives a right to the mortgagor to claim damages, which is a mere right to sue and is not property capable of assignment or of attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the mortgagor.

If the subject-matter of the sale is, as the Judicial Committee observed in the case above cited, 41 Cal 590[7] at p. 598, of necessity the subject-matter of the attachment where the sale is a judicial sale following upon attachment, the crucial date for determining what is so is the date of the attachment : 51 Cal 548[21] at page 555. The various cases cited in reply by the appellants do not, in our opinion, assist the matter because they were all cases where what was assigned was not a mere right to sue but are of the same order as that dealt with in A I R 1926 Nag 396.[2] Thus, in A I R 1933 Mad 710[22] the claim was by a cosharer against another co-

8. Sheodhyan v. Bholanath, (1899) 21 All 311=1899 A W N 84.
9. Kishory Mohan Roy v. Mahomed Mujaffar Hossein, (1891) 18 Cal 188.
10. Sher Singh v. Sri Ram, (1908) 30 All 246=1908 A W N 101=5 A L J 251.
11. Lachman v. Jarbandhan, (1928) 15 A I R All 193=108 I C 229=50 All 507=26 A L J 253.
12. Maung Thein Zan v. S. A. S. Firm, (1925) 12 A I R Rang 318=89 I C 794=3 Rang 235.
13. Habibulla v. Jogendra Nath, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 352=121 I C 751=33 C W N 282.
14. Jai Narayan Pande v. Kishnu Dutta Misra, (1924) 11 A I R Pat 551=78 I C 705=3 Pat 575=5 P L T 581.
15. Manmatha Nath v. Hedait Ali, (1932) 19 A I R P C 32=135 I C 635=11 Pat 266 = 59 I A 41 (P C).
16. Bapu Sakharam v. Shrinandanlal, (1935) 19 N L J 16=167 I C 843.
17. Khetra Mohan Das v. Biswa Nath, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 1047=82 I C 411=51 Cal 972=40 C L J 79=28 C W N 894.
18. Mt. Powri v. Shiwa, (1935) 22 A I R Nag 2=156 I C 487=31 N L R 142.
19. Mohanlal v. Motilal, (1935) 22 A I R Nag 135=157 I C 587=31 N L R 235.
20. Ghisulal Ganeshilal v. Gambhirmal Pandya, (1935) 62 Cal 510=39 C W N 606.
21. Najimunnessa Bibi v. Nacharuddin Sardar, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 744=83 I C 233=51 Cal 548=39 C L J 418.
22. Vallavaraya v. Ramaswami Naidu, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 710=145 I C 228.

sharer in possession. In 5 Rang 145[23] the assignment was by a beneficiary of his interest in income and it was held that his interest being vested he had an estate which was not a mere right to sue. A I R 1933 Cal 461[24] advances the matter no further because that was a claim for money had and received and no such difficulty as here present arose. A claim for money had and received is very different from the sort of claim that was assigned in this case. It follows therefore in our opinion that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

23. Ma Yait v. Mahomed Ebrahim, (1927) 14 A I R Rang 165 = 102 I C 690 = 5 Rang 145.
24. Rajeshwar v. Yadali, (1933) 20 A I R Cal 461 = 145 I C 123=57 C L J 46.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 101

NIYOGI J.

W. R. Pandit — Appellant.

v.

S. R. Pandit — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 119 of 1937, Decided on 31st October 1938.

 Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 144, 151 and 47 — Suit remanded—Meanwhile in application for execution defendant depositing sum which plaintiff withdrew — On remand fresh decree passed for lesser amount than that deposited — Defendant applying for refund of surplus —Refund held could be granted under S. 151 upon principle of S. 144—Right to claim refund held accrued on date of fresh decree and not from order of remand—S. 47 held also applied.

Restitution in a case not strictly falling within the terms of S. 144 should be made upon the equitable principle underlying S. 144 and in exercise of the inherent power of the Court to prevent abuse of its process : A I R 1922 P C 269; A I R 1919 Bom 175; A I R 1931 Cal 42 and A I R 1937 Mad 150, Rel. on ; A I R 1929 Cal 814, Not foll. [P 102 C 1]

A decree passed against a defendant was set aside in appeal preferred by him and the case was remanded for trial on 23rd November 1931. In the meantime, plaintiff applied for execution of the decree and the defendant deposited a certain amount which was subsequently withdrawn by the plaintiff. On remand, the Court passed a decree on 25th March 1933 for an amount lesser than what defendant had deposited. So, on 16th March 1936, defendant applied for refund of so much of the amount as was received by the plaintiff in excess of what was due to him under the fresh decree :

Held that although Sec. 144 did not in terms apply, Court could grant refund upon the principle of S. 144 under its inherent powers. [P 102 C 1]

Held further that defendant's application was in time as the right to claim refund accrued to him only when the fresh decree was passed after remand and not from the order of Appellate Court remanding the suit: A I R 1923 Nag 101, Rel. on. [P 102 C 2]

Held also that S. 47 also applied to the facts of the case, as the defendant was claiming only the surplus left after satisfying the decree and as such the matter related to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree : A I R 1930 P C 86; 27 All 485; A I R 1920 Bom 12 and A I R 1923 All 394 (F B), Rel. on. [P 102 C 2]

P. S. Chiney — for Appellant.

R. G. Rau — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a decree-holder's appeal from an order passed on 20th February 1937 by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, in execution proceedings arising out of Civil Suit No. 8 of 1932.

The appellant filed his suit on 30th April 1928 against the respondents claiming Rs. 5862-6-0 on account of village profits. His claim for Rs. 4713 with interest and costs amounting to Rs. 529-6-3 was decreed on 20th March 1930. On appeal by the respondent to the Judicial Commissioner's Court, that decree was set aside and the suit was remitted to the lower Court for further trial on 23rd November 1931. In the meantime, the appellant applied for execution of his decree and the respondent deposited Rs. 5787-5-3 on 24th July 1930, which amount the appellant withdrew on 28th July 1930. After remand the Court passed a fresh decree on 25th March 1933 for Rs. 4292-15-3 with interest and costs amounting to Rs. 485-12-0, overlooking the payment already made by the respondent. On 16th March 1936, the respondent applied for refund of Rs. 1008-8-0 which according to him the appellant had received in excess of what was due to him under the fresh decree. In the course of the proceedings which followed this application, the decree passed on 25th March 1933 was amended on 2nd December 1936. The appellant contested the application on the grounds that it was not maintainable under S. 144, Civil P. C., that it was barred by time and lastly that he was entitled to interest up to the date of the fresh decree, i. e. 25th March 1933. The lower Court negatived these contentions and held that the respondent's application was maintainable under S. 151, Civil P. C., if not under S. 144, Civil P. C., that the appellant was entitled to charge interest only upto 28th July 1930 on which date he withdrew the amount deposited in Court and further that the respondent was entitled to interest on the balance due to him from 28th July 1930 to 20th February 1937. It thus ordered the appellant to pay back Rs. 433-6-0 with interest Rs. 170-10-0, total Rs. 604.

The correctness of this order is questioned in this appeal. There is divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether S. 144, Civil P. C., applies to cases such as the present. In 57 Cal 226,[1] it was held that it strictly applies to cases where the decree of the Court of first instance is varied or reversed on appeal. A different view was taken in 43 Bom 235[2] and 34 C W N 746[3] (Mukerji J. dissenting). In A I R 1937 Mad 150[4] it was held that restitution in a case not strictly falling within the terms of S. 144, Civil P. C., should be made upon the equitable principle underlying S. 144 and in exercise of the inherent power of the Court to prevent abuse of its process. This view appears to be sound in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council made in A I R 1922 P C 269[5] which will repay quotation :

> It is the duty of the Court under Sec. 144, Civil P. C., to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed. Nor indeed does this duty or jurisdiction arise merely under the said Section. It is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved. As was said by Cairns L. C. in (1871) L R 3 P C 465[6] at page 475 one of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors and when the expression 'act of the Court' is used, it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court, or of an intermediate Court of appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case.

In the present case the decree of the original Court was revised but the suit was not dismissed ; it was remanded for further trial and decision. Although Sec. 144, Civil P. C., does not in terms apply, its principle must apply to the present case. The Court in that case would be exercising its inherent power under S. 151, Civil P. C., to do that justice between the parties which the circumstances and the necessities of the case demand. The only question is as to the date from which the period of limitation under Art. 182, Limitation Act, should be computed. Regard being had to the fact that the respondent disputed not the appellant's right to recover his share of profits but only the amount that he was entitled to, it would be clear that the appellate order remanding the suit did not give him a right to claim restitution. That right would accrue to him only after a fresh decree was passed after remand on 25th March 1933. The period of limitation must therefore be computed from that date as was done in 18 N L R 200.[7] The view taken by the lower Court was therefore correct and must be upheld. Apart from S. 144 and S. 151, Civil P. C., I am disposed to think that this case is amply covered by S. 47, Civil P. C. That Section has been held to apply to cases where a decree-holder wrongly takes property in execution (see 34 C W N 425[8]), or takes it in execution of a decree which is subsequently amended : see 27 All 483,[9] see also 44 Bom 702[10] and 45 All 369.[11] In the present case the respondent did not claim a refund of the whole amount paid by him but only the surplus that was left after satisfying the decree. That is a matter which relates to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree and arises between the parties to the suit. The respondent complained that the appellant had been overpaid and that he had no legal right to appropriate anything in excess of his decree. There can be no doubt that Sec. 47, Civil P. C., governs the case.

The question which survives for consideration is whether interest was rightly granted to the appellant. Whether the case is governed by the equitable principle underlying Sec. 144, Civil P. C., or Sec. 47, Civil P. C., the Court had full power to grant interest in the circumstances of the case. The appellant himself was awarded

1. Ashutosh Nandi v. Kundalkamini Dasi, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 814=125 I C 645=57 Cal 226=33 C W N 908.
2. Shivbai v. Yesoo, (1919) 6 A I R Bom 175=48 I C 130=43 Bom 235=20 Bom L R 925.
3. Ramanath Karmakar v. Asanulla, (1931) 18 A I R Cal 42=130 I C 236=52 C L J 505=34 C W N 746.
4. Kandaswami Mudali v. Annamalai Reddi, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 150=167 I C 258=71 M L J 795.
5. Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath, (1922) 9 A I R P C 269=69 I C 278=2 Pat 10=49 I A 351 (P C).
6. Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, (1871) L R 3 P C 465=7 Moore P C (N S) 314=40 L J P C 1=24 L T 111=19 W R 449.
7. Sonba v. Parashram, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 101=76 I C 255=18 N L R 200.
8. Julien Marret v. Mahomed Khaleel Shirazi & Sons, (1930) 17 A I R P C 86=122 I C 11=34 C W N 425 (P C).
9. Harnam Chandar v. Muhammad Yar Khan, (1905) 27 All 485=2 ALJ 169=1905 AWN 63.
10. Swamirao v. Valentine, (1920) 7 A I R Bom 12=57 I C 125=44 Bom 702=22 Bom L R 403.
11. Bindeshri Prasad Tiwari v. Badal Singh, (1923) 10 A I R All 394=74 I C 873=45 All 369=21 A L J 228 (F B).

interest on the amount decreed in his favour from the date of the suit to the date of realization, and if he was entitled to claim interest on the amount due to him, in equity it must follow that his opponent also was entitled to claim it. The lower Court was therefore right in awarding interest to the respondent. The result is that the appeal stands dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee rupees nil.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 103

NIYOGI J.

Bisham Chand Jagannath Sao Lakhura — Appellant.

v.

Kisanlal Sheosing Agarwal — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 202 of 1937, Decided on 28th November 1938.

 (a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 27 (2) and 43 (1)— Court has power to extend time to apply for discharge — Lapse of time originally fixed does not automatically bring about annulment of adjudication.

In view of S. 27 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, and S. 5 of that Act read with S. 148, Civil P. C., the Insolvency Court has power to extend time under S. 43 (1) and the mere lapse of time originally fixed by the Court without an application for discharge having been made by the insolvent cannot automatically bring about the annulment of the order of adjudication : A I R 1930 Rang 166, Dissent.; A I R 1928 Pat 338 ; A I R 1924 Cal 777 ; A I R 1930 Mad 389 ; A I R 1933 All 230 and A I R 1929 Nag 11, Rel. on. [P 104 C 2]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 30 — Failure of publication of order of adjudication in Gazette is mere irregularity and does not vitiate validity of order.

Neither the validity of the order of adjudication nor of the proceedings subsequent to it depend on the publication of the notice of the order of adjudication in the local Official Gazette. The object of the publication is to provide conclusive evidence in all legal proceedings of an order of adjudication having been duly made and its date. Want of notice is a mere irregularity and cannot vitiate the proceedings : 19 P R 1900 and A I R 1930 Oudh 53, Rel. on. [P 104 C 2]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Sec. 41 (1) — Omission to give notice of application for discharge is not irregularity if no creditor had proved his debt.

Omission to give notice of the application for discharge as required by Sec. 41 (1) is no irregularity if none of the creditors had proved his debt. The notice is only required to be given to those creditors who prove their debts : (1877) 6 Ch D 57, Ref. [P 105 C 1]

(d) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Secs. 28 (2) and 44 (2)—Order of discharge does not terminate insolvency proceedings—After order of discharge, insolvent's property does not become available to his creditors to be proceeded against in ordinary Civil Court.

Until the insolvency proceedings are terminated by a formal order or the order of adjudication is annulled, the property which is vested in the insolvency Court under S. 28 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, cannot revert to the insolvent. Since the insolvency proceedings do not terminate with the order of discharge of the insolvent, his creditor would be precluded by S. 28 (2) from enforcing his remedy in any other Court or in any other manner, except in the Insolvency Court and in the manner provided in the Insolvency Act. Hence after the order of discharge the insolvent's property cannot become available to his creditors to be proceeded against in the ordinary Civil Court : A I R 1937 Nag 171, Disting.; A I R 1918 Sind 38 and A I R 1926 Rang 2, Expl. ; A I R 1931 Lah 725 and A I R 1927 Mad 919, Rel. on. [P 105 C 2]

(e) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Secs. 34 (2) and 44 — Order of discharge — Subsequent application for execution by decree-holder who had no notice of insolvency proceedings — To recover his debt decree-holder would have to seek recourse to insolvency Court.

Where after the order of discharge of the insolvent, the decree-holder who had no notice of the insolvency proceedings applies for execution of his decree, he would have to seek recourse to the insolvency Court for recovering his debt even if he had no notice of the insolvency proceedings and was not represented in it : A I R 1933 All 340, Rel. on. [P 106 C 1]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.

C. B. Parakh — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a decree-holder's appeal from an order passed on 19th July 1937 in Misc. Appeal No. B-9 of 1936, decided in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Balaghat. A decree was jointly obtained by the appellant and his uncle Ramnath in Civil Suit No. 380 of 1936 against the respondent for Rs. 652-8-0 and costs. The respondent was adjudged an insolvent on 13th July 1933 and he was ordered to apply for his discharge within six months. Ramnath, the appellant's uncle, had received notice of the insolvency proceedings and his name was brought on the schedule of creditors on the basis of the judgment debt. The Insolvency Court had on 5th October 1933 directed the respondent insolvent to deposit fees for the publication of the order of adjudication in the Local Government Gazette, but it was not published as he failed to deposit them. On 17th April 1934 the insolvent applied for extension of time for his discharge and the Insolvency Court granted him retrospective extension up to that date, and the insolvent applied for discharge on the same day whereon the Court passed an order granting him discharge. The Court remarked that as no creditor proved his debt it was unnecessary to give to the creditors notice of the application for discharge. On 31st January 1935 the appellant applied for execution of his decree in Civil Suit No. 380 of 1936 in the Court in which it was passed. He recovered Rs. 20 from the respondent under a warrant of attachment. The respondent applied to the Court stating that he had been granted an absolute discharge on 17th April 1934 by the Insolvency Court and that the appellant had no right to execute the decree against him and prayed for an order of refund of Rs. 20. His application succeeded in both the Courts below.

On behalf of the appellant several contentions are raised which I shall deal with seriatim. In the first instance, it is urged that the insolvent having failed to apply for his discharge within the period of six months specified in the order of adjudication the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time and further that the adjudication must be deemed to have been annulled. There is no doubt authority for the view presented here. In 8 Rang 187[1] it was held that the provisions of S. 43 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, are mandatory so that if an insolvent does not apply for his discharge within the period officially specified, the adjudication must necessarily be annulled. The authority of this ruling was however considerably shaken by a contrary view taken by the same Court in 8 Rang 506[2] and by 11 Rang 287[3] where the correctness of that view was doubted. The weight of the authority is decidedly against the view taken in the first named case. In 7 Pat 375[4] it was held that the Insolvency Court had power under Sec. 27 (2), Insolvency Act, and also under Sec. 148, Civil P. C., to extend the period for giving an opportunity to the insolvent to apply for discharge under Sec. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act. It was also held that the order of adjudication does not ipso facto come into operation by the expiry of the period fixed, but has to be determined by the Court which has seisin of the case until it is so determined and has power to extend the time under S. 27 regardless of the period originally fixed. The same view was taken in 51 Cal 337.[5] In 53 Mad 288[6] the question whether a Court has jurisdiction to extend the time originally fixed under S. 27 for an application by the debtor for discharge, after the expiry of that time but before an order of annulment is passed under S. 43, either under S. 5, Insolvency Act, read with S. 148, Civil P. C., or otherwise, was referred to a Full Bench of the Madras High Court and the Full Bench gave its opinion that a Court has jurisdiction to extend the time originally fixed under S. 27, Provincial Insolvency Act, for an application by the debtor for discharge after the expiry of that time but before an order of annulment is passed under S. 43 of the Act. It was held in 55 All 241[7] that the failure of the insolvent to apply for discharge during the period specified by the Court did not automatically lead to the annulment of adjudication. This was also the view of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court, Nagpur, as is clear from the decision reported in A I R 1929 Nag 11.[8] In view of S. 27 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, and S. 5 of that Act read with Sec. 148, Civil P. C., I have no doubt in my mind that the Insolvency Court has power to extend time under S. 43 (1) and that the mere lapse of time originally fixed by the Court without an application for discharge having been made by the insolvent cannot automatically bring about the annulment of the order of adjudication.

The next contention is that the insolvency proceedings were void and illegal in consequence of the order of adjudication not having been published in the Gazette as required by S. 30 of that Act. In my opinion neither the validity of the order of adjudication nor of the proceedings subsequent to it depend on the publication of the notice of the order of adjudication in the local official Gazette. The object of the publication is to provide conclusive evidence in all legal proceedings of an order of adjudication having been duly made and its date. Want of notice is a mere irregularity and cannot vitiate the proceeding : see 19

1. Bindraban Dinanath v. Official Receiver to C. T. A. R. A. Firm, (1930) 17 A I R Rang 166=125 I C 346=8 Rang 187.
2. R. M. K. R. M. Chettyar v. Ko Po Thit, (1931) 18 A I R Rang 27=128 I C 841=8 Rang 506.
3. Jaing Bir Singh v. R. K. Banerjee, (1933) 20 A I R Rang 223=145 I C 320 = 11 Rang 287 (F B).
4. Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram, (1928) 15 A I R Pat 338=107 I C 830=7 Pat 375 = 9 P L T 329 (F B).
5. Abraham v. Sookias, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 777 = 81 I C 584=51 Cal 337.
6. Palani Goundan v. Official Receiver, Coimbatore, (1930) 17 A I R Mad 389 = 124 I C 61= 53 Mad 288=58 M L J 369 (F B).
7. Madho Prasad Vyas v. Madho Prasad, (1933) 20 A I R All 230=145 I C 668=55 All 241= 1933 A L J 117.
8. Ganpat v. Harigir, (1929) 16 A I R Nag 11= 113 I C 357.

P R 1900[9] and A I R 1930 Oudh 53.[10] It is next urged that the order of discharge was invalidated in consequence of the omission to give notice of the application for discharge as required by S. 41 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act. There was no irregularity inasmuch as none of the creditors had proved his debt. The notice is only required to be given to those creditors who prove their debts: see (1877) 6 Ch D 57.[11]

It is vigorously argued that although the order of discharge of the insolvent would absolve the insolvent personally from payment of the debt it would not exempt his property from liability to pay the debt. Reference is made to I L R (1937) Nag 380;[12] but that was a case which arose on an application made by the creditor in the Insolvency Court. It is no doubt open to the creditor as pointed by the lower Court to prove his debt in the Insolvency Court but the question is whether it is open to a creditor to enforce his debt in the Court of ordinary civil jurisdiction. The learned counsel for the appellant argues on the authority in 47 I C 771[13] and 3 Rang 492[14] that after the order of discharge the adjudication order is automatically vacated with the result that the insolvent's property becomes available to his creditors to be proceeded against in the ordinary Civil Court. The first mentioned case does not appear to have any bearing on the present issue. In that case the insolvent had not appeared to claim discharge and the Court ordered the proceedings to be struck off the file and sent to the record-room. The creditor filed a suit subsequent to that order and it was held that the insolvency proceedings would be deemed to be pending until the receiver and the insolvent were discharged. If the proceedings would pend until the receiver is discharged and as this event may well in the majority of cases be conceived to happen subsequent to the insolvent's discharge, the inevitable inference is that the insolvency proceedings remain pending despite an order discharging the insolvent. This case therefore lends no assistance to the appellant's argument. On the other hand, in A I R 1931 Lah 725[15] it was pointed out that the discharge of the insolvent does not necessarily end the insolvency proceedings and that the insolvency Court's power is not taken away on account of the insolvent's discharge. In 3 Rang 492[14] the view was indeed taken that when the Court under S. 42, Provincial Insolvency Act, refused to discharge an insolvent, the proceedings must be taken to have been terminated so as to leave the way open to a judgment-creditor to execute his decree in the Civil Court. This case is not directly relevant and does not call for examination, but it may be observed that it was dissented from in 6 Rang 27[16] and a different view was taken in 53 M L J 422.[17] It appears to me clear that until the insolvency proceedings terminated by a formal order or the order of adjudication is annulled, the property which is vested in the Insolvency Court under S. 28 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, cannot revert to the insolvent. The effect of the discharge order is to enable the bankrupt to contract freely and to acquire property without being hampered by any statutory restrictions. Under Sec. 44 (2), the order of discharge has the effect of releasing the bankrupt from all debts provable in bankruptcy. Now, if the debts are deemed to be discharged and the insolvent is exonerated from any personal liability to pay, and the insolvent's property remains vested in the Insolvency Court, I fail to see how a creditor whose debt is scheduled in the Insolvency Court can claim to recover the debt otherwise than by moving the Insolvency Court. Since the insolvency proceedings do not terminate with the order of discharge of the insolvent, his creditor would be precluded by S. 28 (2) from enforcing his remedy in any other Court or in any other manner, except in the Insolvency Court and in the manner provided in the Insolvency Act.

Next it is urged that there was an irregularity in not bringing the legal representatives of Ramnath on the record of the insolvency proceedings and that this circumstance vitiated the proceedings includ-

9. Gillmore v. Bulaki Mal, (1900) 19 P R 1900.
10. Har Kishore v. Masum Ali Khan, (1930) 17 A I R Oudh 53 = 124 I C 368=5 Luck 479= 6 O W N 1093.
11. Ex parte Rylands ; In re Chesters, (1877) 6 Ch D 57.
12. Suka v. Ramchandra, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 171 =170 I C 161=I L R (1937) Nag 380.
13. Jivanji Mamooji v. Ghulam Hussain, (1918) 5 A I R Sind 88=47 I C 771=12 S L R 20.
14. Maung Po Toke v. Maung Po Gyi, (1926) 13 A I R Rang 2=92 I C 142=3 Rang 492.
15. Ram Chand v. Mohra Shah, (1931) 18 A I R Lah 725=135 I C 511=33 P L R 524.
16. Tan Seik Ke v. C. A. M. C. T. Firm, (1928) 15 A I R Rang 109=109 I C 769=6 Rang 27.
17. Alamelu Ammal v. Venkatarama Aiyar, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 919=105 I C 165=50 Mad 977 =53 M L J 422.

ing the order of discharge. I do not think that the appellant can have any grievance inasmuch as he is not the legal representative but an original creditor along with the deceased Ramnath. Ramnath himself did not care to prove his debt and presumably his legal representatives would be bound by the legal result of that omission. In fine, one point remains to be noticed. It is urged that the appellant had no notice of insolvency proceedings and that consequently the insolvency proceedings should, so far as he was concerned, be deemed to have no effect. It has been already pointed out that his elder brother who was the manager had received notice and that he did not care to prove the debt. The appellant was therefore fully represented in the insolvency proceedings. Assuming that he was not, he would nevertheless have to seek recourse to the Insolvency Court for recovering his debt : see A I R 1933 All 340.[18] The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

18. Pirthi Raj v. Vishnu Das, (1933) 20 A I R All 340=144 I C 888.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 106

NIYOGI J.

Mt. Bhagwati and another—Appellants.

v.

G. I. P. Railway — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 177 of 1937, Decided on 21st November 1938, from order of Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation and District Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 14th June 1937.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), Sec. 10 (1) —Interpretation — Sec. 10 does not lay down period of limitation regarding proceedings for recovery of compensation before Commissioner.

The word 'institute' in Section 10 (1) does not refer to the proceedings before the Commissioner but only to the workman's claim for compensation against the employer. Hence Sec. 10 cannot be interpreted as laying down a period of limitation in respect of proceedings for the recovery of compensation before the Commissioner : English law compared; A I R 1934 Cal 460, Rel. on; (1900) A C 366 and 1930 AC 599, Ref. [P 106 C 2 ;P 107 C 1]

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 30 (1)—Substantial question of law — Claim disallowed in full—Appeal lies.

Where a claim has been disallowed in full, the claimant is entitled to appeal under S. 30 (1) (a) as it cannot be disputed that the appeal involves a substantial question of law : A I R 1933 Nag 272, Ref. [P 107 C 1]

K. C. Jain — for Appellants.

S. T. Bhave — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal under S. 30 (1) (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1923 from an order of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, passed on 14th June 1937 in the Workmen's Compensation Case No. 1-B of 1937.

Applicants 1 and 2 are respectively mother and widow of one Kunjbehari who was a workman in the workshop of the non-applicant company. He sustained a severe injury in the course of his employment on 31st August 1936 in consequence of which he died on 3rd September 1936. The appellants served a notice on the Agent of the G. I. P. Railway, Bombay, intimating to him Kunjbehari's death and claiming compensation amounting to Rs. 600. This was done on 15th October 1936. The case was under consideration till 12th March 1937 on which date their claim was rejected. On 16th April 1937, the appellants applied to the District Judge under Sec. 22, Workmen's Compensation Act, to recover compensation of Rs. 600. The learned District Judge rejected the application on the ground that it was not made within six months from the date of the workman's death.

In view of the case reported in 61 Cal 508,[1] with which I respectfully agree, this appeal must succeed. It was held there by a Special Bench of three Judges that the word "institute" in S. 10 (1) does not refer to the proceedings before the Commissioner but only to the workman's claim for compensation against the employer. Sec. 10 of the Indian Act is based on S. 14, Workmen's Compensation Act 1897, in England. The phraseology of S. 10 of the Indian Act is substantially the same as that of S. 14 of the English Act. The question which arises here was considered in (1900) A C 366.[2] It was held that the claim for compensation occurring in S. 14 of the English Act means not the initiation of proceedings before the tribunal by which the compensation is to be assessed but a notice of a claim for compensation sent to the workman's employer. In (1930) A C 599[3] at page 627 Lord Thankerton observed that S. 14 of the English Act did not limit the time within which the proceedings under the Act are to be brought but it laid down two conditions precedent to such proceedings in regard to notice of the accident as soon as practicable and a claim for compensation within six months. The proceedings before the Commissioner are dealt with under Chap. 3, Workmen's Compensation Act, 8 of 1923, whereas the matters relating to workmen's compensation are dealt with in Chap. 2. Sec. 10 which occurs in Chap. 2 cannot be interpreted as laying down a period of limitation in respect of proceedings for the recovery of compensation before the Commissioner. All that S. 10 (1) says is that no proceedings for the recovery of compensation shall be maintainable before a Commissioner unless two conditions are satisfied: (1) that notice of accident has been given, and (2) claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been instituted within six months. If the institution of the claim for compensation is a condition precedent to initiation of proceedings before the Commissioner, it is obvious that the expression 'claim for compensation' cannot mean the proceedings for the recovery of compensation. The proceedings before the Commissioner are in reality for the settlement of any matter which could not be settled by the agreement of the claimant and the employer, as is clear from the wording of S. 19 and S. 22 of the Act. This consideration also indicates that the words 'claim for compensation' used in Sec. 10 do not relate to proceedings before the Commissioner but to the claim lodged with the employer. The learned District Judge fell into an error when he dismissed the application on the ground of limitation.

1. Abdul Karim v. Eastern Bengal Ry., (1934) 21 A I R Cal 460=1934 Cr C 613=149 I C 169 =61 Cal 508=38 C W N 613 (S B).

2. Powell v. Main Colliery Co., (1900) A C 366= 69 L J Q B 758=83 L T 85=49 W R 49=65 J P 100=16 T L R 466.

3. M'Cafferty v. MacAndrews and Co., (1930) A C 599=99 L J P C 145=1930 W C & I Rep 251 =1930 S C L T 521=46 T L R 559=37 Ll L Rep 183.

It is urged for the respondent that the Commissioner's order is not appealable. Reference is made to 16 N L J 63.[4] All that is laid down there is that under S. 30 of the Act no appeal lies unless a substantial question of law involves. Since the claim has been disallowed in full, the claimant is entitled to appeal under S. 30 (1) (a) and it cannot be disputed that the appeal involves a substantial question of law. The result is that the appeal succeeds with costs. The case will now go back to the Commissioner (District Judge, Jubbulpore) for enquiry into merits. Pleader's fees Rs. 15.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

4. Abdul Rahman and Co. v. Narayan Fitter, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 272=1933 Cr C 1004=145 I C 402=16 N L J 63.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 107

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Keshav Yeshwant Koli — Appellant.

v.

Krishna Balaji Mahar and others — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 318 of 1937, Decided on 21st October 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Daryapur, D/- 30th August 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 14 — Pre-emption—Suit for — Person exercising right of pre-emption must strictly comply with conditions imposed on him—Plaintiff failing to make payment within period fixed by Court — His right of pre-emption is lost — Mere fact that plaintiff files appeal and executes security bond does not extend time — Nor is there any question of adjustment between parties.

The right of pre-emption is a very special right. It displaces ordinary legal rights and places restrictions upon normal rights of conveyance. Consequently, a person who wishes to avail himself of such a right must exercise the utmost vigilance and take care to see that he complies strictly with all the conditions imposed upon him. O. 20, R. 14 is very precise and means that the decree which is conditionally in plaintiff's favour ceases to be so the moment the due date passes without payment. After that it becomes a decree in the defendant's favour. It is immaterial whether a second order dismissing the suit is necessary or not because under the mandatory provisions of O. 20, R. 14, the words used being "shall be dismissed," the plaintiff's action is dead, the moment the day fixed passes. There is no difference between the expressions "shall be dismissed" and "shall stand dismissed." Both mean that the effect of the order is to dismiss the suit unless the pre-emptive price is paid within the specified time. The mere filing of an appeal does not have the effect of extending time. The stay order is automatically vacated the moment appeal is dismissed. The execution of the security bond and its terms cannot be construed as an adjustment or satisfaction of the decree or any part of it nor can execution of the bond be regarded as tantamount to payment and therefore to satisfaction: A I R 1938 Cal 353; 18 All 223; A I R 1923 Nag 210; A I R 1925 Lah 380; 31 Mad 28 and A I R 1927 Pat 345, Rel. on. [P 108 C 2; P 109 C 1; P 110 C 1, 2]

(b) Decree—Variation of.

A decree once passed cannot be varied by consent: A I R 1937 Cal 222, Rel. on. [P 109 C 2]

(c) Appeal—Stay order — Stay order passed by Appellate Court is vacated the moment the appeal is dismissed.

A stay order passed by an Appellate Court is automatically vacated the moment the appeal is dismissed and ceases to have effect from that date. [P 109 C 1]

Dr. D. W. Kathalay — for Appellant.

K. K. Gandhe — for Respondents.

Order. — This appeal arises out of an application under Sec. 144, Civil P. C., for possession of a field and for mesne profits. The decree-holder is the appellant. On 19th April 1934 he obtained a decree for pre-emption. The price fixed was Rupees 200. This was paid into Court less a sum of Rs. 40-10-0 awarded him for costs, and possession was delivered on 4th May 1934. The judgment-debtor appealed from that decree and on 29th October 1934 the lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal and increased the price of pre-emption by Rs. 100. It granted three months' time for payment and this period expired on 11th January 1935. In addition to this Rs. 100, another item of Rs. 83-14-0 was also included and so the total increased amount payable on the date fixed was Rs. 183-14-0. The decree-holder did not deposit this further sum in Court as he contemplated an appeal to the High Court. Therefore, on 3rd November 1934, the judgment-debtor applied for restoration of the field to his possession on the ground that the decree-holder had no right to retain possession till he had paid the pre-emptive price in full. Soon after, the decree-holder filed his appeal to the High Court and there obtained an order for stay of execution on 20th December 1934.

The question in this appeal is whether, and if so, how far, this order has the effect of extending the time fixed for payment in the decree of 29th October 1934. It will be observed that the order for stay does not extend the time fixed by the decree and that it has nothing to do with the decree except incidentally. It merely stays the proceedings arising out of the application for restoration to possession, that is to say, the restitution proceedings. It does not stay execution of the decree as such. In pursuance of this application for stay, the decree-holder furnished security on 11th January 1935, the last day fixed for payment under the decree, and executed a surety bond on the same date. A translation of this bond has been supplied by the learned counsel for the appellant-decree-holder and has been accepted by the other side. It is in these terms:

> I have therefore stood security and executed this security bond to the effect that if the decision in the appeal filed by the plaintiff is against him, I would pay the amount of Rs. 183-10-0 as settled by the Court with interest as stated above. I would pay whatever amount would be found due at the time when the Court would order me to pay the amount.

The executant of the bond is one Shrawan son of Ananda Koshti. It is contended that this bond, coupled with the order of the first Court, has the effect of extending time. It is urged that it contemplates the fixing of a fresh date for payment, and the learned counsel for the appellant-decree-holder argues that since this date has not yet been fixed the time for payment has not yet accrued. Therefore the payment which he made on 12th November 1936 was well within time.

But before dealing with this, it is necessary to state that the appeal to the High Court was dismissed on 11th September 1936 and that the price fixed under the decree which was confirmed was paid, as stated above, on 12th November 1936. Both the lower Courts hold that the price was not paid within the time fixed and so have ordered restoration of possession to the judgment-debtor in accordance with his application. The decree-holder appeals. The right of pre-emption is a very special right. It displaces ordinary legal rights and places restrictions upon normal rights of conveyance. Consequently, a person who wishes to avail himself of such a right must exercise the utmost vigilance and take care to see that he complies strictly with all the conditions imposed on him. O. 20, Rule 14, Civil P. C., is very precise. It states clearly that in cases of pre-emption the Court "shall specify a day on or before which the purchase money shall be so paid" and it then continues that "if the purchase money and the costs (if any) are not so paid, the suit shall be dismissed with costs." This means that the decree which is conditionally in the plaintiff's favour ceases to be so the moment the due date passes without payment. After that it becomes a decree in the defendant's favour. It is immaterial whether a second order dismissing the suit is necessary or not because under the mandatory provisions of O. 20, R. 14, the words used being "shall be dismissed," the plaintiff's action is dead the moment the day fixed passes. I agree with Lort-Williams J. in I L R (1938) 2 Cal 14[1] at p. 20 that there is no difference between the expressions "shall be dismissed" and "shall stand dismissed." As he says:

> Both mean that the effect of the order is to dismiss the suit unless something be done within a specified time.

1. Gulraj Shroff v. Kaniram Sureka, (1938) 25 A I R Cal 353=178 I C 734=I L R (1938) 2 Cal 14=42 C W N 457.

The something in this case is payment of the pre-emptive price. 18 All 223[2] at page 226 which was a suit for pre-emption, and which was decided by three Judges, is to the same effect. This decision also holds that the mere filing of an appeal does not have the effect of extending time. The Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur takes the same view. In 19 N L R 8[3] Prideaux A. J. C. held that S. 148, Civil P. C., does not apply to a pre-emption decree and so a Court has no power to extend time under that Section once the period fixed for payment has expired. The Lahore High Court takes the same view in 6 Lah 316.[4] The Madras and Patna High Courts also agree on more general grounds. Their cases were not of pre-emption but both agree that an appellate decree which merely confirms the decree appealed from does not have the effect of extending the time fixed under the decree of the lower Court. These decisions are to be found in 31 Mad 28[5] and 7 Pat 76.[6] There cannot therefore be much doubt about the correctness of the decision under appeal on general principles.

But, it is argued, the application for stay and the proceedings which followed make all the difference. I find it impossible to agree. I have already pointed out that the application for stay did not apply directly to the decree under appeal. The prayer was to stay collateral proceedings for restitution. It is true that this also meant that the decree-holder was not bound to pay the amount into Court till the decision of the appeal and that therefore it had the indirect effect of enlarging time in that sense. But that carried the matter no further than the date of the appellate decision. A stay order is automatically vacated the moment the appeal is dismissed and therefore it ceases to have effect from that date. Consequently, the protection afforded by the stay order in this case, which did not alter the time fixed by the decree or in any way profess to touch or alter the decree but merely provided a locus penitentiae by reason of its own weight which enured only so long as it was itself in being, came to an end the moment the order itself ceased to function.

That is so on general principles. The force of the order spends itself the moment the appeal is dismissed unless the Court otherwise directs. O. 41, R. 5 states that:

> An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the Appellate Court may order. . . . .

All that the Appellate Court ordered here was that: "Execution will be stayed if the appellant furnishes security for the decretal amount."

It did not fix any period for the duration of the stay and consequently the usual term, namely the duration of the appeal, was meant. If any doubt existed it was removed by the order which the lower Court made consequent on this order of the Additional Judicial Commissioner. It states that:

> According to the stay order he (the decree-holder) should furnish security for the balance . . from to-day till the decision of the second appeal.

It was then urged that even if all these contentions failed it was nevertheless open to the parties to adjust the decree by mutual agreement and A I R 1938 Rang 202[7] and A I R 1937 Cal 222[8] were relied on. It was contended that the security bond contained the following clause

> I would pay whatever amount would be found due at the time when the Court would order me to pay the amount; and that the judgment-debtor accepted this. Consequently, it was argued that he had agreed to an enlargement of time till a fresh date was fixed by the Court. I have no doubt that a decree may be adjusted or satisfied by the making of an agreement between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder but I agree with Ameer Ali J. in the Calcutta case cited above that > a decree once passed is immutable subject of course to review or to any subsequent order or decree which my be passed on appeal and subject only . . . . . to one specific provision, O. 21, Rule 11 (2).

The decree once passed cannot be varied by consent. There is, in my opinion, no question of adjustment here. Adjustment means satisfaction wholly or in part. The execution of the security bond was in no sense a satisfaction of the decree. It was only a fulfilment of the conditions on which

2. Jaggar Nath v. Jokhu Tewari, (1896) 18 All 223=1896 A W N 43.
3. Ambadas v. Laxman, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 210 =71 I C 401=19 N L R 8.
4. Sukram Das v. Nazar Muhammad, (1925) 12 A I R Lah 880=89 I C 163=6 Lah 316=26 P L R 183.
5. Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone, (1908) 31 Mad 28=17 M L J 495=3 M L T 26.
6. Panchu Sahu v. Muhammad Yakub, (1927) 14 A I R Pat 845=104 I C 730=7 Pat 76=8 P L T 597.
7. Arunachallam Chettyar v. V. M. R. P. Firm, (1938) 25 A I R Rang 202=175 I C 498=1938 R L R 385 (F B).
8. Surput Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, (1937) 24 A I R Cal 222=172 I C 282=42 C W N 519.

alone stay had been granted. The order of the Court was, as explained above, that the proceedings were to be stayed during the pendency of the appeal. The parties to that order could not vary it by consent even if the execution of this bond and its acceptance can be construed to mean that. The Court alone could do so. But I am clear that the judgment-debtor consented to no such variation. The stay order was not passed with his consent. On the contrary, it was imposed upon him by the Court without even hearing him. He submitted to it, it is true, but by no stretch of imagination can that be construed as consent to an agreement to which he was a party. Once the order was passed and submitted to, all that the judgment-debtor had to do was to state whether the security offered was adequate. He had not to look to anything else, and it is important to note that all that the judgment-debtor stated was that "the security is accepted," not that he accepted the variation of the Court's order which the surety (not even the decree-holder) by unilateral action attempted to insert in his bond.

It is important to note that the security bond is executed not by the decree-holder but by the surety. Therefore such agreement as is contained there is an agreement between the surety and the judgment-debtor and not between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. Consequently, by no stretch of reasoning can this bond and its terms be construed as an adjustment or satisfaction of the decree or any part of it. Of course, if the judgment-debtor had attempted to enforce that bond it would have been valueless until a fresh date had been fixed by the Court, but the judgment-debtor did not care about that. His real security was the property. It was that what he wanted and not the money. If the decree-holder did not choose to pay the money nothing would have pleased the judgment-debtor better and the last thing he would have wanted would have been the enforcement of this bond. In the circumstances it would be a travesty of the real facts to construe this as an adjustment and consequent satisfaction of the decree by consent. It was then argued that the execution of this bond had the same effect as payment of the money and that if the decree-holder had been expected to pay the money as well within the three months allowed by the decree then under appeal he would in reality have been paying twice over. I have already pointed out that the effect of the order was to enlarge the time for payment till the decision of the appeal. Therefore the decree-holder was neither expected to, nor compelled to, pay until that date. Also, in no case can the execution of the security bond be regarded as tantamount to payment and therefore to satisfaction. The difference is this, and it a very real difference. When the money is paid into Court and held in deposit there, the other side becomes entitled to it the moment the appeal is dismissed. But when there is merely a security bond he gets nothing on that date. He has, on the contrary, to institute proceedings to enforce his bond. Therefore in no sense can the execution of the bond be looked upon as tantamount to payment. The order of the lower Courts is right and the appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 12.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 110

NIYOGI J.

Baliram Pamaji and others — Appellants.

v.

Uttam Chand Motilal Agarwal — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 166 of 1937, Decided on 8th December 1938, from order of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 15th January 1937.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 112 (2)—Dismissal of suit under Sec. 112 (2) is decree and hence appealable.

The dismissal of the suit under S. 112 (2), must be regarded as a decree within the meaning of that term as defined in S. 2 (2). Civil P. C., and under S. 96, Civil P. C., the plaintiff is entitled to file an appeal. [P 111 C 2]

(b) Second Appeal — Exercise of discretion by trial Court and Appellate Court — High Court can see which discretion is proper.

The discretion given to the trying Court is not one to be exercised arbitrarily but with due regard to the facts of the case and general principles of justice. High Court in second appeal has power to see which of the two Courts exercised discretion properly in accordance with the judicial principles. [P 112 C 1]

(c) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 112(1)—Expression "first hearing"—Meaning explained.

The expression "first hearing" of a suit in S. 112 (1) means the hearing at which the Court examines the pleadings of the parties with a view to understand their contention and to frame issues: A I R 1926 Mad 347 ; A I R 1919 Cal 70 and 12 C W N 312, Rel. on. [P 112 C 2] (d) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 112 (2)—Granting of time means granting it after lapse of first hearing.

The granting of time by the Court contemplated in sub-s. (2) of S. 112 must be interpreted in the sense of granting time after the lapse of first hearing and not before it. [P 112 C 2]

T. L. Sheode and M. B. Mahajan — for Appellants.

A. L. Halwe — for Respondent.

Order. — This is a defendants' appeal from an order passed in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 92 of 1935 on 15th January 1937 by the First Additional District Judge, Akola. The respondent, Uttamchand, instituted his suit on 2nd April 1935 by presenting his plaint. On 10th April 1935, the plaint was admitted and ordered to be registered. Summonses to defendants for settlement of issues were also ordered and the plaintiff was called upon to file certified copies of the Record of Rights relating to fields in dispute within a fortnight. The suit was taken up on 2nd July 1935 not for the purpose of hearing parties but to see whether the summonses were served on the defendants or not. On that date the plaintiff not having produced the certified copies of the Record of Rights parchas he was asked to file them on or before 3rd September 1935. On that date all the defendants except defendant 38 were served and fresh summons was ordered to be served on him. Defendants 36 and 37 were minors but as the plaintiff did not apply for appointment of guardian ad litem for them he was asked to file one. On that day also the Court did not look into the case. The plaintiff failed to produce certified copies of the parchas but applied through his agent for extension of time to enable him to obtain the copies. An affidavit verifying the material allegations made in that application to account for the inability of the plaintiff to carry out the Court's order was also filed with that application. The Court however dismissed the plaintiff's suit in so far as it was directed against certain fields under Sec. 112 (2), Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928. The plaintiff preferred an appeal in the Court of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, and that Court reversed the trial Court's order dismissing the suit and this appeal is directed against that order.

It is urged in the first instance that the original Court's order dismissing the suit under Sec. 112 (2), Berar Land Revenue Code, had not the force of a decree so as to entitle the respondent in this Court to appeal from it. In other words, it is said that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The material words of sub-s. (2) of S. 112, Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, are these, "and if such certified copy is not so produced the suit or application shall be dismissed." Construing the words in their ordinary and natural sense there must be no doubt that the dismissal of the suit means the termination of the suit so far as that Court is concerned. That sub-section no doubt says further, > but the dismissal thereof shall not of its own force preclude the presentation of a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

But that is a different matter. The question is whether the dismissal of a suit under S. 112 (2) does not amount to a decree. Sub-s. (4) of Sec. 112 defines the word "suit" as a suit to which the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply. Now, if the suit is a suit of this nature it must logically follow that the dismissal of the suit must be deemed to be a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2), Civil P. C. It may be conceded that there is no adjudication on matters in controversy but it cannot be denied that there is an adjudication on the question whether or not the plaintiff had a sufficient cause for his failure to file the certified copies of the parchas along with his plaint or within the time allowed by the Court. It must therefore be regarded as a decree within the meaning of that term as defined in S. 2 (2), Civil P. C., and under S. 96 of the Code the plaintiff was entitled to file an appeal.

It is urged that inasmuch as sub-s. (2) of S. 112 of the Berar Land Revenue Code permits the presentation of a fresh plaint the order dismissing the suit could not have the force of a decree so as to give the aggrieved party the right to file an appeal therefrom. The contention does not appear to be sound in view of the fact that if the rejection of the plaint is treated as a decree and is made appealable the rejection does not preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh claim in respect of the same cause of action : see O. 7, R. 13, Civil P. C. The plaintiff in such predicament has been given two remedies. If the statutory period of limitation prescribed for his suit has not expired he may file a fresh plaint; but if the period of limitation has expired the law leaves it open to him to file an appeal. In the result there is no difference between the dismissal of the suit on the ground of limitation and dismissal of a suit under S. 112 (2) of the Berar Land Revenue Code. In either case the plaintiff's right to prosecute the suit is extinguished. It is but reasonable that the law should confer on him the right of appeal. It is true that there is no express provision in the Berar Land Revenue Code providing for an appeal but there was no need for any such provision in view of the definition of "suit" given in S. 112 (4) of that enactment. The contention must therefore fail.

On the merits of the case it is argued that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in interfering with the discretion exercised by the Court of first instance. The discretion given to the trying Court is not one to be exercised arbitrarily but with due regard to the facts of the case and general principles of justice. If the plaintiff was entitled to appeal and the lower Appellate Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, it is futile to say that the lower Appellate Court should not have dissented from the view taken by the Court of first instance. On this view the discretion exercised by the lower Appellate Court is of a superior Court and is not open to question here. The argument would in effect be suicidal to the appellants themselves. This Court in second appeal has also power to see which of the two Courts exercised discretion properly in accordance with the judicial principles. After having heard the parties I feel no doubt that the lower Appellate Court was right. The affidavit filed by the plaintiff on 3rd September 1935 contained an allegation that an application for certified copies had been made on 10th August 1935. If that was so, it would be a good ground for giving him some more time to file them.

It is however urged that it was imperative on the plaintiff to file the certified copies within the time fixed by the Court and that the Court had no option but to dismiss the suit. I cannot endorse this contention. Sub-s. (1) of S. 112 of the Berar Land Revenue Code directs that a certified copy should be filed on or before the date of the first hearing. Now the expression "first hearing" of a suit does not mean the day on which the Court goes into the pleadings in order to understand the contention of the parties. O. 10, R. 1 says that at the first hearing of the suit the Court should ascertain from the plaintiff's pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of facts as are made in the plaint or written statement. O. 13, R. 1 says that the parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all documentary evidence of every description. Terms of these provisions of the Civil Procedure Code manifestly suggest that the first hearing is the hearing at which the Court examines the pleadings of the parties with a view to understand their contention and to frame issues. This is also clear from the terms of R. 1 of O. 15, Civil P. C. The view that I take is fortified by a number of judicial decisions of which I may mention A I R 1926 Mad 347,[1] 50 I C 296[2] and 12 C W N 312.[3]

On 3rd September 1935 the original Court was not looking into the case to examine their contentions with a view to formulate the issues and it could not therefore be regarded as the first hearing. If the law allows the plaintiff to file certified copies at any time before the first hearing that right could not be taken away or impaired by any act of the Court. In fact on that day the case was not ripe for hearing inasmuch as one of the defendants was not served and no guardian ad litem was appointed for other two defendants. The granting of time by the Court contemplated in sub-s. (2) of S. 112 of the Berar Land Revenue Code must be interpreted in the sense of granting time after the lapse of first hearing and not before it. The plaintiff had thus time enough under sub-s. (1) of S. 112 to file certified copies. The appellants' contention that he should have filed certified copies before the date appointed for the return of process is unsound for the reason that it has reference not to the word "plaintiff" or "suit" but to the words "applicant" and "application." In case of suits there is no date fixed for return of process but a date fixed under O. 5, Rr. 1 and 5 for settlement of issues and the process issued in the present suit itself was in this form. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 15.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Chidambaram v. Parvathi, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 347=93 I C 16.
2. Taran Mandal v. Raj Chandra Mandal, (1919) 6 A I R Cal 70=50 I C 296.
3. Talewar Singh v. Bhagwan Das, (1908) 12 C W N 312=8 C L J 147.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 113

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Mt. Tapibai w/o Mulchand, and another — Plaintiffs — Appellants.

v.

Shankar Lal Sobharam — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 585 of 1935, Decided on 18th October 1938, from appellate decree of District Judge, Nimar, D/- 3rd September 1935.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 85—Mutual, open and current account—Nature explained.

Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debts and credits. The absence of a shifting balance is not fatal to the conception of mutuality. The phrase "reciprocal demands" in Art. 85 does not import that either party has made an actual demand in fact. But the dealings must be of such a nature that they might lead to reciprocal demands. Once a mutual, open and current account is started and there are reciprocal demands that account continues to be mutual so long as the account remains open and current. If the account is closed then that account is finished and turned into a settled account. Also if the account ceases to be current then from that moment any other account between the parties would have to depend for its nature on its own qualities and not on the qualities of the old account. The fact that after a certain date the account was one sided cannot turn mutual, open and current account into a non-mutual open and current account. The mutuality results from the reciprocal claims which can spring out of the transactions which once made the account mutual : Case law discussed. [P 114 C 2; P 115 C 1; P 117 C 1, 2]

M. B. Kinkhede, R. N. Padhye and A. R. Kulkarni — for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde and J. Sen — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal raises inter alia a question under Article 65, Limitation Act. The term "mutual," in relation to accounts, is found in at least four different collocations : (1) The mutual accounts of merchants and traders, (2) the mutual accounts which gave jurisdiction to the Chancery Division before the Judicature Act, (3) the mutual dealings which give certain rights under the Bankruptcy law (see the English Bankruptcy Act, 1914, S. 31), (4) the mutual, open and current account referred to in Art. 85, Limitation Act. The first kind of mutual account was made a special case in the Statute of Limitations as the Lord Chancellor (the Earl of Hardwicke) observed in 28 E R 255[1] at page 256 :

> . . . it was to prevent dividing the account between merchants, where it was a running account, when perhaps part might have begun long before and the account never settled, and perhaps there might have been dealings and transactions within the time of the statute.

This provision of the Statute of Limitations was brought into India in a modified form and was operative here long after it had been repealed in England. In origin it was clearly the law merchant as it applied only to merchants and traders, i. e., merchants to whom the Lex Mercatoria applied. In India however it was applied to a much wider class. It is found, in its Indian form, in Sec. 8 of Act 14 of 1859 which relates to > suits for balances of accounts current between merchants and traders who have had mutual dealings.

That Section was considered by the Privy Council in 1 I A 346[2] at pp. 357-360 and was applied to a case where A, B, C (holders of forest permits) received advances from X, Y, Z (merchants) and to assure the sum due (Rs. 44,000) and any future advances, A, B, C appointed X, Y, Z their sole agents with right to receive timber and realize, charge commission and brokerage and account. Cl. 9 of the basic contract provided inter alia that > upon an adjustment of accounts . . . . A, B, C agree to pay . . . . such balances as may be found due.

Their Lordships observed (page 359) :

> They are of opinion that the account was one continuous account between principal and agent, with debits and credits on each side of it, and that the contract was to pay the balance of that account when it should be struck : and that the case therefore falls within S. 8 of Act 14 of 1859, there being several items which bring the mutual dealings down to March or May 1868.

The suit was commenced on 28th February 1871. It was held the statute was no bar. There the agreement was dated May 1867 and the Rs. 44,000 had already been advanced. The entries since the close of 1867 were (with one exception) entries of payments which X, Y, Z were bound to make without recourse to A, B, C. The Recorder of Rangoon (see at p. 353) accordingly held that they did not keep the account open as against the defendants. The one exception was Rs. 7658 nett proceeds of sale of timber sold on 17th February 1868 more than 3 years before the suit. That entry was made in March 1868. The Privy Council however reversed that judgment.

1. Welford v. Liddel, (1751) 2 Ves Sen 400 = 28 E R 255.

2. Watson v. Aga Mahedee Sherazee, (1873-74) 1 I A 346=3 Sar 384 (P C).

Examples of cases relating to Class(2) which have often been relied on in Indian decisions are (1854) 52 E R 225[3] at p. 227 and (1852) 68 E R 596,[4] the former case following the latter. If these cases are compared with the Privy Council decision above cited it will be seen that the kind of account which falls within the first and the second class need not be the same. What the Courts were there considering was whether the account was of such a nature as made it proper to take the account on the chancery instead of on the Common law side, a kind of dispute that does not now arise owing to the provisions of the Judicature Act. The question turned on whether rights of set-off (that is equitable, not necessarily legal, set-off) were involved. Class (3) has a very wide application and is of great importance especially in the law of banking. It is considered by Mr. Hart in his work on Banking (Edn. 4) at p. 305. It is based on set-off as, indeed, are Classes (1) and (2), but the set-off here allowed is wider than in case (2) and probably equal to that in case (1): see (1895) 2 Q B 618.[5] Class (4) brings us to the main point in issue. We have merely mentioned the above because it is desirable to bear in mind that all cases concerned with "mutual dealing" or "mutual accounts" are not necessarily safe guides when considering what constitutes Class (4).

Article 85 provides as follows:

For the balance due on a mutual, open and current account where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties.	Three years.	The close of the year in which the last item admitted or proved is entered in the account, such year to be computed as in the account.

What amounts to a settled account has been considered by the Privy Council in 56 All 376[6] where a number of Indian cases were disapproved. That case is concerned with Art. 64 but the reasoning makes the case applicable not only to the question what constitutes a settled account but also to this question. There, Lord Wright observes at p. 388:

. . . . . there can in law be a settlement of account as between banker and customer . . . . . but in such cases the dealings are purely financial on each side and consist of money credits and debits, in the course of which one side may never be able to sue the other . . . . . because he is always in debt to the other, though, if sued for the whole debt, he could avail himself of payments he has made in partial reduction of the debt on running account, though merely by way of set-off or counter-claim.

Again, quoting Baron Alderson, at page 386:

Here the striking of a balance between the parties is evidence of an agreement that the items of the defendant's account should be set off against the earlier items of the plaintiffs, leaving the case unaffected either by the statute of limitations or the set-off.

Lord Wright adds:

This rule does not depend on the character or the origin of the debits or credits on either side as, for instance, whether on the one side the consideration for the items is work and labour and on the other, goods supplied . . . . . (page 387). Nor can it be material, as it seems, in determining whether there can be an account stated, whether the balance of indebtedness is throughout, as it must be at the end, in favour of one side. Equally it seems irrelevant whether the debt in favour of the final creditor was created at the outset by one large payment or consisted of several sums . . . . . nor can it matter, in this connexion, whether the only payments made on the other side were simply payments in reduction of such indebtedness or were payments made in respect of other dealings.

It is true that we find a difference when we come to mutual accounts attracting Art. 85. It is not enough to have A indebted to B, with the result that B's books show debits against A, and to have A paying off part with the result that B's books show credits in favour of A. That creates a right of set-off, for, were A sued for the whole, he could, by way of defence, set off his payments. But such an account, even if it could be treated as mutual (and there are many decisions to the contrary) would not involve the conception of reciprocal demands. But though there are no reciprocal demands there can be disputes as to the amount owing and if A says to B "I agree that I owe X rupees," and if B says to A, "I agree you do not owe more than X rupees," each is fixing himself with a liability that supports the settled account. That agreement founds a new cause of action and from that moment B can sue A for X rupees and Art. 64 begins to operate. That, as we understand it, is what 56 All 376[6] decides. But granted that an account is once a mutual, open and current account and that there can be reciprocal demands when does it cease to be mutual? We consider, despite Mookerjee J.'s observations in

3. Padwick v. Hurst, (1854) 23 L J Ch 657=18 Jur 763=18 Beav 575=52 E R 225.
4. Phillips v. Phillips, (1852) 9 Hare 471 = 68 E R 596.
5. Palmer v. Day and sons, (1895) 2 Q B 618=64 L J Q B 807=15 R 523=44 W R 14=2 Manson 386.
6. Bishun Chand v. Girdhari Lal, (1934) 21 A I R P C 147=150 I C 6=56 All 376=61 I A 273 (P C).

6 C L J 158[7] at p. 161 that it so continues so long as the account remains open and current. Any other conclusion would provide a trap for the creditor. He would not know when to sue. He would be unable to decide when the quality of mutuality had ceased to exist. On the other hand if the account is closed then that account is finished and turned into a settled account or as the case may be. Also if the account ceases to be current, clearly from that moment, any other account between the parties would have to depend for its nature on its own qualities not on the qualities of the old account. The fact that after a certain date the account was one sided cannot, in our opinion, turn a mutual, open and current account into a non-mutual, open and current account. The mutuality results from the reciprocal claims which can spring out of the transactions which once made the account mutual. To make unilateral dealings, thereafter, alter the nature of the account would be to destroy the very protection which the statute gives, and which the old statute gave to persons who are doing business with one another on terms that each shall recover, not item by item from the other, but only the balance due after counting all items of debit and credit. Here it is said by the respondent that those transactions were not conducted on any such basis. This, it is urged, is not a case where A owes B items M N O and B owes A items P Q R leaving a balance S due to B from A. This is a case where A borrows from B, where A deposits money with B on terms that B is not to use that money, or any part of it, to pay himself what A owes him and accordingly if B sued A, A could not set off that sum. Thus, this is a case like (1902) 1 Ir R 439[8] (though, it is true, that case was not referred to in argument). There is thus, it is urged, no element of mutuality. In order to see whether this is so it is desirable to examine somewhat closely the facts.

We have available only the accounts of the plaintiff's father with whom the defendant, (a pleader's clerk who does, according to his own evidence, petty moneylending), commenced to do business in 1921 or 1922 and continued to do business until 1933. There is some dispute what the nature of the business was. For the plaintiff it is said it consisted of loans by one to the other, alternatively of loans by plaintiff's father to defendant and of deposits by defendant with plaintiff's father who was not only a money-lender but also a banker and payments to defendant's order by plaintiff's father out of such deposits. For the defendant it is said that the plaintiff's father lent money to the defendant, that the defendant deposited money with the plaintiff's father for a specific purpose, viz. to keep and return as required by defendant for the building of defendant's house. It is further urged that this is not a case of an account starting in 1921 or 1922 and continuing mutual, open and current until 1933 because on two occasions the account was settled and it is therefore said even if mutual at one time it ceased to be mutual after it was settled. On the other hand, for the plaintiff-appellant, it is urged that the accounts were never settled so as to be closed; what happened was that on two occasions the parties met and agreed the balance and that balance was then carried forward as an item in the old account there being a balancing credit. According to the defendant's evidence he commenced depositing money with the plaintiff's father, who was a banker, in 1921 when he deposited Rupees 200 "on the understanding that I would take back the money for preparing ornaments for my son's marriage." This presumably belongs to the old account referred to at the beginning of Ex. P-6 though it is difficult to follow this as witness goes on to say: "I withdrew the amount for the said purpose." His son's marriage occurred, according to the defendant, in 1922-23 but we cannot find in Ex. P-6 any withdrawing of Rs. 200 for that or any purpose. The deposit is apparently reflected in sheet 4 (paper-book, page 178). In 1923-24 according to the defendant he borrowed from plaintiff's father Rs. 700 partly to lend to a third party, partly to pay for a field.

In 1923-24 again, according to the defendant, he deposited Rs. 1500 "for repairs of my house." We find this (p. 186, paper-book) as a credit. No special purpose is noted and it appears simply as a credit in the books. The repairs appear to have failed in their object for the house fell down according to the defendant and he then deposited "about Rs. 2000 with him in small sums from time to time for the purpose of erecting a house." There is no dispute that he deposited in 1924 substantial sums. They are reflected in the plaintiff's father's accounts. They are not shown as made for any particular purpose. During the same period there were loans being made by plaintiff's father to defendant, and on 6th February 1925 the two appear to have agreed how the account stood and a so-called "ticket-ruju," which we understand to mean acknowledgment of liability, Ex. P-7, came into existence. The relevant part of that is

7. Ram Pershad v. Harbans Singh, (1907) 6 C L J 158.

8. In re Johnson & Co. Ltd., (1902) 1 Ir R 439.

Rs. 2500, Rs. 500 found due this day on making all the previous accounts and Rs. 2000 taken in cash to be paid (to X), total Rs. 2500, and the amount is admitted to be paid.

The last word "paid" admittedly should be "due." Later a further Rs. 4000 and Rs. 3000 were deposited by defendant on 16th April 1925 and 10th June 1925 respectively and further loans were taken. After the deposit, dated 10th June 1925, the credit entries are not very important, but between 7th November 1925 and 18th October 1926 Rs. 1771 are credited. It is not necessary to trace all these items, two, 125 (1st February 1926) and 125 (7th March 1926) are entered in the books as "In cash through self." Another 625 (5th April 1926) is shown as "paid and credited this day." They would appear all to be credits of payments. On 26th January 1928 a thing now called a "ticket bahi" which we also understand to be an acknowledgment of liability came into existence (Ex. P-7, sheet 2). As a consequence we find a debit entry in the following form :

Rs. 2757 debited on making account of the previous ticket ruju, dated 6th February 1925, as well as of the current account two thousand seven hundred and fifty seven rupees are found due and the amount is admitted to be paid.

Again the last word should be "due." On sheet No. 26 (paper-book 223) we find the following in the accounts for 1926-27 : "Rs. 2500 of khata ruju 6th February 1925. Besides this account of interest on other amounts also is to be taken separately." Then we find a balance of Rs. 2345 due as on 9th October 1927 which grows to Rs. 2757 by 1918. That sum (Rs. 2757) includes Rs. 445-8-0 in respect of interest on the Rs. 2500 and Rs. 11-8-0 interest on the current account. Thus, we have a separation, so far as interest is concerned between the current account and the item of Rs. 2500. Then we have the second settlement above-mentioned resulting in Rs. 2757 being agreed as due on 26th January 1928. Next on p. 232 of the paper-book (sheet No. 31) we find under date 27th September 1929 a balance of Rs. 2777-7-6 made up of Rs. 2757 (ruju) further borrowings of Rs. 20-7-6. There are other items, a new loan and repayments which balance. It is very difficult to find what interest, if any, was charged on either the Rs. 2757 or the further borrowings. The year 1929-30 starts with the balance of Rs. 2777-7-6. There is a credit of Rs. 1515, Rs. 3-8-0 and Rs. 75, in all Rs. 1593-8-0. Of these (see p. 238) Rs. 1500 represent a payment made on account of the so-called khata ruju by the defendant in cash, Rs. 15 represent a credit on account of interest but is balanced by an entry of Rs. 18-8-0 (Rs. 15 + 3-8-0) on account of interest on Rs. 1500 "out of which Rs. 3-8-0 are still to be recovered." That Rs. 3-8-0 is then credited. Rs. 75 seems to have been paid in cash. The year 1930-31 starts with a balance of Rupees 2781-7-6 made up of Rs. 2757 + 20 borrowed "two or three years back." Rs. 0-7-6 "borrowed last year" and Rs. 4 "borrowed current year." Interest, though mentioned (see p. 240) does not appear to be counted in on 23rd February 1931, Rs. 15 and on 1st March 1931, Rs. 2 are advanced in cash, the first for a criminal case, the second to buy wood. On 22nd March 1931 Rs. 25 and Rs. 15 are advanced for wood and to buy a bicycle (see pp. 240-241). The result is Rs. 2838-7-6. This is summarized in the accounts (p. 241) as made up as follows : "Ruju Rs. 2757 + Rs. 20 loan + Rs. 0-7-6 loan and Rs. 4 loan + Rs. 57 loans."

Thus, the year 1931-32 (p. 242) starts with a debit balance of Rs. 2838-7-6 made up as above. There are small repayments in cash, cloth, or a stamp amounting to Rs. 13-4-0 and some small debit items, the plaintiff's father having apparently made some small payments on behalf of defendant, e. g. Rs. 8-11-0 to an astrologer and Rs. 2 for inspecting records. The net result was a debit of Rs. 2860-3-6 and a credit of Rs. 13-4-0 leaving a balance of Rupees 2846-15-6. The last year, 1932-33, starts with a balance of Rs. 2846-15-6. There are two credits of Rs. 2 and Rs. 10 and two debits of As. 4 and Rs. 10. The Rs. 2 credit is "on account of statement and vakalatnama in the case of Dhanalal Bharud" which looks as though defendant did a service for plaintiff's father worth Rs. 2 and was accordingly credited with that sum. The Rs. 10 credit represents a cash repayment. The debits appear to be payments made on defendant's behalf. It will thus be seen that after the acknowledgment of liability for Rs. 2757 and indeed after the acknowledgment of liability for Rs. 2500 there was no question of reciprocal demands. Before, there were reciprocal demands, for we do not find it established that the deposits were for any specific purpose known to, and binding upon the plaintiff's father. The position up to the time of the first acknowledgment was substantially that of banker and customer, the customer usually, but not always, having overdrawn. Was that position (which we conceive involves a mutual, open and current account) altered by the acknowledgment? The learned Judge in para. 33 (4) of his judgment observes as follows :

(4) But once the balance of a mutual, open and current account has been clearly ascertained and acknowledged then it will be a question of fact and law in a particular case whether on a view of the subsequent transactions and on taking into consideration the intentions of the parties as they stood at the time of the ascertainment, the subsequent account is in fact and law either a continuance of a mutual, open and current account or a fresh mutual, open and current account or nothing but an account showing repayments towards an ascertained balance and further advances.

We take it to be clear, on the authorities there was here at one time a mutual, open and current account. The meaning of that term was examined at length in 6 C L J 158.[7] The following observation therein was relied on in 50 All 645[9] at p. 650 :

Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and credits.

That definition is reflected in numerous judgments as is the observation that the absence of a shifting balance is not fatal to the conception of mutuality : see 44 P R 1886,[10] 15 Lah 652[11] at page 661, 7 Pat 238,[12] A I R 1923 Nag 108,[13] 47 Bom 128,[14] 58 Cal 649[15] at p. 667, A I R 1924 Pat 107[16] and 23 Bom L R 540.[17] The phrase "reciprocal demands" in Art. 85 does not import that either party has made an actual demand in fact : 58 Cal 649,[15] 47 Bom 128[14] and A I R 1924 Pat 107.[16] But the dealings must be of such a nature that they might lead to reciprocal demands : 58 Cal 649[15] and 29 N L R 20.[18] Viewed as an account stretching from 1921-33 we have no doubt that this was a mutual, open and current account. The mutuality was quite as obvious as in 1 I A 346[2] where the balance was always heavily against one side. The real question is : Are we here concerned with one account or with an account which was closed and replaced by another account which in 1933 was open but which was not mutual? If the ruju or acknowledgment of 1928 or of 1925 closed the old account then the old account ceased to be a mutual, open and current account. The quality of mutuality it could never lose, in our opinion, but it could cease to be open, and it could cease to be current. With the end of either of those characteristics would end the applicability of Art. 85.

In the case reported in 62 I C 898[19] a Bench of the Lahore High Court upheld in a Letters Patent Appeal the judgment of Scott-Smith J. The facts were that defendants borrowed from plaintiffs a sum of money between November 1912 and May 1913 and paid back a substantial amount by October 1913 when (according to the judgment) "the account was closed" and the defendants agreed to pay interest on that balance. Later, there was a payment and interest was debited. Side by side with this, the defendants were dealing with the plaintiffs by sending to them grain for sale on commission. It was urged that the striking of the balance evidenced a new contract. It was held that it did not, 23 All 502[20] being followed. That case decided that a mere acknowledgment signed by a debtor in the account book of his creditor showing a balance standing against the debtor on an account, which is not a mutual account, is neither an account stated nor evidence 9. Dau Dayal v. Piari Lal, (1928) 15 A I R All 236=108 I C 694=50 All 645=26 A L J 353.

10. Sewa Ram v. Mohan Singh, (1886) 44 P R 1886.
11. Punjab United Bank, Ltd. v. Muhammad Hussain, (1934) 21 A I R Lah 358 = 152 I C 626=15 Lah 652=36 P L R 325.
12. Joharmal Muthuradas Firm v. Hira Lal Shewchand Roy, (1928) 15 A I R Pat 221 = 107 I C 588=7 Pat 238.
13. Pandurang v. Kalludas, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 108=65 I C 881.
14. Satappa v. Annappa, (1923) 10 A I R Bom 82 = 76 I C 115 = 47 Bom 128 = 24 Bom L R 1284.
15. Tea Financing Syndicate, Ltd. v. Chandrakamal, (1931) 18 A I R Cal 359=133 I C 801= 58 Cal 649=52 C L J 314=34 C W N 1175.
16. Fyzabad Bank, Ltd. v. Ramdayal, (1924) 11 A I R Pat 107=74 I C 831=4 P L T 571.
17. Madhav Motiram v. Jairam Sakharam, (1921) 8 A I R Bom 451=63 I C 950=23 Bom L R 540.
18. Goculdas v. Radhakishan, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 50=142 I C 123=29 N L R 20.
19. Ratan Chand-Jawala Das v. Asa Singh-Bogha Singh, (1922) 9 A I R Lah 188=62 I C 898.
20. Ganga Prasad v. Ram Dayal, (1901) 23 All 502=1901 A W N 150.

of a new contract which can be the basis of a suit. This case, 23 All 502,[20] was not cited by counsel for the appellant although 62 I C 898[19] was. Naturally 23 All 502,[20] cannot now be relied upon having been overruled by the Privy Council in 56 All 376.[6] With it goes 62 I C 898[19] and cases of a like nature. In our opinion, it follows that the settlement of account closed the old account and after it a new one started. That new one was not mutual.

It follows therefore that on this branch of the case we arrive at the same conclusion as the learned lower Appellate Judge though for somewhat different reasons. It is next said that S. 19, Limitation Act, can be prayed in aid there being here an acknowledgment in writing. The acknowledgment in question is Ex. P-3, a "list of reliance" a local term meaning a list filed in a suit of the documents which the party relies on. The suit in question was a maintenance suit against this defendant by a widow. He was trying to avoid or reduce liability by showing poverty. The list of reliance contains the following papers:

(i) All the account books and "ticket-ruju" from 1909 to this day (24th July 1930) of the shop (of plaintiff's father) relating to the defendant's money-lending.

It is sought to read that with Ex. P-2 which is his written statement in that suit and which says he is indebted. The date of that is 16th July 1930. This plaint is dated 24th July 1933. The acknowledgment must be within three years. It is to be noticed that not only is the entry in the list of reliance not an acknowledgment (which as the Privy Council pointed out in 2 N L R 130[21] is not in this collocation a word of art) but it is not addressed to anybody juristically connected with the plaintiff. The plaintiff there unlike the plaintiff in 2 N L R 130[21] had nothing to do with the plaintiff here. Secondly the above excerpt can only be turned into an acknowledgment by linking it to something else. That something else is out of time. We are clearly of opinion that S. 19, Limitation Act, has no application.

A third point was raised founded on some remarks in 42 Cal 1043[22] in turn purporting to be based on (1856) 18 C B 325[23] at p. 333. That case seems to have been much misunderstood : see Rustomji's Law of Limition, Edn. 5, page 719, where what was decided in that case is misstated. What was decided related to costs. The conclusion was arrived at as a matter of convenience (see at p. 335) and depended on the construction of the phrase "cause of action" in a particular English statute relating to County Court jurisdiction. We do not consider there is anything in this point. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

21. Maniram v. Seth Rupchand, (1906) 2 N L R 130=33 I A 165=33 Cal 1047 (P C).
22. Kedar Nath v. Dinabandhu Saha, (1916) 3 A I R Cal 580=42 Cal 1043=19 C W N 724.
23. Bonsey v. Wordsworth, (1856) 18 C B 325=25 L J C P 205=2 Jur (N S) 494 = 4 W R 566= 107 R R 318.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 118

NIYOGI J.

Ganga Prasad Laljee and another — Judgment-debtors—Appellants.

v.

Ratan Chand Moorat Lal and another — Decree-holders — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 219 of 1937, Decided on 28th November 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 29th January 1937.

(a) Charge — Creation of — Requirement — Decree providing payment by instalment and directing defendant not to alienate property till satisfaction of decree—Decree held created charge on property.

No particular form of words is necessary for the creation of a charge. It is sufficient to indicate the property that is set apart as a security for the payment of the debt. The creditor has in such a case a right to look to the property for satisfaction of his debts but does not acquire any interest in the property as he would in the case of a mortgage : 32 Bom 386 ; A I R 1931 All 62 and A I R 1914 All 187, Rel. on. [P 119 C 2]

Where a decree provided for the payment of the decretal amount in certain instalments and further directed that the defendant should not alienate certain property belonging to him till the satisfaction of the decree :

Held that the decree created a charge on the defendant's property as the prohibitory order against defendant amounted to an injunction or attachment : 25 Cal 179 (P C) and A I R 1914 P C 129, Rel. on; 35 Cal 837 and A I R 1922 Pat 529, Ref. [P 119 C 1, 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Sec. 7 — Small Cause Court has no power to create charge on immovable property.

Small Cause Court has no power to declare a charge on immovable property and if it creates one, then the decree in so far as it seeks to create a charge must be regarded as void and inoperative : A I R 1937 All 194, Dissent.; A I R 1917 Nag 55 and A I R 1925 Cal 1, Ref. [P 120 C 1]

W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellants.

R. S. Dabir — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtors' appeal from the order passed by the Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, on 29th January 1937 in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 5 of 1936. The respondents sued the appellants in the Court of Small Causes, Jubbulpore, to recover Rs. 500. They compromised their dispute whereby the respondents agreed to receive Rs. 400 and costs which were made payable in five instalments on condition that the appellants did not alienate some specified Malik Makbuza fields. In accordance with this agreement the Court passed a decree in these terms :

> Rs. 400 and Rs. 59-6-0 as costs on defendants payable by five annual instalments of Rs. 92 . . . the defendants shall not alienate their Malik Makbuza fields Nos. 648, 649, 650, 671 and 686 of mouza Patan till satisfaction of this decree. In default or on failure to pay any instalment whole sum shall be payable at once.

The decree-holders had the decree transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Jubbulpore, and got the fields attached. The appellants applied to the Debt Conciliation Board for Settlement of their debts including the judgment-debt under consideration. As the respondents did not accept a fair offer of settlement, the Debt Conciliation Board granted a certificate under Sec. 15 (1), Debt Conciliation Act. The appellants thereon applied to the executing Court for suspending the execution of the decree under Sec. 15 (3) of that Act. Both the Courts below concurred in the view that the decree under execution created a charge on the immovable property and that the debt being a secured debt was not covered by S. 15 (3) or the proviso to Sec. 21, Debt Conciliation Act. The main question for determination is whether the decree of the Small Cause Court created a charge on the immovable property. The decree in fact contains a prohibitory order against the defendants. It may be interpreted as an injunction or as an attachment inasmuch as the effect of the attachment is to prevent alienation : see 25 Cal 179[1] at page 179 and 42 Cal 72.[2] Under Sec. 7, Civil P. C., the Small Cause Court is precluded from either issuing an injunction or attaching immovable property. It is however a well recognized rule of construction of decrees as of private agreements that every effort should be made to uphold them. From this point of view, it would be indeed necessary to see if the terms used in the decree can reasonably bear the interpretation that they intended to create a charge. No particular form of words is necessary for the creation of a charge. So far as private agreements are concerned, it has been held that if having regard to all the circumstances of the transaction the document shows an intention to make the land a security for payment of the money mentioned therein that is sufficient to create the charge : see 32 Bom 386,[3] 52 All 985[4] and 36 All 201.[5] In the last mentioned case the words used in the written agreement of the parties were :

> I will not transfer this property by way of sale, mortgage or gift etc., so long as I do not repay this loan and if I do, the transfer shall be void.

Both the learned Judges who decided the case concurred in holding that the words created a charge, although one of them went further in holding that they created a mortgage. The distinction between a mortgage and a charge is that in a charge there is no transfer of interest in the property but only the creation of a right of payment out of the property specified : see 35 Cal 837[6] and 1 Pat 387.[7] For the creation of a charge, it is sufficient to indicate the property that is set apart as a security for the payment of the debt. The creditor has in such a case a right to look to the property for satisfaction of his debts but does not acquire any interest in the property as he would in the case of a mortgage. The decree in question may therefore be well understood as creating a charge on the immovable property.

The next question is whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to create a charge on immovable property. By Sch. 2 (11) appended to the Small Cause Courts Act, the Small Cause Court is precluded from trying a suit to enforce a charge and regard being had to S. 7, Civil P. C., which withholds the power to attach immovable

1. Motilal v. Karrabuldin, (1898) 25 Cal 179=24 I A 170=7 Sar 222=1 C W N 639 (P C).
2. Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das, (1914) 1 A I R P C 129=24 I C 804=42 Cal 72=41 I A 251 (P C).
3. Janardan v. Anant, (1908) 32 Bom 386=10 Bom L R 575.
4. Nathan Lal v. Durga Das, (1931) 18 A I R All 62=130 I C 489=52 All 985=1930 A L J 1267.
5. Jawahir Mall v. Indomati, (1914) 1 A I R All 187=22 I C 973=36 All 201=12 A L J 290.
6. Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal, (1908) 35 Cal 837 = 7 C L J 492= 12 C W N 849.
7. Shiva Prasad Singh v. Beni Madhab, (1922) 9 A I R Pat 529=70 I C 24=1 Pat 387=4 P L T 6.

property and to issue injunctions or to appoint a receiver of immovable property it could not have contemplated conferring power on that Court to pass a decree creating a charge on immovable property. My attention is invited to I L R (1937) All 418[8] wherein it is held that the Small Cause Court has power to pass a decree charging immovable property. With due respect to the learned Judge, I feel great difficulty in accepting this view regard being had to the considerations already stated above. It may be pertinent to notice here that there were conflicting decisions on the question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to order an attachment of immovable property before judgment. In 14 N L R 1,[9] it was held that the Small Cause Court had such jurisdiction. The whole question came to be considered by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 52 Cal 275[10] and the majority of the learned Judges were of the opinion that a Court of Small Causes had such jurisdiction, but expressed a doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in the matter when the Civil Procedure Code was passed in 1908. To resolve that doubt S. 7 was amended and a new Rule, viz. R. 13, was added to O. 38 by Act 1 of 1926. I am therefore of opinion that the Small Cause Court had no power to declare a charge on immovable property and that therefore the decree in so far as it seeks to create a charge must be regarded as void and inoperative.

It is urged that the agreement creating a charge which was reduced to writing by being incorporated in the decree was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration of the decree. This contention is raised for the first time in this Court and can well be barred as it involves inquiry into facts. It must however fail on the ground that the Court's directions about the charge contained in the decree cannot by themselves be regarded as constituting an agreement between the parties. The directions were based on the admissions made by the parties as an agreement concluded already out of Court. The admissions recorded by the Court and the directions contained in the decree may at best only serve to supply evidence of the antecedent agreement. As the actual agreement is not before the Court, the question of registration does not arise. On the view I have taken of the Small Cause Court decree, it would take effect as a simple money decree and S. 15 (3) and proviso to S. 21, Debt Conciliation Act, will operate to debar the decree-holders' right to proceed in execution. It may be open to the decree-holders to file a separate suit to enforce the charge independently of the decree on the basis of the agreement, but that aspect of the case is not material here. The result is that the appeal succeeds with costs in all the Courts. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

8. Brindaban v. Chhotey Lal, (1937) 24 A I R All 194=167 I C 784=I L R (1937) All 418=1937 A L J 93.
9. Kanchedi v. Kanchedi, (1917) 4 A I R Nag 55 =43 I C 123=14 N L R 1.
10. Barada Kanta v. Maijuddi, (1925) 12 A I R Cal 1=82 I C 109=52 Cal 275=40 C L J 199 =28 C W N 1056 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 120

POLLOCK J.

Laxman Ramchandra Dalal — Appellant.

v.

Wasudeo Vithal Chimote—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 503 of 1936, Decided on 25th November 1938, from appellate decree of 3rd Addl. District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 30th July 1936.

Pre-emption—Decree for pre-emption directing plaintiff to deposit purchase money within certain time and failing this his suit to stand dismissed—Deposit not made within time fixed —Plaintiff can appeal from decree made against him.

In a suit for pre-emption a decree was passed directing plaintiff to deposit purchase money less costs within certain period and providing that in default of making this deposit, his suit would stand dismissed. The plaintiff never made the deposit required :

Held that in such a case the plaintiff could appeal against the decree made against him : 13 All 376 (F B), Foll. ; 16 All 126 and A I R 1923 All 516, Rel. on ; A I R 1933 All 113, Disting. [P 121 C 1]

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Appellant.

K. V. Brahma — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued for pre-emption on 19th February 1936, and a decree was passed directing him to deposit Rs. 700 less costs within three months ; in default of making this deposit, his suit to stand dismissed with costs. On 18th April 1936, an application for an extension of the time fixed for payment was rejected by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff never made the deposit required, and his appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was not open to him to question the decree passed against him as he had not complied with it. In 13 All 376[1] it was held that in such a case the plaintiff could appeal after the period prescribed in the decree had elapsed without his paying in the pre-emptive price fixed thereby. That case has been followed in 16 All 126[2] and 45 All 456.[3] No case has been cited to me in which the correctness of that view has been challenged. The question whether the original Court or the Appellate Court has power to give an extension of time under Sec. 148, Civil P. C., or under any other provision is a different question. On general principles I can see no reason why in a case of this sort the plaintiff should not appeal against the decree that has been passed against him. If the decree of the first Court is upheld in its entirety, then it may be that his right to pre-empt has gone because he had failed to deposit the pre-emptive price fixed within the required time. But, if the Appellate Court varies the price fixed by the first Court, I do not see why it should not have power to vary also the period allowed for payment. Following the decision in 13 All 376[1] I hold that the appeal lies. The decision in A I R 1933 All 113[4] was on a different point and there was no reference there to the previous Full Bench decision.

The appeal is therefore allowed and the case is remanded to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the merits. Costs will abide the event. Counsel's fee in this Court Rupees 15.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

1. Kodai Singh v. Jaisri Singh, (1891) 13 All 376 (F B).
2. Wazir Khan v. Kale Khan, (1894) 16 All 126 =1894 A W N 3.
3. Girdhari Singh v. Bhupal Singh, (1923) 10 A I R All 516=74 I C 745=45 All 456.
4. Umrao Singh v. Kanwal, (1933) 20 A I R All 113=141 I C 15.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 121

POLLOCK J.

Dhundiraj Madhao Dharaskar — Appellant.

v.

Ganpat Vithal Vichore and another — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 512 of 1936, Decided on 1st December 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. District Judge, Wardha, D/- 14th August 1936.

(a) Land Acquisition—Acquisition of malik makbuza—Landlord is not entitled to compensation (Obiter).

The landlord is entitled to no compensation on account of the acquisition of the malik makbuza land as he is not interested as landlord therein, his commission being merely payment for the trouble of collecting the land revenue: A I R 1933 Nag 114, Rel. on. [P 122 C 1]

(b) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 192 (1)—Lambardar's commission for collecting land revenue from malik makbuzas—Lambardar's co-sharers have no right of share.

The lambardar receives one commission on the land revenue assessed on a mahal and another commission on the land revenue assessed on the malik makbuzas, and this commission is given to him not as proprietor of the village but to compensate him for the trouble he has in collecting the money. Neither forms part of the village assets and in neither have the co-sharers any right. [P 122 C 1]

(c) Co-sharers—Village profits—Where it is not necessary for lambardar to send to his co-sharers their share of profits by money order, he is not entitled to money order charges.

If the co-sharers live neither in the village itself nor in the same place as the lambardar who is one of the co-sharers, it is reasonable that the lambardar should send them their share of the profits by money order and that the money order charges should be paid by the cosharers; but where there is no evidence to show that it was necessary to send money by money-order, the lambardar is not entitled to money-order charges. [P 122 C 2]

S. R. Mangrulkar — for Appellant.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a share of village profits. The plaintiffs own a four-anna share in the villages of Kandhli and Dalpatpur, of which the defendant is the lambardar. For the four years in suit the defendant admitted the plaintiffs' claim to the extent of Rupees 340-8-1 while the plaintiffs claimed Rs. 1437-1-0. Their claim was decreed to the extent of Rs. 481-11-0 in the first Court and to the extent of Rs. 451-3-0 in the lower Appellate Court. Against that decision the defendant has appealed. The first item in dispute is the defendant's commission for collecting the land revenue from malik makbuzas. The land revenue assessed on the malik makbuzas in these villages is Rs. 126-8-0 and the land revenue payable on this account by the lambardar is Rs. 111. The cosharers contend that they are entitled to a share of this commission of Rs. 15-8-0, amounting to Rs. 62 for the four years in suit. Under S. 123, C. P. Land Revenue Act, all land revenue payable under the Act shall be paid through the sadar-lambardar, lambardar or patel, as the case may be, and in this case it is the lambardar. S. 84 (3) provides that the Settlement Officer shall declare the assessment of any separately assessed plots of land included in a mahal and allow the proprietor of the mahal to deduct from the land revenue payable through him a drawback not exceeding 20 per cent. thereon to compensate him for his responsibility in respect of such land revenue.

As was pointed out in 29 N L R 31,[1] the landlord is entitled to no compensation on account of the acquisition of the malik makbuza land as he is not interested as landlord therein, his commission being merely payment for the trouble of collecting the land revenue. Under Sec. 188 (1), it is the duty of every lambardar to collect and pay into the Government Treasury so much of the land revenue as may be payable through him, and under S. 192 (1) he receives remuneration fixed by the Deputy Commissioner and recoverable from the proprietors, usually not exceeding 5 per cent. on the land revenue. The lambardar therefore receives one commission on the land revenue assessed on a mahal and another commission on the land revenue assessed on the malik makbuzas, and this commission is given to him not as proprietor of the village but to compensate him for the trouble he has in collecting the money. Neither forms part of the village assets and in neither have the cosharers any right. The plaintiffs' claim must therefore be reduced by Rs. 15-8-0.

The second item in dispute arises out of a surrender of occupancy land from one Mahadeo to the defendant for Rs. 1000. On the same day the defendant granted the occupancy rights in this field to one Jago for Rs. 1100, thereby making a profit of Rs. 100. Mahadeo's sons however put in an application under S. 13, Tenancy Act, and in order to meet this application the defendant induced Jago to surrender the holding for Rs. 1100. Then after advertisement the defendant accepted Rs. 900 for the occupancy rights in this field which was the best offer he could get. There was thus ultimately a loss of Rs. 100. Throughout these proceedings he acted as the agent of the co-sharers, and there is no reason to suppose that he acted in bad faith or improperly in any way. The cosharers are therefore bound by the act and a further sum of Rs. 50 must be deducted from the plaintiff's claim. The next objection is to the writing fee of Rs. 5 included in the plaintiffs' costs in the first Court. No objection was taken to this in the lower appellate Court. The objection must therefore be now overruled. The defendant has been disallowed certain money-order and registration charges. If the cosharers live neither in the village itself nor in the same place as the lambardar, it is reasonable that the lambardar should send them their share of the profits by money order and that the money-order charges should be paid by the cosharers; but here, there is no evidence to show that it was necessary to send money by money-order, and that item must therefore be disallowed.

The last item in dispute is the costs incurred in litigation over the banjar land in the village. The learned Additional District Judge stated that the proprietary body could not be held responsible for loss incurred by him in the litigation without the consent of the proprietary body, but the lambardar had given notice to the cosharers and they raised no objection. Owing however to the lambardar's failure to file the decrees showing what the costs were in the trial Court, it was impossible to say what loss was actually incurred. The decrees have since been filed, but it was for the defendant to make out his case in the trial Court and not to supplement it in this way in appeal. The defendant therefore cannot claim credit for this item. The appeal therefore partially succeeds, and there will be a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 385-11-0. The plaintiffs will get costs proportionate to that amount throughout, and the defendant will get costs proportionate to his success throughout.

D.S./R.K. Appeal partly allowed.

1. Sadashiv v. Collector, Nagpur, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 114=145 I C 447=29 N L R 31.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 122

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Secretary of State — Appellant.

v.

Mt. Geeta w/o Imam Musalman, and others — Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 12 of 1937, Decided on 5th January 1939, from order of Niyogi J., Reported in A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 91.

(a) Letters Patent (Nagpur) — Letters Patent appeal should be filed within 30 days—Whether time during which Court is closed should be excluded (Quære).

It is desirable (so was the warning issued by their Lordships to the legal profession) to file Letters Patent appeals within 30 days. Such appeals may well be held to be out of time if not filed within 30 days. [P 123 C 2]

[In this particular case however their Lordships admitted the appeal, even though out of time, under their discretion to admit for good cause shown.] [P 123 C 2]

(Quære)*—Whether Court in computing 30 days would be justified in excluding time during which Court is closed. [P 123 C 2]

(b) Letters Patent (Nagpur), Cl. 10—Decision of High Court Judge disposing of appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act, is not judgment—Letters Patent appeal does not lie.

Where an award made by a special tribunal comes to the High Court in appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act, and a Judge of the High Court disposes of that matter, the resulting decision is not a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent. There is only an award made pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and hence Letters Patent appeal does not lie. However, though appeal does not lie under the Letters Patent, the Judge who has to deal with either an appeal or a reference under the Workmen's Compensation Act, might well be justified in any case of difficulty or raising a point of importance, in referring the matter to a Bench : 40 Cal 21 (P C) and 17 C W N 421, Applied; Case law discussed. [P 128 C 1, 2]

A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

Y. S. Tambe — for Respondents.

Judgment.—To this appeal two preliminary objections are taken : (1) Does a Letters Patent appeal lie? (2) If so, is it barred by time? The latter point is a short one and is taken first. The judgment was delivered on 2nd April 1937. Leave was granted on the same day. Thirty days is allowed in which to appeal. The appeal was filed on 21st June 1937, and quite clearly if S. 4, Limitation Act, applies it was within time because the Court was closed from 12th April until 20th June 1937 so that it was filed on the opening day. It has been argued however on the authority of A I R 1921 Lah 237[1] and A I R 1934 Pat 353[2] that so far as Letters Patent appeals are concerned one is dealing with a procedure which is governed exclusively by the rules made by the High Court under the Letters Patent, that one cannot pray in aid any statutory provisions, and therefore one has to reject these appeals unless filed within 30 days from judgment because no provision is made in the rules excluding the time during which the Court is closed. We do not consider it necessary or desirable in this case to adjudicate on that point because we think that this is a case (even were we rigorously to limit the time for appealing to 30 days even though the Courts were closed) in which we should admit this appeal, though out of time. For this reason we stopped counsel for the appellant on the question of limitation.

We note the change that has been made in the law by S. 29, Limitation Act, and the argument that the rules of the High Court under the Letters Patent are not included in the expression "special or local law," that the Letters Patent constitutes neither a special nor a local law. We think that it is desirable to warn the profession that such appeals may well be held to be out of time if not filed within 30 days in future. We decide this preliminary point in this case under our discretion to admit for good cause shown. We note the fact that the point has never been raised here and that Letters Patent appeals had, at the time when this appeal was filed, only been in existence for 18 months in this Province, the rules were new and there was no past experience to go upon. We reserve for consideration hereafter whether one would be justified in excluding time during which the Court is closed. We issue a warning that it may well be that such time cannot be excluded in Letters Patent appeals. That leaves the more difficult question whether a Letters Patent appeal lies at all in this matter. That in turn turns upon the nature of the adjudication and upon the meaning of the word "judgment" in Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent. The matter arose in the following way : An order was made by the Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Sec. 22-A, Workmen's Compensation Act, relates to what is there called an award and what is elsewhere referred to as an order. It is quite plain, looking at the Act as a whole, that, as in England, these disputes are settled in a different way from civil cases and in a way that approximates very closely to, if not exactly the same as an arbitration. The rules of procedure are not those laid down in the Civil Procedure Code which is applicable only as regards certain matters. For example under S. 23 the Commissioner has all the powers of a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the purpose of taking evidence on oath . . . . and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of documents and material objects.

1. Fatteh Muhammad v. Chothu Ram, (1921) 8 A I R Lah 237=60 I C 787.
2. Mukund v. Niranjan, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 353 =151 I C 107=15 P L T 801.

The powers of appeal are provided by S. 30 which provides that from certain orders (of which this is one) an appeal shall lie to the High Court. Nothing is said apart from that as to the right to appeal. No provision is made for example for an appeal from the High Court to the Privy Council. The position is not unlike that which arose under the Land Acquisition Act, before its amendment. In 40 Cal 21[3] it was held that no appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from a decision of the Chief Court of Lower Burma on a reference to that Court by the Collector of Rangoon, in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, on an award made by him as to the value of land acquired.

It was there laid down following a line of cases which established the principle (now well-recognized) that a right of appeal must be given by express enactment and cannot be implied. At p. 27 their Lordships observe:

A special and limited appeal is given by the Land Acquisition Act, from the award of 'the Court' to the High Court. No further right of appeal is given. Nor can any such right be implied. The learned counsel for the appellants relied both on S. 53 and S. 54 of the Act. S. 53 enacts that, "save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under this Act." That enactment applies to an earlier stage in the proceedings, and seems to have nothing to do with an appeal from the High Court. S. 54 is in the following terms:

54. Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals from original decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award of the Court in any proceedings under this Act.

That Section seems to carry the appellants no further. It only applies to proceedings in the course of an appeal to the High Court. Its force is exhausted when the appeal to the High Court is heard. Their Lordships cannot accept the argument or suggestion, that when once the claimant is admitted to the High Court, he has all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree of the High Court made in the course of its ordinary jurisdiction.

That of course has been changed by the amendment of the Land Acquisition Act, but the amendment of that Act leaves the reason why the preliminary objection in that case succeeded untouched. Here we are concerned with an order which is called in one place in the Workmen's Compensation Act an award and which in truth and in fact would appear to be an award as was observed in 42 C W N 516.[4] It is an award made by a special tribunal called a Commissioner or in some places 'the Court' from which tribunal a special and limited right of appeal lies to the High Court. When it comes to the High Court and a Judge of the High Court disposes of that matter, is the resulting decision a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent?

In 17 C W N 421[5] their Lordships of the Privy Council had under consideration a land acquisition case on appeal from a decision of the Bombay High Court reported in 37 Bom 506.[6] The application was for special leave to appeal. The difficulty in the way was 40 Cal 21[3] referred to in the Calcutta Weekly Notes Reports as 16 C W N 961.[3] The Privy Council immediately took the point that it had already decided in 40 Cal 21[3] that no appeal from a High Court in a land acquisition case lay. Then a discussion between counsel, Sir Erle Richards, and various members of the Privy Council occurred which ran along the following lines: Sir Erle Richards endeavoured to show that the gap in the chain which existed in the Burma case was closed in this Bombay case because the Letters Patent gave a right of appeal. The Letters Patent clause that was there being considered was Cl. 39 of the Bombay Letters Patent. Cl. 39 of the Bombay Letters Patent is similar in terms to Cl. 29 of our Letters Patent. That gives a right of appeal from the High Court to the Privy Council "in any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction, from any final judgment, decree or order." It was said that when the High Court of Burma had disposed of an appeal under the Land Acquisition Act the conclusion was either a final decree or order. Lord Macnaghten observed at p. 424: "I do not think so. It is an award." The argument continued, Lord Moulton at page 425 saying:

If you read the words of the decision in the Rangoon case it is based on its not being a decree in its ordinary jurisdiction but a mere question of an award.

3. Rangoon Botatoung Co. Ltd. v. Collector, Rangoon, (1913) 40 Cal 21=16 I C 188=39 A 197=16 C L J 245=16 C W N 961 (P C).

4. Khulna Electric Supply Corporation Ltd. v. Bahadur Sardar, (1938) 68 C L J 467=42 C W N 516.

5. Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites v. Dosabhai Bezanji Motiwala, (1913) 17 C W N 421=20 I C 763 (P C).

6. Special Officer, Salsette Buildings Sites v. Dosabhai Bezanji, (1913) 37 Bom 506=17 I C 952=14 Bom L R 1194.

Counsel said :

Yes. Your Lordships were dealing there with the Code of Civil Procedure.

Lord Macnaghten : We were only dealing with the Act.

Lord Moulton : I can understand your point that because an appeal was not given by the Land Acquisition Act that might be remedied by the Patent, but when the ground of the decision is that it is an award, and not an ordinary decree of the Court, then its whole existence, its nature, is defined by the Land Acquisition Act, and I cannot see how the Patent can apply to it.

Lord Macnaghten observed :

It was supposed that they were appealing from a decision or decree of the High Court, but they were not.

Again at p. 426, Lord Moulton observed:

The decision in the Rangoon case was an award. It is not a decree under its ordinary jurisdiction. That is conclusive, is it not ?

Counsel replied to that :

I venture to think not. I submit not because your Lordship sees in the Rangoon case the Court there were acting as the first Court, which made the award. They were not acting in appeal in the Rangoon case.

Lord Macnaghten :—Yes, they were. No objection was taken on that ground. It was very fully argued, I am sure.

In the result there was no express decision on the point, but merely an interplay of thought between Bar and Bench, and the special leave was refused. That case, because there is no express decision, is not binding on us, but we have of course to take notice of their Lordships' mind as disclosed in the discussion that is very fully reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes. It seems to us to be clear that what their Lordships were there regarding as a conclusive answer to a right of appeal in a land acquisition case was that appeal does not lie at all unless it is given in some way, that it was not given by statute, and so far as the Letters Patent was concerned appeals were limited to judgments, decrees or orders and what the High Court was doing in a land acquisition case was not passing a judgment, giving a decree or making an order; it was making an award which did not fall within the "judgment, decree or order" and consequently there was no right of appeal provided either in the Act or in the Letters Patent.

In 41 Mad 943[7] it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, following the Rangoon case (therein referred to as 40 Cal 21[3]) and 17 C W N 421[5] that the decision of the High Court in a land acquisition appeal is not a judgment within Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent so as to enable a party to file a further appeal to the High Court under that Article. 17 C W N 421[5] was relied on. In that case the point was the same as in the present case, that is to say the Court was not concerned with an appeal to the Privy Council but an appeal under the Letters Patent. The only difference between the two lies in the fact that there the dispute was one under the Land Acquisition Act and here the dispute is one under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The argument was that such an appeal only lies from a judgment and that such a decision is not a judgment but an award. Seshagiri Ayyar J. (p. 953) makes it quite clear that if the matter were res integra he would have come to the conclusion that the decision arrived at in a land acquisition case by the High Court is a judgment and not an award. He points out that tripartite disputes are frequently under consideration in land acquisition disputes and that difficult questions relating to title and to the mode of valuation arise. "But," he adds, speculation is not possible on a question of this kind. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have said the last, if not the final, word on the subject. In 40 Cal 21[3] they first propounded the view that the conclusion come to by the Appellate Court under S. 54, Land Acquisition Act, is not a judgment, but partakes the character of an award. In a later case, 17 C W N 421,[5] there are observations of the members constituting the Board which undoubtedly point to the conclusion that in the opinion of their Lordships the decision on appeal in a land acquisition case is not a judgment. It is true, as Mr. Ramchandra Ayyar argued, that the report of the observations is not authentic in the sense that they appear in a publication sanctioned by the Judicial Committee. But there is no reason for supposing that these observations were invented. Moreover, if we bear in mind that the application for special leave was made to the Judicial Committee after the refusal of the learned Judges who heard the case to grant a certificate under the Code of Civil Procedure . . . there can be no doubt that the Judicial Committee did intend to lay down the proposition contended for by the learned Government Pleader.

A I R 1936 Cal 688[8] does not carry the matter any further. There the point was taken that even after the amendment of the Land Acquisition Act, though an appeal was given by that amendment to the Privy Council, though an award under the Land Acquisition Act was declared to be deemed to be a decree and the statements of the grounds of such awards are judgments, still the Act has not provided for an appeal from one Judge to a Bench. As was there observed however since land acquisition cases went in many instances to a single Judge of the High Court, and as under S. 111, Civil P. C., there cannot be an appeal from a single Judge to His Majesty in Council, if there was no power to appeal under the Letters Patent from a single Judge to a Bench in those cases that went before a single Judge, then despite the power of appeal to Privy Council given by the amendment of the Land Acquisition Act the provision in the Code of Civil Procedure would prevent an appeal to the Privy Council. It was held therefore that it was implicit in the amendment of the Land Acquisition Act that such decisions should be deemed to be judgments within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Calcutta Letters Patent and that a Letters Patent Appeal lay. 3 Lah 420[9] raises a similar point and the same conclusion was arrived at for the same reasons.

7. Manavikraman Tirumalpad v. Collector of Nilgiris, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 626=49 I C 27=41 Mad 943=35 M L J 110 (F B).

8. Collector of Dacca v. Ghulam Kuddus Choudhury, (1936) 23 A I R Cal 688=168 I C 352=I L R (1937) 1 Cal 699=64 C L J 503=40 C W N 1143.

In A I R 1925 P C 155[10] their Lordships were concerned with an order passed relating to a scheme in a scheme suit. A scheme suit had been launched and had gone as far as His Majesty's Privy Council who confirmed the scheme with some alterations and an Order in Council was made accordingly. That scheme so confirmed provided for the appointment of a Temple Committee and provided that the scheme "may be altered, modified or added to by an application to His Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay." The Temple Committee was appointed, rules were framed and came before the District Judge for sanction. He made certain alterations and sanctioned the rules. Later, certain members of the caste interested presented to the High Court an application under Cl. 20 for modification of the rules sanctioned by the District Judge. The rules sanctioned by the District Judge were considered by the High Court to be an order under S. 47, Civil P. C., and appeals were made to the High Court. On 22nd September the matter was considered in the High Court. No objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the District Judge to make such rules, and accordingly those rules were considered. As those rules were considered no order was considered necessary on the application under Cl. 20. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the District Judge had no power, that the High Court, even though no objection was taken as to jurisdiction of the District Judge, should not have considered those rules, that the High Court had power to consider the application under Cl. 20, that no appeal lay from the District Judge to the High Court, that the High Court should have taken notice of the absence of jurisdiction and should not have entertained those appeals but that under Cl. 20 it had power to modify the rules made by the District Judge but it had not exercised that power and that it could exercise it on a suitable application made thereafter. Their Lordships held that there was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree drawn up except on the sole ground that the judgment or decree is incompetent, and that the term 'judgment' in the Letters Patent means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense. The appeal was allowed and the judgment or decree was set aside as incompetent though it was observed that the appeal should not have been admitted.

A I R 1925 P C 155[10] was considered in two cases: A I R 1933 All 262[11] and 10 Lah 132.[12] In 10 Lah 132,[12] A I R 1925 P C 155[10] is referred to as 49 M L J 25.[10] In both the above cases the Court found some little difficulty in restricting the term "judgment" to "decree" and in 10 Lah 132[12] difficulty was also found in understanding how after the Privy Council held that no appeal was competent their Lordships heard the appeal and disposed of it. We do not find it necessary to enter into a consideration of whether from a sentence in A I R 1925 P C 155[10] one is bound to hold that not only under Cl. 29, but also under Cl. 10 the term "judgment" is restricted to decree because our decision is not in any way based on any such conclusion. The question, in our opinion, is not whether the term "judgment" in Cl. 10 is to be so restricted but as to whether a Judge disposing of an appeal under S. 30, 9. Har Dial Shah v. Secretary of State, (1923) 10 A I R Lah 275=69 I C 428=3 Lah 420.

10. Sevak Jeranchod P[illegible]lal v. Dakore Temple Committee, (192[illegible]) 12 A I R P C 155 = 87 I C 313=49 M L J 25 (P C).

11. Sital Din v. Anant Ram, (1933) 20 A I R All 262=142 I C 331=55 All 326 = 1933 A L J 127 (F B).

12. Shibba Mal v. Rup Narain, (1928) 15 A I R Lah 904 = 111 I C 274 = 10 Lah 132 = 29 P L R 571.

Workmen's Compensation Act, is passing a judgment or whether he is doing what the Commissioner certainly is doing, i. e. making an award; in other words whether this is a case similar to the above-mentioned cases under the Land Acquisition Act. In both A I R 1933 All 262[11] and 10 Lah 132[12] what the Court was considering was a dispute arising in a proceeding which fell within the Civil Procedure Code. The Calcutta view as to the meaning of the term "judgment" has been regarded as settled by the observation of Couch C. J. in 8 Beng L R 433,[13] though there is a tendency now apparently to treat that definition as good so far as it goes but not necessarily exhaustive : see 56 Cal 135[14] at page 140. Rankin C. J. at that page observes as follows :

> The correct technical use of the word "judgment" as distinct from "order" was considered in England in (1884) 12 Q B D 342[15] and (1890) 25 Q B D 465.[16] According to these decisions a "judgment" is a decision obtained in an action and every other decision is an "order". These cases were referred to with approval by the Judicial Committee and applied to the construction of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court in 47 Bom 724.[17] In view of the use of the word "order" in Cl. 15 of our Letters Patent, as they now stand, it may be doubted whether for the present purpose the correct technical use of the word "judgment" in England is a safe guide to the meaning of the clause. It was apparently upon some such principle however that the case in 33 Cal 1323[18] was decided. In that case the senior Judge of a Division Bench had refused to extend the time for presenting an appeal under Sec. 5, Limitation Act, and it was held upon Letters Patent appeal that no appeal lay from this refusal. The reasoning was "it may no doubt be said that an order which terminates a proceeding is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15, but it must be a proceeding, as we understand it, in the course of a suit or in relation thereto, and in which some question or other as to the right or liability of any party is raised, and not a proceeding in respect of a matter which has already come to a termination by the operation of law or otherwise." This view was objected to by Mookerjee J. in 43 Cal 857[19] as going beyond the definition of the term "judgment" given by Couch C. J. In 48 Bom 442[20] the High Court of Bombay dissented from the reasoning in Gobinda's case[18] holding that an appeal lay under the Letters Patent from a refusal to extend time under Cl. (sic) (5), Limitation Act. There is much force in the objections which have been taken to the decision in Gobinda's case[18] and were the order appealed against before us, an order refusing to extend time, and thereby putting an end to the litigation between these parties we might well have thought it necessary to refer the question of the correctness of that decision to a Full Bench.

This however was another case of an adjudication made in the course of a suit. It does not in our opinion touch the question that is before us now. The same may be said in 35 Mad 1[21] where it was held that :

> An order of a single Judge on the Original Side, refusing to frame an issue asked for by one of the parties is not a judgment within Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

In that case the observation of Sir Arnold White, the then Chief Justice that "an adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause if its effect, whatever its form may be and whatever may be the nature of the application in which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned or if its effect, if not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding" would appear to be in conflict with the decision of the Privy Council in 40 Cal 21[3] if the learned Chief Justice intended to include proceedings outside the Civil Procedure Code whatever their nature. In 45 Cal 502[22] the question was whether the decision of the Judge refusing to set aside an award filed under the provisions of S. 11 (2), Arbitration Act, was a judgment from which appeal lay under the Letters Patent and it was held that it was. That decision was arrived at without reference to either 40 Cal 21[3] or 17 C W N 421.[5] No decisions are cited in the judgment which appear to proceed solely on the view that 13. Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co., (1872) 8 Beng L R 433=17 W R 364.

14. Brojogopal Roy v. Amarchandra, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 214=114 I C 88=56 Cal 135 = 32 C W N 935 (F B).
15. Ex parte Chinery, (1884) 12 Q B D 342 = 53 L J Ch 662=50 L T 342 = 32 W R 469 = 1 Morrell 31.
16. Onslow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1890) 25 Q B D 465 = 59 L J Q B 556 = 63 L T 513=38 W R 728.
17. Tata Iron and Steel Co. Ltd. v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay, (1923) 10 A I R P C 148=74 I C 469 = 47 Bom 724 = 50 I A 212 (P C).
18. Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee, (1906) 33 Cal 1323=3 C L J 545=10 C W N 986.
19. Mathura Sundari Dasi v. Haran Chandra Saha, (1916) 3 A I R Cal 361 = 34 I C 634= 43 Cal 857=23 C L J 443=20 C W N 594.
20. Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moroba, (1924) 11 A I R Bom 399=80 I C 862 = 48 Bom 442= 26 Bom L R 395.
21. Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar, (1912) 35 Mad 1 = 8 I C 340 = 21 M L J 1 = (1910) M W N 697.
22. Campbell & Co. v. Jeshraj Giridhari Lall, (1918) 5 A I R Cal 191=46 I C 687 = 45 Cal 502.

when the Judge refused to take the award off the file it was a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 because it decided the rights between the parties, because by refusing to take the award off the file, the learned Judge in effect made the appellant liable for the amount of the award, for, if the award is put upon the file and remains upon the file, then, as pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellant, it is enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court under S. 15, Arbitration Act.

8 Beng L R 433[13] which contains the well-known definition of Couch C. J., is another case of proceedings falling within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court. It was expressly held that the proceeding there under consideration (which was a proceeding by way of mandamus) was a proceeding in a civil case. That at once distinguishes that case from cases such as land acquisition cases or rather matters where the dispute is determined by a special tribunal set up under statutory authority. So also in 10 I A 4[23] one is concerned with an ordinary suit the only question being as to whether the particular decision arrived at was a judgment or whether the Court was acting in a ministerial capacity. What was there under consideration was the decision of a Judge of the High Court pronounced on an application in execution of a Privy Council decree. The point was as to whether the Court was acting in a ministerial or judicial capacity. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the Court was acting in a judicial capacity, that the decision was arrived at in a suit which had the effect of finally adjudicating upon a matter of very great importance and that it was a judgment from which an appeal lay.

We are accordingly of opinion that this case falls within the decision of the Privy Council in 40 Cal 21[3] and the observations of their Lordships in 17 C W N 421[5] and that no appeal lies. There is, in our opinion, no judgment within the meaning of Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent from which to appeal. There is only an award made pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It may be that the result is unfortunate, but that can be set right by legislation. We are not convinced that the result necessarily is unfortunate because in workmen's compensation proceedings one has, from the very nature of the case, on the one hand persons unable to sustain (unless supported by a Trades Union) a long continued and expensive litigation and it may well be for aught we know to the contrary that it was the intention of the Legislature to restrict the number of Courts which can consider the comparatively simple points that arise under the Workmen's Compensation Act. If a Letters Patent Appeal lay it could only lie for reasons which would make appeal possible not only to a Division Bench from a Single Judge but also from the Division Bench to the Privy Council. That may or may not be desirable. In England three Courts can, and frequently do, consider these workmen's compensation awards : the County Court, the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. If we are right, as the law at present stands only two tribunals can consider these matters in India : (1) the Commissioner, and (2) the High Court. We observe that although we have arrived at the conclusion that appeal does not lie under the Letters Patent, the Judge who has to deal with either an appeal or a reference under the Workmen's Compensation Act might well be justified in any case of difficulty or raising a point of importance, in referring the matter to a Bench. The preliminary objection is therefore upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

23. Hurish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sundar Debi, (1885) 9 Cal 482=10 I A 4=4 Sar 407 =12 C L R 511 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 128

POLLOCK J.

Indian Cotton Co. Ltd. (in insolvency) — Appellant.

v.

Ramcharanlal Chunnilal — Receiver— Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 211 of 1936, Decided on 5th December 1938, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 30th March 1936.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52— Owner of property filing insolvency application and on his insolvency his property vesting in receiver—Owner cannot be said to have transferred it.

When owner of property files an insolvency application and is adjudged insolvent so that his property vests in the Court or the receiver appointed by the Court, it cannot be said that the owner of the property has transferred it or otherwise dealt with it. His whole estate has devolved on the receiver just as, in case of his death, it would devolve on his heir : 25 Mad 406 and A I R 1922 Mad 335, Rel. on. [P 129 C 2]

(b) Insolvency — Mortgagor adjudged insolvent—Preliminary decree for sale obtained by mortgagee made final and property sold in execution — Proceeding is not binding on receiver if not impleaded in it.

When a mortgagor is adjudged insolvent, his estate vests in the Court with effect from the presentation of the insolvency application. Where therefore in a suit brought by a mortgagee, a preliminary decree is obtained after the mortgagor has applied in insolvency but before he is adjudged an insolvent and that decree is made final and insolvent's property is sold in execution, the proceedings are not binding on the receiver if he was not impleaded in those proceedings : A I R 1914 P C 129 and A I R 1927 P C 108, Rel. on.

[P 130 C 1]

W. R. Puranik and R. Kaushalendra Rao —for Appellant.

A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent.

Judgment. —On 6th August 1928, Ganpatsa and Rambhausa effected a mortgage of certain property in the Khandwa district by deposit of their title deeds with the Indian Cotton Trading Company in Bombay. In 1929 this company sued to enforce its mortgage in the High Court of Bombay and obtained a preliminary decree for sale on 15th January 1930. One Daulat had applied to have Ganpatsa and Rambhausa adjudged insolvent and an interim receiver was appointed, but that insolvency application was dismissed in default on 8th November 1929. The interim receiver was made a party to the suit on the mortgage. On 18th December 1929, Ganpatsa and Rambhausa applied to be adjudged insolvents and they were so adjudged on 25th April 1930 when their estate vested in the receiver appointed by the Insolvency Court. On 25th August 1930, the preliminary decree for sale was made final. On 17th December 1930 the decree-holder applied to the High Court to alter the decree so as to include a certain malik makbuza field which was mentioned in the mortgage and the plaint but had been omitted from the decree, and on 15th January 1931 the decree was amended. Subsequently, the mortgaged property was sold at Bombay and the Indian Cotton Trading Company was placed in possession on 5th December 1931. The present suit has been brought by the receiver appointed by the insolvency Court to recover possession of the malik makbuza field from the Indian Cotton Trading Company. The lower Courts have held that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction to deal with property situated in this Province and that the decree was therefore void. This was the view taken in 31 N L R Sup 43[1] and 31 N L R Sup 57[2] and the case cited therein, but since then Act 5 of 1936 has been passed which enacts that no decree passed or order made by the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction under Cl. 12 of its Letters Patent, shall be called in question in any proceedings before any other Court on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to pass or make the decree or order. The decree in the mortgage suit therefore cannot be challenged on the ground that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction to make it.

The preliminary decree for sale was passed on 15th January 1930. On 25th April 1930 Ganpatsa and Rambhausa were adjudged insolvent and their estate vested in the Court with effect from the presentation of the insolvency application which was made on 18th December 1929. On 29th July 1930 the plaintiff was appointed receiver and their estate then vested in him. On 25th August 1930, the preliminary decree for sale was made final, and subsequently the property was sold in execution. It is admitted that the receiver was not impleaded in these proceedings. The question therefore arises whether he is bound by them. If the receiver stands in the same position as a transferee pendente lite, he will be bound, for it is not obligatory on a plaintiff to implead a transferee pendente lite. S. 52, T. P. Act, provides that during the pendency of any suit in which the right to immovable property is in question the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto. The question is whether property can be said "transferred or otherwise dealt with" when its owner files an insolvency application and is adjudged insolvent so that his property vests in the Court or the receiver appointed by the Court. In such a case it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the former owner of the property has transferred it or otherwise dealt with it. His whole estate has devolved on the receiver just as, in case of his death, it would devolve on his heir. This is the view taken by Sir Dinshah Mulla in his Transfer of Property Act, Edn. 2, at p. 234, and in 25 Mad 406[3] and 42 M L J 426;[4] no case to the contrary has been cited.

1. Gangaram Tekchand v. Dharamsi Jetha Co., (1935) 22 A I R Nag 250=159 I C 739=31 N L R Sup 43 (F B).
2. Murlidhar v. Gorakhram Sadhuram, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 1=161 I C 877=31 N L R Sup 57 (F B).

The position then is, as in 42 Cal 72,[5] that no proper steps were taken to bring the receiver before the Court and obtain an order binding on him; accordingly he was not bound by anything which was done, and further the judgment-debtors had at the time of the sale no right, title or interest which could be sold or vested in a purchaser and consequently the respondents acquired no title to the property. In 54 Cal 595,[6] it was suggested that the Section which corresponds to S. 28 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act, entitled a secured creditor to deal with the security as though there had been no vesting in the Court or the receiver. Their Lordships repelled that suggestion and stated that an action against the insolvent could not proceed in the absence of the person to whom the equity of redemption has been assigned by the operation of law and that the latter alone had the sole interest in the subject-matter of the suit, so that any decree passed in proceedings to which he was not a party would be a nullity. I therefore hold that the receiver is not bound by the proceedings which resulted in the passing of the malik makbuza field to the Indian Cotton Trading Company and that this company therefore has no right to retain possession of this field as against the receiver. The plaintiff's claim for possession must therefore be upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

3. Puninthavelu Mudaliar v. Bhashyam Ayyangar, (1902) 25 Mad 406=12 M L J 282.
4. Subramania Aiyar v. Ramakrishna Aiyar, (1922) 9 A I R Mad 335=70 I C 357=42 M L J 426.
5. Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das, (1914) 1 A I R P C 129=24 I C 304=42 Cal 72=41 I A 251 (P C).
6. Kala Chand Banerjee v. Jagannath Marwari, (1927) 14 A I R P C 108=101 I C 442=54 Cal 595=54 I A 190 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 130

POLLOCK J.

Krishnaji Ganuji Dhangar and another — Appellants.

v.

Anusaya Bai w/o Sadasheo Dhangar — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 2 of 1937, Decided on 23rd November 1938, from appellate decree of Second Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 30th September 1936.

(a) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance — Amount of — Unproductive ornaments should not be taken into account when fixing rate of maintenance.

Unproductive stridhan such as clothes and ornaments of small value ought not to be taken into consideration when fixing the rate of maintenance for a Hindu widow : A I R 1937 Bom 135, Rel. on. [P 131 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Stridhan—Ornaments given to daughter-in-law at her marriage are her stridhan.

Ornaments given to a daughter-in-law by her father-in-law at the time of her marriage are her stridhan. [P 132 C 1]

(c) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance — Even minor widow, to whom no guardian is appointed, cannot be deprived of right of maintenance merely because she refuses to live in husband's family, more so, when financial condition of family allows of granting of separate maintenance.

A widow is not bound to live in the house of her husband's family provided she does not leave it for any improper purpose. Even in the case of a minor widow, although her husband's relations as her natural guardians might have a prior claim to be appointed her guardians, still in the absence of any such appointment, the ordinary principle that a Hindu widow is not necessarily to be deprived of her right of separate maintenance merely because she refuses to live in the family house, applies more especially so, when the financial condition of her husband's family allows of the granting of a separate allowance. [P 132 C 1]

(d) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance — Court has wide discretion in matter of granting or withholding arrears of maintenance.

The Court has a wide discretion in the matter of granting or withholding arrears of maintenance granted to a Hindu widow. If it can be shown that the widow was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance, the Court may give her arrears for that period : A I R 1918 Bom 122, Rel. on. [P 132 C 1]

(e) Res judicata — Bar of — Previous suit between same parties instituted in Small Cause Court and subsequent suit on regular side — Decision in previous suit does not operate as res judicata, although same Judge presides over both Courts.

Where the previous suit between the same parties is instituted in a Court of Small Causes and the subsequent suit, on the regular side, the decision in the previous suit does not operate as res judicata although the same Judge presides over both the Courts, and the evidence in one suit is read as evidence in the other, inasmuch as the Small Cause Court is not competent to try the subsequent suit in which the issue is again raised. [P 131 C 1]

J. R. Mudholkar — for Appellants.

P. Y. Deshpande — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent Anusaya Bai, a minor widow, against her father-in-law Krishnaji and brother-in-law Pandu for the return of certain ornaments which she alleged to be her stridhan and for maintenance. The lower Appellate Court held that the ornaments were the plaintiff's stridhan but were already in her possession. It gave the plaintiff a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 30 per annum and for Rs. 60 as arrears of maintenance, the whole to be a charge on part of the family estate. A cross-objection has been filed by the plaintiff objecting to the finding that the ornaments are in her possession. While the suit was proceeding in the trial Court, another suit filed by the defendant Krishnaji against Anusaya Bai and her father for the recovery of the ornaments, which in that suit were alleged to be in the possession of Anusaya Bai's father, was proceeding in the Small Cause Court. The same Judge presided over each Court and the cases were tried together, it being agreed that the evidence in one suit should be read as evidence in the other. Each case was decided by a separate judgment on the same day, and in each case it was held that the ornaments were Anusaya Bai's stridhan and were in the possession of Krishnaji. Krishnaji appealed against the decision in the regular suit and it was held that the ornaments were in Anusaya Bai's possession. It is now contended that the decision in the Small Cause Court suit operated as res judicata and that therefore it was not open to the lower Appellate Court to come to a different conclusion. S. 11, Civil P. C., which states the rule of res judicata, requires that the Court which tried the issue in the former suit must be competent to try the subsequent suit in which the issue is again raised. The Small Cause Court was not competent to try the suit for maintenance and therefore there is no res judicata. The findings of the lower Appellate Court that the ornaments are in Anusaya Bai's possession is a finding of fact that cannot be challenged in second appeal.

I now turn to the appeal. The first point taken is that, as Anusaya Bai has ornaments which have been valued by the trial Court at Rs. 374-13-0, she ought not to be given maintenance until she has exhausted these ornaments. As Broomfield J. has pointed out in I L R (1937) Bom 113[1] at p. 116 the commentators on Hindu law are unanimous that unproductive stridhan, such as clothes and jewels, ought not to be taken into consideration when fixing the rate of maintenance for a Hindu widow. Broomfield J. remarked :

> I think it must be taken to be good law that as an ordinary rule stridhan ornaments are not to be taken into account in assessing maintenance. It need not be laid down as an invariable rule. If the widow were in possession of ornaments of great value which she would not ordinarily wear or use, and which she would be likely to dispose of, that might be a different matter.

Wassoodew J. at page 125 stated :

> Speaking entirely for myself, it seems illogical that in the consideration of the circumstances of her position as well as the estimated income of the property sought to be made liable for her maintenance, the potentiality of the widow's income from stridhan ornaments upon conversion should not be taken into account in fixing the amount of her maintenance.

Here the value of the ornaments is not large and the case falls, in my opinion, within the ordinary rule that unproductive ornaments are not to be taken into account. It has been contended that the ornaments are not stridhan. There are findings of fact that the ornaments were given to Anusaya Bai by her father-in-law at the time of her marriage. At p. 126 of Mulla's Hindu Law, Edn. 8, it is stated that property given or bequeathed to a Hindu female, whether during maidenhood, coverture, or widowhood, by her parents and their relations, or by her husband and his relations is stridhan according to all the schools. I have been referred to p. 143 of that edition where stridhan is divided into four classes, the second being yautaka, that is gifts made to a woman at the time of her marriage, whilst seated with her husband on one seat, the word being derived from yuta, that is, 'joined together'. The argument is that there is no evidence to show that the gift was made to her whilst she was seated with her husband on one seat. In Sarkar Sastri's Hindu Law, Edn. 7, p. 715, stridhan is defined as including gifts at the time of marriage or yautuka which may either be (1) before the nuptial fire or at the actual ceremony of marriage or (2) those received in her father's or father-in-law's house either before or after the actual ceremony, but at a time when various other rites appurtenant to marriage are performed. It was assumed in the lower Courts that if it was proved that the ornaments were given to her at the time of her marriage, as opposed to being put on her person merely for the time being, they would be her stridhan and I think that point was rightly decided.

1. Gurushiddappa v. Parwatewwa, (1937) 24 A I R Bom 135=167 I C 973=I L R (1937) Bom 113=38 Bom L R 1293.

The next point urged is that Anusaya Bai ought to live with the defendants who, as her husband's relations, are her natural guardians and that she is not entitled to maintenance if she chooses to live elsewhere. It is well settled that a widow is not bound to live in the house of her husband's family provided that she does not leave it for any improper purpose. According to the Vyavastha Chandrika separate maintenance is to be allowed to that member of the family who for a just cause could not live in, and mess with, the family. The question is how far that applies to a minor widow. Her husband's relations as her natural guardians might have a prior claim to be appointed her guardian, but in the absence of any such appointment I think that the ordinary principle, that a Hindu widow is not necessarily to be deprived of her right of separate maintenance merely because she refuses to live in the family house, would apply. The lower Appellate Court has remarked that it would be impossible for the plaintiff to live with the defendants after this litigation and that she cannot be forced to live with them when the financial condition allows of the granting of a separate allowance. With this I agree and I hold that the plaintiff should not be deprived of maintenance for this reason.

The plaintiff has been granted arrears for two years. The Court has a very large discretion in granting or withholding arrears; if it can be shown that the widow was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance the Court may give her arrears for that period: 43 Bom 66.[2] The claim to arrears was not specifically challenged, and I do not think that any case has been made out for modifying this part of the decree. Lastly it has been urged that the decretal amount should not have been made a charge on the entire estate. Actually it does not appear to have been made a charge on the entire estate, and this objection has not been taken in the grounds of appeal. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20. The cross-objection is also dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

2. Karbasappa v. Kallappa, (1918) 5 A I R Bom 122=47 I C 623=43 Bom 66=20 Bom L R 823.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 132

VIVIAN BOSE J.

Mt. Renukabai w/o Sitaramji Wankhade — Appellant.

v.

Bheosan Hapsaji Junghare and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 332 of 1936, Decided on 10th October 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 30th March 1936.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 100 —Agreement which creates a charge cannot be invalid simply because its provisions offend against the procedural law in latter part of Sec. 100.

The first part of S. 100 deals with substantive rights and the second with the manner in which they are to be enforced, i. e. with the adjective or procedural law. The latter portion of S. 100 does not govern the former and hence an agreement which clearly falls within the definition of charge cannot be invalidated altogether simply because it contains provisions which offend against the procedural law as laid down in the latter portion of the Section. [P 134 C 1]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 100 —Charge, how created.

An agreement which provides that in default of a certain payment for maintenance by one party to the other the latter will be at liberty to cultivate a field and maintain herself clearly creates a charge, the intention being that she is to look to the profits from the land for maintenance for a particular period. But such a charge cannot be enforced by sale of the land : A I R 1922 P C 107, Foll.; 11 M I A 517 (P C), Ref. [P 134 C 1, 2]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 100 and 91 — Mortgagee with notice of charge on property mortgaged is bound by it as mortgagor himself.

The possession of a mortgagee who has constructive notice of a charge on the property mortgaged resembles that of a trustee under S. 91 and hence he is as much bound to fulfil the obligation which attaches to the property mortgaged as the mortgagor himself, there being an equitable lien under the law : 19 Cal 584 (P C) and 9 M I A 307 (P C), Foll. [P 134 C 2]

(d) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 53— The burden of proving that a transfer was for value and without notice is on the transferee.

Either under S. 100 or under more general rule of law the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice : A I R 1934 P C 68, Foll. [P 135 C 1]

(e) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 3— Notice — Conduct which can be regarded as wilful abstention stated.

Where a mortgagee knows about the law of registration and also that it is necessary for him to search the registers to make himself sure that the property mortgaged to him was free from encumbrance and yet while causing a search to be made refrains from making the same, such conduct can only be regarded as wilful abstention : (1874) 7 H L C 135, Ref. [P 135 C 2]

(f) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 3 — Notice to agent is constructive notice to principal.

Where the registers of the Registrar did contain a reference to a particular agreement which created a charge on a certain land on the date on which they were examined on behalf of the mortgagee by his agent who omitted to look at the entries against the property and to look into them carefully :

Held that the mortgagee could be charged with the negligence or bad faith of his agent and that he would be deemed to have had constructive notice of the charge : 30 Cal 539 (P C), Foll.; 4 Cal 897 (P C), Ref. [P 136 C 1]

(g) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 100 Charge—Enforcement of.

Where an agreement which created a charge of maintenance on a certain land of a mortgagor provided that in default of a certain sum the chargeholder was entitled to possession of the land and on default the charge was sought to be enforced against the mortgagee :

Held that the decree should approximate as near as might be to a decree for foreclosure and that the mortgagee should be given a chance to redeem it if he desired to keep the property in possession as the relief was an equitable one and could be moulded to suit the requirements of the case. [P 136 C 1, 2]

K. V. Brahma — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde — for Respondents 2 to 4.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sues for possession of a field to the extent of a one-third share and for arrears of maintenance. The field originally belonged to a joint Hindu family of which the plaintiff was a member. On a partition between the male members this field was assigned to the share of the plaintiff's grandson Ramrao. He undertook to pay the plaintiff a maintenance allowance of Rs. 300 a year and agreed in default to hand over the field to the plaintiff for her cultivation and enjoyment during her lifetime. This agreement is embodied in a registered document, Ex. P 1, dated 8th February 1926. On 28th March 1926 Ramrao mortgaged the field to one Lalji, the father of defendants 2 to 4 for Rs. 8000 (Ex. D-9).

After this, on 29th November 1926 he sold the field to one Ramchandra Suryabhan. Defendant 1, who was a co-sharer, thereupon brought a suit for pre-emption, obtained a decree on 23rd June 1928 and obtained possession. He also agreed at the same time, since, according to the plaintiff, the responsibility for paying the plaintiff her maintenance allowance had now devolved on him, to pay the plaintiff her Rs. 300 a year. The plaintiff says he did so up to 1st January 1932, but as he stopped payments after that date she sued him and obtained a decree on 30th April 1934 in Civil Suit No. 577 of 1933. In the meanwhile defendants 2 to 4 had sued on their mortgage (C. S. 32/32). They obtained a final decree for foreclosure and took possession on 4th November 1933. Defendant 1 was thus dispossessed. The plaintiff's case is that defendants 2 to 4 are now liable for the maintenance allowance and since they have refused to pay it on demand the plaintiff is entitled to possession. Hence this suit. The principal defence to the action in the lower Courts was that defendants 2 to 4 are bona fide transferees for value without notice and so are not bound by the charge. The lower Courts have upheld this plea and have dismissed the plaintiff's claim. She appeals here. The main point taken here on behalf of defendants 2 to 4 is that the document in question Ex. P-1 does not create a charge at all and that therefore no question of notice arises. The document is in the following terms :

> You are my grand-mother and you are entitled to maintenance from me. Hence I shall give you Rs. 300 on account of maintenance each year in the month of January and shall obtain your receipt. In default to pay the aforesaid maintenance allowance at the stipulated time I shall pay interest thereon . . . . . I shall pay you this amount each year as stipulated. In case of default in the payment of the maintenance amount, I agree in writing to let you cultivate the following fields and thereby let you maintain yourself.

The last sentence is taken from the translation given me by the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents. I agree it is a more correct rendering of the original than the official translation. It will be seen that the agreement was that the plaintiff was to enter upon possession and cultivate herself in the event of default and not that the property should be brought to sale in the manner contemplated by S. 100, T. P. Act. This, it is argued, differentiates the agreement in question from a charge and therefore it is argued, considerations which apply to charges cannot be applied here. S. 100, T. P. Act, defines a charge in the following words :

> Where immovable property of one person is, by act of parties . . . . . made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property.

This part of the Section has not been touched by the amendment. Then, having defined a charge the Section continues to deal with the manner of its enforcement. Before the amendment it ran thus, > and all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgagor shall, so far as may be, apply to the owner of such property, and the provisions of Secs. 81 and 82, shall, so far as may be, apply to the person having such a charge.

After amendment it reads as follows, > and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such a charge.

It will be seen that the first part of the Section deals with substantive rights and the second with the manner in which they are to be enforced, that is to say, with the adjective or procedural law. That being so, I do not think the latter portion of the Section can be said to govern the former. It may be relevant in considering whether a charge was really intended to be created but I do not think that an agreement which clearly falls within the definition can be invalidated altogether simply because it contains provisions which offend against the procedural law. Therefore what we primarily have to see is whether the agreement here falls within the ambit of the definition. That resolves itself into two questions : (1) Was the intention to make the property security for payment of the money, and (2) Does it not amount to a mortgage ?

I have no doubt about the first point. The agreement was that in default of payment, the plaintiff was to be at liberty to cultivate the fields. The intention therefore was that the plaintiff was to look to the profits from this land for her maintenance. That clearly creates a charge : see 49 Cal 820[1] at p. 836. It does not amount to a mortgage, for there is no transfer of any interest in the property charged. Therefore the conditions of the definition are fulfilled.

But I also agree that the charge here cannot be enforced by sale. When the parties themselves expressly contract that the remedy for default in payment shall be delivery of possession for a particular period, namely during the lifetime of the charge holder and not sale, I do not think the Courts would be justified in substituting a totally different contract for the one made. The difference is a material one, for if sale is the remedy, then the owner stands a chance of losing his property for all time, whereas if possession is all that can be claimed, then his proprietary interest in the property is unaffected and his right to possession revives on the death of the charge holder. It is to be observed that Sec. 100 contemplates other methods of enforcement, for the words relating to sale are "so far as may be," and their Lordships of the Privy Council observe in 11 M I A 517[2] at page 548, > that unless some authority is cited to show that the transaction is invalid, effect should have been given to the manifest intention of the parties.

The trouble arises here because in India the one word "charge" is used to embrace not only charges properly so called, which arise by act of parties, but also liens which arise by operation of law. In the one case, namely of charge proper, remedy by sale is of the essence, but not necessarily so in the case of a lien.

As between the immediate parties to the agreement it does not much matter what the transaction is called, for, it could clearly be specifically enforced. If Ramrao had failed to pay, the plaintiff could have compelled him to perform his bargain and place her in possession. In those circumstances the possession of the defendant, who, as I shall show later, took with constructive notice of the charge, was that of a trustee, or to be more accurate, resembled that of a trustee under Sec. 91, Trusts Act. Consequently, he is as much bound to fulfil the obligation which attaches to this property as Ramrao was. An equitable lien arises under the law. Cases of analogous liens under the English law are to be found in Coote on Mortgages, Vol. 1, page 80 and Vol. 2, page 387. The Privy Council also envisage the possibility of equitable charges

1. Suleman Quadir v. Salimullah Bahadur, (1922) 9 A I R P C 107=69 I C 138=49 Cal 820=49 I A 153 (P C).

2. Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mt. Mohumdee Begam, (1866-67) 11 M I A 517=10 W R 25 =2 Sar 315=2 Suther 98 (P C).

in India in 19 Cal 584[3] at page 593 and 9 M I A 307[4] at page 326. See also Ghose's Law of Mortgage in India, Edn. 4, Vol. 1 page 130 et seq.

That brings me to the question of notice. There is not much difficulty there. Whether the matter falls squarely within S. 100 or whether it comes under a more general rule of law, the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice. This has been settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 13 Pat 242[5] at page 251 where they quote a passage from an earlier ruling of the Board in 9 M I A 307.[4] Their Lordships stated there that it does not matter whether the charge is an equitable or a legal one for the principle is the same and continued :

> As one who owns property subject to a charge can, in general, convey no title higher or more free than his own, it lies always on a succeeding owner to make out a case to defeat such prior charge.

That settles the question. The lower Appellate Court has placed the burden on the plaintiff and so has the first Court, but that according to their Lordships' decision is wrong. It may be conceded that registration does not operate as constructive notice here because the amendment to S. 3, T. P. Act, had not been made at the date of the mortgage but the definition of notice was the same.

> A person is said to have notice of a fact when .... but for wilful abstention from an enquiry or search which he ought to have made or gross negligence he would have known it.

This makes the matter as variable as the proverbial Chancellor's foot. What would be gross negligence in one case would not be so in another; what would amount to wilful abstention in one man would not necessarily be so in another. The type and kind of search expected of one person would not be the same as that required of another. It all depends upon the man's knowledge and the means of information which lay to his hand.

> It is merely the course which a man dealing bona fide in the proper and usual manner for his own interest ought, by himself or his solicitor, to follow with a view to his own title and his own security : (1874) 7 H L 135[6] at page 157.

In the present case there can be no doubt that the defendant knew about the law of registration. He knew that if he wanted to make sure that the property mortgaged to him was free from encumbrances it would be necessary for him to search the registers. I say he knew this because he actually did institute a search, or rather caused one to be made. That being so, armed with that knowledge, if he had refrained from making a search, it could only have been regarded as wilful abstention in his case.

It is not a matter of law; it is not that the law requires a search in every case. It is a question of fact, pure and simple. Would a man possessed of the knowledge which the defendant possesses, or rather possessed at the relevant date, knowing all he did acting honestly, anxious to take a mortgage free from encumbrances, have searched the registration registers ? If yes, then an omission to do so would either be wilful abstention or gross negligence. I stress this because the lower Courts, and especially the lower Appellate Court seem to think that the matter is one of law and have decided the case accordingly. I refer in particular to the following sentence : "No duty is cast by the law to take an inspection of the registry."

In the present case I can only come to one conclusion on the facts. The defendant did cause a search to be made. He must have done that for some reason. The only reason possible was to see whether the property was free from encumbrances and whether the title sought to be conveyed resided in the mortgagor. That being so, he was aware of the value and necessity of a search when taking a mortgage of property and if he was aware of that, then it was incumbent on him, possessed of that knowledge, to make the necessary search or cause it to be made on his behalf.

It is necessary to come to this finding before one passes on to the next step, because if it was not necessary for him to make a search, then the fact that he made, or caused to be made, a very cursory one, would not tell against him. On the other hand, if it was necessary, then a cursory glance through the registers and an omission to look at the entries relating to this property could only have been due to wilful abstention or to gross negligence. No other conclusion is possible. Now we know that the registers did contain a reference to this particular agreement on the

3. Omrao Begum v. Secy. of State, (1892) 19 Cal 584=19 I A 95=6 Sar 192 (P C).
4. Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Royjee Lallah, (1861-63) 9 M I A 307 = 1 Sar 857= 1 Suther 480=19 E R 756 (P C).
5. Bhup Narain Singh v. Gokul Chand, (1934) 21 A I R P C 68 = 147 I C 1134=61 I A 115 = 13 Pat 242 (P C).
6. Agra Band v. Barry, (1874) 7 H L 135.

date on which they were examined on behalf of the defendant. I have also held that it was incumbent on the defendant, armed with the knowledge he had, to inspect or cause these registers to be inspected. That being so, an omission to look at the entries against this property and to look into them carefully must in the circumstances of this case have been due either to wilful abstention or to gross negligence.

The next question is whether the defendant can be charged with the negligence or bad faith of his agent. It is now settled that he can. The matter is dealt with in Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, 1933 Edn., p. 33. In spite of a Calcutta decision to the contrary, their Lordships of the Privy Council decided in 30 Cal 539[7] at p. 545 that the acts and knowledge of the agent were the acts and knowledge of his principal, and this, as Sir Dinshaw Mulla points out, accords with the principle that "he who acts through another is deemed to act in person." Were it otherwise "notice would be avoided in every case by employing agents." This principle has now been embodied in Expl. 3 to S. 3, T. P. Act, but the amendment introduces no new law. It merely gives effect to the Privy Council decision as against the earlier Calcutta ruling in 4 Cal 897[8] at page 910. In these circumstances not only has the defendant not proved that he is a bona fide transferee without notice but he is in equity deemed to have had constructive notice of the charge. Consequently, it can be enforced against him.

The next question then is, to what extent can this be done? The claim includes a prayer for arrears of maintenance and also for possession. It is clear that no personal decree can be passed against the defendant because he was not a contracting party. He did not agree to pay the plaintiff anything. It is equally clear under the terms of Ex. P-1 that if there is default in payment of the allowance, then the plaintiff is entitled to possession. There has been default and so under a strict interpretation of the bond possession would have to be handed over. But even a foreclosure mortgage is not enforced like that, and so a mere charge, which is a lesser right, cannot be placed upon a higher footing. The decree will therefore have to approximate as near as may be to a decree for foreclosure; that is to say the defendant must be given the chance of what I might term redemption if he desires to keep the property in his possession.

That resort may be had to foreclosure in suitable cases is evident from 13 Halsbury 93. The relief is an equitable one and so can be moulded to suit the requirements of the case. The decree will therefore be that if the defendants pay into Court the sum of Rs. 347-4-0 and future interest thereon from 6th July 1936 (the date of the appeal in this Court) to 6th March 1939 (the date hereby fixed for payment) at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum simple together with the costs on or before 6th March 1939, then the plaint property will stand free from the charge created by reason of the said sum (but not free from a charge for future maintenance). But if they do not, then the defendants will place the plaintiff in possession of the plaint property for the period of her life in lieu of her right to maintenance. I have not allowed future interest from the date of suit to the date of the appeal because it was not claimed and no court-fees were paid for such a relief. The appeal is allowed and the decrees of the lower Courts are reversed. Costs in all three Courts will be paid by the defendants-respondents.

S.G./R.K. Appeal allowed.

7. Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodhas Ghose, (1903) 30 Cal 539=30 I A 114=8 Sar 374=7 C W N 441 (P C).
8. Greender Chunder Ghose v. Makintosh, (1879) 4 Cal 897=4 C L R 193.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 136

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Sadasheo Rao Shamrao and others — Defendants — Appellants.

v.

Roopchand Gorelal and another — Plaintiffs — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 135 of 1935, Decided on 12th December 1938, from decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Seoni, D/- 4th October 1935.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 60—Mortgage is one and indivisible and co-mortgagees hold as tenants-in-common.

Where the consideration of a mortgage proceeds from different sources but one lump sum is saddled on the entire estate, the mortgage is a joint and indivisible one in which the mortgagees hold as tenants-in-common : A I R 1919 P C 24, Foll. [P 137 C 2]

(b) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Ss. 7-A and 12 (1)—S. 7-A is not retrospective — Prior to S. 7-A, Civil Courts have right to decide whether facts necessary to constitute 40 per cent. rule are present or not.

Section 7-A has no retrospective effect and when it does not apply the Civil Courts have the right to decide whether the facts necessary to constitute 40 per cent. rule mentioned in Sec. 12 (1) are present or not: A I R 1938 Nag 373; A I R 1937 Nag 259 and 20 N L J 203, Foll. [P 138 C 2]

(c) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Ss. 12 (1) and 15 — Certificates under S. 15 when debts due to creditors accepting award are less than 40 per cent. are without jurisdiction.

Where the debts due to the creditors who accepted the award do not come to the necessary 40 per cent., Debt Conciliation Board acts without jurisdiction in issuing certificates under S. 15 and the creditors are entitled to pursue their remedy in a Civil Court in the usual way. [P 138 C 2]

(d) Interest — Compound interest—Meaning of.

Interest on interest means compound interest; A I R 1931 Nag 25, Dissent.; A I R 1928 P C 35, Expl. and Disting. [P 138 C 2]

(e) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 60, 67 (d) — One of three mortgagees acquiring share in mortgaged property without consent of others — Mortgage is not split up and co-mortgagees are entitled to proceed against entire property.

Where only one of the three mortgagees acquires in part a share in the property mortgaged without the consent of the other mortgagees, the mortgage is not split up so far as the other mortgagees are concerned and they are entitled to proceed against the entire property. Such a mortgagee cannot be placed in a better position than the innocent purchaser of property burdened with a mortgage about which he knew nothing and the fact that he expended money to the full value of the property does not save him: A I R 1921 P C 125 and A I R 1925 Oudh 609, Foll. [P 139 C 2; P 140 C 1]

(f) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 67 (d) —Severance of interest in a mortgage requires consent of all parties concerned.

Severance of interest as provided by S. 67 (d) is nothing but a special application of the ordinary law of novation and requires as a pre-requisite the consent of all parties concerned and unless a co-mortgagee consents to such severance or does some act which under the law effects a severance, the usual rule about the integrity of the mortgage must be observed: A I R 1926 Pat 94; A I R 1935 All 391 and A I R 1927 Cal 425, Foll.; A I R 1919 All 275 and A I R 1915 Mad 344, Ref.; A I R 1937 Nag 262, Expl. [P 139 C 2]

(g) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Sec. 67 (d)—Consent—What does not amount to.

Omission to reply to a notice does not amount to consent. [P 140 C 1]

P. D. Jatar — for Appellants.

J. Sen and Girijanandan — for Respondents.

Judgment.— This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage, dated 23rd December 1926 for Rs. 6000 executed by defendant 1, Sadasheo, in favour of three persons, (1) Gorelal, father of plaintiff 1, (2) Roopchand, plaintiff 1, and (3) Venkatrao, defendant 4. Of these, Gorelal and Roopchand (plaintiff 1) advanced Rs. 4000 of the consideration jointly and Venkatrao (defendant 4) the remaining Rs. 2000. But though the consideration thus proceeded from two different sources, the liability created under the deed was for one lump sum of Rs. 6000 which was saddled on the entire 16 annas of the village mortgaged.

The relevant portion of the deed, Ex. P-1, is in these terms:

We took this day loans, in cash of Rs. 4000, four thousand rupees, from the Musammiyan Gorelal, son of Nanda Sao, and Rupchand, son of Gorelal Sao Lakhera, by occupation contractors, residents of Khunti, Tahsil and District Seoni and Rs. 2000, two thousand rupees, from Pandit Venkat Rao son of Pandit Vinayakrao Brahmin Malguzar resident of Bori Khurd, Tahsil and District Seoni. After executing this deed for the total sum of Rs. 6000, in words six thousand rupees, in favour of the aforesaid mahajans (creditors), (we) hereby agreed that after paying interest (thereon) at the rate of Re. 1, one rupee, per cent. per mensem, we will satisfy the same as below. We will pay interest on the entire amount each year from this day up to five years without raising any objection, and (we) will satisfy the entire amount together with interest in the fifth year from this day. If we fail to pay interest for two years continuously, on default of payment of interest for the second year, (we) will pay the entire amount together with interest thereon in a lump. Further, so long as the debt is not satisfied, (we) will pay interest on interest, each year, with annual rests, as mentioned above, at the same rate and according to the Hindi Miti (calendar).

It was argued that this had the effect of splitting up the liability and that in fact and in law it created two independent mortgages in one deed of the kind contemplated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 47 Cal 175.[1] But that very ruling negatives this contention. It is clear from their Lordships' observations that in a mortgage of this kind where, though the consideration proceeds from different sources, one lump sum is saddled on the entire estate, the mortgage is a joint and indivisible one in which the mortgagees held as tenants-in-common. Some time later, either late in 1932 or early in 1933, Venkatrao (defendant 4) settled his claim with the mortgagor and took a four annas four pies share in the property in full satisfaction and gave up his right to a one anna share. This was on the assumption that his interest in the transaction was one-third and that he would on foreclosure be entitled to obtain one-third of the property. The plaintiffs claim that in spite of this their right to enforce their share of the mortgage, that is the Rs. 4000 advanced by Gorelal and Roopchand, subsists against the entire 16 annas of the village mortgaged. The defendants resist this and state that the mortgage has been split up by the action of the plaintiff's co-mortgagee in acquiring part of the property and that the plaintiffs can now proceed only against a two-third share.

1. Sunitibala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi, (1919) 6 A I R P C 24=53 I C 131=47 Cal 175=46 I A 272 (P C).

Before we deal with these contentions, it is necessary to consider another matter which, if rightly urged, goes to the root of this appeal. After this suit had been filed on 12th July 1933, the defendants went to the Debt Conciliation Board and thereupon the Civil Court suspended its proceedings on 14th September 1933 when a certificate from the Board was produced. On 8th December 1933, the Board disposed of the defendants' application and registered an agreement under S. 12 of the Act. But the plaintiff declined to accept the conciliation and so the Board issued the usual certificate under Sec. 15. The plaintiff then applied to the Board for a review of its order but the application was rejected on 13th January 1934. The plaintiff then applied to the Civil Court for a revival of this suit and contended that the order of the Board and the certificate granted by it under Sec. 15 was ultra vires, because the debts owed to the creditors who were prepared to come to an amicable settlement with the defendants did not constitute the 40 per cent. of the total liability as required by S. 12 (1) of the Act.

It is clear from the application filed before the Board (a translation of which was supplied to us by the learned counsel for the defendants and accepted as correct by the other side) that if the debt owing to the plaintiffs is the Rs. 8272-7-6 stated in the application, then the amounts due to the rest of the creditors are less than 40 per cent. of the total. But what the Debt Conciliation Officer did was to construe the terms of Ex. P-1 and conclude that on a true construction of the document, of which the relevant portion has already been reproduced, no compound interest was due, and that therefore the plaintiff's claim made on the assumption that it was, was exaggerated. The Board then decided that on a true construction of the document a lesser figure was due to the plaintiff and when his claim was reduced to that figure the debts owing to the rest reached the requisite 40 per cent. The question is whether we have power to question this finding. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that we have none, while the learned counsel for the respondents contends that we have.

Section 7-A, Debt Conciliation Act, does not apply here because it has been held that it has no retrospective operation: 1938 N L J 17,[2] 20 N L J 57[3] at p. 62 and 20 N L J 203.[4] It is argued that it makes no difference whether this Section applies or not, but we need not enter into that here because it is clear on the strength of those rulings that S. 7-A does not apply.

The same decisions hold that when Sec. 7-A does not apply, then the Civil Courts have the right to determine whether the special tribunal constituted to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts is acting within the ambit of its powers or not. That in this case means that the Civil Courts must decide whether the facts necessary to constitute the 40 per cent. rule mentioned in S. 12 (1) are present or not. That in its turn depends upon the true construction of Ex. P-1. It is argued on the strength of A I R 1931 Nag 25[5] that interest upon interest does not mean compound interest. With all due deference we are unable to agree. That decision purports to be based upon a decision of the Privy Council in A I R 1928 P C 35.[6] The facts there were as follows: A document provided for interest at 1/2 per cent per mensem and also stipulated that if default was made in the payment of interest in the manner provided, that is to say on the 10th of each month, then the rate of interest was to be doubled. The exact sentence in which this provision occurred was as follows: "If he fails to pay in that manner he shall pay 'interest on interest' at the rate of 1 per cent."

2. Tikaram v. Ganpat Sahai, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 373=1938 N L J 17.
3. Shivdin v. Ram Ratan, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 259=170 I C 905=20 N L J 57=I L R (1938) Nag 489.
4. Lachmansingh v. Durgaprasad, (1937) 20 N L J 203.
5. Bhadu v. Ganpati, (1931) 18 A I R Nag 25=130 I C 103.
6. Muthu v. Meenakshisundaram, (1928) 15 A I R P C 35=107 I C 1 (P C).

Their Lordships held that the enhanced rate applied only to sums in arrears which were payable as interest, that is to say they held that interest on the principal sum was to run at the original rate of 1/2 per cent per mensem simple and that the enhanced rate was claimable only on such sums as were in arrears as arrears of interest. When the rates of interest are different, then of course a provision of this kind makes a very considerable difference, as also when there are repayments. But when as here the rates are the same and there have been no repayments, then the result is precisely the same whether the calculation is made as compound interest in the ordinary way or whether simple interest is calculated on the principal and then interest allowed on that interest separately as was done by their Lordships. It follows that the figures originally given by the defendants in their application to the Debt Conciliation Board were right and if that is so, then the debts due to the creditors who accepted the award did not come to the necessary 40 per cent. That being so, the Debt Conciliation Board acted without jurisdiction. It had no power to make the conciliation it did and consequently the plaintiff is entitled to pursue his remedies in this suit in the usual way.

Turning now to the merits, there are, we conceive, only three ways in which a mortgage can be split up. One is by act of parties at the time of the contract. This we have shown was not done in the present case. The second is by operation of law, and the third by act of parties subsequent to the execution of the deed by way of novation. As regards severance by operation of law, this can, in our opinion, arise in India only under S. 60, T. P. Act, that is to say, only when the mortgagee or, where there are more mortgagees than one, all the mortgagees acquire in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor. That position has not arisen here. Only one of the three mortgagees has done that and therefore as we view the law, there was no splitting up of the mortgage so far as the other mortgagees are concerned. They are entitled to proceed against the entire property. This also follows from Ss. 43 and 44, Contract Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have stressed the indivisible character of a mortgage in 16 N L R 154[7] at page 160 and the exact question here has been decided along the lines we take in A I R 1925 Oudh 609.[8] So far as severance by act of parties subsequent to the deed is concerned, that is dealt with in S. 67 (d), T. P. Act. It is, we think, nothing but a special application of the ordinary law of novation and requires as a pre-requisite the consent of all the parties concerned. This is what has been laid down in A I R 1926 Pat 94[9] at page 100, A I R 1935 All 391[10] and A I R 1927 Cal 425.[11]

As regards the other rulings cited, 41 All 631[12] was a case in which there was a severance in interest with the consent of all concerned, and 39 Mad 17[13] is also another application of the same rule, the only difference in the Madras case being that the requisite consent was imposed upon the parties by a decree of a Court. Naturally that can make no difference to the principle involved, namely the necessity for establishing a consent from which neither side can resile. A I R 1937 Nag 262[14] was also a case of consent, the only question there being whether the necessary consent could be inferred from the facts present in that case. No question of law was involved so far as this point is concerned, and in fact, the necessity for establishing the requisite consent was accepted, and the only question with which the learned Judge concerned himself was whether this could be established substantially by the facts present in that case.

We can see no reason why a mortgagee who acts behind the back of his co-mortgagees who have entered into a joint and several contract with a third party along with him should be placed in a better position than an innocent purchaser of property which happens to be burdened with a mortgage about which he knew nothing. The facts that he purchased and expended

7. Yadali Beg v. Tukaram, (1921) 8 A I R P C 125=16 N L R 154 = 48 Cal 22 (P C).

8. Jagmohan v. Harbans Singh, (1925) 12 A I R Oudh 609=85 I C 621=27 O C 360.

9. Sripat Singh v. Naresh Chandra, (1926) 13 A I R Pat 94.

10. Lachhmi Narain v. Babu Ram, (1935) 22 A I R All 391=154 I C 437=1935 A L J 749.

11. Satindra Nath v. Jatindra Nath, (1927) 14 A I R Cal 425=101 I C 530=31 C W N 374.

12. Jauhari Singh v. Ganga Sahai, (1919) 6 A I R All 275=51 I C 107=41 All 631 = 17 A L J 731.

13. Vijayabhushanammal v. Evalappa Mudaliar, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 344=25 I C 91=39 Mad 17.

14. Narayanasao v. Mt. Chattibai, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 262=171 I C 978=I L R (1937) Nag 503.

money to the full value of the property does not save him nor does it operate to the prejudice of the mortgagees. We see no reason why a co-mortgagee who purchased the property with his eyes open and did not trouble to obtain the previous consent of his co-mortgagees should be placed in any better position. Action of this kind, if permitted, would quite easily operate to the detriment of the other mortgagee who contributed on the assumption that his rights and liabilities would be one and indivisible. Unless therefore he consents to a severance or does some act which under the law effects a severance, the usual rule about the integrity of a mortgage must be observed and that, as we see it, is what their Lordships of the Privy Council stated in 16 N L R 154[7] at page 160.

It was then argued that the consent of the plaintiff to the severance can and indeed must be presumed in this case because he omitted to reply to a notice in which he was informed about the impending severance. The notice in question, Ex. P-2, has not been included in the paper-book, nor has it been translated, and the only reference to it in the pleadings is to be found in para. 5 (b) of the plaint which is in the following terms :

Defendant 4, the co-mortgagee on 4th January 1933 gave a notice to the plaintiff's father that he had obtained full satisfaction of his portion of the mortgage money and that the latter should treat his share of the same as separate.

The learned counsel for the respondents supplied us with a translation of the notice and the other side accepted it as correct. It is to the following effect :

My debt as well as the other debt relating to Saobhundi is settled for Rs. 7000. You have got your separate rights.

We can find in this nothing to which a reply was needed. It does not pretend to inform the plaintiff that his co-mortgagee is intending to settle his part in the mortgage by accepting a part of the property in satisfaction nor does it give him any indication that his consent to severance of their rights was being sought. It merely recites a settled and accomplished fact and tells the other party that he has now got his own rights which he can enforce. This is the only proof to which our attention was drawn suggesting that the plaintiff had consented to the transaction into which his co-mortgagees entered with the mortgagors. We are clear that the omission to reply to the notice does not import consent. That being so, the plaintiff is entitled to proceed against the entire mortgaged property for the money due to him. The extent of the liability on this assumption is not challenged and therefore we uphold the judgment and decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 140

POLLOCK J.

Sarjabai w/o Sakharam Patil — Appellant.

v.

Bhagwanji Nagoji Dhangar and another — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 507 of 1936, Decided on 29th November 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Yeotmal, D/- 31st July 1936.

Pre-emption—Suit for—Decree in favour of plaintiff in terms of O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C.—Plaintiff can appeal within period of limitation allowed for appeal whether or not he has made payment within period fixed by Court—Appellate Court has power to vary both price and time for payment—It should fix fresh date for payment.

A plaintiff in a pre-emption suit, who has obtained a decree under O. 20, R. 14, can appeal within the period prescribed by the Limitation Act for his appeal whether or not he has paid the pre-emptive price within the period fixed by the Court. The plaintiff is entitled to challenge by way of appeal both the price of pre-emption fixed and the time allowed for payment and the Appellate Court has power both to vary the price and the period of payment. The Appellate Court has power to extend the time fixed for payment and unless there is some valid reason for adhering to the time fixed in the first Court, it should itself fix a fresh date for payment. It is not however bound to do so ; it may do so : 13 All 376 (F B) and 18 All 223, Rel. on ; A I R 1926 P C 93 and A I R 1933 Nag 236, Ref. [P 141 C 1, 2]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.

K. V. Bramha — for Respondent 2.

Judgment. — The plaintiff sued to pre-empt a field that had been sold for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 3000. The lower Courts have held that that was not a fair consideration and that the plaintiff is entitled to pre-empt it at the market value, which has been found to be Rupees 2000. The plaintiff, who pleaded that the market value was Rs. 1500, has appealed against that decision, but the finding is purely one of fact and that must be accepted in second appeal. The decree of the first Court, which was in the form prescribed in O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C., directed that the plaintiff should deposit Rs. 2000 in Court on or before 29th April 1935, and that in default of making such deposit his suit should stand dismissed. No deposit was made. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal on 31st July 1936. It did not consider, and the question was apparently not raised, whether the plaintiff should be granted further time in which to make the required deposit. It has been argued that when the lower Appellate Court decided the appeal, there was no subsisting decree from which an appeal could be preferred because in the absence of any deposit the plaintiff's suit then stood dismissed. That argument has been dealt with in 13 All 376,[1] where Straight J. said :

> Strictly speaking, the exact decree which stood at the date of the plaintiff's filing his appeal was that of dismissal of his suit by reason of his having failed to deposit the Rs. 799 within 15 days, and had he appealed against it on that footing he might have raised questions as to the propriety of the first Court's finding on the matter of price and the time allowed him within which to pay the amount into Court. I think therefore in this case it must be taken that there was a decree from which an appeal could be entertained, and that the plaintiff was entitled to get a determination of the question of price, which when decided might properly guide the Judge's conclusions upon the further point as to whether the time allowed by the first Court was reasonable.

The point was further considered in 18 All 223[2] where it was remarked :

> There is no doubt that a plaintiff who has obtained a decree under S. 214 (now O. 20, R. 14) can appeal within the period prescribed by the Limitation Act, 1877, for his appeal, whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day fixed, and on his appeal the Appellate Court, if it sees fit so to do, may extend the time within which the pre-emptive price is to be paid and fix a day itself.

Where a decree has been passed against the plaintiff I can see no reason on principle why the plaintiff should not challenge both the price of pre-emption fixed and the time allowed for payment and why an Appellate Court should not have power to vary both the price and the period. In 18 All 223,[2] it was however remarked that a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit could not have the power of his own accord to effect the stay of the execution of a decree which by reason of the pre-emptive price not having been paid on or before the day fixed, had become a decree in favour of the defendant, and that an appeal by itself would not extend the time fixed for payment. Their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in 6 Pat 24[3] that when an appeal is preferred the final decree is a decree of the Appellate Court, and in accordance with that decision MacNair J. C. held in 29 N L R 130[4] that when an appeal from a preliminary mortgage decree is preferred and dismissed, the Appellate Court must pass a fresh decree fixing a fresh date for payment. There is perhaps no very close analogy between suits for pre-emption and suits on mortgages, but it seems to me that the Appellate Court in suits for pre-emption has power to extend the time fixed for payment and that unless there is some valid reason for adhering to the time fixed in the first, Court the Appellate Court should itself fix a fresh date for payment. I do not say that it is bound to do so, but I think that it may do so. Here the point was never considered at all and I do not think that the lower Appellate Court intended to pass a decree that was in effect a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appeal therefore succeeds to this extent, that the plaintiff is allowed until 23rd December 1938 in which to make the required deposit of Rs. 2000; otherwise the appeal will stand dismissed. Cost of both parties in this appeal will be paid by the appellant. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

R.M./R.K. Appeal partly allowed.

1. Kodai Singh v. Jaisri Singh, (1891) 13 All 376 (F B).
2. Jaggar Nath Pande v. Jokhu Tiwari, (1896) 18 All 223=1896 A W N 43.
3. Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh, (1926) 13 A I R P C 93 = 98 I C 499 = 6 Pat 24 = 53 I A 197 (P C).
4. Parshram v. Umrao Prashad, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 236=147 I C 699=29 N L R 130.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 141

GRUER J.

Meghji Hirjee & Co. — Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Bengal Nagpur Railway Co. Ltd. — Defendant — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 764 of 1937, Decided on 20th October 1938, from decree of Small Cause Court, Nagpur, D/- 15th September 1937.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—Claim for overcharges— Sec. 77 does not provide remedy but it cuts down one.

Section 77 assumes the possibility of claims for over-charges, but where such claim lies in law, then it cannot succeed unless notice within six months has been given. It does not provide a remedy but cuts down one in cases where claim would lie according to general law. [P 143 C 1]

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—Over-charge —Meaning of.

An over-charge is simply a charge of more than is permitted by law and should be interpreted in a wide sense: A I R 1927 Nag 77, Foll. [P 143 C 1]

(c) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 41, 28 and 30 —Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to investigate into the liability of Railway Company, created by statute and the litigant is confined to the remedy specifically provided.

Chapter 5 of the Act gives a particular remedy against a Railway Company for a liability created by statute itself and S. 41 excludes the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, and the litigant is confined to the remedy specifically provided: 5 N L R 176, Foll.; (1890) 25 Q B D 146 and (1885) 14 Q B D 209, Ref. [P 143 C 2] (d) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—S. 77 does not contemplate that notice should be given in anticipation.

A notice claiming over-charges up to a certain date would not operate as a notice for similar future claims: A I R 1928 Lah 438 and A I R 1930 Cal 332, Disting. [P 144 C 1]

(e) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—Scope of.

The object of S. 77 is to prevent stale and dishonest claims for loss and not as means to enable the Railway authorities to deprive their customers of their just dues, but the Railway authorities are entitled to have due notice of the total extent of the claim preferred against them. [P 144 C 1]

(f) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14—Court—Governor-General is not a Court.

The Governor-General is no doubt a supreme executive authority in India but there is no statute constituting him a Court: 29 All 519 (P C); 26 All 382 and A I R 1918 Bom 82, Foll. [P 144 C 2]

(g) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 62—Art. 62 applies to suit for over-charge against a Railway Company.

A suit for over-charges against a Railway Company must be brought within three years under Art. 62. [P 144 C 1]

(h) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14—Proceedings carried on before Railway Board do not extend time under S. 14.

For S. 14 to apply, an enquiry instituted by the plaintiff must be prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature was unable to entertain it. But the plaintiff who had recourse to the Advisory Board which is not a Court, instead of to the Railway Commissioners, cannot be said to have prosecuted his claim in good faith and hence S. 14 cannot extend time. [P 144 C 1, 2]

J. M. Thakar — for Applicant.

P. N. Rudra — for Opposite Party.

Order.—In this case before the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, the plaintiff-applicant Meghji Hirji and Co., forest contractor and fire-wood merchant, unsuccessfully sued the Bengal-Nagpur Ry. Co. for a sum of Rs. 1000 excess charges on wagons of fire-wood sent from time to time to Motibagh, Itwari and Nagpur Railway Stations from Talodhi Station on the Gondia-Chanda Section of the Railway. The plaintiff had first of all complained to the Governor-General in Council on 16th January 1933 that the rates charged by the company were unfair and gave undue preference to his competitors at other stations. The Governor-General in Council referred the question for enquiry to the Railway Rates Advisory Committee whose printed report is Ex. P-1 on the record. The plaintiff's application is to be found at pp. 52 to 54. It complains that the railway administration has been giving unreasonable preference in contravention of Sec. 42 (2), Railways Act. The applicants prayed that their complaint be referred under Sec. 28, of the Railways Act, to the Railway Rates Advisory Committee for decision about the rates and that the applicants be awarded damages of Rs. 7795 on account of overcharges paid by them under protest from 10th December 1929 to 10th December 1932. The Committee found (p. 18 of the report) that undue preference had been given and undue prejudice caused to the applicant and that he was entitled to have the rates reduced. They indicated the ways by which this could be done. With regard to the applicant's claim for damages the Commissioners said (p. 2 of the report):

> It was explained to him that we are an advisory body and not a judicial body with legal powers, that our powers and rules of procedure were laid down in Government of India (Railway Department), Resolution No. 606-T, dated 25th September 1930, and that, as such, apart from other legal difficulties, we had no power to award damages, to grant injunctions, or to make recommendations to the Government in those respects. We should like to add, in this connexion, that there is no provision in Ch. 5, Indian Railways Act 9 of 1890 for the awarding of damages by the Railway Commissioners.

The recommendations of the Committee were accepted by the Governor-General in Council on 9th January 1935 and the Railway Company reduced its rates for the timber booked from this station. Plaintiff's present claim is for overcharges on 75 wagons from 22nd April 1932 to 1st April 1933 and on 112 wagons from 1st April 1933 to 1st April 1934. The claim has been dismissed on these grounds: first, it is barred under S. 41, Indian Railways Act; secondly, it is unmaintainable for want of valid notice; and thirdly, it is time-barred. It is contended in revision that the decision on all these three points is erroneous.

Plaintiff admits that by Sec. 41, Railways Act, he could not have brought this suit "except as provided in this Act," but he says that Sec. 77 provides for the launching of his claim. Now S. 77 says that nobody shall be entitled to a refund of an overcharge unless his claim has been preferred in writing to the railway administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the goods. The Section certainly assumes the possibility of claims for overcharge, but all it means is that where such a claim lies in law then it cannot succeed unless notice within six months has been given. It does not provide a remedy under the Act; it only cuts down the remedy in cases where claims would lie according to the general law. It may be mentioned incidentally that the lower Court is not satisfied that the claim related to an overcharge as contemplated by the Section. That point is not pressed by defendant's counsel, and I see no force in it. An overcharge is simply a charge of more than is permitted by law: A I R 1927 Nag 77.[1] The word should be interpreted in a wide sense.

To return to S. 41, where there has been an omission by a railway administration in violation of Ch. 5 the remedy provided for in this Act is laid down in S. 28. When complaint is made to the Governor-General in Council he may refer the case to the Commissioners for decision, and in hearing such a case the Railway Commission shall have the powers which may be exercised in the hearing of an original civil suit by the High Court: (S. 30). Now the plaintiff did not follow this remedy. He applied for reference of his complaint to the Railway Rates Advisory Committee, not to the Railway Commissioners. The request was acceded to. This Advisory Committee could only express an opinion; it could not make an award or allow damages. If the matter had been referred to the Commissioners the result might have been different. Analogous cases have arisen in England under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict., C. 31). S. 6 of that Act reads:

> No proceeding shall be taken for any violation or contravention of the above enactments, except in the manner herein provided; but nothing herein contained shall take away or diminish any rights, remedies or privileges of any person or company against any railway or canal or railway and canal company under the existing law.

Section 3 of the same Act provides the remedy of application to the Railway and Canal Commission which can issue injunction against the Railway Company for contravention of the Act. S. 6 means that that remedy must be followed although at the same time it says that the remedies under the existing law are not taken away. Although the Section is differently worded, it corresponds in principle to S. 41, Railways Act. If no claim for past damages can be brought in an ordinary civil suit under S. 6 of the English Act, I am unable to see how Sec. 41, Indian Railways Act allows any greater latitude. In the case of (1890) 25 Q B D 146[2] their Lordships followed (1885) 14 Q B D 209[3] and held that the only remedy where it is alleged that there has been a breach of S. 2, Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854, is by application to the Railway Commissioners under S. 3, and the only remedy they can give has regard to the future, not the past, and therefore that past payments alleged to be overcharges by reason of being contrary to the Act could not be recovered by action. In the Indian Act, Ch. 5 provides the detailed remedies under Ss. 72 to 82. Ch. 5 of the Act gives a particular remedy against the railway company for a liability created by the statute itself, and S. 41 excludes the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. It is to be inferred that the litigant is confined to this remedy which has been specially provided: see 5 N L R 176[4] at pages 178-179. On this ground therefore I agree with the lower Court that the suit is not maintainable.

The next question is about notice. Plaintiff admittedly gave notices on 8th May 1932 and 27th September 1932, and the lower Court holds that these are valid in respect of consignments up to 27th September 1932. A further notice was given on 9th August 1935 (Ex. P-3) after the Advisory Board had given their findings, but it is beyond six months from the date of delivery of the goods and so does not comply with S. 77. Plaintiff's contention is that it is a case of a continuing wrong, and secondly that as the agent had knowledge

1. Harakchand v. G. I. P. Ry. Co., (1927) 14 A I R Nag 77=100 I C 406.

2. Rhymney Railway Co. v. Rhymney Iron Co. Ltd., (1890) 25 Q B D 146 = 59 L J Q B 414 =63 L T 407=38 W R 764.

3. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry. Co. v. Denaby Main Colliery Co., (1885) 14 Q B D 209=54 L J Q B 103.

4. Jagannath v. Khuba, (1909) 5 N L R 176 = 4 I C 795.

and notice of his claim with regard to previous consignments it was unnecessary to give a separate notice for the later consignments. I should say that there was a recurring wrong, no doubt, but it did not occur independently of plaintiff's volition. It only occurred because plaintiff continued to send the various consignments. Nor from the fact that overcharges up to a certain date were claimed would the agent know that overcharges in future would also be claimed. S. 77 is mandatory and does not contemplate that a notice should be given in anticipation. I think that the claim for items subsequent to 27th September 1932 would fail on this ground also.

Plaintiff relies on A I R 1928 Lah 438[5] which does not cover the point. It held that when notice was given to one railway and the other railway concern had taken notice of plaintiff's claim, made inquiries and replied to him, no separate notice was necessary. That was with regard to a claim which had accrued before that time: so too in 57 Cal 1286.[6] No doubt the object of S. 77, Railways Act, is to prevent stale and dishonest claims for loss and not as a means to enable the railway authorities to deprive their customers of just dues; but the railway authorities are entitled to have due notice of the total extent of the claim preferred against him.

The third point is whether the claim is time-barred. I should first of all remark that as plaintiff bases his cause of action on the finding of the Advisory Committee, and as that Committee in para. 49 of its report says that > nothing in this report should be taken as bearing on the applicant's contention that the rates in force prior to that date causes undue prejudice to him, it seems to follow that there is no cause of action for transactions prior to 1st April 1933. For deliveries subsequent to that date the suit had to be brought within three years under Art. 62, Limitation Act, unless Sec. 14, Limitation Act, applied to exclude the period of inquiry before the Advisory Committee. If S. 14 is to apply this inquiry must have been prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature was unable to entertain it. The lower Court points out that the Advisory Committee had no judicial powers and so could not be a Court. It is now argued that the Governor-General in Council was a Court. But even if he were, the inquiry was conducted not by him but by the Advisory Board. Taking it however that as the inquiry was made under his orders, it and his acceptance of it formed one proceeding, is the Governor-General in Council a Court constituted by law? The word "Court" has not been defined in the Civil Procedure Code, but in 30 Mad 326[7] at p. 327 it has been held to mean "a place where justice is judicially ministered." In 29 All 519[8] it is pointed out that administrative officers are not Courts within the meaning of this Section: see also 26 All 382[9] and 43 Bom 201.[10] The Governor-General in Council is no doubt the supreme executive authority in India, but there is no statute constituting him a Court, nor has any ruling been brought to my notice which treats him as such.

It is said that by Ch. 5 of the Act the Governor-General in Council is invested with all the powers of a High Court. In my view that is not so. It is the Commissioners appointed by the Governor-General in Council that are given powers of a High Court under S. 30. It does not follow that the authority appointing a Court or appointing Commissioners having the powers of a Court is itself a Court. I need not go on to consider whether by having recourse to the Advisory Board instead of the Railway Commissioners the plaintiff can be said to have prosecuted his claim in good faith according to S. 14 or not. I hold that S. 14 did not come in to extend time in the case.

The application for revision therefore fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee will be Rs. 30.

S.G./R.K. Application dismissed.

5. Dhanpat Mal v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co., (1928) 15 A I R Lah 438=110 I C 718.
6. Shamsul Huq v. Secretary of State, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 332=128 I C 248=57 Cal 1286=52 C L J 260.
7. Manavala Goundan v. Kumarappa Reddy, (1907) 30 Mad 326=17 M L J 313.
8. Har Shankar Pratab Singh v. Raghuraj Singh, (1907) 29 All 519=34 I A 125 = 4 A L J 497 (P C).
9. Muhammad Subhan-Ullah v. Secretary of State, (1904) 26 All 382=1904 A W N 54.
10. Laxman Ganesh v. Keshav Govind, (1918) 5 A I R Bom 82=48 I C 467=43 Bom 201=20 Bom L R 918.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 145

VIVIAN BOSE J.

J. H. S. Evangelical German Mission, Superintendent Leprosy Asylum, Chandkhuri — Appellant.

v.

Mahant Ramsahaigir Chela Sunsergir Gosawi — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 292 of 1937, Decided on 17th October 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 24th September 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 9—Complete usurpation of possession and consequent dispossession of owner is not continuing trespass within meaning of Sec. 23, Limitation Act—Previous suits alleging forcible and wrongful possession of certain land and praying for ejectment dismissed under O. 9, R. 8—Subsequent suit alleging forcible and illegal possession and praying for possession is barred being based on same cause of action and not continuing one.

It is true that dispossession is a trespass and in one sense a continuance of possession thereafter is a continuance of the original wrong, but that is not the meaning of S. 23, Lim. Act. The Limitation Act must be read as a whole and due regard paid to its different provisions. It must clearly be construed in such manner that there is no conflict between S. 23 and Arts. 142 and 144. Complete usurpation of possession and occupation and consequent dispossession of the owner of the land is a wrong which is complete from the moment of the dispossession. It is not a continuing trespass of the character contemplated by S. 23. Hence where a plaintiff's suit alleging that defendant had forcibly and illegally taken possession of certain land and tank, that defendant's possession constituted a trespass and praying that the defendant be ejected from the land and tank is dismissed under O. 9, R. 8, a subsequent suit alleging forcible and wrongful possession and praying for possession of same land is barred because the cause of action is the same and not a continuing one : A I R 1926 All 34, Disting. [P 146 C 1, 2]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 23 and Arts. 142 and 144 — Taking exclusive possession of land whether communal or not is not continuing trespass within meaning of S. 23 but is dispossession under Arts. 142 and 144.

Whether the land belongs to a community or not, if one person takes sole and exclusive possession of it, or some portion of it, and excludes all others who have a right to occupation from possession, then the trespass is not a continuing trespass of the kind contemplated by S. 23 but the dispossession of the character dealt with in Arts. 142 and 144. [P 146 C 2]

(c) Abadi—Village abadi is not communal land.

Expressions like "common land" and "communal land" which are used in connexion with the C. P. Land Revenue Act refer to land in which no person has a right to sole and exclusive occupation of any particular portion of it. Every member of the community to which the land belongs, or in which they have an interest, has an equal right to the use of every square inch of it. That is certainly not the case in the abadi. Persons entitled to plots of land in the abadi are entitled, when they receive possession of it, to exclusive possession and are entitled to exclude every other member of the community from occupation. Therefore it is not communal land nor is it so dealt with in any portion of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act. [P 146 C 2]

D. N. Chaudhury — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye — for Respondent.

Order. — The question in this appeal is whether the plaintiff's suit is barred under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. He is the malguzar of the village in which the two portions of land in suit belong. They both form part of the abadi. In the year 1935 the plaintiff sued for possession of these two pieces of land under two different suits. The plaint in respect of the first portion is Ex. D-1 and the relevant passages are as follows :

2. The defendant has, without being entitled thereto, forcibly and illegally taken possession of a plot of land . . . . in the month of March 1935 for the purpose of building a house and has since constructed a house. The defendant has no right to take possession of any part of the plaintiff's abadi land in this manner nor had he any right previously. The defendant's possession of the land in suit constitutes a trespass.

3. At the time when the defendant took the possession in the plaintiff's abadi land, the plaintiff prohibited him not to, orally, but he refused to listen. Then the plaintiff served a notice in writing on the defendant on 17th April 1935 forbidding him not to proceed with building the house. But even then the defendant did not stop and having completed the house . . . . . he established his possession there. Even after the notice the defendant was asked to quit but he refused.

4. In spite of repeated demands, the defendant refused to quit the possession of the plaintiff's abadi land.

The prayer clause is that the defendant be ejected from the land and be ordered to remove the materials of the house which he has constructed there and to make over possession to the plaintiff. Ex. D-2 is the plaint in the other suit relating to the other plot of land. The relevant passages are as follows :

2. The defendant without any right took forcible and wrongful possession of plaintiff's tank . . . and having filled up the Dabri tank which belonged to the plaintiff in the month of March 1935, he has taken possession of the land thereof. The defendant has no right to fill up the plaintiff's abadi tank nor had he any previously. With the intention of causing damage to the plaintiff, the defendant has filled up the tank with earth and taken possession of the land . . . . and his possession of the land in suit constitutes a trespass.

3. At the time of filling up the tank in the month of March 1935 the plaintiff made a protest to the defendant orally but the latter did not listen. Then the plaintiff served a notice in writing on the defendant on 17th April 1935 forbidding him not to fill up the tank and take wrongful possession. But even then the defendant did not stop and having filled up the tank, he took possession of the land. Even after serving the notice, the plaintiff prevented him but he did not listen.

The relief, as before, is for ejectment and for an order that the earth be removed from the tank, that it be restored to its former condition and that the plaintiff thereupon be placed in possession. On the date of hearing, the defendant appeared and the plaintiff did not appear. Consequently after the Court had ascertained whether the defendant admitted the claim or part thereof and having discovered that he did not, it dismissed the suits under O. 9, R, 8, Civil P. C. The present suit is for possession of both these plots of land. The allegations are precisely the same as before except that here it is also stated that the "forcible and wrongful possession of the portions of this abadi land" constitutes a tort and a continuing trespass and that therefore the cause of action being a continuing one, the suit is maintainable. It is to be observed that the plaintiff still complains of the forcible and wrongful possession of the defendant. He still states that he has built a house on one part of the land and filled up the tank so far as the other portion is concerned. He also states, as before, that this has been done in spite of his protest and notice.

The first Court dismissed the claim under O. 9, R. 9, but the lower Appellate Court held that the acts complained of constituted a continuing trespass apparently within the meaning of S. 23, Limitation Act, that the cause of action for the present suit was not the same as the causes of action in the previous two suits and that therefore the present suit was not barred under O. 9, R. 9. The case was therefore remanded for trial on the merits. I am clear that the lower Appellate Court is wrong and that the first Court is right. It is in my opinion impossible to regard dispossession of the character complained of in these suits as a continuing wrong. If that was so, it would be impossible ever to apply Arts. 142 and 144, Limitation Act. Of course dispossession is a trespass and in one sense a continuance of possession thereafter is a continuance of the original wrong, but that is not the meaning of S. 23. The Limitation Act must be read as a whole and due regard paid to its different provisions. It must clearly be construed in such manner that there is no conflict between S. 23 and Arts. 142 and 144. Complete usurpation of possession and occupation such as appears here and consequent dispossession of the owner of the land is a wrong which is complete from the moment of the dispossession. It is not a continuing trespass of the character contemplated by S. 23. Consequently, the cause of action in the present case is clearly the same as the causes of action in the two previous suits and therefore the present suit is barred by O. 9, Rule 9.

It was argued on behalf of the respondent that since the land was in the abadi of the village, it constituted common village land and was communal land in which everybody had a right, and it was urged that trespass on communal land would be a continuing trespass. I am unable to accept this contention. Whether the land belongs to a community or not, if one person takes sole and exclusive possession of it, or some portion of it, and excludes all others who have a right to occupation from possession, then the trespass is not a continuing trespass of the kind contemplated by S. 23 but is dispossession of the character dealt with in Arts. 142 and 144. But apart from that, I am clear that the village abadi is not communal land. Expressions like 'common land' and 'communal land' which are used in connexion with the Land Revenue Act of these Provinces refer to land in which no person has a right to sole and exclusive occupation of any particular portion of it. Every member of the community to which the land belongs, or in which they have an interest, has an equal right to the use of every square inch of it. That is certainly not the case in the abadi. Persons entitled to plots of land in the abadi are entitled, when they receive possession of it, to exclusive possession and are entitled to exclude every other member of the community from occupation. Therefore, it is not communal land nor is it so dealt with in any portion of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act. It was argued then, that however that may be with respect to the site on which the house has now been built, those considerations cannot apply to the tank. So far as that is concerned, it is communal and any right to obstruct taking of water from that tank constitutes a continuing trespass. It is also suggested that every member of the village community has a right to the use of the water of this tank. None of these facts has been pleaded and even if it had, there is a difference between obstructing a person from drawing water from a well, or from obstructing water from water course, or from preventing him from exercising a right of way, and from taking complete possession of an area of land even if it happens to be under water. I need not therefore examine the cases cited by the learned counsel for the respondent which deal with undoubted cases of continuing wrongs. None of them is in the slightest degree relevant to the facts of this case. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has relied upon A I R 1926 All 34.[1] But that case is clearly distinguishable because the finding there was that the cause of action in the second suit was different from that in the former. If that had been the fact here, then of course this suit would not have been barred, but as I have said the cause of action here is identical with the causes of action in the previous suits. Consequently, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong and that of the first Court right. The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the first Court restored. Costs here and in the Courts below will be paid by the respondent. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

1. Kumari v. Adit Misir, (1926) 13 A I R All 34 =89 I C 379.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 147

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Shaligram Bhagoo Kunbi and another — Appellants.

v.

Mt. Dhurpati w/o Shamrao Kunbi — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 2 of 1937, Decided on 4th November 1938, from appellate decree of Gruer J. in S. A. No. 478 of 1936, D/- 11th December 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 — Legal representative —Whether person is legal representative of party to decree should be decided by executing Court — Separate suit does not lie.

The question whether a person is or is not a representative of a party to a decree must be decided by the executing Court and not in a separate suit and once decided, it becomes final (subject of course to revision, review or appeal when they lie) so far as matters relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of that decree is concerned : A I R 1916 Nag 89, Foll.; A I R 1918 Bom 175, Rel. on. [P 148 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 11 and 47, O. 22, R. 5 and O. 2, R. 2—Order under O. 22, R. 5, is not res judicata but is final so far as suit in which it is made is concerned — Subsequent decision in separate suit does not affect rights of parties in former suit — What matter amounts to res judicata stated.

Though a decision under O. 22, R. 5 is not res judicata because it does not operate as a decree, still that decision is final so far as the suit in which it is made is concerned, not on the ground of res judicata but because of Sec. 47. No subsequent decision in a separate suit can be used to affect the rights of the parties so far as questions relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree in connexion with which the order was made is concerned. The matters in issue in the former suit cannot be reagitated nor can questions which might and ought to have been raised there be raised in the second suit, nor will a separate suit lie on the same cause of action. The prohibitions contained in O. 2, Rule 2 and S. 47, and the usual rules about res judicata apply so far as those matters are concerned. All that is not res judicata is the question whether or not the person joined as the legal representative really occupies that character. That question is not finally concluded by a decision under O. 22, R. 5, except in so far as it concerns the suit in which the decision is made : A I R 1921 Nag 23, Explained and doubted; A I R 1936 All 412, Ref. [P 148 C 2; P 149 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47— Question whether property can be proceeded against held must be decided under Sec. 47 by executing Court and not in separate suit.

Where the decree-holder alleges that the property in possession of a party to the decree can be proceeded against in execution while the judgment-debtor (for that is the position which the person added as a legal representative occupies) states that it does not, that is precisely the type of question that must be settled under S. 47 and not by a separate suit. [P 149 C 1]

R. R. Dandige — for Appellants.

V. K. Rajwade — for Respondent.

Judgment. — Defendant 1 in this case obtained a decree against one Sampat Daulat on 8th December 1930 and then assigned it to defendant 2. Sampat died on 10th October 1931 and the decree-holders thereupon proceeded against the plaintiffs as the legal representatives of Sampat. Notices were issued but ignored and so the plaintiffs were substituted in place of the deceased judgment-debtor and execution proceeded against them. The property in suit here, which had admittedly once belonged to Sampat and which is now in the plaintiff's hands, was attached. Instead of contesting the execution proceedings, the plaintiffs have filed the present suit for a declaration that they are not the legal representatives of Sampat and so cannot be proceeded against in that capacity. They admit that the property had once belonged to Sampat but claimed that it was now theirs, it having been gifted to them by Sampat on 11th April 1931. The only question in this appeal is whether these matters can be litigated in this suit or whether the plaintiffs' sole remedy was to contest the execution proceedings. O. 22, R. 5, Civil P. C., states that :

> Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or a deceased defendant, such question shall be determined by the Court; and S. 47 (3) provides that :

> Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall for the purposes of this Section, be determined by the Court.

The result is that a separate suit is clearly barred. It was argued that it cannot be because S. 47 is confined to matters relating to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" and this relates to none of them. We do not think there is room for any such contention. Clause 1 of S. 47 contemplates execution not only against the original parties to a decree but also against their "representatives", and Cl. 3 states that a question whether any person is or is not a representative of a party, "shall for the purposes of this Section be determined by the Court." The only meaning we can attach to that is that the question whether a person is or is not a representative of a party to a decree must be decided by the executing Court and not in a separate suit and that once decided, it becomes final (subject of course to revision, review or appeal when they lie) so far as matters relating to the "execution, discharge, or satisfaction" of that decree is concerned. This was the view taken in 13 N L R 32[1] where Mittra A. J. C. held that :

> It is no longer open to the Court to stay the suit until the dispute as to who is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff has been determined in a separate suit. The question as to who was the representative of a deceased defendant could not be left open for decision in another suit, even under the old Code, but had to be decided by the Court itself. Under the present Code, all such questions have to be decided by the Court.

The Bombay High Court took a similar view in 42 Bom 535[2] at p. 542. The Allahabad High Court in 48 All 422[3] went so far as to hold that a decision under O. 22, R. 5 is res judicata and so the same question cannot be reagitated in a subsequent suit. But this was dissented from in a later decision : 58 All 734.[4] It was there held that such a decision is not res judicata because an order under that Rule does not operate as a decree. With that we agree. It is the Nagpur view : see 13 N L R 32[1] and 17 N L R 45[5] and also the view of other High Courts. Their decisions have been quoted in the Allahabad and Nagpur decisions, so we need not re-quote them here. But there is an important qualification to this. It is true the order is not res judicata, but for all that, the decision is final so far as the suit in which it is made is concerned, not on the ground of res judicata but because of S. 47. No subsequent decision in a separate suit can be used to affect the rights of the parties so far as questions relating to the 'execution, discharge or satisfaction' of the decree in connexion with which the order was made is concerned. This distinction was stressed in the Allahabad case, 58 All 734[4]:

> The order of the learned Subordinate Judge substituting Sheo Tahal Singh, the father of the present plaintiffs, in place of Gopal Rai was an order passed under O. 22, R. 5, Civil P. C., and it was passed in the course of a suit which did not concern the property in dispute in this case.

That in our opinion is the vital point. The next question is whether this suit lies. As we have said, the matter is not res judicata and so that does not operate as a bar. But Kotval A. J. C. went further and held in 17 N L R 45[5] that the legal representative, or the person joined as such, is entitled to bring a separate suit in respect of the very property in dispute in the former litigation and thus to re-open the very question decided under O. 22, R. 5 so as to affect the matters at issue there. With that we are unable to agree. Once a person is joined as a legal representative under O. 22, R. 5, and once it is accepted that that is final so far as that litigation is concerned, then it follows that the person so joined becomes a party to the decree, and thereafter all matters relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of that decree must be decided under Sec. 47 and not in a separate suit. Therefore what we have to see here is whether the questions at issue in this suit relate to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of the decree in the former litiga-

1. Tarachand v. Mt. Janki, (1916) 3 A I R Nag 89=38 I C 833=13 N L R 32.
2. Raoji Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman, (1918) 5 A I R Bom 175=46 I C 750 = 42 Bom 535= 20 Bom L R 671.
3. Raj Bahadur v. Narayan Prasad, (1926) 13 A I R All 439=94 I C 157= 48 All 422 = 24 A L J 546.
4. Antu Rai v. Ram Kinkar Rai, (1936) 23 A I R All 412 = 163 I C 283 = 58 All 734 = 1936 A L J 622.
5. Mt. Laxmi v. Ganpat, (1921) 8 A I R Nag 23 =62 I C 303=17 N L R 45.

tion. The prayer clause in the plaint here is as follows :

It be declared that the immovable property in para. 2 above, owned by the plaintiffs, and in their possession by virtue of the registered gift-deed, dated 21st April 1931 (this is an accidental slip and it should be 11th April 1931), is not owned and possessed by them as heirs and it be ordered that they personally or their property are not liable to satisfy the debt of defendants 1 and 2 and to pay charges of maintenance of defendants 3, 4 and 5.

These questions relate exclusively to the execution of the former decree. The allegations amount to no more than this. The decree-holder alleges that the property in possession of a party to the decree can be proceeded against in execution. The judgment-debtor (for that is the position which the person added as the legal representative occupies) states that it is not. That is precisely the type of question that must be settled under S. 47. It follows that this suit cannot lie. We want however to make it plain that our decision is confined to this, namely that matters in issue in the former suit cannot be re-agitated, nor can questions which might and ought to have been raised there be raised in the second suit, nor will a separate suit lie on the same cause of action. The prohibitions contained in O. 2, R. 2 and S. 47, and the usual rules about res judicata, apply so far as those matters are concerned. All that, in our opinion, is not res judicata is the question whether or not the person joined as the legal representative really occupies that character. That question is not finally concluded by a decision under O. 22, Rule 5 except in so far as it concerns the suit in which the decision is made. To that extent we overrule 17 N L R 45.[5] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 149

STONE C. J.

Raje Shridharrao Shanker Rao Nemiwant Bahadur and others — Plaintiffs — Appellants.

v.

Shrawan Vithoba Badhe — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 522 of 1936, Decided on 16th November 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 28th August 1936.

Berar Land Revenue Code (1896), S. 72 (3) —Rent of ante-alienation tenant is charge on his holding—Rent not paid on due date—Jagirdar, in equity, is entitled to interest on arrears of rent.

Where a sum of money is made payable and is charged on land, then in equity it is to be implied that there is an obligation to pay an equitable rate of interest on failure to pay the sum. Under S. 72, sub-s. (3), the rent of an ante-alienation tenant is declared a first charge on his holding. Hence, where one has an ante-alienation tenant in a jagir village so that the jagirdar is the receiver of the rent reserved on the holding of the ante-alienation tenant and that rent is not paid though demand be made on the due date, the jagirdar is entitled to interest on the amount of rent in arrear: (1903) 1 Ch 781 and A I R 1930 Mad 727, Foll. [P 149 C 2 ; P 150 C 1, 2]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellants.

Judgment. — This appeal raises a question of some little importance, though the sum involved is very small, because the decision is likely to have an application beyond the particular case before me. It is therefore a matter for regret that the respondent is not represented and so I have not had the advantage of an argument contrary to that presented by Mr. Bobde for the appellants. The question is as follows : Where one has an ante-alienation tenant in a jagir village so that the jagirdar is the receiver of the rent reserved on the holding of the ante-alienation tenant and that rent is not paid, though demand be made, on the due date, is the jagirdar entitled to interest on the amount of rent in arrear?

The claim is for interest at 1 per cent. per month on the rent claimed which amounts to Rs. 101-5-9. There has been a decree for the rent but interest has been disallowed. The first Court arrived at this conclusion relying upon a judgment passed in Second Appeal No. 25-B of 1933, decided in 1935 by Mr. Subhedar A. J. C. and not reported. My attention has been drawn to a decision of Gruer J. in Second Appeal No. 230 of 1936 wherein the Judge allowed interest at 4 per cent. founding himself on S. 73, Contract Act, holding that in substance the position of these tenants, though somewhat anomalous, was that of contractual tenants. A Bench of this High Court in L. P. A. No. 8 of 1936[1] considered the position of an absolute occupancy tenant in the Central Provinces and concluded that the rights of such a tenant were statutory rather than contractual. It may well be that there is substantial difference between an absolute occupancy tenant in the Central Provinces and an ante-alienation tenant in Berar. I hesitate, in view of the Privy Council decision in Privy Council Appeal No. 65 of 1936[2] and the decision in A I R 1930 Mad 727,[3] to found the obligation to pay interest on the Contract Act. Mr. Bobde has very frankly said that he sees a difficulty in claiming interest under the Interest Act, because the Interest Act requires some written instrument imposing an obligation to pay a sum certain at a certain date, and, although he is prepared to say that there is a sum certain payable on a certain date, he is not prepared to say that there is a written instrument. But he asks that the obligation be founded on the English equitable rule that where a sum of money is made payable and is charged on land, then in equity it is to be implied that there is an obligation to pay an equitable rate of interest on failure to pay the sum. This was so held in (1903) 1 Ch 781,[4] the head-note to which says :

1. Daryaosing v. Colonel Kukde, Reported in (1939) 26 A I R Nag 91=1938 N L J 366.

Where any settlement or contract contains a provision that a certain fixed sum of money is to be charged on land and to be paid at a fixed time, then, as between the owner of the land and the person entitled to the money, the money, in the eye of a Court of Equity, bears interest from the date fixed for payment of the money, although nothing is said as to interest in the settlement or contract—unless there are circumstances negativing the presumption that interest is payable.

That case was followed in A I R 1930 Mad 727.[3] It is said to be applicable because under S. 72, sub-s. (3), Berar Land Revenue Code, the rent of an ante-alienation tenant is declared a first charge on his holding. That has the effect of creating a statutory charge for rent. In the Madras case the charge was created by a contract. In view of the observations of the Master of the Rolls in (1903) 1 Ch 781[4] at p. 792 and onwards, I am of the opinion that here interest can be allowed. The Master of the Rolls there observes as follows :

Therefore we come to this point — whether, as the result of the charge, interest was or was not payable ; and this appears to me to be the only point in the case. It seems to me to be well established on the authorities, and the result of those authorities does not indeed appear to be disputed, that a Court of Equity has power to give interest, and, in point of fact, does so where a charge is created on land, although there are no words allowing interest in the instrument creating the charge. Indeed, we go back to the principle laid down in many cases showing that, in point of fact, the Court of Equity does charge interest . . . . but counsel for the appellants say that, although the Court has power to charge interest, yet the circumstances of the particular case may lead it to consider that it ought not to order or enforce payment of interest. But in the present case it appears to me—and the learned Judge has so held—that the circumstances, instead of rebutting the presumption that interest was payable, assist it, because the charge was made in order to safeguard the right of the persons entitled to the lunatic's personal estate as against the right of the persons entitled to the land, and to adjust those rights between them. What was the object of it but to give to those representing the personal estate, as against those representing the land, the right to have the charge paid ? Therefore it seems to me that this is just the case in which interest should be paid.

Here, it is pointed out that an ante-alienation tenant, though he owes rent, cannot be ejected. It is therefore urged that as some sort of compensation to the person entitled to the rent the due payment of rent is made chargeable on the land. This, therefore is a case in which it is only equitable to order interest to be paid if the rent is not paid at the due date. I am of the opinion that such an equity does arise. The decree will accordingly be varied by adding interest at 4 per cent. from the date when the rent was due to the date when the rent was paid. I am not disposed, in a case of some doubt, to impose a heavy burden of costs on the defendant and I therefore fix the costs at Rs. 50.

D.S./R.K. Decree varied.

2. Bengal Nagpur Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji, Reported in (1938) 25 A I R P C 67= 173 I C 15=I L R (1938) 2 Cal 72=32 S L R 374=65 I A 66 (P C).
3. Nanchappa v. V.I. Mannadiar, (1930) 17 A I R Mad 727 = 127 I C 630 = 53 Mad 549 = 59 M L J 358.
4. In re Drax, Savile v. Drax, (1903) 1 Ch 781= 72 L J Ch 505=88 L T 510=51 W R 612.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 150

NIYOGI J.

On difference between

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Balkrishna Rajaram Modi—Appellant.

v.

Baijnath Girdharilal Tiwari and others — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 11 of 1935, Decided on 13th January 1939, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Saugor, D/- 26th September 1934.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes — Limitation Acts—Construction (Per Stone C. J.).

Limitation Acts should be construed so as to save rather than bar a proceeding. [P 153 C 1]

 * (b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 12 (2) — Application for copies made on day on which judgment is pronounced — That day must be included in days requisite for obtaining copies— 13 N L R 89=A I R 1917 Nag 196=40 Ind Cas 425, Overruled (Per Stone C. J. and Niyogi J.; Clarke J., Contra.).

However startling, fantastic or absurd it may appear to be, the Courts cannot refuse to give effect to the plain meaning of the words used by the Legislature, if it does not conflict with reason and justice. There is nothing fundamentally unjust or unreasonable in excluding the same day twice. [P 154 C 1]

The day on which copies are applied for is a day requisite for obtaining the copies. [P 154 C 1]

Where therefore an application for copies of judgment and decree is made on the day on which the judgment is pronounced, that day should be included in the days requisite for obtaining copies, though that day is otherwise excluded by law in computing the prescribed period of limitation for appeal : 13 N L R 89 = A I R 1917 Nag 196 = 40 Ind Cas 425, Overruled; A I R 1924 Lah 599, Dissent. [P 153 C 2 ; P 154 C 2]

R. S. Dabir and W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

D. N. Chaudhary — for Respondents.

Clarke J.—The plaintiff has appealed against the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, dismissing his suit on a mortgage by which he sought to recover nearly Rs. 12,000 from the six defendants. In the trial Court defendant 1 raised a preliminary objection as to the competency of the Court to entertain the suit by reason of the debt having been included in an application made by him to the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4 (1), Debt Conciliation Act. The Court has held that the suit is barred by S. 16, Debt Conciliation Act, and the plaintiff's suit has therefore been dismissed. The plaintiff in this appeal seeks to reverse the finding of the lower Court that the suit is barred by S. 16, Debt Conciliation Act. The respondents have raised two preliminary objections to the appeal being heard: (i) because it is time barred by one day, and (ii) because insufficient court-fee has been paid. On the point of limitation, the judgment was delivered on 26th September 1934, whilst the appeal has been filed on 11th January 1935. The appellant applied to the copying department for a copy of the judgment and decree on the same day on which the judgment was delivered, i. e. 26th September. The copies were made ready and delivered to him on 12th October 1934. According to Art. 156, Limitation Act, the period of limitation for this appeal is 90 days from the date of the decree. S. 12 (1) of the Act provides : " In computing the period of limitation prescribed " for any suit, appeal or application, the day from" which such period is to be reckoned shall be excluded". The reason for this is obvious because one day is a period of 24 hours from the commencement of the period. One day from 12 noon today is 12 noon tomorrow : therefore today is excluded and tomorrow's date counts as one day. Leaving out of consideration for the time being the effect of the application for copies, we have to start counting 90 days from 26th September. The 27th September being the first day to be counted that gives us 4 days in September, 31 days in October, 30 days in November and 25 days in December. Apart therefore from any complications on account of the application for copies, holidays, etc. the appeal would have had to be filed by 25th December. As to this there can be no two opinions. Now Sec. 12 (2), Limitation Act, provides :

> In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.

The question is how the time requisite for obtaining a copy is to be computed. It appears to me that it must be computed in the same way as the period of limitation is to be computed under Art. 156, that is, that the day on which the application for copy is made is to be excluded and the next day counted as the first day for the same reason that I have shown above, namely that one day comes to an end on the day next after the period commenced. So the period necessary for obtaining a copy commenced when the application was made and the first day was over on the next day. Therefore, as here, the application for copies was made on 26th September ; the first day of the period necessary for obtaining copies ended on 27th September. If then the copies had been delivered to the appellant on 27th September, we could have said that one day was necessary for the preparation of the copies. Similarly, if the copies had been ready on 28th September, we could have said that two days were necessary. If they could be ready on 30th September, we could have said that four days were necessary. Accordingly, we can count 4 days in September and 12 days in October as the period necessary for the preparation of copies, since the copies were delivered to the appellant on 12th October. 16 days only were therefore necessary for the preparation of the copies. Under S. 12 (2), Limitation Act, these 16 days have to be excluded in reckoning the period of 90 days allowed for the appeal or in other words the period of 90 days may be considered to commence 16 days after it would otherwise have commenced. We have already seen that the period of 90 days would ordinarily commence on 27th September. We can therefore exclude the 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th September which leaves us with 12 days to exclude in October and the period of 90 days will commence to run on 13th October, that being the first day to be counted. There will therefore be 19 days to be counted in October, 30 days in November and 31 days in December which leaves us ten days in January. The appeal should therefore have been filed on 10th January 1935. As it was filed on 11th January 1935, it is one day late.

The appellant urges that the day on which the application for copies was made, i. e. 26th September, should be counted as the first day requisite under S. 12 (2) and that therefore he had five days in September and 12 days in October or 17 days in all to deduct as time necessary for obtaining copies. I have endeavoured above to reveal the fallaciousness of this reasoning. This view finds support in 13 N L R 89[1] and A I R 1924 Lah 599,[2] where it is pointed out that the calculation, as the appellant would like to make it, involves excluding the same day twice. S. 12 (2), as already pointed out, provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, etc. the day on which the judgment was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, etc. shall be excluded. Here, the word "and" being conjunctive, the day of judgment cannot be included in the time requisite for a copy. To include it therein would be, as pointed out in the aforesaid two cases, to exclude the same day twice. To put the matter in another way, under Art. 156, we know the number of days and have to find out the dates, whereas under S. 12 (2) we know the dates and have to find out the number of days. There is no reason why the number of days should be calculated in one way in order to arrive at a period under Art. 156 and in a different way in order to arrive at the period necessary for obtaining copies. The appellant has not made any application for an extension of time under Sec. 5, Limitation Act. In fact his counsel has definitely stated that he does not want any extension of time but stands on his own right under S. 12 and Art. 156. That being so, I am of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed as barred by limitation.

On the point of the sufficiency of the court-fee the appellant has paid a court-fee of Rs. 10 on the assumption that the claim cannot be valued being for suspension of the proceedings in the lower Court. It is plain that the value of the appeal to the appellant is the amount of the court-fee which he paid to have his suit decided in the lower Court, viz. Rs. 535. Court-fee in this appeal should therefore be ad valorem on Rs. 535, i. e. Rs. 40-8-0. The difference between this and Rs. 10, viz. Rs. 30-8-0, represents the deficiency in the court-fee. The appellant has been informed that in the event of the point of limitation being decided in his favour it will be necessary for him to make good the deficiency in the court-fee before his appeal can be heard, and he has been instructed to hold the amount in readiness to save further delay.

Stone C. J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother which is supported by the two decisions referred to by him. I find myself unable to agree with the conclusion arrived at on the question of limitation. It is a well established rule that acts of a Court are deemed to be done at the earliest possible moment so that a judgment is deemed to be pronounced immediately the Court sits: see Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, (Edn. 7, p. 297). This is, of course, a fiction and a dispute might arise as to the time from which the period of limitation starts if the day on which judgment was pronounced were counted in. This kind of inconvenience is doubtless the reason why the General Clauses Act provides in S. 9 that if an Act provides for a time 'from' a day, that day is excluded. Thus, the only difference between providing a period of 91 days including the day on which judgment was pronounced and providing a period of 90 days from the day on which judgment was pronounced is that the latter mode avoids a dispute about the hour in which the judgment was pronounced—a dispute which might not be set at rest by the above-mentioned presumption if in point of fact the Court did not sit at the accustomed Court hours. 90 days is an artificial period. The more natural period is 91 days which is 13 weeks or, very approximately, three calendar months or a quarter of a year. The exclusion of the day on which judgment is pronounced is, in my opinion, a mere matter of drafting to avoid any question about whether the 90 days are clear days or not. But in addition to 90 clear days the person proceeding is allowed whatever time is requisite for obtaining a copy. That time is whatever it in fact is. If an application for a copy is made on the day judgment is delivered and the copy is delivered the same day, it cannot be said that no time has been taken in obtaining a copy simply because that particular day has been excluded in calculating the 90 days. Two things have to be excluded: (1) the day on which judgment is pronounced, and (2) the time requisite for obtaining a copy.

1. Salamsingh v. Hira, (1917) 4 A I R Nag 196 =40 I C 425=13 N L R 89.
2. Ata Muhammad v. Pir Khan, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 599=75 I C 1055.

Limitation Acts should be construed so as to save rather than bar a proceeding. Even if a rigorous construction were applied there is no justification, in my opinion, for cutting down the time requisite for obtaining a copy from the time actually required where that time happens to include a particular day, viz. the day on which judgment was pronounced. Time does not stand still on that day any more than on other day. To shut out that particular time spent in copying on that day would be simply to prejudice a litigant who makes his application for a copy quickly. It is to be observed that "time requisite" does not include time which need not have elapsed if reasonable and proper steps were taken to obtain a copy: 49 I A 307[3]. The litigant should not be encouraged to delay. Why he should have his time extended by, say, seven days (when the copying takes seven days) if he applies on the day after judgment is pronounced and yet have his time extended by only six days (when the copying takes seven days) if he applies on the day judgment is pronounced I fail to understand. In both cases the day on which judgment is pronounced is excluded in calculating the 90 days. In both cases the time requisite for obtaining a copy is seven days. In the one case the litigant gets 97 and in the other 96 days before he is barred. (Viewed from the angle that the Act is really allowing 91 days including the day on which judgment is pronounced he gets 98 and 97 days respectively.) This apparently unsatisfactory result only follows if one assumes that because the 90 days is exclusive of a particular day on that day time spent in copying is not time requisite for copying. I cannot make any such assumption. There being thus a disagreement between us on this point, the matter will be posted before a third Judge, Niyogi J., for his opinion.

3. Pramatha Nath Roy v. Lee, (1922) 9 A I R P C 352=68 I C 900=49 Cal 999=49 I A 307 P C).

OPINION

Niyogi J. — This matter comes before me under the Proviso to sub-s. 2 of S. 98, Civil P. C., in consequence of difference of opinion between the learned Judges comprising the Division Bench. The point of law upon which they differ may be stated as below: When an application for certified copies of judgment and decree is made on the day the judgment is pronounced, whether that they should not be counted as a day requisite for obtaining copies, for the reason that it is otherwise excluded by law. The facts are that the judgment was pronounced on 26th September 1934, and the decree was signed on 28th September 1934. Application for copies of judgment and decree was made on 26th September 1934 and the copies delivered on 12th October 1934. The appeal was filed on 11th January 1935. The appeal would be barred by time if the day on which the application for copies was made is excluded from the computation of time requisite for obtaining copies. In 13 N L R 89[1] and A I R 1924 Lah 599[2] it was held that one and the same day cannot be excluded twice. The reason is indeed specious, but is not sound as will appear in the sequel. The material part of S. 12, Limitation Act, is as follows:

> In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.

It is evident that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for appeal, two periods are to be excluded: (i) the day on which the judgment is pronounced, and (ii) the time, i. e. the days requisite for obtaining copy of the decree. The first period is excluded by operation of law and the second by act of the party. The first is unconditional and absolute, and the second is contingent on the making of an application for copies. The first is excluded whether such an application is made or not. It is clear that they are distinct and separate in their purpose. The day on which the judgment is pronounced would invariably be a fraction of a calendar day and the law ignores or eliminates that day absolutely so as to ensure to the party concerned as many complete days as are prescribed for any suit or appeal or application. Thus in the case of appeals, the appellant would have clear 90 days under Art. 156. The copying time is excluded because the appellant is unable to appeal without filing a copy of the decree if not of the judgment. The necessity of filing the copy imposes on the appellant a disability which he works off by applying for it. The law therefore allows him to deduct the days lost in obtaining the copy from the prescribed period of limitation. It cannot be reasonably contended that the day on which the application for copy is made is not a day requisite for obtaining the copy. It is therefore evident that an appellant is entitled to a deduction of the number of days beginning with the day on which he applies for to the day on which he obtains the copy from the number of clear days of limitation prescribed by the statute. This conclusion is supported by the express wording of S. 12. It may be that in an exceptional case, such as the present, one day happens to be excluded twice. However startling, fantastic or absurd it may appear to be, the Courts cannot refuse to give effect to the plain meaning of the words used by the Legislature, if it does not conflict with reason and justice. As I have indicated above, there is nothing fundamentally unjust or unreasonable in excluding the same day twice. If, as Batten A. J. C. remarked in 13 N L R 89,[1] the period of limitation is the actual period beginning on a certain date, not an abstract number of days, there is no reason why it should not be regarded that the time requisite for obtaining copy is the actual period beginning on a certain date, i. e. the date on which it is applied for, not an abstract number of days. In both cases it should be the actual period which should be computed.

If S. 12 (2) is put in a concrete form so as to make it applicable to appeals, it would read as follows : In computing 90 days prescribed for an appeal . . . . the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree . . . . shall be excluded. The meaning is plain that period which is taken up in the preparation of copy should be excluded from 90 days. A question may arise whether the appellant would be entitled to a deduction of the period even when he applies before the judgment is pronounced. My answer is positively in the negative. There can be no preparation of a copy when the original itself is non-existent. The case is however different when the judgment is pronounced and the preparation of a copy is possible. The appellant has the right to apply for copy as soon as the judgment is pronounced and the delivery of the copy is only a question of time. It cannot therefore be disputed that the day on which he applies for copy after the judgment is pronounced is a day requisite for obtaining copy. If so, that day must be excluded from the prescribed period of limitation, i. e. to say 90 days. It must be noticed that Batten A. J. C. himself excludes it, but he excludes it from the time requisite for obtaining copy. That is evidently contrary to the enactment which excludes it from the prescribed period of limitation because it includes it in the period requisite for obtaining copy. For the foregoing reasons I concur with the opinion delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice.

N.S./R.K. Answer accordingly.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 154

NIYOGI J.

Dipchand Kundanmal Marwari and others — Appellants.

v.

Manakchand Multanmal Marwari and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 551 of 1936, Decided on 5th December 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 31st August 1936.

 (a) Tort—Damages—Cause of action — Worry caused by opposition set up by other party is not injury in legal sense and does not furnish cause of action for damages.

Damages are pecuniary compensation which the law awards to a person for actual injury he has sustained by reason of the act or default of another, when such act or default is a breach of a contract or tort. A mental perturbation or emotional excitement described as worry caused by the opposition set up by the opposite party is of too trivial nature to be regarded seriously as an injury in the legal sense of the term. The so-called worry cannot therefore provide any cause of action for damages. [P 155 C 2]

(b) Specific Relief Act (1877), Ss. 42 and 54 —Legal character — Party preventing invited persons, by peaceful measures, from attending ceremony—Declaration that party has no right to do so cannot be granted—Party having no legal obligation in matter of ceremony — No cause of action for injunction against party held existed.

A man's status or legal character is constituted by the attributes which the law attaches to him in his individual and personal capacity, the distinctive mark or dress as it were, with which the law clothes him apart from the attributes which may be said to belong to normal humanity in general : A I R 1915 Mad 584, Rel. on. [P 155 C 2]

Plaintiffs proposed to celebrate a ceremony in accordance with the custom of their community. Defendants with a view to prevent the ceremony tried to persuade the invited persons by personal appeals and printed circulars from accepting the invitation and attending the ceremony. Plaintiffs filed a suit for a declaration that the defendants had no right to do 'picketting' and trouble the plaintiff and also for an injunction to restrain defendants from carrying out their object :

Held* that S. 42 did not apply as the allegations of the plaintiff did not involve any question of his legal character and hence he was not entitled to the declaration prayed for. [P 155 C 2]

Held further* that there was also no cause of action for an order of injunction as there was no legal obligation on the defendants in the matter of the ceremony nor was the persuation accompanied by any threat to use force or violence. [P 156 C 1]

Y. V. Jakatdar — for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde and T. P. Naik — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiffs' appeal from an order dated 31st August 1936 of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, in Civil Appeal No. 74-A of 1935, whereby the original Court's order rejecting the plaint under O. 7, Rule 11 (a), Civil P. C., was upheld. The parties are members of Oswal community. The appellants had proposed to celebrate a ceremony called Mosar on 21st November 1933 and 22nd November 1933 in honour of their grand-father's death in accordance with the custom of their community. They alleged that the defendants had decided to prevent the performance of the ceremony and with that view they had distributed handbills in the town of Malkapur to dissuade the persons invited to the function from accepting the invitation and also to prevent them from attending it by means of picketting. On these premises the plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that defendants 1 and 2 had no right to do "picketting" and trouble the plaintiffs and that they should be restrained by an order of injunction from carrying out their object. They also prayed for a decree for damages to the extent of Rs. 100 on account of the worry caused to the plaintiffs by the defendants' threat of obstruction. In my opinion the plaint was rightly rejected by the Courts below on the ground that it did not disclose any cause of action. So far as the prayer for damages is concerned, there was manifestly no cause of action as there was no injury. Damages are pecuniary compensation which the law awards to a person for actual injury he has sustained by reason of the act or default of another, when such act or default is a breach of a contract or tort. What the plaintiffs describe as worry was nothing but a mental perturbation or emotional excitement caused by the opposition set up by the defendants. It is of too trivial nature to be regarded seriously as an injury in the legal sense of the term. The so-called worry cannot provide the plaintiffs with any cause of action for damages.

The question is whether under Sec. 42, Specific Relief Act, the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration that they have prayed for. That Section grants relief only in cases where the legal character or any right as to any property of the plaintiff is denied by the defendant. In this case there is no question of right as to any property involved. Is there any question of the plaintiffs' legal character arising in the case? Manifestly not. A man's legal character is the same as legal status, that is a position recognized by law, as pointed out in 39 Mad 80[1] at p. 82:

> A man's status or legal character is constituted by the attributes which the law attaches to him in his individual and personal capacity, the distinctive mark or dress, as it were, with which the law clothes him apart from the artributes which may be said to belong to normal humanity in general.

The allegation that the plaintiffs' right to celebrate Mosar was denied or contravened by the defendants does not involve any question of the plaintiffs' legal character, that is, status. It is therefore evident that Sec. 42, Specific Relief Act, has no application.

The next question is whether there was any breach on the part of the defendants of any obligation existing in the plaintiffs' favour so as to bring the case within the purview of S. 54, Specific Relief Act. The plaintiffs no doubt had the right to enjoy the company of their relatives and friends and that the defendants were under an obligation to abstain from interfering with the peaceful celebration of the event. If the defendants had invaded the gathering and tried to disperse it or commit a breach of the peace, that would certainly be amenable to S. 54. But that is not the allegation in the plaint. The crux of the complaint is that the defendants were trying to persuade by personal appeals or by printed circulars the members of their community from joining the celebration. Now, success of the celebration itself depended on the invitees accepting the invitation. There was no obligation on them to accept the plaintiffs' invitations. They had the unfettered option to decline it. Can it be predicated that strangers are under any obligation to see that the invited guests accept the hosts' invitation? It would be preposterous to say so. As the plaintiffs had the right to issue invitation to their friends and relatives, the defendants also had equal right to dissuade them from accepting the invitation, for reasons which from their point of view, justified non-participation in the celebration. Their right to reason with their fellow castemen and to persuade them to their views is indisputable. I fail to see how law can intervene if the persuation is not accompanied with any threat to use force or violence. The plaintiffs only challenge the defendants' right to dissuade the invitees by peaceful means from accepting their invitation but they do not allege that they ever threatened to resort to force or violence. As it is clear that there was no legal obligation on the defendants in the matter of the Mosar celebration, the plaintiffs could have no cause of action for an order of injunction. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 50.

1. Ramakrishna v. Narayana, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 584=26 I C 883=39 Mad 80=27 M L J 634.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

 * A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 156

STONE C. J. AND NIYOGI J.

Narain Chouthmal Marwadi — Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Rama Jago and others — Defendants — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 172 of 1937, Decided on 22nd December 1938, from reference made by Niyogi J., D/- 2nd February 1938.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 20—Part payment by manager of joint Hindu family gives fresh period of limitation against other members of family.

A part payment of a joint debt by the manager of a joint Hindu family does bind another member of the family and the fact that the other member had joined the manager in borrowing the loan cannot impair the representative capacity of the manager though it may serve to prove that the borrowing was for a necessary purpose of the family : A I R 1928 Pat 156, Rel. on. [P 157 C 1]

 * (b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 20 — Part payment — To give fresh period of limitation, writing need not be specifically towards principal or interest—It is enough if it is towards the debt and identifies it and amounts to acknowledgment.

Where a debtor makes payment and acknowledges it in his handwriting but does not specify whether it is towards principal or interest, such acknowledgment does give a fresh period of limitation if the writing sufficiently identifies the debt. Once it is shown to be towards the debt, it is not necessary to show whether it is towards the principal or interest : Case law referred. [P 158 C 2]

S. R. Mangrulkar — for Applicant.

S. P. Kotval — for Opposite Party.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Niyogi J.—This is a plaintiff's application in revision against the judgment of the Small Cause Court, Saoner, in Civil Suit No. 364 of 1936, dated 3rd December 1936. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 415-6-0 on a bond for Rs. 280 executed by Rama (non-applicant 1) and his deceased brother Ganpat now represented by non-applicants 2 and 3. Ganpat paid Rs. 20 on 15th May 1933 and he made the acknowledgment of the payment on the back of the bond without specifying whether the payment was to be appropriated towards principal or interest. The plaintiff instituted his suit on 15th June 1936. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by time. It found that Ganpat was not joint with Rama, much less manager of the joint family and held that S. 20, Limitation Act, was not applicable to the case.

I cannot concur in the lower Court's finding that Ganpat and Rama were not joint and that Ganpat was not the manager. That finding is directly contradicted by overwhelming evidence on the record. P.W. 1 Narayan, P. W. 2 Sakharam, P. W. 3 Vithoba, P. W. 4 Daulat and P. W. 7 Narhari agree in stating that they were joint and Ganpat was the manager. Their evidence receives support from Ex. P-2 which shows that their cultivation was joint. P. W. 6 Bhadya no doubt says that they were separate but he is unable to say whether their cultivation was separate. He is not likely to know better than P. W. 7 Narhari who is the Patwari of the village. When the lower Court remarks that "the evidence on the record does not bear out that allegation", in the face of the ample evidence indicated above, the only reasonable inference is that it overlooked that evidence. A finding which is not only unsupported by but directly opposed to the evidence on the record, cannot be accepted as sound. It is therefore reversed.

The lower Court was further wrong in holding that part payment of a joint debt by manager of a joint family does not bind another member of the family because the latter joined the manager in borrowing the loan. That may serve to prove that the borrowing was for a necessary purpose of the family but that cannot impair the representative capacity of the manager. If any authority is needed I may refer to 6 Pat 811[1] which is exactly parallel to this case.

Now I turn to the controversial issue in the case. The endorsement of the payment of Rs. 20 did not specify whether it was to be appropriated towards interest or principal. The question is whether such an acknowledgment of payment serves to extend limitation under Sec. 20, Limitation Act. Answers given by the High Courts in India are not uniform. In 58 All 261,[2] the majority of the learned Judges were of the opinion that it did not extend limitation. In 58 Mad 418[3] a Bench of two Judges took a different view. A I R 1937 Lah 820[4] had followed the majority view in 58 All 261.[2] In 44 Cal 567[5] it was held that the Court was entitled to find whether the payment had been made towards interest or principal. A I R 1937 Sind 95[6] appears to agree with the Calcutta view. 9 N L R 78[7] inclines towards the Allahabad view but the actual decision on the evidence in that case is in conformity with the Calcutta view. The question is of great importance and of frequent occurrence. I think there should be an authoritative pronouncement of this High Court on the vexed question. I therefore submit this case to my lord the Chief Justice for reference to a Bench on the questions formulated below :

1. Where a debtor makes a payment and acknowledges it in his own handwriting without specifying whether it is towards principal or interest, whether that acknowledgment gives a fresh period of limitation under S. 20, Limitation Act.

2. Whether it is permissible for the creditor to prove that the payment was intended to be appropriated towards interest.

OPINION

The questions raised in this reference are as follows :

1. Where a debtor makes a payment and acknowledges it in his own handwriting without specifying whether it is towards principal or interest, whether that acknowledgment gives a fresh period of limitation under S. 20, Limitation Act.

2. Whether it is permissible for the creditor to prove that the payment was intended to be appropriated towards interest.

There has been a considerable diversity of opinion on the first point raised which turns on the interpretation of S. 20, Limitation Act. The critical words are :

(1) Where interest on a debt . . . . is . . . . paid as such . . . . . or where part of the principal . . . is . . . . . paid . . . . . a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made : Provided that, save in the case of a payment of interest . . . . . .

In our opinion this means as follows : (1) Where payment of interest on a debt . . . . is made . . . . . etc. Provided that save in the case of a payment of interest . . . The importance of the words "as such" lay and lie in the fact that they make clear a distinction between two possible cases : (1) the case where a debtor pays a sum by way of interest, (2) the case where a debtor pays a sum and the creditor appropriates the sum paid to interest. In the first case the payment is a payment of interest, that is a case of interest paid as such. In the second case the payment is simply a payment. That is to say one has to look at the matter through the eyes of the debtor. Before the amendment the proviso read :

Provided that, in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same.

Under the old law one had either to prove the payment by a writing of a special kind or one had to establish that the payment was not a part payment of principal. That was regarded as imposing the burden of proving that it was not merely a payment but a payment of interest. That was not established by merely proving payment of a sum and appropriation of that sum. If however the plaintiff proved by oral evidence payment not merely of a sum but of interest, i. e. proved the payment was of interest and nothing but interest

1. Bajrangi Prasad Singh v. Kesheo Singh, (1928) 15 A I R Pat 156=109 I C 655=6 Pat 811.
2. Udeypal Singh v. Lakshmi Chand, (1935) 22 A I R All 946 = 159 I C 387 = 58 All 261 = 1935 A L J 1029 (F B).
3. Lakshmi Naidu v. Gunnamma, (1935) 22 A I R Mad 101=154 I C 1053=58 Mad 418= 68 M L J 470.
4. Lal Chand v. Raman Shah, (1937) 24 A I R Lah 820 = 172 I C 455 = 39 P L R 622.
5. Hem Chandra Biswas v. Purna Chandra Mukherji, (1918) 5 A I R Cal 891 = 35 I C 638 = 44 Cal 567 = 22 C W N 190.
6. Hariram-Dowlatram v. Ramsing-Gopal Singh, (1937) 24 A I R Sind 95 = 168 I C 820 = 31 S L R 68.
7. Gopal v. Govind, (1913) 9 N L R 78 = 19 I C 849.

(otherwise it would be a payment in part of principal), then the proviso did not apply and one got a new starting point. Proof of payment simpliciter by oral evidence was not good enough because it did not exclude the application of the proviso. The mere fact that the creditor appropriated to interest a payment made did not alter the nature of the payment and did not therefore absolve the plaintiff from proving the facts necessary to bring the case within the Section, i. e. either (1) that the payment was not merely a payment of a sum but a payment of interest or (2) that the fact of payment was evidenced by a writing in the handwriting of the person paying.

There were certain ambiguities in the provisions contained in the unamended S. 20 which also opened wide the door to belated claims by leaving the proof of payment of interest in the uncertain realm of oral evidence. The amendment corrected the ambiguities and made it necessary to prove a signed written acknowledgment of payment.

After the date of the amendment what has to be proved is an acknowledgment of payment. The mode of proof is by writing signed. But lest this should unfairly affect past transactions and bring cases within a time-bar that no creditor could foresee, the Legislature included in the new proviso the words "save in the case of a payment of interest made before 1st January 1928." That was clearly a saving clause to save cases where the creditor was relying on oral evidence to establish that (within the words of sub-s. (1) interest on (the) debt . . . . (had been) paid as such. Accordingly it must have been the intention of the Legislature to make the saving words in the proviso and the words quoted from sub-sec. (1), of the same content. This justifies the paraphrase of sub-s. (1) set out at the beginning of this judgment. That paraphrase does not, in our opinion, do violence to the rules of grammar.

After 1st January 1928 it is a matter of complete indifference whether the payment is of interest or principal or both so long as it is a payment relating to the debt. If the acknowledgment of payment is upon the back of a promissory note the fair inference would be that it related to the promissory note but of course that would be rebuttable and if the debtor succeeded in proving that it really related, say, to payment of the purchase price of a tiger cub, then it would not start a new period of limitation. If there be an acknowledgment of payment in writing but it does not appear from the writing what debt was being in part paid, so that oral evidence becomes necessary to link up the acknowledgment with the debt, it might well be that a sufficient acknowledgment would not be established—what has to be proved is an acknowledgment of payment, and the payment has to be either of interest or of part of the principal (the whole includes the part) of the debt. The mode of proof is by writing either (1) in the handwriting of the person paying, or (2) signed by such person. The writing must thus sufficiently identify the debt and amount to an acknowledgment of payment. If it acknowledges that a payment of principal is made that is sufficient. If it acknowledges that a payment of interest is made, that is sufficient. If it acknowledges a payment towards the debt, that is sufficient. If it acknowledges a payment but does not identify the debt, that is not sufficient.

We have expressed the above opinion without reference to decided cases for sake of simplicity. The following cases were cited in argument for the proposition that it is no longer necessary to prove that the payment was on account of interest: A I R 1938 Pat 183,[8] A I R 1938 Rang 280,[9] 58 Mad 418,[3] A I R 1938 Lah 347,[10] 13 Lah 448[11] and 52 All 459.[12] Contra: 58 All 261[3] at p. 271, A I R 1937 Lah 820,[4] 40 Bom L R 968[13] and a case before the amendment 7 Rang 522.[14] See also the cases referred to in the referring order. From the above analysis the following answers to the questions referred result: (1) Assuming he acknowledges that the payment is in respect of the debt the answer is in the affirmative. (2) Such evidence would be unnecessary.

S.G./R.K. Reference answered.

8. Bankanidhi v. Godipatna Co-operative Society, (1938) 25 A I R Pat 183 = 174 I C 1005=16 Pat 294 = 18 P L T 563.
9. Khan Sahib v. Uchil Ahmad, (1938) 25 A I R Rang 280=176 I C 865=1938 R L R 591.
10. Jawahir Singh v. Ghulam Hassan, (1938) 25 A I R Lah 347 = 40 P L R 124.
11. Bharat National Bank Ltd., Delhi v. Bishan Lal, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 212 = 135 I C 673 = 13 Lah 448 = 33 P L R 42.
12. M. B. Singh & Co. v. Sircar & Co. (1930) 17 A I R All 392 = 127 I C 581 = 52 All 459 = 1930 A L J 590.
13. Havabu v. Isup Musa, (1938) 25 A I R Bom 467 = 178 I C 844 = 40 Bom L R 968.
14. U Ba Gyi v. U Than Kyauk, (1929) 16 A I R Rang 339=120 I C 897=7 Rang 522.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 159

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Nathusa Pasusa Sahu — Appellant.

v.

Mohammad Siddique Md. Usman Musalman and others—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 43-B of 1935, Decided on 13th October 1938, from decree of the Second Addl. District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 30th April 1935.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 16—Pardanashin women when executing an instrument must know clearly what they do by independent advice — Courts should see that the transaction is fair — If it is not, it cannot alter its terms to make it fair but must be satisfied that they not only put their hand to the paper but also their mind to the transaction.

In dealing with pardanashin ladies when a deed is executed by them, it is necessary to make it clear to them that what they are doing is not merely a mechanical act but a conscious act though it is not necessary that such explanation should be proved to have occurred at the time of the execution. They must have independent advice and the Courts have to scrutinize the transaction very closely to see that it is a fair one. But if it comes to the conclusion that the transaction is not a fair one, the Court will not make it fair by altering some of its terms as it would amount to making a contract for the parties; and if it appears that the lady executing an instrument had no disinterested advice and that the only persons who in any way explained the matter to her were either the other side or persons who would endeavour to take advantage of her position, then one must most critically examine all the various steps that are taken and must be satisfied that she not only put her hand to the paper but also that she has put her mind to the transaction : Case law discussed. [P 160 C 1, 2]

At the instance of the sons, the mother and daughter who were pardanashin Mahomedan ladies executed a mortgage deed along with the sons but the daughter received no part of the consideration and the mother was relieved of her previous obligation. The transaction was done behind a purdah screen mostly in a tonga cart when both the ladies had no independent advice and the only person who explained the matter was the son. There was really nothing whatever to show that these women knew anything about the transaction:

Held that it was one of those cases where even though the fact of execution and attestation were established the document would still be not binding on the female executants because their mind never moved to the transaction in question. [P 162 C 1]

 (b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 71—Execution of document by pardanashin ladies — Proof of.

It is the conscious execution and not the mechanical execution of a document that must be established in the case of documents executed by paradanashin ladies. [P 161 C 1]

A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and J. R. Mudholkar — for Respondents 3 and 4.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal in a mortgage suit brought against four defendants who are Mahomedans and are related as follows : The first and second are the two sons and the fourth the daughter of the husband (now deceased) of the third. The mortgage in question is alleged to have been executed by all the four. The learned Judge has found that the mortgage is binding on the first two and has dismissed the suit as against defendants 3 and 4 on the ground that there is no proof so far as they are concerned, of due execution and/or attestation. Both execution and attestation are put in issue and the evidence comes almost wholly from the plaintiff's side the only evidence on behalf of the defendants being that of defendant 3. The mortgage consideration is alleged to be made up of two things : (1) the payment off of a prior mortgage of Rs. 7780, and (2) the payment before the Sub-Registrar of a sum of money amounting to Rupees 1220. The Rs. 7780 in turn is arrived at by taking the capital due under the mortgage paid off which is Rs. 6760 and adding to it the interest that accrued. The consideration for that Rupees 6760 was in turn the payment off of a variety of earlier liabilities, the earliest of of which dates from 1918 and the last from 1921. The first of those liabilities is Ex. P-5 which was a mortgage executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 and it was for Rupees 2000. The next is Ex. P-6 executed by defendants 1 and 2, a mortgage for Rs. 600 dated 29th May 1918. The next is Ex. P-4 for Rs. 1418-4-0 executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 dated 25th March 1919. The fourth is Ex. P-7 made by defendant 1 alone being a promissory note dated 29th September 1921 for Rs. 334-12-0.

It will be observed that so far as defendant 4 is concerned she gained nothing, unless she can be said to gain the merit which comes from paying other people's debts, by executing this mortgage. None of the pre-existing debts was hers and we are not satisfied that she received any of the consideration that passed in cash. So far as defendant 3 is concerned, she gained a substantial advantage, it may be, because as a result of this mortgage transaction she has been relieved of her obligation under Ex. P-3. What that obligation may have amounted to has not been litigated in this suit, but it is thrown out by way of argument that it did not amount to very much because she would have been able to challenge that mortgage, had she ever been sued on it. However that may be, as the case stands, so far as we know, defendant 3 did obtain an advantage as a consequence of having Exh. P-3 paid off. It is a very different matter as to whether the suit mortgage was such a one as she would have been well advised to execute. These two women were pardanashin Mahomedans and it is evident that they were in close pardah. Everywhere they went they were shielded from the eyes of men and there is no dispute but that every transaction they entered into, so far as this case is concerned, save one only, was done behind the purdah screen, mostly in a tonga cart with purdah curtains. The one exception is that indicated in the evidence of P. W. 3 who is the employee of the plaintiff and has been his employee for 45 years. His story is that he went to see the two ladies, had them called out by defendant 1, saw them and spoke to them as though they were not ladies in purdah, explained what a splendid thing this change from the old to the new mortgage was, how the interest was less (for it had been Re. 1-8-0 and was now Re. 1) and that they consented. In cross-examination it is made clear that the consent, so far as the younger woman was concerned, must have been based on silence because she said nothing from the beginning to the end, and so far as the benefit was concerned, this man in the service of the plaintiff (a money-lender) forgot to tell the younger woman that the difference between the old position and the new was this, that under the old mortgage she was not liable at all; under the new mortgage she was; under the old mortgage her property was uncharged, under the new mortgage it was.

It has been over and over again stated that in dealing with pardanashin ladies it is necessary to make it clear or to have it made clear to them what it is that they are doing. It is true that it is not necessary that that explanation should be proved to have occurred at the time when she executed the document. It will do if she knew what the transaction was about before: A I R 1926 Pat 529.[1] It is also true that the mere fact that she pretends not to know is neither here nor there: A I R 1936 Cal 378.[2] What is to be made clear is that what she is doing when she executes is not merely a mechanical act but a conscious act. We shall come to that again in a moment. At the present it is sufficient to say that she must have independent advice, and even though she has independent advice the Courts, in these cases, will scrutinize the transaction very closely to see that it is a fair one, (34 C L J 563,[3]) and if it comes to the conclusion that the transaction is not a fair one, the Court will not make it a fair one by altering some of its terms, for that would be making the contract for the parties: 11 Pat 227.[4] It has been pointed out in a variety of cases which we referred to, 34 C L J 563[3] and 34 C L J 333,[5] what sort of tests should be applied. In the former of those two cases a Bench of the Calcutta High Court, presided over by a very distinguished Judge, held that > the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a pardanashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her or by some person duly authorized by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter.

Whether that last requisite in all cases is necessary we somewhat doubt. But certainly, where it appears that she has no disinterested advice, where it appears that the only persons that have in any way explained the matter to her are either the other side or persons who would endeavour to take advantage of her position, then one must most critically examine all the various steps that have been taken and must be satisfied that she has executed the instrument and that the instrument has been duly attested so as to comply with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. In considering whether she has executed, one must not be satified with mere proof that she has put her hand to the paper but must also be satisfied that she has put her mind to the transaction.

Here the evidence even of the mechanical act is extremely feeble. It has been urged by the learned counsel for the appellant

1. Thirathman Jha v. Mt. Gunjeswari Kuer, (1926) 13 A I R Pat 529=96 I C 571=8 P L T 17.
2. Suresh Chandra v. Marani Dassi, (1936) 23 A I R Cal 376=166 I C 842.
3. Nibaran v. Nirupama, (1921) 8 A I R Cal 131 =69 I C 476=34 C L J 563=26 C W N 517.
4. Tara Kumari v. Chandra Mouleshwar Prasad Singh, (1931) 18 A I R P C 303=134 I C 1076 =11 Pat 227=58 I A 450 (P C).
5. Krishna v. Nagendrabala, (1921) 8 A I R Cal 435=66 I C 694=34 C L J 333 = 25 C W N 942.

relying on 16 N L R 196[6] and 14 C W N 165[7] in addition to two cases on wills which are somewhat different from this class of case, 2 N L R 65[8] at page 70 and 4 C W N 204,[9] that here the evidence of the factum of execution by persons calling themselves attesting witnesses is sufficient. The learned Judge has held that it is insufficient. Looked at from the angle of proof of what counsel for the respondents has called mechanical execution we agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiff has failed to prove even mechanical execution. Assuming that in that we are wrong and that the admissions made by defendant 3 before the Sub-Registrar and in the course of her examination are sufficient to eke out the evidence that has been given on behalf of the plaintiff, it will be interesting to examine that evidence. The plaintiff (P. W. 2) puts the execution at the registry office. So far as P. Ws. 4, 5 and 10, scribe and attesting witnesses respectively, are concerned they put the execution as follows: P. W. 4, at the house of the plaintiff; P. W. 5 at the house of either the plaintiff or of defendant 1 according as you read the following sentences :

Defendants 1 and 2 signed in my presence and I attested the deed at the place of plaintiff. The marks of defendants 3 and 4 were taken by defendant 1 going inside his house where I had gone with defendant 1. Their marks were not actually taken in my presence.

P. W. 10 at first said that it was at the tahsil office. Then he said that he did not remember anything about it except the registration. He said at first that at the execution the plaintiff was not present but the plaintiff himself says that he was. The scribe says that the execution was not in his presence. P. W. 5 says that the marks were not taken in his presence. P. W. 10 says he knows nothing about it. It is urged that this is a case where the plaintiff is entitled to pray in aid the provisions of Sec. 71, Evidence Act, which provides as follows :

If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence.

The difficulty in the plaintiff's way here is to point to the evidence establishing not merely mechanical execution but conscious execution. There is really nothing whatever to show that these women knew anything about this transaction. In this case we have the exceptional fact that the Sub-Registrar makes an observation about this transaction in the book kept for that purpose at the registry to the following effect:

On having admitted it, I think the document has not been executed with their full consent. It has come to my notice that they have only admitted at the instance of Mahamad Siddique and to meet the needs for the time being.

He appears to have called upon them to state on affirmation what they knew about the matter and defendant 3 said :

I do not know the name of the person in whose favour I now executed a writing in respect of the field at Paratwada. My sons Mahamad Siddique and Mahamad Hanief know it. I had executed a mortgage deed before in favour of Bandu Nana alias Vithal Sadasheo Karkare. That paper was registered. Credit has been allowed for the amount of that mortgage. That (amount) Rs. 7720 has been allowed credit. I do not know the period of the previous mortgage deed. My elder son that is, Mahamad Siddique knows it. I have executed the previous mortgage deed. My daughter Bibabi has not executed it. My daughter that is, Bibabi wife of Nyaj Mahammad Khan, has executed this paper. The name of Bibabi was not in the mortgage deed executed in favour of Karkare. But there was her evidence. My son Mahamad Siddique knows the terms, etc. everything of this document.

Defendant 4 said :

I do not know in whose favour I have executed this mortgage deed. My brother Mahamad Siddique knows it. He knows its terms, etc. everything. I admit the document. I have made the signature at the instance of mother and brother.

The defendants denied the execution and due attestation in their pleadings and defendant 3 gave evidence to the effect that she never gave her signature to any mortgage deed, that she does not know the plaintiff, that she has not received a pie, that when she was taken to the Sub-Registrar's office and when her thumb impression was taken there she understood that what she was doing was placing her thumb on a document for mutation purposes, that she does not know the Marathi language, the document being in Marathi. In cross-examination she says, which seems to be untrue, "the Sub-Registrar never examined me at any time." She also says that she used to transact business from the purdah. Very little is got out of her in cross-examination and it is quite apparent from her evidence and indeed from the evidence of all the witnesses that speak to the subject that both these women were purdah women, that so far as this transaction is concerned nobody saw them and very few of the witnesses had ever seen them and so far as

6. Mt. Kasidanbi v. Gangulal, (1920) 7 A I R Nag 164=56 I C 247=16 N L R 196.
7. Isri Prosad v. Rai Gunga Prosad Singh Bahadur, (1910) 14 C W N 165=3 I C 311.
8. Mulchand v. Mt. Janki, (1906) 2 N L R 65.
9. Sibo Sundari Debi v. Hemangini Debi, (1900) 4 C W N 204.

the attesting witnesses are concerned they had never seen them and did not see them on this occasion. There is nothing to suggest that they knew their voice and there is nothing to suggest that they could in any way identify them. All that they were going upon is that the son said that the women had put the thumb marks on the document and it is therefore said that 14 C W N 165[7] can be used to support this transaction.

Here however the evidence showing that the son said that the mother and the sister had put their thumb-marks relate to the thumb-marks that were put on the document at the Sub-Registrar's Office. The execution, according to the pleadings, was done at the plaintiff's house and the alleged placing of the thumb-marks on the body of the document took place, according to the plaintiff, there. There are two sets of thumb-marks upon the document taken at different times and made in different inks. But that is the least of the difficulties in the plaintiff's way. The chief difficulty is that this is one of those cases where even though the fact of execution and attestation were established this document would still not be binding because the mind of the female executants never moved to the transaction in question. Lord Sumner, speaking on behalf of the Privy Council in 47 All 703,[10] observes at p. 710 as follows:

The law of India contains well-known principles for the protection of persons who transfer their property to their own disadvantage, when they have not the usual means of fully understanding the nature and effect of what they are doing. In this it has only given the special development which Indian social usages make necessary, to the general rules of English law, which protect persons whose disabilities make them dependent upon or subject them to the influence of others, even though nothing in the nature of deception or coercion may have occurred. This is part of the law relating to personal capacity to make binding transfers or settlements of property of any kind. That the instrument here is a wakfnama is a mere accident, and the general and well settled law of wakf is not in question. The case of an illiterate pardanashin lady denuding herself of a large proportion of her property without professional or independent advice, is one on which there is much authority. Independent legal advice is not in itself essential : 36 All 81.[11] After all, advice, if given, might have been bad advice, or the settlor might have insisted on disregarding it. The real point is, that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act, of the person who makes it : 18 Cal 545[12] at p. 548, 47 Cal 175[13] at p. 180. The appellant clearly had no such advice, nor is it contended that she had. If however the settlor's freedom and comprehension can be otherwise established, or if, as is the respondents' case here, the scheme and substance of the deed were themselves originally and clearly conceived and desired by the settlor, and were then substantially embodied in the deed, there would be nothing further to be gained by independent advice. If the settlor really understands and means to make the transfer, it is not required that some one should have tried to persuade her to the contrary. Again, the question arises how the state of the settlor's mind is to be proved. That the parties to prove it are the parties who set up and rely on the deed is clear. They must satisfy the Court that the deed has been explained to and understood by the party thus under disability, either before execution, or after it under circumstances which establish adoption of it with full knowledge and comprehension: 7 Cal 245[14] at p. 252, 29 Cal 749[15] at p. 757, 34 All 455.[16] Further, the whole doctrine involves the view that mere execution by such a person, although unaccompanied by duress, protest or obvious signs of misunderstanding or want of comprehension, is in itself no real proof of a true understanding mind in the executant. Evidence to establish such comprehension is most obviously found in proof that the deed was read over to the settlor and, where necessary, explained. If it is in a language which she does not understand, it must, of course, be translated, and it is to be remembered that the clearness of the meaning of the deed will suffer in the process. The extent and character of the explanation required must depend on the circumstances. Length, intricacy, the number and complexity of the dispositions, or the unfamiliarity of the subject-matter, are all reasons for requiring an increased amount and efficiency of explanation. Thus, a matter not likely to attract the attention of the executant, in itself ought not to be relied on as binding, unless her attention has been directly drawn to it : 29 Cal 664[17] at p. 673. So if the deed, as presented for execution, differs substantially, either by way of addition or of omission, from the scheme and details which the intending settlor has previously laid down, the discrepancy ought to be clearly pointed out and its nature and effect should be fully described, unless, which must be rare, the difference is so obvious that even a person in the settlor's position must perceive and appreciate it for herself. If the description and explanation have been partial or erroneous, or have not been given at all, the question will then arise, as it arises where there has 10. Farid-un-Nissa v. Mukhtar Ahmad, (1925) 12 A I R P C 204=89 I C 649 = 47 All 703=52 I A 342=28 O C 338 (P C).

11. Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh, (1913) 36 All 81=21 I C 985=41 I A 23=16 O C 378=12 A L J 115 (P C).
12. Wajid Khan v. Iwaz Ali Khan, (1891) 18 Cal 545=18 I A 144=6 Sar 46 (P C).
13. Sunitabala Debi v. Dharasundari Debi, (1919) 6 A I R P C 24=53 I C 131=47 Cal 175=46 I A 272 (P C).
14. Sudisht Lal v. Mt. Sheobarat Koer, (1881) 7 Cal 245=8 I A 39=4 Sar 222 (P C).
15. Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi, (1902) 29 Cal 749=29 I A 127=8 Sar 304=6 C W N 682 (P C).
16. Sajjad Hussain v. Abid Husain Khan, (1912) 34 All 455=39 I A 156=16 I C 197=15 O C 271 (P C).
17. Sham Koer v. Dah Koer, (1902) 29 Cal 664=29 I A 132=8 Sar 280=6 C W N 657 (P C).

been no independent legal advice, whether, if proper information had been given, it would have affected the mind of the executant in completing the deed. On the other hand, the doctrine cannot be pushed so far as to demand the impossible. The mere declaration by the settlor, subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing obviously is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the settlor, the nature of the settlement, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. If the answer is in the affirmative, those relying on the deed have discharged the onus which rests upon them. Of course fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters.

Even had this document been read over to the women, it would not follow that they would be regarded as understanding what was in it, and even if they understood what was in it, it does not necessarily follow that the transaction would be binding upon them : see A I R 1934 P C 208[18] and A I R 1938 P C 276.[19] In a case such as the present, where the document is not in the mother language of the executant, it would be necessary for the plaintiff to show that the executant understood and not merely heard what was read : A I R 1937 P C 274.[20]

The learned trial Judge has relied on 37 All 474,[21] 12 Pat 359[22] at p. 399 and 45 Cal 748.[23] It is true that the first and the last of these cases are under S. 59 of the old T. P. Act and there has been a substantial alteration in the requirements for attestation effected by the amendments of 1926. The difference however consists in the fact that now it is sufficient if the attesting witnesses though not present at the time of execution received acknowledgment of execution from the executant. To that extent of course those cases have ceased to be good law but apart from that the law then and the law now is the same and there is no evidence here of acknowledgment made by the executant to the attesting witnesses. Accordingly in our opinion the law as laid down in those two Privy Council cases controls this case now as much as it would have before the amendment of 1926, the variation wrought by the amendment not having any application to this case. The learned trial Judge has carefully examined the evidence and has, in our opinion, correctly stated the law, and we see no reason to differ from the conclusion he has arrived at. It follows therefore that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

18. Kalyan Mal v. Ahmad Uddin, (1934) 21 A I R P C 208=151 I C 45 (P C).
19. Peoples Bank of Northern India Ltd. v. Mian Ghulam Jan, (1938) 25 A I R P C 276=176 I C 773=32 S L R 947 (P C).
20. Kwamin Bassayin v. Bendentu II, (1937) 24 A I R P C 274=170 I C 423 (P C).
21. Padarath Halwai v. Ram Nain Upadhia, (1915) 2 A I R P C 21=30 I C 366=37 All 474=42 I A 163 (P C).
22. Sabitri Thakurani v. F. A. Savi, (1933) 20 A I R Pat 306=145 I C 1=12 Pat 359=14 P L T Sup 1.
23. Ganga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh, (1918) 5 A I R P C 3=45 I C 1=45 Cal 748=45 I A 94 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 163

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Kuwarji Madhao Gujar — Appellant.

v.

Bhurelal Ajitmal Baniya—Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 7 of 1937, Decided on 25th November 1938, from appellate decree of Niyogi J., in S. A. No. 314 of 1935, D/- 7th April 1937.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), Sec. 203 — Abadi—Usufructuary mortgage—Mortgagee is mere trespasser, and suit for possession by landlord is governed by Art. 142 or Art. 144 and not by Art. 120.

A usufructuary mortgagee of an abadi site has only a limited interest in the same, yet such a transfer is struck at by S. 203 and the mortgagee is in relation to the landlord a mere trespasser, and a suit by landlord for possession of the site is governed by Art. 142 or Art. 144 and not by Art. 120. [P 164 C 2]

(b) Acquiescence — Circumstances not sufficient to raise effective defence of.

Where a grantee of an abadi site went out and his usufructuary mortgagee entered into possession of the site and the house built thereon by the grantee and continued as such for many years when the lambardar sued for possession, the fact that the lambardar stood by with knowledge of his rights without suing for such a long time as would show laches on his part or would show that he was slow to exercise his remedies, is not sufficient to raise an effective defence of acquiescence : Case law discussed. [P 165 C 1 ; P 166 C 1]

Y. V. Jakatdar —for Appellant.

A. V. Wazalwar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from a decision of a Judge of this Court dismissing a second appeal on the ground that the suit is barred by limitation. For the appellant, the point of limitation was the only point to be argued but in reply in order to support the learned Judge's judgment the question of so-called acquiescence has been canvassed. The learned Judge finds against acquiescence differing from the lower appellate Judge. The point of limitation can be very shortly stated after the facts have been referred to.

The plaintiff is a lambardar in a village to which there was attached an abadi site. The plaintiff's predecessor in the lambardarship had granted to a third party (herein referred to as the mortgagor) a residential site in the abadi and the mortgagor effected a usufructuary mortgage to the defendant of that site. As a result, the mortgagor went out of possession and the defendant entered into possession of the abadi site in question on which the mortgagor had built a house and which the defendant now occupies. That was on 14th May 1924. Many years passed. The lambardarship changed hands; the present plaintiff became the lambardar; and the present plaintiff sues for possession of that site.

It had been a matter of doubt in the Judicial Commissioner's Court whether S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act, which prohibits a transfer by the person in possession of an abadi site, applied to a mortgage. The matter was in doubt even when this present case came before Niyogi J. in second appeal and that learned Judge referred to a Bench for determination the question, whether the word 'transfer' used in S. 203 (3), C. P. Land Revenue Act 1917, includes a usufructuary mortgage.

That question was answered by the Bench in the affirmative, the ground of the Bench decision being that the transfer in question related to the right of possession and was not limited to the full proprietary interest and the right of possession was clearly transferred by a usufructuary mortgage. The matter therefore went back for disposal by the learned referring Judge and he has found that there was here no acquiescence. His view appears to be that there is no acquiescence because the lambardar was under the general impression that he could not turn this mortgagee out, and therefore the fact that he stood by for some time and his predecessor had stood by for many years does not raise any question of acquiescence. As we shall have occasion to state hereafter, even this does not limit the circumstances in which acquiescence can be used as a defence, in our opinion, sufficiently.

On these facts the first point that arises is : What is the period of limitation in which the plaintiff can sue ? It is not disputed by counsel for the respondent that the plaintiff had a right of suit from the moment this usufructuary mortgagee entered into possession under a prohibited transfer. It is not disputed that from that moment the defendant was a trespasser. But it is said that this trespasser's possession is not adverse because he lays claim to a limited right to possess as usufructuary mortgagee only. The learned Judge has come to the conclusion that neither Article 142 nor Art. 144 applies, that the appropriate Article to apply is 120, and that accordingly this suit, which was brought after six years and before twelve years, was out of time. The relevant passage in the judgment is as follows :

Article 142 or Art. 144 would have applied had the defendant denied the plaintiff's title in which case he would have been in the position of a trespasser. In the present case the defendant does not deny the plaintiff's title. He only claims to be his licensee. Consequently, this suit does not fall to be governed by either Art. 142 or Art. 144. In the absence of any specific Article applicable to a suit the residuary Article 120, Limitation Act, will operate. According to that Article the period of limitation is six years, that is to say, the suit should have been filed before 15th May 1930. As it was filed in 1934 it is clearly barred by time.

As we have above observed, it is not now disputed that the defendant is a trespasser. But he is a trespasser apparently of a particular type and one who can maintain possession (if Art. 120 is the appropriate Article) if he has stayed on the land for six years because any suit thereafter of this nature would be barred by time. We are unable to understand how that can be. If H. C. Mitra's Limitation Act (Edn. 12) pp. 867-868, Para. 621-A is referred to, a very considerable number of cases will be found relating to the position that arises where the person in possession is claiming a limited interest only. Here the limited interest is said to be that of a usufructuary mortgagee. That interest is undoubtedly a limited interest. But such a transfer is struck at by S. 203, and the mortgagee is, in relation to this land, a mere trespasser. In our opinion either Article 142 or Art. 144 is applicable, which is a matter of indifference in this case, as in either case admittedly the suit will be in time and the plea of limitation will fail.

But it is said by counsel for the respondent in support of the judgment that if it be that the learned Judge was wrong on the question of limitation, he was also wrong in negativing acquiescence, and that this is pre-eminently a case of acquiescence.

Reliance is placed on a variety of decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court which we have examined : 11 N L R 126,[1] 54 I C 304,[2] 43 I C 508[3] and 27 N L R 183.[4]

The word "acquiescence" is used by the learned lower appellate Judge as though it were an effective defence once it was shown that the plaintiff had stood by with knowledge of his rights and without suing for a year or two—such a time as would show laches on his part or would show that he was slow to exercise his remedies. If that were sufficient to raise the defence of acquiescence we would observe that no meaning whatever could be given to the Articles, we have been examining of the Limitation Act. Under the law relating to limitation, knowledge of one's right to sue does not contract, though ignorance of the facts creating the cause of action may expand, the time allowed in which to sue. The limitation periods proceed on the basis that the plaintiff could have sued before. To take an ordinary every day case, a plaintiff suing a trespasser for possession can let 11½ years go by during the whole of which period he has been aware that the defendant was a trespasser on his land and still he would be within time because the period of limitation is 12 years. The fact that he knew he was a trespasser, the fact that he did not proceed before, does not give the defence of acquiescence to the defendant. The Lord Chancellor in (1865-66) 1 H L 129[5] set out the various ingredients that must be present before one can raise the defence of acquiescence. His observations are quoted in 2 N L R 34[6] at p. 40 and in the same volume at page 6, 2 N L R 4.[7] Further, as Turner L. J. observed in (1861) 130 R R 28[8] at p. 38 :

> Acquiescence, as I conceive, imports knowledge, for I do not see how a man can be said to have acquiesced in what he did not know, and in cases of this sort I think that acquiescence imports full knowledge, for I take the rule to be quite settled that a cestui que trust cannot be bound by acquiescence unless he has been fully informed of his rights and of all the material facts and circumstances of the case.

As Thesiger L. J. said in (1878) 8 Ch D 286[9] at p. 314, acquiescence "is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel" and not only is full knowledge required, but as the Lord Chancellor in the case above referred to (1865-66) 1 H L 129[5] pointed out, there must be some lying by to the detriment of the other side. There was such a lying by in 27 N L R 183[4] where the lambardar permitted the person to raise a building on the site knowing all along that the person who was building was not entitled to be there and knowing all along that the person building thought he was entitled. That is exactly the kind of case which raises the defence of acquiescence. In 11 N L R 126,[1] what was actually found for was in favour of the landlord. It was a case in which the landlord sued to dispossess the defendant who claimed title under the tenant of a site in the abadi. The landlord had not objected to this transfer and it was assumed throughout the case that the transferee was in possession with the landlord's consent. It was held that that consent merely implied that the landlord was prepared to accept the transferee on the same terms as the original tenant; that is to say he was prepared to allow the transferee to use the site for residential purposes. When, however, the transferee ceased to use the site for those purposes and diverted the land to other uses, namely for the purpose of cultivating tobacco and maize, the landlord stepped in and claimed the right to dispossess him. It was held that he had a right to do so and that his consent did not mean that the transferee was to get an absolute title to that plot of land. This is not a case of acquiescence at all. It is a case where an admitted permission was found to be of a limited kind and was not regarded as sufficient to raise an implied permission to do acts outside the limited permission. The passage upon which reliance was placed (at p. 129) merely states as follows :

> As a general rule then the transferee of a house standing on an abadi site whose occupancy of the site is not objected to by the landlord must be presumed to have been permitted to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor . . . .

That means that the consent of the landlord under those circumstances would not

1. Narain v. Behari, (1915) 2 A I R Nag 119=31 I C 307=11 N L R 126.
2. Ramdayal v. Jagrani, (1920) 7 A I R Nag 21 =54 I C 304.
3. Deoki v. Mukunda Kunbi, (1917) 4 A I R Nag 47=43 I C 508.
4. Dhunnoo v. Sheolal, (1931) 18 A I R Nag 158 =134 I C 852=27 N L R 183.
5. Ramsden v. Dyson, (1865-66) 1 H L 129=12 Jur (N S) 506=14 W R 926=149 R R 543.
6. Collier v. Baron, (1906) 2 N L R 34.
7. Seth Mohan Lal Parwar v. Choudhri Chunni Lal Parwar, (1906) 2 N L R 4.
8. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, (1861) 8 D F & J 58=7 Jur N S 785=4 L T N S 811=130 R R 28=9 W R 541.
9. De Bussche v. Alt, (1878) 8 Ch D 286=47 L J Ch 281=38 L T 379.

entitle the transferee to claim an absolute right to do what he liked with the land but would amount to a permission to do what his transferor could lawfully do. That passage cannot be used to mean that the Court is bound to presume consent whenever it is found that a transferee has been in possession for a year or two. Cases such as 54 I C 304[2] and 43 I C 508,[3] if they decide that mere knowledge for a time precludes the landlord thereafter from pursuing his ordinary remedies against a trespasser merely because the trespass is on an abadi site, are, in my opinion, wrongly decided.

In our view there is no question of acquiescence here. The only difficulty we found about this branch of the case is that the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact, which finding is binding not only on the second Appellate Court but also on this Court which is hearing an appeal from the second Appellate Court, that there was acquiescence. We have however carefully examined that judgment and we have come to the conclusion that the learned Judge's opinion was founded on a wrong legal view and he was using "acquiescence" in a sense quite different from the meaning usually ascribed to it when relied upon as a defence. Because the former lambardar had stood by knowing of the position, the Court concluded that the trespasser could rely on the defence of acquiescence because relying on the passage already explained from 11 N L R 126,[1] the Court must draw the inference that the lambardar has acquiesced. Consequently he draws that inference and finds acquiescence. This is, in our opinion, a conclusion arrived at on a mistaken view of the law.

It is finally urged however that here the learned Judge from whose judgment this appeal has been brought was wrong in saying that there was no acquiescence here because the plaintiff was not aware of his rights. It is said that he was aware of his rights. Let it be that he was aware of his rights. It would make, in our opinion, no difference. But the argument proceeds that he was aware of his rights because although there was a doubt as to the position of a usufructuary mortgagee, there was no doubt whatever as to the position where there was a transfer. Although the defendant was in possession as a usufructuary mortgagee, his mortgagor had left the village and therefore the lambardar must have known that this usufructuary mortgagee was something more than a mere usufructuary mortgagee, that he was a mortgagee whose mortgagor had gone away finally and that therefore he was really there as though he were a vendee. In our opinion there is nothing whatever in that argument. Accordingly the appeal succeeds with costs and the suit is decreed with costs throughout.

S.G./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 166

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Jabbarshah Akbarsha and another — Plaintiffs — Appellants.

v.

Kanchhedi Lal Ganpat Kalar — Defendant — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 11 of 1936, Decided on 12th October 1938, from appellate decree of Pollock J., reported in A I R 1936 Nag 171.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 58 and 105—Document fulfilling definition of usufructuary mortgage is mortgage though described as lease.

A document, which purports to be a lease but fulfils the definition of a usufructuary mortgage, is a mortgage and the mere fact that it describes itself as a lease does not make it a lease.

[P 167 C 2]

(b) C. P. Tenancy Act (11 of 1898), Ss. 46, 47 and 48 — Transfer by occupancy tenant in contravention of S. 46 (3) is voidable by landlord who can do so only in Revenue Court and not by Civil suit.

A transfer by an occupancy tenant in contravention of the provisions of Sec. 46 (3) is not void but voidable by the landlord whose proper and only remedy is to proceed in the Revenue Court under Ss. 47 and 48. But, if such a voidable transfer is not avoided by persons who can avoid it under S. 47, it would be a perfectly good transfer, and any gratuitous surrender in favour of the landlord by the tenant with the sole object of defeating his mortgagee cannot affect the tenancy which must be deemed to continue to preserve the rights of the mortgagee : Case law discussed.

[P 169 C 2; P 170 C 1; P 171 C 1]

M. R. Bobde and G. V. Moharrir — for Appellants.

M. B. Kinkhede and A. R. Kulkarni — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a Letters Patent Appeal on the part of the plaintiffs against the judgment and decree of Pollock J. dismissing their suit for possession of two fields which have been recorded at the last settlement as occupancy fields and which were surrendered to the plaintiffs by the occupancy tenant Bhulansha on 11th December 1931. Bhulansha's father and cousin, whose interests admittedly devolved upon Bhulansha, before the execution of the said surrender on 11th December 1931, had mortgaged these fields to the defendant-respondent by two registered documents (Exs. D-1 and D-2) under which the defendant was in possession of the fields. Those documents were executed on 11th November 1915 and 11th February 1916 and are respectively Exs. D-2 and D-1. When the plaintiffs tried to take possession on the strength of the surrender deed, they were resisted by the defendant, who was in possession on the strength of his mortgages and hence the plaintiffs have brought this suit to recover possession of the fields through the Civil Court. The appellants contend that the mortgages which are the basis of the respondent's title are invalid for three reasons: (1) because they have not been legally attested, (2) because they are void under the C. P. Tenancy Act having been executed by an occupancy tenant in contravention of the provisions of S. 46, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898, and (3) because their registration is ineffective having been procured by fraud. The third reason is only part of the second reason and will be considered along with it. The defendant countered by denying that the fields were occupancy fields and therefore the C. P. Tenancy Act did not apply to them : he was therefore at liberty to take a mortgage of them if he pleased. Moreover, he contended that even if the fields were held in occupancy right by Bhulansha the plaintiffs' remedy lay in the Revenue Court under Sec. 47, Tenancy Act of 1898 and not in the Civil Court. He further contends that the attestation has been satisfactorily proved. He also raised another defence, which has not been considered by the learned Judge in second appeal, that whether or not the mortgages were valid at their inception the mortgagee obtained title by prescription over a period of 12 years. The lower Appellate Court rejected this plea, but it has been raised again by the respondent-defendant in the argument before us. The points therefore which arise for our consideration are: (i) What was the tenure of the fields? Were they held by Bhulansha in occupancy or proprietary right? (ii) Are the mortgages of the fields void or voidable, and, if the latter, can the plaintiffs avoid them by a suit for possession in the Civil Court or should they have proceeded under Sec. 47, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898? (iii) Are the mortgages validly attested? (iv) Has the defendant's title as mortgagee been perfected by prescription?

Before proceeding to consider the above points, we desire to dispose of a suggestion rather than a contention put forward by the appellants that one of the two so-called mortgage deeds, Ex. D-1, is not a mortgage at all but is a lease. It calls itself a lease and if it is a lease no question of attestation arises to be considered, nor any question as to jurisdiction under Sec. 47, Tenancy Act. We would point out that in all the three Courts which have already considered this it has been taken for granted that the document is a mortgage and not a lease and we are also of opinion that it is a mortgage. S. 58, T. P. Act, defines a mortgage in these terms :

> 58. (a) A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

Sub-section (d) of S. 58 is as follows :

> Where the mortgagor delivers possession or expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property, or any part of such rents and profits and to appropriate the same in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage money, or partly in lieu of interest or partly in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called a usufructuary mortgage, and the mortgagee a usufructuary mortgagee.

Exhibit D-1 fulfils the above definition of a usufructuary mortgage. The mere fact that the document describes itself as a lease does not make it a lease. We hold accordingly that it is a mortgage.

Whether it is a mortgage or a lease, there is no doubt that the other document Ex. D-2 is not a lease but a mortgage and all the questions which we have set out above for determination would have to be determined in respect of Ex. D-2 whether or not they arose in respect of Ex. D-1. Hence, it would in no way simplify the discussion to hold Ex. D-1 to be a lease.

Accordingly, we first take up the point of jurisdiction, because if that point is decided against the appellants, all the rest go out. The learned Judge of this Court has discussed the matter in paras. 5 and 6 of his judgment, where he states that, as the mortgages are not void but only voidable in the manner and to the extent provided by Sec. 47, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898, the landlord's remedy lies in the Revenue Court alone by an application under that Section. The question has to be considered in two aspects : firstly whether, if there had been no surrender, the plaintiff could have brought his action in the Civil Court, and secondly whether the surrender makes any difference. The appellants argue that Ss. 46 and 47 did not affect their right of suit in the Civil Court because the C. P. Tenancy Act does not purport to lay down the rights of landlords but only the rights of tenants. They argue that the relationship of landlord and tenant arises out of a contract and but for the Tenancy Act it would be lawful for the landlord to enhance the tenant's rent or evict him for which purpose he could go to the Civil Court. The Tenancy Act has placed a limitation on his powers of eviction only permitting him to evict if the tenant transfers his holding in a manner which is not allowed by the Act. S. 47 is only meant therefore to give the landlord a special remedy for evicting him other than his ordinary remedy which however still subsists. All that S. 47 means, according to the appellants, is to provide that if the landlord decides to take action under that Section he must do so within two years. They cite 18 N L R 82[1] at p. 83, which holds that it is open to a landlord where his title is in jeopardy from the aggressions of a trespasser or where his title may be injured by denial of his rights over his land to bring a suit for possession and for having his own rights declared against the trespasser and to claim khas possession. That was, however, a case in which the defendant was an out and out trespasser who did not claim any title under the tenant. It is not a case as here where the defendant is only regarded as a trespasser because his mortgage is held to be void, if the plaintiffs' argument is correct. Moreover, in that case the application of Ss. 46 and 47, Tenancy Act, was never considered. That case therefore is no authority for holding that in a case like this the landlord has a right of suit in a Civil Court. The mortgages which we are considering admittedly come under the purview of S. 46 and the important question is whether they are void or only voidable in the particular manner provided by Ss. 47 and 48. S. 46 (3) provides:

> No occupancy-tenant shall be entitled to sell, make a gift of, mortgage, sub-let (except for a period not exceeding one year) or otherwise transfer his right in his holding or in any portion thereof, and every such sale, gift, mortgage, sub-lease (other than for a period not exceeding one year) or transfer shall be voidable in the manner and to the extent provided by the two next following Sections.

The respondent argues that there is a distinction between saying that "no occupancy tenant shall be entitled to sell, etc.", which is the same as to say that "an occupancy tenant shall not be entitled to sell, etc.", and saying that "an occupancy tenant shall be incompetent to sell, etc.". He argues that in the latter case, sale, etc., by an occupancy tenant is void, whereas in the former case it is not void but can be done subject to certain penalties provided for the doing of it. That is to say, certain relations and the landlord can avoid it, and the only way in which they can avoid is by the procedure provided in Ss. 47 and 48. There is no doubt that under the previous Tenancy Act of 1883 such a transfer was voidable and not void and as no machinery was provided for avoiding it, the landlord could go to the Civil Court. The Act of 1898 made a change in the wording relating to the rights of an occupancy tenant to transfer his holding and also provided machinery for the relations and the landlord to avoid it. This question as to the right of the landlord to seek his remedy in a Civil Court under the Act of 1898 was considered by the Judicial Commissioner in 16 C P L R 135[2] where he held that a suit was barred and that the only remedy for the landlord was by proceeding in Revenue Courts. It is true that that was the case of an ordinary tenant whereas we are here dealing with an occupancy tenant, but as the Sections of the Act relating to the rights of transfer of ordinary and occupancy tenants are similar, the reasoning there applies with equal force to occupancy tenants. In that case also, a distinction was drawn between the words "shall not be entitled" and "shall be incompetent." The same view was held in 8 N L R 22.[3] There it was pointed out at p. 27 that in cases where the transfer would be a nullity under the ordinary civil law irrespective of the provisions of S. 46, Tenancy Act, the enactment is not called into operation ; there is nothing upon which it can fasten : there is no otherwise legal transaction for the consideration of the Revenue Officer. He cannot be required to make terms upon the basis of a nullity. In such cases the Civil Court has jurisdiction and one of such cases is where the transfer is made by an instrument compulsorily registrable but not registered.

1. Allibhai v. Shamrao, (1922) 9 A I R Nag 216 =84 I C 902=18 N L R 82.

2. Dayaram v. Shaligram, (1903) 16 CPLR 135.

3. Ganeshdas v. Shankar, (1912) 8 N L R 22=13 I C 909.

Here the documents have been registered although they ought not to have been registered according to S. 46 (5). But, apart from S. 46 (5), there is nothing to prevent the Sub-Registrar from registering them. He did not refuse to register them because on their face there was nothing to show that they came under the ban of sub-s. (5), since the lands were only described as muafi khairati or muafi khairati mokasa, and the Sub-Registrar did not know that such a description could only apply to occupancy land. (We are not to be taken as holding that under the 1898 Act, land which is described as muafi khairati is necessarily occupancy land, but we are only assuming for the sake of this argument that such may be the case.) The learned Judge, following 31 N L R 223,[4] has held that as the documents did not ex facie indicate to the Sub-Registrar that the mortgages were forbidden by the Tenancy Act, the registration was not invalid and cannot be ignored. This view has since received the approval of the Privy Council in I L R 1936 Nag 104.[5] If therefore 8 N L R 22[3] is correctly decided, as we think it is, it will follow that the proper and the only remedy for the plaintiffs, unless their position is affected by the surrender deed which position we shall examine next, was to proceed in the Revenue Court under Ss. 47 and 48. In 44 Cal 816[6] Mookerjee J. has quoted passages from two English cases. These passages can be used with equal effect in the present case. One is by Lopes L. J. in (1887) 18 Q B D 704[7] at p. 825 :

> In the case of an Act which creates a new jurisdiction, a new procedure, new forms or new remedies, the procedure, forms and remedies there prescribed and no others must be followed.

The other is by Lord Halsbury in (1898) A C 387[8] :

> The principle that where a specific remedy is given by a statute, it thereby deprives the person, who insists upon a remedy, of any other form of remedy than that given by the statute, is one which is very familiar and which runs through the law.

The view expressed in 8 N L R 22[3] was approved by Niyogi A. J. C. in 31 N L R Sup 96[9] at p. 98. The same view was also taken by the Calcutta High Court in 17 C W N 621,[10] a case from Sambalpur which was governed by the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898. 8 N L R 22[3] was approved again in A I R 1922 Nag 126.[11] It has therefore been generally accepted in the Judicial Commissioner's Court that a transfer by an occupancy tenant in contravention of S. 46 (3), Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1898 is not void but voidable by the landlord, and that too only in the manner provided by Ss. 47 and 48 and not by a suit in the Civil Court. We are also of the same opinion, although we would like to make it clear that except for the inclusion of the words from " and every such sale " to the end of Para. 1 in S. 46 (3), we would have been of the opinion that such transfers were not only voidable but absolutely void. It seems to us that this is the only way in which sub-sec. (5) can make sense alongside sub-s. (3). Sub-s. (5) provides :

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Registration Act, 1877, no officer empowered to register documents shall admit to registration any document which purports to transfer the right of an occupancy-tenant in his holding or in any portion thereof, unless the document recites that the transferee is a person who, if he survived the tenant, would inherit the right of occupancy, or is a person in favour of whom as a cosharer the right of occupancy originally arose or who became by succession a cosharer therein.

If then a transfer is only voidable and is not avoided by the persons who can avoid it under S. 47, it would, according to sub-sec. (3), be a perfectly good transfer. Yet, under sub-sec. (5), the Sub-Registrar is not allowed to register it. There is thus a conflict between the two sub-sections. If, on the other hand, such transfers are absolutely void, then it is perfectly intelligible that the Sub-Registrar should be precluded from registering such documents under any circumstances. Nevertheless the addition of the words "every such sale, gift, mortgage, sub-lease or transfer shall be voidable in the manner and to the extent provided by

4. Kisansao v. Nanaji, (1935) 22 A I R Nag 182 =157 I C 793=31 N L R 223.
5. Parashram v. Asaram, (1936) 23 A I R P C 301=164 I C 345=I L R (1936) Nag 104 (PC).
6. Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope, (1918) 5 A I R Cal 850=39 I C 465 = 44 Cal 816=25 C L J 193=18 Cr L J 497=21 C W N 269.
7. Reg. v. County Court Judge of Essex, (1887) 18 Q B D 704=56 L J Q B 315=57 L T 643 =35 W R 511=51 J P 549.
8. Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council, (1898) A C 387 = 67 L J Q B 635 = 78 L T 569=62 J P 628=14 T L R 368.
9. Kanhaiya v. Sitaram, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 18 =159 I C 862=31 N L R Sup 96.
10. Baikuntha Nath Misra v. Laboo Nag, (1913) 17 C W N 621=18 I C 273=17 C L J 646.
11. Chunga Prasad v. Phulwa, (1922) 9 A I R Nag 126=67 I C 121.

the two next following Sections" must mean, as has been so frequently held in the Judicial Commissioner's Court, that such transfers are only voidable and not void. No doubt this inconsistency in the Act of 1898 led to the clarification of the position in Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act of 1920.

The next point for consideration is whether by reason of the surrender deed the position is in any way altered. The learned Judge has dealt with this aspect of the case in para. 7 of his judgment where he comes to the conclusion that it makes no difference in the case of a gratuitous surrender like this, and that in such a case the tenancy must be deemed to continue for the purpose of preserving the rights of mortgagees. He relies on 27 N L R 186.[12] We think however that the learned Judge has expressed rather too broadly what that case decides. It does not decide, as the learned Judge says, that where a tenant having effected a valid sub-lease or mortgage subsequently surrenders the holding, he does not thereby affect the rights of the sub-lessee or mortgagee. It only refers to the special circumstances of a widow's limited estate. The learned Judge was however correct in pointing out that in 28 N L R 93[13] it was held :

> If a tenant after having made a transfer which is valid as against himself and as against the landlord, were to voluntarily surrender his tenancy the law will presume that the tenancy has a continuance in order to work out the rights created by such a valid transfer.

This was decided also in 2 N L R 170[14] where Ismay J. C. quoted Coke upon Littleton as follows.

> Having regard to the parties to the surrender, the estate is absolutely drowned. But having regard to strangers who are not parties or privies thereunto, lest by a voluntary surrender, they may receive prejudice touching any right or interest they had before the surrender, the estate surrendered hath in consideration of law a continuance.

Different considerations, which were examined by us in a recent case, may arise where the tenant dies without heirs or the tenancy determines by operation of law. Here, as the learned Judge observes, the tenancy had not come to an end by operation of law but by voluntary act of the tenant. The appellants argue that surrender is not a transfer and that therefore it does not give cause for any action under S. 47, Tenancy Act, and moreover that where the tenant right is surrendered it comes to an end by operation of law and therefore under 28 N L R 93[13] the rights created by the mortgages come to an end with them. Besides this, it is argued that 28 N L R 93[13] presupposes a valid sub-lease or mortgage and has no application to a case like this where the mortgages are invalid and that in the case of an invalid mortgage it does not become valid merely because the landlord has taken no steps within the period allowed by S. 47 to avoid it. Mr. Barway in his Law of Tenancy, Edn. 2 at page 371, observes :

> It has been pointed out in the aforesaid rulings that it is only a valid mortgage of the tenant right that will not be affected by a voluntary surrender. But if the mortgage is void or voidable at the instance of the landlord, it will certainly be extinguished by a voluntary surrender and the landlord will be entitled to sue for immediate possession. So, in one case, the sale (or rather surrender) of an absolute occupancy holding to the landlord, was held to have extinguished the mortgage which was voidable under S. 41 (7), Tenancy Act of 1898, so as to entitle the landlord to sue for immediate possession, and he has cited A I R 1930 Nag 119[15] in support of this proposition. We do not agree entirely with what Mr. Barway has there said. A mortgage which can be avoided is valid until it is avoided. Further, the words "and the landlord will be entitled to sue for immediate possession" require qualification. A I R 1930 Nag 119[15] was the case of an absolute occupancy holding, in respect of which there is no doubt that the landlord had a right of suit. It does not follow however that he could sue in the case of an occupancy holding where the Legislature has laid down a special procedure for the landlord to obtain redress. The argument that a surrender is not a transfer and does not therefore give rise to any action under S. 47, Tenancy Act, is beside the point because it is not the surrender but the mortgages which give the landlord the right to proceed under S. 47. And as to the argument that in the case of a surrender the tenancy comes to an end by the operation of law we cannot accept this either. The appellants have relied on 30 N L R 25[16] but that was a very different matter. There the tenant who had mortgaged his holding in favour of a third party was ejected by the Revenue Court and it was held that under those 12. Prem Narayan v. Jhado, (1931) 18 A I R Nag 129=133 I C 385=27 N L R 186 (F B).

13. Baldeoprasad v. Premnarain, (1932) 19 A I R Nag 107=139 I C 369=28 N L R 93.
14. Bhuray Brahmin v. Lala Vishwanath, (1906) 2 N L R 170.
15. Jairam v. Jankibai, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 119=122 I C 697.
16. Shivlal v. Abdul Hussein, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 255=148 I C 257=30 N L R 25.

circumstances the tenancy came to an end by operation of law and therefore the mortgage came to an end also. This is a very different position from the present where the tenant has voluntarily surrendered his holding to the landlord, and that too with the sole object of defeating the mortgagee. If then the Legislature has laid down a special procedure for avoiding such mortgages under the Tenancy Act and the landlord has failed to avail himself of that procedure and if we are right in holding that apart from the surrender he has no right to avoid the mortgages by a suit in the Civil Court, we cannot see why he should be able to recover the right to avoid the mortgages by means of a collusive arrangement with the tenant.

We agree with the learned Judge in holding that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs' suit. That being so, it is not necessary to consider the other points which have been argued before us. The Letters Patent Appeal must fail and it is consequently dismissed with costs.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 171

GRILLE J.

Amrutlal Chunnilal Mehta — Applicant.

v.

President, Town Municipal Committee, Amraoti — Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revision Nos. 292 and 293 of 1938, Decided on 19th December 1938, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 8th June 1938.

(a) C. P. Motor Vehicles Taxation Act (as amended in 1935), S. 3 (1), Proviso—License fee for motor lorries imposed by Amraoti Town Municipality under its bye-laws is not tax—Person residing within other Municipality would be liable for license fees in respect of lorries plying between those municipal towns.

By an amending Act in 1935 the words "rent or fees" were deleted from the Proviso to S. 3 (1), C. P. Motor Vehicles Taxation Act. This clearly raises the implication that a person residing within one Municipality would not be liable to pay any tax on his motor vehicles which any other Municipal Committee might impose under the provisions of Sec. 66, Municipalities Act, as applied to Berar, but would be liable for any other fee imposed by its bye-laws. The definition of 'tax' in the C. P. Municipalities Act, would not include any toll, rate, due or fee of any kind whatever in addition to whatever kind of impost is mentioned in Sec. 66. License fee for motor lorry imposed by Amraoti Town Municipality is not tax and hence a person residing within Chandur Bazar Notified Area Committee would be liable for license fees imposed by Amraoti Town Municipality in respect of motor lorries plying between Chandur Bazar and Amraoti. [P 172 C 1, 2]

(b) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 of 1922 as applied to Berar) S. 179 (g)—Rules under—R. 1 framed by Amraoti Town Municipal Committee—Words "plying for hire within limits of Amraoti Town Municipality"—Interpretation.

The words "plying for hire within the limits of Amraoti Town Municipality," occurring in R. 1, cannot be confined to the narrow interpretation that the whole of the service which is offered must take place within the limits of the Municipality and that otherwise the rules do not apply. Hence vehicles operating as a regular service between Amraoti Town and Chandur Bazar and picking up passengers within limits of the Amraoti Town Municipality ply for hire within the limits of the Amraoti Town Municipality. [P 172 C 2]

P. Y. Deshpande — for Applicant.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This order will also cover Criminal Revision No. 293 of 1938, the only difference in the two cases being in the number of the motor vehicles owned by the applicant, five in one case and three in the other. The applicant owns motor lorries which he plies for hire between Amraoti and Chandur Bazar. He resides at the latter place. He has been convicted under Rr. 1, 2 and 33 of the rules made by the Amraoti Town Municipal Committee under S. 116, Berar Municipal Law of 1886. That particular Section corresponds to S. 179 (g), C. P. Municipalities Act of 1922, as applied to Berar, and the rules are to be deemed to have been made under that Act. The validity of the rules has not been challenged and is not in question. These rules run as follows:

1. No vehicles of any kind shall be let to hire or shall ply or be offered for hire within the limits of the Amraoti Town Municipality except under a license granted in that behalf under these rules.

2. No person shall act as a driver of a licensed vehicle within the limits of the Amraoti Town Municipality except under a license granted in that behalf and no owner of a licensed vehicle shall allow it to be driven by an unlicensed driver.

33. Any person committing breach of any Rr. 1, 2, ... shall be liable to prosecution and on conviction before a magistrate shall be punished with fine which may extend to Rs. 20 and where the breach is a continuing breach, with further fine which may extend to Rs. 5 for every day after the first during which the breach is proved to have been persisted in. It may also involve forfeiture of license by the order of the committee.

The applicant has admittedly not obtained a license to ply these vehicles for hire from the Amraoti Town Municipal Committee, neither are his drivers licensed by the committee. It does not appear from the record whether he has previously paid these license fees, but it is probable that he has, and that he has refused to take out licenses this year as he claims that he is already paying license fees to the Chandur Bazar Notified Area Committee within whose limits he resides, and that by virtue of the Proviso to S. 3 (1) C. P. Motor Vehicles Taxation Act of 1932, he is not liable to pay any dues to a Municipal Committee other than that within whose local limits he resides. His appeals against his conviction failed and applications for revision have been made in this Court, and a rule was issued.

In the judgments of the Courts below I find it stated that the applicant claims to have paid license fees in Chandur Bazar. No bye-laws have been shown me whereby this Notified Area is empowered to recover license fees, and the learned counsel for the applicant has stated that in all probability what his client pays to the Chandur Bazar Notified Area Committee is a tax under S. 66 (1) (c), C. P. Municipalities Act, as applied to Berar. Such a tax was imposed in May 1937, vide C. P. Gazette Notification No. 3214-1247-M-XIII, dated 22nd May 1937 (the Gazette gives the date as 22nd May 1936; this is clearly a misprint, since the publication occurs in the Gazette of 28th May 1937 and the other notices in the Gazette bear the date 1937).

Now the Proviso to S. 3 (1), Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, originally laid down that no person residing within a municipality shall be required, in respect of a motor vehicle which is taxed under this Act (which the vehicles in this case undoubtedly are), to pay any dues by way of tax, rent or fees to a municipality other than the one within whose local limits he ordinarily resides. By an amending Act in 1935 the words "rent or fees" were deleted. This clearly raises the implication that the applicant would not be liable to pay any tax on his motor vehicles which the Amraoti Town Municipal Committee might impose under the provisions of S. 66, C. P. Municipalities Act, as applied to Berar, but would be liable for any other fee imposed by its bye-laws. I am asked however to accede to the proposition that the license fee which is imposed is in effect a tax. But the only argument which has been advanced to support this contention is quite unsupportable. It is this: that "tax" as defined in the Motor Vehicles Taxation Act merely means a tax leviable under that Act and that we must look to the definition of "tax" in the Municipalities Act. It is there defined in S. 3 (n): "tax" includes any toll, rate, due, fee or other impost specified in S. 66.; and it is argued that this definition of "tax" includes a fee and that therefore the applicant is exempted from paying any fee to the Amraoti Town Municipal Committee. This argument depends for its validity on the proposition that "specified in Sec. 66" refers solely to the words "other impost." The definition cannot be read in this way, and to my mind the only possible reading of the definition is that "tax" includes any of the imposts, by whatever name they may be called, specified in S. 66. It would be quite impossible to conclude that the definition of "tax" in the Municipalities Act would include any toll, rate, due or fee of any kind whatever in addition to whatever kind of impost is mentioned in S. 66.

Then it is contended that the vehicles, operating as a regular service between Amraoti town and Chandur Bazar, are not plying for hire within the limits of the Amraoti Town Municipality. It is not denied however that they pick up passengers within that area, and the words "plying for hire within the limits of Amraoti Town Municipality" occurring in Rule 1, cannot be confined to the narrow interpretation that the whole of the service which is offered must take place within the limits of the Municipality and that otherwise the rules do not apply.

An argument has also been addressed on the question of the expediency and the results of the judgments of the Courts below. It is pointed out that if the lower Courts are correct, any motor vehicles plying for hire passing through any municipalities between two termini would be liable to pay license fees in respect of vehicles and drivers in those municipalities, provided that they picked up passengers in their areas, if they had bye-laws corresponding to those obtaining in Amraoti, and that this would be a great hardship. This is true; but the argument cannot be allowed to prevail against the power which the Municipalities Act gives. On behalf of the Crown it is pointed out that the license fees are exacted in return for services rendered such as the provision of a motor stand, and the learned counsel for the applicant agrees that owners of motor vehicles plying for hire but not residing in the municipalities concerned should pay something for the amenities provided, but considers that the municipalities should charge license fees for parking grounds under Sec. 70. This may be possible, but it is a matter for the municipalities themselves to decide whether they should do this or impose a license fee on vehicles plying for hire as they are entitled to do.

The Amraoti Town Municipality imposes a tax under S. 66, C. P. Municipalities Act as applied to Berar on private cars only, and charges a license fee in respect of motor vehicles which are used for hire both in respect of those vehicles whose owners live outside the municipality and within the municipality. By this method it does not impose any additional disability on the owners of motor omnibuses who reside at Amraoti and at the same time spreads its net widely but legitimately to recover fees from owners of such vehicles who reside at the other end of the line on which their vehicles operate. By this means they need not have any concern with what the owners pay elsewhere, a question which would arise if tax under S. 66 were levied in respect of vehicles used for profit. This may in certain instances cause hardship to such owners who may be taxed in their own municipality in addition to the tax paid under the Motor Vehicles Taxation Act and who may be required to pay license fees to any municipality through which they pass and where they pick up passengers. In addition to this they may legitimately be charged a license fee even in the municipality in which they reside in addition to a tax. The Amraoti Municipality does not enforce this double levy, and I am unaware if any municipality does so ; but there can be no doubt that any municipality is entitled to make bye-laws levying a license fee on vehicles plying for hire which operate in the municipality, whether the owners reside there or no.

The result is that the convictions are correct and must be maintained. The applications are dismissed and the rule is discharged.

D.S./R.K. Applications dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 173

GRUER AND POLLOCK JJ.

Brijmohan Mathulal Marwadi — Appellant.

v.

Chandrabhagabai w/o Girdharilal — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 237 of 1935, Decided on 4th January 1939.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 103 and O. 41, R. 25—Scope of O. 41, R. 25—Issue not determined by first Appellate Court — In second appeal issue remitted to trial Court for recording further evidence—Trial Court after taking evidence returning case to High Court—Issue can be determined by High Court under S. 103.

Order 41, R. 25 refers primarily to first appeals though the Rule so far as possible can be applied to second appeals. The Rule as it stands allows reference only to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, which in the case of second appeals would be the lower Appellate Court. Therefore, it does not follow in the case of second appeals that a finding from a first Court is to be treated on the same footing as a finding from an Appellate Court : A I R 1936 Nag 140 ; A I R 1924 Lah 455 ; 7 All 765 (F B); 24 Cal 98 and 7 Mad 52, Ref. [P 174 C 2]

Where an issue has not been determined by the first Appellate Court and in second appeal that issue is remitted on remand to the trial Court the evidence having been found to be insufficient and the trial Court after recording such evidence and giving its finding on that issue returns the case to the High Court, the issue cannot be said to have been determined by the lower Appellate Court. Therefore High Court has jurisdiction to determine such issue of fact under S. 103. [P 174 C 2]

(b) Vendor and Purchaser—Vendor repudiating bargain—Purchaser claiming specific performance how can discharge onus about readiness and willingness stated.

After a bargain of sale has been repudiated by the vendor, the purchaser claiming specific performance can, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, easily discharge the onus about readiness and willingness by simply showing that he is still ready and willing to carry out the bargain : A I R 1934 P C 91 and 30 Cal 865 (P C), Referred. [P 175 C 2]

M. B. Kinkhede and G. S. Brahmarakshas and M. R. Indurkar — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and B. T. Amlekar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is by the defendant Brij Mohan against whom the claim of the plaintiff Chandrabhagabai for specific performance of a contract for sale of a house was upheld in both the lower Courts. The agreement for sale is Ex. P-1 dated 14th March 1933. The sale price was fixed at Rs. 3000 out of which Rs. 201 was paid on account of earnest money. This agreement or receipt further states that the house is in the name of the vendor's mother and is now in his ownership, and that the costs of registration shall be borne by the purchaser. In the plaint, it was stated that the defendant had agreed to execute the sale deed immediately and that the defendant committed a breach of the contract on or about 15th March 1933, i. e. the next day. Later on, it was explained by plaintiff's pleader that by this word 'immediately' it was meant that the sale deed was agreed to be executed within a reasonable time and that time was never the essence of the contract. On 21st September 1937 a remand order was passed by this Court. At that time it had been established and accepted that it was obviously Girdharilal, whose mistress the plaintiff was, who had been carrying out all the negotiations for the sale, and in the absence of any evidence by Girdharilal it appeared that the plaintiff Chandrabhaga was merely benamidar for him. The finding was also accepted that time was not of the essence of the contract. The first Court however had thrown the burden of proof on the defendant throughout and in particular had in issue 6 asked him to prove his assertion that the plaintiff was unwilling to perform her part of the contract. The lower Appellate Court, too, thought it was unnecessary to consider whether plaintiff was trying to back out of the contract between 13th March 1933 and 22nd March 1933 on which last date a telegram was sent to her by the defendant stating that the contract had been cancelled. The remand order of this Court points out that a plaintiff claiming specific performance must show that he was at all material times ready and willing to carry out the contract. The following issue was therefore remitted to the trial Court:

> Was the plaintiff at all material time ready, desirous, prompt and eager to complete the contract ?

After remand only two witnesses were examined for the plaintiff, one being Girdharilal and the other Baldeoprasad. The lower Court taking this evidence into consideration with the circumstances of the case finds the issue in the affirmative in favour of the plaintiff. Objections to this finding have been put in for the appellant-defendant. But the other side contends that this is a finding of fact which cannot be questioned in second appeal. The appellant on the other hand maintains that such a finding after remand is open to scrutiny by the Appellate Court on merits. The respondent relies on I L R (1936) Nag 188[1] and 5 Lah 268.[2] In I L R (1936) Nag 188[1] the evidence was taken by the Appellate Court. Bose J. does say at page 193 of the report that after remand under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., it is not open to a Court of Second Appeal to examine the facts except in so far as it is empowered to do so under S. 103, and it is immaterial whether the first Court takes the evidence or the lower Appellate Court. The remark about the first Court is an obiter dictum, and the possible difference between the two cases has not been examined. O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., refers primarily to first appeals though the Rule so far as possible can be applied to second appeals. The Rule as it stands allows reference only to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, which in the case of second appeals would be the lower Appellate Court. Therefore, it does not follow in the case of second appeals that a finding from a first Court is to be treated on the same footing as a finding from an Appellate Court. Cases, which say that such a finding cannot be questioned, all refer, so far as we have been able to see, to findings coming back on reference from the lower Appellate Court. Amongst these are 7 All 765,[3] 24 Cal 98,[4] 7 Mad 52[5] and 5 Lah 268.[2] If the lower Court had proceeded under O. 41, R. 28, Civil P. C., it would undoubtedly have had to assess the evidence on its merits, and we think that the same thing must be done when there is merely a finding of the first Court. If it were otherwise, the result might well be that the case would be virtually decided on this finding of the first Court untouched by the scrutiny of the lower Appellate Court. The matter is different when the lower Appellate Court comes to the finding because owing to its higher status the finding of such a Court has more weight. The same result is arrived at on a broad application of S. 103, Civil P. C. This issue had not been determined by the lower Appellate Court, and when the case came before this Court the evidence on record was found to be insufficient. That evidence is now sufficient. There is now a finding on it, it is true, but the point still "has not been determined by the lower Appellate Court." This Section therefore allows the High Court to determine the issue of fact itself. We proceed then to scrutinize the finding on its merits.

The defendant's objection that the plaintiff had no funds to complete the sale need not detain us long. In spite of Girdharilal's denials there is ample evidence in the

1. Balaji v. Vishnu, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 140= 170 I C 527=I L R (1936) Nag 188.
2. Ram Mehr v. Pali Ram, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 455=78 I C 404=5 Lah 268.
3. Bal Kishen v. Jasoda Kuer, (1885) 7 All 765= 1885 A W N 225 (F B).
4. Beni Pershad Kuari v. Nand Lal Sahu, (1897) 24 Cal 98.
5. Hinde v. Brayan, (1884) 7 Mad 52.

cross-examination, etc. to show that he was backing up his mistress in this transaction throughout. He is a man of substance and able to supply Chandrabhagabai with all the money she required. We also think that her own savings were sufficient to meet this expenditure. There is also the fact that after getting a decree in her favour the plaintiff deposited the sale price in Court on 21st July 1934. It is true that in the notice dated 23rd March 1933 Chandrabhaga's demand for delivery of possession of the house before payment of the balance of the price is not justified in law. This notice was filed late and hence not admitted; but it has been referred to by both sides and we admit it now as we think that it is relevant for the disposal of this appeal. Reading it as a whole, it certainly does repudiate the cancellation of the agreement by Brij Mohan and expresses a wish to have the sale carried through. On that being done of course, the vendee was entitled either to possession of the house or to have the tenants attorn to her. Then it is said that it was plaintiff's duty to have a draft sale deed prepared and submitted to the seller and to tender the sale price to him. A number of cases including 31 C L J 87,[6] 9 All 705[7] and 52 Bom 597[8] are quoted in this connexion. The principle no doubt is correct, but as it has been held that time was not of the essence of the contract, it was not essential that the preparation of the draft sale deed should be done before 22nd March 1933. After Brij Mohan had sent the telegram on that day it was obviously useless to proffer the draft deed or tender the money until he changed his mind about cancellation. This telegram is the only documentary evidence about cancellation, and it raises the question why if defendant himself wished the sale to take place he should have acted so precipitately without giving Chandrabhaga further time and without threatening to bring a suit for specific performance. The evidence after remand about Chandrabhaga's willingness is certainly not very weighty, but read along with what is to be found already on record, we think that it proves the issue in plaintiff's favour.

An attempt has been made to show that the witness Baldeoprasad who says that "last Holi was the fourth", is referring to 1934 instead of 1933 when these transactions actually took place. From the point of view of the witness, Holi of 1934 was the first Holi after the incident to which he speaks, as Holi of 1933 had just taken place. This witness had merely to give an oral message to Brij Mohan in his shop and might have been employed for that purpose even though he did not know him personally. General considerations are in favour of the plaintiff's willingness and readiness. As pointed out in A I R 1934 P C 91[9] at p. 92, the onus about readiness and willingness in the absence of evidence to the contrary may be easily discharged. After the other side had repudiated the bargain, all that was necessary was that the plaintiff should be still ready and willing to carry it out: 30 Cal 865[10] at p. 871. No reason is apparent why the plaintiff should change her mind so quickly or should act so as to lose her earnest money. If she really wanted the matter to drop, why did she as soon as the defendant's telegram was received assert that she did want the sale carried through and assert this to the extent of publishing a notice in the newspaper and then subsequently bringing this suit? We find then that the plaintiff has made out her case and that the decree passed in her favour was correct. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs on the appellant.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

6. Ma Hnit v. Maung Po Pu, (1919) 6 A I R P C 124=55 I C 791=31 C L J 87 (P C).
7. Bindeshri Prasad v. Jairam Gir, (1887) 9 All 705=14 I A 173=5 Sar 61 (P C).
8. Ardeshir H. Mama v. Flora Sassoon, (1928) 15 A I R P C 208=111 I C 413=52 Bom 597=55 I A 360 (P C).
9. Abdullah Bey v. Tenenbaum, (1934) 21 A I R P C 91=149 I C 816 (P C).
10. Shriram Rupram v. Madangopal Gowardhan, (1903) 30 Cal 865=8 C W N 25 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 175

POLLOCK J.

Shree Vithal Bhagwan Mandir of Pushkarraj through Sarbarakar Kesuraj — Appellant.

v.

Narayanrao Raghunath Rao Kekre — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 49 of 1937, Decided on 16th December 1938, from appellate decree of Second Addl. District Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 1st September 1936.

C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920), S. 6—Transfer by absolute occupancy tenant — He ceases to be tenant from date of transfer—Transferee is liable either for rent or for damages for occupation between date of transfer and date on which it is avoided.

In case of transfer of absolute occupancy holding, the original tenant ceases to be a tenant from the date of transfer. He is not therefore liable for the rent after that date. Whether the transferee is a tenant or not between the date of the transfer and the date on which it is avoided, he is liable either for rent or for damages for use and occupation : A I R 1938 Nag 292 and 14 C P L R 129, Rel. on; A I R 1933 Nag 205, Ref. [P 176 C 1, 2]

B. L. Gupta and J. Sen—for Appellant.

K. B. Tare—for Respondent.

Judgment. — One Kana was the tenant of an absolute occupancy holding which passed into the possession of the defendant in April 1931 by a compromise decree. The plaintiff, who is the landlord of the village, applied under S. 6, C. P. Tenancy Act, to a Revenue Officer to fix the value of the holding and to put him in possession. The price fixed by the Revenue Officer was deposited by the plaintiff and he was placed in possession in April 1935. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 134, which is the rent assessed on the holding, either as rent or as damages for use and occupation for the year 1934-35. The lower Appellate Court, differing from the first Court, held that the plaintiff is entitled to Rupees 134 as rent and has passed a decree for that amount, making it a charge on the purchase money which is said to be still in deposit.

The appellant relies on the decision in A I R 1933 Nag 205[1] in which it was held that in such circumstances the original tenancy continues until the transfer is either confirmed in favour of the transferee or acquired by the landlord, that the transferee's position is neither that of a tenant nor of a transferee, that the landlord has no remedy against the transferee, and that his proper course is to sue the original tenant for rent. That view was not altogether accepted in A I R 1938 Nag 292,[2] where it was held that "the transfer is valid unless and until it is avoided by the landlord in the manner and to the extent provided by S. 6," and that the tenant loses his rights from the moment of transfer. In that case, where the transfer was not avoided by the landlord, it was held that the transferee obtained a good title and became a tenant from the date of transfer. I respectfully agree with the view that the original tenant ceases to be a tenant from the date of transfer. He is not therefore liable for the rent after that date. Whether the transferee is a tenant or not between the date of the transfer and the date on which it is avoided, it seems to me clear that he is liable either for rent or for damages for use and occupation. In 14 C P L R 129[3] it was held that in such circumstances there would be an implied agreement on the part of the transferee to pay for the use of the land and that his position was not unlike that of a tenant holding over after the expiry of his lease. I therefore hold that, whether the defendant was a tenant or not during this period, he is liable for Rs. 134 either as rent or as damages for the use and occupation. The amount was claimed in the alternative and an admission by counsel during the argument in the trial Court that the plaintiff was not entitled to ask for compensation for use and occupation, apparently based on the decision in A I R 1933 Nag 205,[1] would not be conclusive. The objection that no claim for rent would lie in the trial Court has been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court which pointed out that as the tenancy came to an end when the transfer was avoided, the parties do not now occupy the position of landlord and tenant.

Under S. 6 (5), C. P. Tenancy Act, where the holding is already mortgaged or charged the Revenue Officer has to fix the value of any right in it as if it were not mortgaged or charged, and the mortgage debt or charge becomes a charge on the purchase money in exoneration of the land. Under S. 9, the rent of an absolute occupancy holding is a first charge on the holding but apparently the rent for 1934-35, which is now claimed, was not a charge on the holding when the application was made to the Revenue Officer, and I doubt if it would be a charge on the purchase money. The plaintiff however is quite willing to accept a simple money decree. The decree of the lower Court will therefore be modified so as to make it a simple money decree. Apart from this, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee in this Court Rs. 15.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Sujansingh v. Sadasheorao, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 205=142 I C 358.
2. Madhorao Govindrao v. Pannalal Mohanlal, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 292=177 I C 173.
3. Raghoba v. Ragho, (1901) 14 C P L R 129.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 177

NIYOGI J.

Bulakhidas Narsingdas Marwadi — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Radhakisan Gopikisan Shop — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 31 of 1937, Decided on 12th December 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 4th November 1936.

Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 49 and 115—Applicability—Cause of action arising ex delicto —Suit is governed by Art. 49 and not by Article 115.

Article 49 contemplates a case of a cause of action arising ex delicto whether or not wrongful taking or wrongful detention is preceded by a contract, and the material date is the date on which the detention becomes wrongful. Even if possession is at its inception under a contract that would not preclude the application of Art. 49 which comes into play only at the moment when the possession becomes unlawful or wrongful: A I R 1929 Cal 42, Foll.; A I R 1919 All 102; A I R 1916 Mad 314 (F B) and 54 I C 159, Ref. [P 177 C 2; P 178 C 1]

In pursuance of a contract of marriage between the plaintiff's daughter and the defendant's son, the plaintiff sent ornaments for the bride which according to the caste custom were to be presented to her after marriage. The defendant broke the contract. The plaintiff demanded back the value of the ornaments:

Held that from the time the defendant came in possession of the ornaments to the time they were to be presented to the bride by him, his possession would be that of a bailee in trust for the plaintiff and hence lawful but the same would be wrongful subsequent to the demand by the plaintiff and the case was governed by Art. 49 and not by Article 115. [P 178 C 1, 2]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.

T. J. Kedar and R. G. Rau — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal from a reversing judgment of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, delivered on 4th November 1936 in Civil Appeal No. 13-B of 1936. The case is simple. The plaintiff claims back the value of certain ornaments, which are specifically described in the plaint, on the ground that the defendant had agreed to perform the marriage of the plaintiff's daughter with his son and that the plaintiff, according to the custom of the caste, sent the ornaments for the bride but that subsequently on 10th February 1931 the contract of marriage was broken and that the plaintiff's demand for the return of the ornaments was refused by the defendant. The defendant contested the suit on various grounds and the trial Court without deciding the several issues dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit was within time, but it also did not go into the other issues in the case except the one as to the weight and value of the ornaments. It accepted the plaintiff's statement of the weight and the value as given in the plaint and decreed the suit in toto.

The main question of law which arises upon this appeal is the Article that would be applicable to the present case. The lower Appellate Court has applied Art. 49. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that that Article would not apply to a case of contract but that the appropriate Article to be applied is Art. 115. There is, no doubt, some divergence of judicial opinion as to whether Art. 49 applies to a case of breach of contract or tort. In 41 All 643,[1] it was held to apply to a case of tort only, but in 39 Mad 1[2] the learned Judges were inclined to apply it to the case of a breach of contract. In 54 I C 159[3] Ismay Offg. J.C., applied it to a case of breach of contract. In my view the Courts must be guided by the words used in that Article. The Article says that the period of limitation will begin to run when the property is wrongfully taken or when the detainer's possession becomes wrongful. It therefore contemplates a case of a cause of action arising ex delicto whether or not the wrongful taking or wrongful detention was preceded by a contract; the material date is the date when detention becomes wrongful. The Article appears to contemplate two kinds of cases, (1) when the property is initially taken wrongfully. In such a case there can be no suggestion of a contract. (2) But the element of contract may enter into a case of subsequent wrongful detention. A person may come into possession of property quite lawfully, that is either with the permission of the owner or under a contract, but later on, his possession, whether due to the withdrawal of permission by the owner or breach of the conditions of the contract would become wrongful. So even if the possession was at its inception under a contract that would not preclude the application of Art. 49 because that Article comes into play only at the moment when the possession becomes unlawful or wrongful. In 32 C W N 133[4] it was observed that Art. 49 is the ordinary Article to apply in a case where the original possession of the defendant is lawful but it becomes unlawful by reason of certain facts. That seems to lay down the law, if I may say so with respect, correctly and I am in full agreement with that view. Therefore the question is at what point of time did defendant's possession become unlawful.

1. Kalyan Mal v. Kishan Chand, (1919) 6 A I R All 102 = 55 I C 45 = 41 All 643=17 A L J 888.
2. Venkatasubba Rao v. Asiatic Steam Navigation Co. of Calcutta, (1916) 3 A I R Mad 314 =30 I C 840=39 Mad 1=29 M L J 342 (FB).
3. Bhaosingh v. Biharilall, (1920) 54 I C 159.

It is contended that the facts cannot make out any case of wrongful detention because it was in pursuance of a contract of marriage that the defendant came into possession of the ornaments and since the contract was broken he was bound to restore the parties to status quo ante. This argument postulates that the ornaments were given in terms of the contract of marriage. If that was so, it would be something like a bride price and it would make the contract void and unenforceable; the plaintiff has been shrewd enough to avoid committing himself to any such position as is evident from the stand taken by him in the plaint. He says that there was an agreement to perform the marriage but he delivered the ornaments in accordance with the caste custom. That means that the ornaments were to have been in the custody of the defendant for the purpose of being presented to the bride after marriage. From the time that he came into possession of these ornaments to the time that the ornaments would be gifted to the daughter-in-law his possession would be that of a bailee in trust for the plaintiff. His possession would therefore be lawful, but he would not be entitled to retain possession thereof after a clear demand was made for the return of them by the plaintiff. His detention of the ornaments subsequent to the demand without the consent of the plaintiff would make his possession of them wrongful and this demand was made on 10th February 1931 and was also refused on that date. It is remarkable that although the defendant's written statement covered a very wide ground it did not contain a specific denial of the allegation that a demand was made on 10th February 1931 and was refused. The lower Appellate Court has taken the cause of action to have arisen on 18th March 1933 when a formal demand was made through a notice addressed to the defendant, but it is not necessary to go so far as that date. It is enough for the plaintiff, to save his suit from the bar of limitation even if the cause of action is taken to arise on 10th February 1931. The suit was filed on 10th February 1934 and would, though late, answer the requirements of law of limitation.

For the foregoing reasons, I agree with the lower Appellate Court that the case falls to be governed by Art. 49 and that the suit is within time. The next contention is that the lower Appellate Court ought to have gone into the question whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of the breach of contract in marriage. As I already indicated above the defendant's custody of these ornaments was quite independent of the contract of marriage. Whoever committed the default in implementing the marriage the defendant would not be entitled to retain the ornaments against the plaintiff's will. That question therefore appears to be irrelevant and need not be enquired into.

But the appellant ought to succeed on his last contention, viz. that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in adopting without criticizm the statement of weight and price contained in the plaint. The lower Appellate Court's attention was presumably not directed to the plaintiff's deposition wherein he said that he did not weigh the ornaments and that their weight was not entered in his account books. He states that he had given the weight as a rough estimate. The defendant had produced the ornaments in Court while the plaintiff was being cross-examined. The plaintiff was not really entitled to the value of the ornaments so long as the ornaments were returnable in specie. Here there is clear evidence on record that the ornaments are still intact and that the defendant is willing to return them in case it is found that he is liable to do so. Although the plaintiff has chosen to claim compensation for these ornaments he should not be given a decree in that form if it is found that the ornaments can be returned to him in specie. It appears to me reasonable at this stage that this case should go back to the trial Court for the purpose of getting the defendant to produce the ornaments in Court. If the plaintiff admits the identity of the ornaments he should be asked to take possession of them. If however the ornaments produced by the defendant are not admitted by the plaintiff to be those which he had handed over to him, 4. Bhupendra Nath v. Goonendra Nath, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 42 = 106 I C 885 = 32 C W N 133.

then there will be an enquiry as to the identity of those ornaments. If the issue is found in favour of the defendant the plaintiff would have a decree for the recovery of those ornaments but if the issue is determined in favour of the plaintiff then he would be entitled to get the compensation estimated on the value of the ornaments which the Court will determine afresh. The costs of this appeal will abide the event. Counsel's fees Rs. 40.

S.G./R.K. Case remanded.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 179

STONE C. J. AND NIYOGI J.

All India Railwaymen's Benefit Fund Ltd., Nagpur, and another—Auction-purchaser — Appellants.

v.

Ramchand Hemraj Maheshri, Decree-holder and another, Judgment-debtor — Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 338 of 1937, Decided on 13th January 1939, from order of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 24th February 1937.

 (a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rule 90—Auction-purchaser is entitled to set aside sale : 68 I C 429=A I R 1923 Nag 161, Overruled.

Rule 90 of O. 21 entitles an auction-purchaser to seek to set aside a sale just as it does in case of decree-holder or judgment-debtor : 68 I C 429 = A I R 1923 Nag 161, Overruled: A I R 1922 Nag 113 and A I R 1937 Nag 140, Approved : Case law discussed. [P 180 C 2; P 182 C 2]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Duty of Court.

It is not the function of the Court to make alterations in the terminology of the plain provisions of law, as in that case they would not be interpreting but making the law. [P 181 C 1]

 (c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rule 90—Interests—Word being plural implies more than one interest and includes that of auction-purchaser.

When the Legislature used the word 'interests' in plural it must be presumed that it intended to attach some special significance to it. That plural word obviously means more than one interest which may be of the same kind or different kinds, which may be held by one or more persons. It may be proprietary or pecuniary as in the case of a decree-holder who is expressly mentioned in the Rule. Both the judgment-debtor and auction-purchaser are equally interested in the sale of the property and their interests are equally affected and must stand on the same level. To deny a right to the auction-purchaser while conceding it to the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder would be manifestly unjust and unreasonable. It would be wrong to impute to the Legislature an intention to create such an anomaly : A I R 1924 Cal 786, Ref. [P 181 C 1, 2; P 182 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 90 and 91—Difference between.

The express mention of the auction-purchaser in R. 91 cannot of itself exclude him from the purview of R. 90. The object of the two enactments is different. R. 91 postulates that the sale is free from any fraud, irregularity or illegality, whereas Rule 90 leaves the door open for questioning the validity of the sale on the above three specific grounds. The fact that the auction-purchaser is specifically mentioned in R. 91 itself evidences the intention of the Legislature to afford him a summary remedy. [P 182 C 1]

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115—Estoppel—Statement of puisne mortgagee in witness-box that he would not enforce his mortgage does not estop him from enforcing his legal rights.

Mere statement by a subsequent mortgagee in the witness-box that he would not enforce his mortgage cannot estop him from enforcing his legal rights. A mortgagee's right is created by a registered deed and can only be extinguished by a registered deed. The assurance would have some value if the auction-purchaser offers his bid relying on that assurance. But an assurance given before confirmation of sale, which is an act of Court and not of a party, can have no legal significance. [P 182 C 2]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 66—Irregularity on account of omission to mention mortgage in sale proclamation cannot be cured by mortgagee's statement in witness-box that he would not enforce it.

Where a mortgagee states in the witness-box that he would not enforce his mortgage his statement cannot cure the irregularity of the non-disclosure of his mortgage in the proclamation of sale : 40 Cal 635 (P C), Ref. [P 182 C 2; P 183 C 1]

A. L. Halwe — for Applicants.

A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar — for Non-applicant 1.

Order.—This case has been referred to this Bench for decision of the following questions of law :

(1) Whether the auction-purchaser is competent to apply under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to have the sale in his favour set aside; and

(2) Whether the statement made in Court by the puisne mortgagee operates as an estoppel against him and cures the irregularity of non-disclosure of his mortgage in the proclamation of sale.

In execution of a mortgage decree for sale a house was sold and applicant 2 became the purchaser. In the suit in which that decree was passed one Sheikh Kasam, who was supposed to be a puisne mortgagee, was not impleaded and in the proclamation of sale the subsequent incumbrance was not disclosed. The auction-purchaser offered Rs. 2200 in ignorance of the subsequent incumbrance and purchased as if the property had been sold free of any incumbrance. He however learnt later on that the property was subject to a second mortgage and applied to the executing Court under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., for the sale being set aside on the ground of fraud and irregularity. In the course of the proceedings Sheikh Kasam was examined as a witness and he stated that although he had no intention to enforce his mortgage he would be willing to accept payment of his debt if made.

The first question is not free from difficulty in view of the acute conflict of opinion among the several High Courts of India. In 38 M L J 228,[1] 47 All 479,[2] 5 Rang 516,[3] A I R 1931 Lah 630,[4] 18 N L R 98[5] and A I R 1937 Nag 140[6] it was held that an auction-purchaser is a person whose interests are affected by the sale and that he is entitled to apply under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to have the sale set aside on grounds mentioned in that Rule. The contrary view was taken in A I R 1928 Cal 828,[7] 14 Lah 1,[8] A I R 1931 Sind 107,[9] 60 Bom 750,[10] A I R 1923 Nag 161[11] and 6 Rang 621.[12] There has been in some High Courts remarkable fluctuation of opinion. The latter view which the Patna High Court had taken in 3 Pat L J 516[13] and A I R 1924 Pat 319[14] was overruled by the majority of the Judges constituting a Full Bench of the Court in 12 Pat 665.[15] On the other hand the view taken in A I R 1931 Lah 630[4] was overruled on a Letters Patent Appeal in 14 Lah 1.[8]

The difference of opinion turns on the meaning to be attached to the expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" contained in R. 90 of O. 21, Civil P. C. The learned Judges who exclude an auction-purchaser from the ambit of that expression do so on the undermentioned grounds: (i) that the word "interests" occurring in that expression properly signifies interests subsisting in the property at the time of sale and not those which come into existence as the result of it; (ii) that an auction-purchaser's sole remedy in execution proceedings is one provided in R. 91, O. 21, Civil P. C., and (iii) that there is no guarantee of title held out in execution sales.

After carefully examining the various conflicting decisions and the points set forth above we are of opinion that R. 90, O. 21, Civil P. C., entitles an auction-purchaser to seek to set aside the sale just as it does in case of decree-holder or judgment-debtor. It may be useful to recall that the expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" has been substituted for the expression "any person whose immovable property has been sold" which occurred in S. 311 of the repealed Code of 1882. In a case which arose under the Code of 1882 their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an auction-purchaser was not entitled to apply under that Section as he was not a person whose immovable property has been sold within the meaning of that Section: see 20 Cal 8.[16] It is however pertinent to notice that the expression had been construed as meaning any person "whose interest had been legally affected by the sale" in the Full Bench case in 15 Cal 488.[17] Consequently, persons claiming title paramount to the judgment-debtor or of person claiming to be a purchaser of immovable property from the judgment-debtor prior to the attachment were not held entitled to apply for setting aside sale notwithstanding that they had interests in the property. Similarly a person was held not entitled to apply when the share of his co-sharer was sold in execution: see 5 All 42.[18] On the

1. Gopalkrishnayya v. Sanjeeva Reddi, (1920) 7 A I R Mad 145=55 I C 333=38 M L J 228.
2. Ravinandan Prasad v. Jagarnath Sahu, (1925) 12 A I R All 459=87 I C 273=47 All 479=23 A L J 233.
3. Subramanian Chettyar v. N. L. M. Chettyar Firm, (1927) 14 A I R Rang 301=105 I C 465=5 Rang 516.
4. Pritam Singh v. Nihal Chand Gopal Das, (1931) 18 A I R Lah 630=132 I C 525=32 P L R 933.
5. Sheoprasad v. Santooji, (1922) 9 A I R Nag 113=65 I C 875=18 N L R 98.
6. Sangidas v. Chahadu, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 140=168 I C 970.
7. Surendra Nath Das v. Alauddin Mistry, (1928) 15 A I R Cal 828 = 116 I C 156 = 49 C L J 207.
8. Nihal Chand-Gopal Das v. Pritam Singh, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 468=138 I C 817 = 14 Lah 1=33 P L R 788.
9. Kalumal v. Ahmed Nur, (1931) 18 A I R Sind 107=134 I C 373=25 S L R 405.
10. Balkrishna Waman v. Sakharam Babaji, (1936) 23 A I R Bom 311=164 I C 644 = 60 Bom 750=38 Bom L R 589.
11. Balwant v. Ratanlal, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 161=68 I C 429.
12. K. V. A. L. Chettyar Firm v. M. P. Maricar, (1929) 16 A I R Rang 33=114 I C 538 =6 Rang 621.
13. Khetro Mohan Datta v. Shekh Dilwar, (1918) 5 A I R Aat 636=46 I C 614=3 Pat L J 516.
14. Kartick Chandra Chatterji v. Nagendra Nath Roy, (1924) 11 A I R Pat 319=74 I C 760=5 P L T 41.
15. Mahadeo Ram v. Mohan Vikram Sah, (1933) 20 A I R Pat 435=145 I C 421=12 Pat 665 =14 P L T 388 (F B).
16. Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Umanath Chowdhry, (1893) 20 Cal 8=19 I A 154 (P C).
17. Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali, (1888) 15 Cal 488 (F B).
18. Bisheshar Kuar v. Hari Singh, (1882) 5 All 42 =1882 A W N 146.

other hand, a reversioner entitled to succeed on the death of Hindu widow was held to be entitled to apply under this rule: see 4 Pat L J 360[19] and 19 C L J 72.[20] Thus, it would appear, that mere subsisting interest in the property was not regarded as the criterion, but the detriment to some interest, whether or not such interest was actually subsisting at the date of the sale.

What is clearly material is not interest in property so much as the prejudice to any interest occasioned by the sale. It cannot be gainsaid that when an auction-purchaser is misled by the decree-holder's omission to specify an incumbrance in the proclamation of sale into offering a higher bid, his interests are affected by the sale. That gives rise to the question whether the auction-purchaser can be regarded as a person having any interest at all to be affected by the sale. The answer would depend upon the range of the meaning naturally conveyed by the word 'interests'. If it is understood in a narrow and restricted sense of interest in the property the auction purchaser must clearly be excluded but this view is open to reasonable attack on the ground that one would be reading the words 'in property' in the Rule which the Legislature itself could have inserted if it intended to convey that meaning.

It is not the function of the Courts to make alterations in the terminology of the plain provisions of law, as in that case they would not be interpreting but making the law. When the Legislature used the word 'interests' in plural, it must be presumed that it intended to attach some special significance to it. That plural word obviously means more than one interest which may be of the same kind or different kinds, which may be held by one or more persons. The interests of a mortgagee with or without possession, of a lessee or of a mere trespasser are either proprietary or possessory but regarded as a whole they are of one species namely, interests in the property, but a person may have a pecuniary interest in respect of a property such as a decree-holder has and it is presumably for this reason that a decree-holder is expressly mentioned in the Rule. In 51 Cal 495[21] the expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" was held not restricted to proprietary or possessory title so as to exclude pecuniary interest. On that wide interpretation, a decree-holder who has lost his right to rateable distribution was held to have such interest as would entitle him to apply under this Rule to set aside a sale held at the instance of another creditor. Can it be said that the auction-purchaser has no pecuniary interest that is affected by the sale? It is obvious that an execution sale primarily affects the interests of three parties although their interests may be different and conflicting, namely the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser. Any person who comes forward to bid at the auction does so manifestly because he has some interest in the purchase of the property. The bidders are persons who are interested in converting their cash into the property which is offered for sale. The interest of the purchaser at the time of the sale appears pecuniary but by necessary implication it comprises an inchoate interest in the property. It cannot therefore be gainsaid that the auction-purchaser has an interest to be protected just as the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor has.

The summary remedy to set aside the sale is provided in Rr. 89, 90 and 91 of O. 21. R. 89 in clear terms describes the person entitled to set aside the sale on deposit as any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein or holding an interest by virtue of a title acquired before such sale. That wording clearly excludes those whose interest is other than proprietary or possessory. R. 91 expressly mentions only the execution purchaser. The intermediate Rule however expressly mentions the decree-holder or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets but does not specifically mention the judgment-debtor. It uses the expression "whose interests are affected by the sale" in a general way with the obvious purpose of including a wide variety of interests other than that of the judgment-debtor. The hypothesis that this expression does not contemplate its application to an auction-purchaser renders R. 90 manifestly illogical and unreasonable. The omission to specify incumbrances in the proclamation of sale would unquestionably entitle both the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder to apply for setting aside the sale: see 40 Cal 635.[22] If this is a good ground for the judgment-debtor whose property is sold and for the decree-holder who has no proprietary interest in the property, why should it not be equally good in the case of one who purchases the property. The judgment-debtor parts with his property for a price and the auction-purchaser parts with his money for the property. Both are equally interested in the sale of the property and their interests are equally affected and must stand on the same level. To deny a right to the auction-purchaser while conceding it to the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder would be manifestly unjust and unreasonable. It would be wrong to impute to the Legislature an intention to create such an anomaly.

19. Brij Kishore v. Pratab Narain, (1919) 6 A I R Pat 127=51 I C 359=4 Pat L J 360.

20. Pankhabati v. Nonihal Singh, (1914) 1 A I R Cal 838 = 21 I C 207 = 18 C W N 778 = 19 C L J 72.

21. Dhirendra Nath Roy v. Kamini Kumar Pal, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 786=84 I C 119=51 Cal 495=28 C W N 899.

It is argued that the Legislature has made its intention clear in R. 91 which is meant solely for the benefit of the auction-purchaser and that therefore the auction-purchaser can only look to that Rule and not to R. 90 for a summary remedy. The express mention of the auction-purchaser in R. 91 cannot of itself exclude him from the purview of R. 90. The object of the two enactments is different. R. 91 postulates that the sale is free from any fraud, irregularity or illegality, whereas R. 90 leaves the door open for questioning the validity of the sale on three specific grounds mentioned above. The fact that the auction-purchaser is specifically mentioned in R. 91 itself evidences the intention of the Legislature to afford him a summary remedy. Consistently with this how is it possible to predicate that the auction-purchaser is denied a similar remedy on other grounds vitiating the sale? R. 91 so far from refuting the wider interpretation put upon R. 90 goes to reinforce it.

The last point, viz. the absence of guarantee of title survives for consideration. If the sale is confirmed in spite of the auction-purchaser's complaint that it was irregular and illegal what remedy does the law provide him? Once the sale is confirmed he has no remedy open to him by a regular suit to have it set aside as there is no guarantee of title held out in auction sales: see 3 Cal 806.[23] He may at best be entitled to obtain compensation from the impecunious judgment-debtor. That is decidedly placing him in a worse position than a private purchaser who under S. 18(c), Specific Relief Act, is entitled to compel the mortgagor to redeem the mortgage and to obtain a conveyance from the mortgagee. The fact that a purchaser at a court sale buys the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment-debtor's title ought to be the overpowering consideration to leave him scope to amend matters before the sale becomes conclusive. That the law makes it imperative on the decree-holder to specify the various particulars including incumbrance specified in R. 66 of O. 21 shows the anxiety of the Legislature that the purchaser should have a fair deal. The buyer would be purchasing at his risk only when all these requisite formalities of law are observed and there is no fraud, but if they are not observed or there is fraud, would the law afford him no remedy? Where can he get his remedy except in the execution proceedings. At all events, the executing Court would be the best tribunal qualified to adjudicate on these matters as it possesses first-hand knowledge of the circumstances in which the sale is held and has to decide whether or not to confirm the sale. From the foregoing discussion the conclusion is inevitable that the auction-purchaser is entitled to apply under R. 90 as a person whose interests are affected by the sale. We are therefore of opinion that 18 N L R 98[5] was correctly decided.

As to the next question, we are of opinion that mere statement by the subsequent mortgagee in the witness-box that he would not enforce his mortgage cannot estop him from enforcing his legal rights. A mortgagee's right is created by a registered deed and can only be extinguished by a registered deed. The subsequent mortgagee's assurance would have some value had the auction-purchaser offered his bid relying on that assurance. An assurance given before confirmation of sale, which is an act of Court and not of a party, can have no legal significance. In any case it is a matter for the auction-purchaser himself to decide whether or not he would press his application under R. 90 relying on the assurance of the subsequent mortgagee. The executing Court cannot compel him to act

22. Krishna Pershad Singh v. Moti Chand, (1913) 40 Cal 635=40 I A 140=19 I C 296=17C L J 573=17 C W N 637 (P C).

23. Dorab Ally Khan v. Executors of Khajah Moheeooddeen, (1877) 3 Cal 806=5 I A 116=2 C L R 529=3 Suther 520=3 Sar 818 (P C).

to his prejudice on the view that the puisne mortgagee's statement would in future debar him from enforcing his rights. His statement cannot possibly cure the irregularity of the non-disclosure of his mortgage in the proclamation of sale.

S.G./R.K. Revision allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 183

GRILLE AND NIYOGI JJ.

Azhar Husain Mahzar Husain Musalman — Decree-holder — Appellant.

v.

Mohammad Shibli Hafiz Mohamad Raza and others — Plaintiffs, Judgment-debtors — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 139 of 1937, Decided on 28th February 1939, from order of 2nd Addl. Dist. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 18th March 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47, O. 21, R. 58 — Term " representatives " in S. 47 includes not only legal representatives but also representatives-in-interest, i. e. transferees from decree-holder or judgment-debtor—Assets of deceased person in hands of legal representatives attached in execution of a decree against legal representatives in respect of debt charged on assets — Question whether property belongs to assets of deceased or not raised by legal representatives or the transferees from them, who are bound by decree, falls under S. 47 and not under O. 21, R. 58—It must be determined in execution and not by separate suit.

The term "representatives" occurring in S. 47 includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators, but also representatives-in-interest, i. e. any transferee of the decree-holder's interest or any transferee from the judgment-debtor's interest, who so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree: 24 Cal 62 (F B); A I R 1914 Cal 828 and A I R 1934 Pat 413, Rel. on. [P 184 C 2]

Where therefore the assets of a deceased person in the hands of his legal representatives are attached in execution of a decree obtained against the legal representatives in respect of a debt charged against the assets of the deceased, the question whether the attached properties belong to the assets of the deceased or to the legal representatives themselves, raised by the legal representatives or transferees from them, who are bound by the decree (having purchased the property subsequent to the attachment) is a question relating to execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree and falls under S. 47 and not under O. 21, R. 58 and must be determined in the execution and not by a separate suit. It is only when the judgment-debtor claims to represent the interest of a third party in whom the property is vested that the case would fall outside the purview of S. 47. In such a case as this what the judgment-debtor says is, that although the property is vested to him, it is so vested not beneficially but as trustee or executor for some one else. It is clear that in such a case the real objecting party is one, who is a stranger to the suit, and the objection having been made on his account his claim must be regarded as that of a third party and dealt with under O. 21, R. 58: Case law referred. [P 184 C 2 ; P 185 C 1 ; P 186 C 1]

[Distinction between the position of a legal representative of a deceased person and that of a shebait of a deity pointed out].

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 — Auction-purchaser is not necessary party to proceedings arising out of S. 47 between parties to suit.

In a proceeding arising under S. 47 between the parties to the suit, the auction-purchaser is not a necessary party. [P 186 C 1]

Where therefore in an appeal from an order falling under Sec. 47 the auction-purchaser is not joined as a party, the non-joinder is not fatal to the appeal : A I R 1934 Nag 21, Rel. on ; A I R 1930 Nag 5, Disting. [P 186 C 1]

Fida Hussain — for Appellant.

W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent 1.

Order.—This is a decree-holder's appeal from an order passed by the Second Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, in Civil Appeal No. 29-B of 1936 on 18th March 1937. In Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934, one Mt. Tahirabi obtained a decree for Rupees 3000 on account of her dower debt against the assets of deceased Syed Ahmad Hussain in the hands of Altaf Hussain and Mt. Hira, respondents 2 and 3. The appellant Azhar Hussein is the legal representative of Mt. Tahirabi. In execution of that decree two houses, Nos. 76 and 77, were attached and one of them was auctioned while the attachment of the other remained in force. Respondent 1, Muhammad Shibli, lodged an objection to the attachment on the allegation that neither of the two houses attached formed part of the estate of Syed Ahmad Hussein but that both the houses belonged to Ahmad Hussein's brother Imdad Hussein and that he orally gifted them to Mt. Hira and Altaf Hussein's daughter who in their turn sold the houses to Muhammad Shibli on 7th December 1935 after the date of the decree in Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934 and the attachment. It is pertinent to state that the decree in Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1934 was passed on 27th August 1934 and that the houses had been already attached before judgment. In his objection Muhammad Shibli also contended that there was no valid attachment of the houses. The objection was dismissed in the original Court on the ground that the purchase of the house by the objector was contrary to the attachment and that it was void under S. 64, Civil P. C. It thus rejected the objection on a preliminary point and did not enter into the merits of the case. On appeal by Muhammad Shibli, the objector, it was held that the objection should have been treated as falling under S. 47, Civil P. C., and not under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., and the case was remanded to the executing Court for enquiry into its merits.

This appeal is preferred by the decree-holder. It is contended on his behalf that the proceeding arising out of the objection fell to be governed by O. 21, R. 58 and not by S. 47 and that the appeal was incompetent. It is also urged that the non-joinder of the auction-purchaser was fatal to the appeal and that there was no necessity for remanding the case as the fact of attachment was admitted by the objector in the course of proceedings in the Court of first instance. It is conceded in this Court on behalf of the objector that the attachment was in fact made and that it was also valid; but that does not conclude the case since if it is held that the proceeding fell under S. 47 and not under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., the remand would be inevitable as there was no enquiry into the merits of the objection.

The main point in this appeal is whether S. 47 or O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., applies. S. 47, which corresponds to S. 244 of the Act of 1882 and S. 11 of the Code of 1861, runs as follows:

> All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

The Section lays down two conditions, (1) that the questions which arise between the parties to the suit or their representatives, and (2) that they should relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. A party means a person who is either plaintiff or defendant, that is a person who seeks a remedy or a person against whom a remedy is sought. Normally a plaintiff or defendant comes to Court on his own account, but in some cases either of the parties may not sue or be sued on their own account but on account of some third person. Their capacity in the suit may not be that of the principals but that of representatives. This circumstance gives rise to important legal consequences so far as the rights and liabilities of the parties are concerned. In suits to recover a simple money debt the plaintiff has a remedy against both the person and property of his debtor but in some suits there are defendants who cannot, save in exceptional circumstances, be made personally liable such as trustees, executors, receivers of insolvent estates, principal officers of corporation, shebaits of Hindu idols, mohanth of math or a guardian of a minor or legal representatives of a deceased person. They are not primary parties, that is to say, those who are liable on their own account but are representative parties who are liable on account of those whom they represent. Even among such representative parties there are some, for example, shebaits and mohanths and guardians who are nominal, and others, such as trustees, receivers and legal representatives of a deceased person who are real parties. This distinction must be borne in mind before entering on the discussion on the point raised here. The term 'representatives' occurring in S. 47 includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators but also representatives-in-interest, that is, any transferee of the decree-holder's interest or any transferee of the judgment-debtor's interest who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree: see 24 Cal 62,[1] 41 Cal 418[2] and A I R 1934 Pat 413.[3] It is therefore clear that Altaf Hussein and Mt. Hira who were sued as being in possession of the assets of Syed Ahmad Hussein were parties to the suit and that Muhammad Shibli, the objector who claimed interest in the two houses by virtue of a sale deed dated 7th December 1935, is their representative.

The next question is whether the claim made by him that the attached properties were not the assets of Ahmad Hussein but of Altaf Hussein and Mt. Hira involved a question relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. On this point there is a mass of authority. In 12 All 313[4] it was held that the question whether certain property belongs to the assets of the deceased or not are questions which must be determined in execution and not by a separate suit. It was pointed out that there was no distinction in this respect between the position of legal representatives added to the suit before and those added after the decree. It is only when the judgment-debtor claims to represent the interest of a third party in whom the property is vested that the case would

1. Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar, (1897) 24 Cal 62=1 C W N 36 (F B).
2. Tara Prasanna Bose v. Nilmoni Khan, (1914) 1 A I R Cal 828=25 I C 118=41 Cal 418.
3. Gauri Dutt v. D. K. Dowring, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 413=151 I C 683=13 Pat 735.
4. Seth Chand Mal v. Durga Dei, (1890) 12 All 313=1890 A W N 137 (F B).

fall outside the purview of S. 47. In such a case as this what the judgment-debtor says is that although the property is vested in him it is so vested not beneficially but as trustee or executor for someone else. It is clear that in such a case the real objecting party is one who is a stranger to the suit and the objection having been made on his account his claim must be regarded as that of a third party and dealt with under O. 21, R. 58. This case was followed in 21 All 323,[5] 28 All 51[6] and 39 All 47.[7] The same view was taken in 17 Cal 711[8] which was followed in 27 Cal 34,[9] 34 Bom 506,[10] 58 Bom 513,[11] 2 Rang 168,[12] 5 Rang 659,[13] 6 Lah 544,[14] 26 Mad 501[15] and 39 Mad 570.[16] In all these cases the judgment-debtor or his representative asserted his title to the property and claimed in his own right. On the other hand there are cases in which the objection was made by the judgment debtors not in their own right but in that of a third party. It was held consistently that the proceeding was governed not by Sec. 47 but by O. 21, R. 58: see 23 Bom 237,[17] 23 Mad 195[18] and 39 Cal 298.[19] In the first mentioned case Ranade J. pointed out that when a legal representative objects on the ground that it is trust property a different set of issues arises which has no relation to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree as between the parties to the suit. It is clear that in such cases the legal representatives really assert a jus tertii, that is rights of persons who are not parties to the decree or their representatives. In 39 Cal 298[19] the legal representative asserted that he was in possession as a shebait of a deity to whom the properties have been dedicated and it was held that the objection fell under Sec. 278 of the Code of 1882 which corresponds to O. 21, R. 58.

The learned counsel for the appellant relied strongly on 42 Cal 440[20] as an authority supporting his contention. In that case a decree for money had been passed against a person in his capacity as a shebait of a deity and he objected to the attachment on the ground that he was in possession of it not as a shebait of the deity but in his own right. It was held that the case did not fall within the scope of Sec. 47, Civil P. C., 1908. It must be observed that the learned Judges who decided the case followed 39 Cal 298[19] and distinguished 17 Cal 711.[8] The ratio decidendi was that the judgment-debtor having set up a jus tertii, that is the right of a third party, the case was not one between the parties to the suit so as to attract Sec. 47, Civil P. C. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the principle of this decision should be extended to the present case for the reason that the judgment-debtors who are legal representatives in the present case are only representative parties in the same way as the shebait in the cited case was and that in that sense they should not be regarded as being parties to the suit. This argument ignores the fundamental distinction between the position of a legal representative of a deceased person and that of a shebait of a deity. A legal representative is not a mere figurehead as the shebait is. Legal representatives are persons to whom the rights and obligations of the deceased are transmitted. They are real parties to the suit although they represent the rights and liabilities of a deceased person. A shebait on the other hand is a nominal party who stands in Court as a physical representative of an ideal person, namely the idol, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 32 Cal 129.[21] While a 5. Beni Prasad Kunwar v. Lukhna Kunwar, (1899) 21 All 323=1899 A W N 104.

6. Kali Charan v. Jewat Dube, (1905) 28 All 51 =1905 A W N 180.
7. Dulla v. Shib Lal, (1917) 4 A I R All 460=36 I C 281=39 All 47=14 A L J 846.
8. Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi, (1890) 17 Cal 711 (F B).
9. Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani, (1900) 27 Cal 34=4 C W N 417.
10. Narayan Shridhar v. Pandurang Bapuji, (1910) 34 Bom 506=6 I C 905=12 Bom L R 471.
11. Dinbai v. Bamansha, (1934) 21 A I R Bom 296 =152 I C 168=58 Bom 513=36 Bom L R 608.
12. Arunachellam Chetty v. Maung San Ngwe, (1924) 11 A I R Rang 323=83 I C 550=2 Rang 168.
13. Ma Shwe Mra Pru v, Maung Ba On, (1928) 15 A I R Rang 29=107 I C 856=5 Rang 659.
14. Ishar Das v. Parma Nand, (1926) 13 A I R Lah 134= 93 I C 30=6 Lah 544.
15. Vengapayyan v. Karimpanakal Parvati, (1903) 26 Mad 501.
16. Rajah of Karvetnagar v. Venkata Reddi, (1916) 3 A I R Mad 20=29 I C 231=39 Mad 570= 29 M L J 96.
17. Murigeya v. Hayat Saheb, (1899) 23 Bom 237.
18. Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar, (1900) 23 Mad 195=10 M L J 64.
19. Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara, (1912) 39 Cal 298=12 I C 163=16 C W N 26 =14 C L J 425.
20. Upendra Nath v. Kusum Kumari Dasi, (1915) 2 A I R Cal 327=27 I C 328=42 Cal 440= 20 C L J 485=19 C W N 520.
21. Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi, (1905) 32 Cal 129 = 31 I A 203 = 8 C W N 809=8 Sar 698 (P C).

dead person whose rights and liabilities in regard to his assets are represented by his legal representatives cannot conceivably be regarded as a party to the suit, the idol, which is a juridical person, although in an ideal sense is unquestionably a real party to the suit in the eye of the law. It is evident therefore that a shebait cannot, like the guardian of a minor, be regarded as a party to the suit. Consequently the objection made by a shebait asserting his own right is not an objection made by a party to the suit. On the other hand an objection made by a legal representative who is a real party to the suit is made by a party to the suit.

The objector, Muhammad Shibli, stands in the shoes of the judgment-debtors as his sale being subsequent to the attachment he is bound by the decree. When he claims the property to be his own in right of the judgment-debtors from whom he purchased and denies that it forms part of the assets of the deceased he is raising a question which relates to the execution of the decree in the suit. The case therefore falls to be governed by S. 47, Civil P. C., as has been rightly held by the lower Appellate Court. There now survives the minor question as to the effect of the auction-purchaser's non-joinder on the validity of the appeal. Reliance is placed on 26 N L R 127[22] but that was a case of an application made under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., and not one under S. 47 as in the present case. As pointed out in 31 N L R 67,[23] in a proceeding arising under S. 47 between the parties to the suit, the auction-purchaser is not a necessary party. The non-joinder of the auction-purchaser in the appeal was not therefore fatal to it. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 25.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

22. Haridass v. Mofatlal, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 5=121 I C 658=26 N L R 127.
23. Brijlal v. Mahohar Prasad, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 21=150 I C 611=31 N L R 67.

---

* * A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 186
FULL BENCH

STONE C. J., GRILLE AND VIVIAN BOSE JJ.

Ramdayal Munnalal Sonar and another — Defendants 2 and 3 — Appellants.

v.

Sheodayal, Plaintiff and others, Defendants 1 and 4 — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 10 of 1936, Decided on 12th January 1939.

(a) Precedents — Principle of stare decisis— Applicability of.

The principle of stare decisis does not apply and the Courts are not prevented from giving effect to what they conceive to be the law when security of title is not affected and no injustice results from so doing: A I R 1932 Pat 205, Ref. [P 187 C 1, 2]

 * (b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 89 and O. 23, R. 3—Award by arbitrator privately appointed by parties to pending suit cannot be recorded as adjustment by compromise : 23 N L R 100= 95 I C 89=A I R 1926 Nag 405 and 24 N L R 55=107 I C 525=A I R 1928 Nag 173, Overruled.

The word 'compromise' in O. 23, R. 3 standing by itself is wide enough to embrace an award given by arbitrator privately appointed by parties to a pending suit; but the words "or any other law" in S. 89 though capable of different interpretation do not include O. 23, R. 3 and hence where reference to arbitration is not in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 2, such award cannot be recorded as an adjustment by compromise under O. 23, R. 3, the policy of the Code being to prevent parties coming to Courts for settlement of their disputes from withdrawing from their jurisdiction except in the manner expressly provided in the Code : 23 N L R 100 = 95 I C 89 = A I R 1926 Nag 405 and 24 N L R 55=107 I C 525=A I R 1928 Nag 173, Overruled; Case law discussed. [P 187 C 2; P 188 C 2; P 189 C 2; P 190 C 2]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—General words following specific words of same nature.

In construing a statute, the usual rules of construction must be applied unless there is something to suggest the contrary. When therefore general words are found following particular and specific words of the same nature they must be construed as taking their meaning from the specific words which precede them and must be restricted to the same genus. [P 189 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908) — Interpretation of — Conflict between body of Code and Schedule— Former must prevail.

The scheme of the Civil Procedure Code is to make the body of the Code confer jurisdiction and the schedules to detail the mode in which that jurisdiction is to be exercised. Therefore if there is a conflict between the body and the schedules, the former must prevail. [P 190 C 1]

R. R. Dandige—for Appellants.
R. G. Rao — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a a partition suit in which the plaintiff sues for partition and separate possession of his one quarter share in the family property. After the suit had been instituted the parties asked for time to settle their differences out of Court through an arbitrator. One Sheonarain, a close relative of both the parties was appointed, and the question before us is whether the award, which he made, can be given effect to. All the parties to the suit accept the award except defendant 2 Ramdayal and defendant 3, Bhola, who is his minor son. These two have lost in the lower Court and so appeal here.

The first objection they raise is that the award is invalid because the permission of the Court was not obtained. It was argued that under S. 89, Civil P. C., all references to arbitration and all proceedings thereunder have to be in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 2 except in two cases neither of which applies here. The first of these exceptions comes into operation where the provisions of the Arbitration Act 1899 apply, and the second when "any other law for the time being in force" applies. The respondents on the other hand contend that O. 23, R. 3 applies and that the matter can be recorded as an adjustment of the suit under a lawful compromise. They claim that the phrase "any other law for the time being in force" occurring in S. 89 embraces O. 23, R. 3 and so its provisions must apply.

The Judicial Commissioner's Court applied O. 23, R. 3, in two cases, namely 23 N L R 100[1] and 24 N L R 55,[2] but unfortunately neither decision discusses the law. The former was decided by a single Judge and merely followed without comment an unreported ruling of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and three other decisions, one from Allahabad, one from Bombay and one from Madras. The latter was decided by a Bench of two Judges one of them being the Judge who had decided the former case, and it does no more than follow the earlier ruling. A reference was also made to O. 23, R. 3 and to one of the above cases in 31 N L R (Sup) 72[3] at p. 75, but as the present questions did not arise there, there is naturally neither discussion of nor decision on the points now at issue. We are unfortunately unable to agree that O. 23, R. 3, applies though there is considerable weight of authority against us. For a time considerations of stare decisis weighed with us, as they did with the Patna High Court in 11 Pat 237[4] at p. 239, but on the whole we do not think that that should prevent us from giving effect to what we conceive to be the law. Security of title will not be affected, nor will injustice result. In fact none of the factors which normally induce Judges to apply the rule of stare decisis is present here. All that will happen will be that the case will be decided in the usual way by the ordinary Courts to which the parties had in the first instance resorted instead of by an outside tribunal.

So far as O. 23, R. 3, is concerned, we agree that the word "compromise" standing by itself is wide enough to embrace the award in this suit. That is one of the meanings given to the word in the shorter Oxford English Dictionary and it has been elaborately analyzed in 51 Bom 908[5] at pp. 920 and 947. The following cases also take that view, namely 51 Mad 800[6] at p. 806, 6 Luck 591[7] at p. 595 and 9 Rang 39[8] at page 41. But that is not the only meaning and therefore what we have to determine is whether this particular aspect of the definition has been excluded by the Legislature in some other part of the Code. If it has not been, then of course full effect must be given to the plain and ordinary meaning of the term. But we think it has. In the first place it is to be observed that Marten C. J., in considering the juxtaposition of the words "agreement or compromise" in O. 23, R. 3 states at p. 922 of the Bombay Full Bench just cited that :

> I do not mean that in every case under O. 23, R. 3, we are to construe "compromise" as meaning arbitration, but that in an appropriate case we may do so.

It is clear then that in that learned Judge's view there can be cases in which a compromise does not amount either to an agreement or to an award. It was therefore necessary for the Legislature to use both terms even though it desired, as we think it did, to exclude awards from the scope of the rule. In one sense of the term the word "compromise" includes "agreement," but since both terms have been employed, it seems to us that the Legislature was thinking in technical terms and not merely of the dictionary meanings of the words. In any case the fact that both expressions have been used does not militate against the view we take.

1. Namdarkhan v. Nanhoo, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 405=95 I C 89=23 N L R 100.
2. Narayandas Bhagwanji & Co. v. Kalyanji Mawaji & Co., (1928) 15 A I R Nag 173=107 I C 525=24 N L R 55.
3. Tatyarao v. Shrikrishna, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 8=160 I C 202=31 N L R (Sup) 72.
4. Ramadhar Rai v. Subedar Pathak, (1932) 19 A I R Pat 205=138 I C 82=11 Pat 237 = 13 P L T 434.
5. Chanbasappa v. Basalingayya, (1927) 14 A I R Bom 565 = 105 I C 516 = 51 Bom 908 = 29 Bom L R 1254 (F B).
6. Subbaraju v. Venkatramaraju, (1928) 15 A I R Mad 1025= 113 I C 632 = 51 Mad 800 = 55 M L J 429 (F B).
7. Basaoo v. Jagannath, (1931) 18 A I R Oudh 127=131 I C 443=6 Luck 591=8 O W N 71.
8. Laljee Serang v. Chander Bhan, (1931) 18 A I R Rang 58=131 I C 57=9 Rang 39.

There can be no doubt that an award, at any rate in the sense in which it is used among lawyers, is a very special kind of adjustment by consent and that this term is not ordinarily used to cover an award. Therefore when we find the Code dealing elaborately and specifically not only with arbitrations and awards in a separate place but also with the settlement of pending cases by those means it would seem prima facie that the intention was to treat these different modes of adjustment separately. These considerations weighed with the Calcutta and Patna High Courts and also with certain Judges in Allahabad and Bombay. Rankin J. analyzed the scheme of the Code in 49 Cal 608[9] and pointed out that unless awards are excluded from the scope of O. 23, R. 3, the whole scheme of the Code dealing with arbitrations is ruined. Mukerji J. in his dissenting judgment in the Allahabad Full Bench, 47 All 637[10] at pp. 658 to 662, states that the Code has provided for every possible case of arbitration and that it has used the word "arbitration" in a special sense throughout, a sense which is nowhere co-extensive with that of an adjustment of a dispute by lawful agreement or compromise. Courtney-Terrell C. J. was of the same opinion in 14 Pat 799[11] at page 812. In referring to the judgment of Mukerji J., he states:

> There can be no doubt that the Code of Civil Procedure uses a recognized expression for the proceeding which involves a reference of their dispute by the contending parties to a third party for his decision. This has been described as an "arbitration." Nowhere in the Code has the word "arbitration" been used in a sense co-extensive with that of an adjustment of a dispute by lawful agreement or compromise. In other words, the provisions relating to an agreement and compromise are of the character entirely different from those which govern the conduct of a voluntary tribunal.

Macleod J. came to a similar conclusion in 40 Bom 386[12] though he changed his mind in a later ruling, 45 Bom 245[13] at p. 259. Beaman J. was also of the same opinion in 38 Bom 687.[14] We agree that none of this is conclusive but we feel that these are powerful reasons for construing Sec. 89 in the way we do. In view of the conflict of authority on this point it is evident that the words "or any other law" in Sec. 89 are capable of different interpretations. In those circumstances the considerations which we have discussed above ought, in our opinion, to prevail.

But before dealing with Sec. 89, there is another matter which we think also adds weight to our view. Arbitration is an exception to the ordinary rule that the jurisdiction of the Courts cannot be ousted by agreement between the parties, so much so that agreements to refer future disputes which have not yet arisen are not binding (see S. 28, Contract Act). Therefore when we find the Code dealing with this exception in the detailed and comprehensive manner in which it does, one prima facie inclines to the view that the intention was to make those provisions exhaustive and this is fortified by the observations of the Privy Council in 29 Cal 167[15] at p. 182:

> Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit, in that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court.

The policy of the Code then seems to be to prevent parties who have once come before the Courts for a settlement of their disputes from withdrawing from their jurisdiction except in the manner expressly provided in the Code. This was the view taken not only in the Patna and Calcutta cases already cited but also in a later Calcutta case, 55 Cal 538[16] at p. 545, and in 54 Bom 197[17] at page 206. This policy has, we think, been clearly enunciated in S. 89 which runs thus:

> Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in Sch. 2.

But the Allahabad, Rangoon, Lucknow, Madras and Bombay High Courts consider

9. Amar Chand Chamaria v. Banwari Lall Rakshit, (1922) 9 A I R Cal 404 =69 I C 808=49 Cal 608.
10. Gajendra Singh v. Durga Kumari, (1925) 12 A I R All 503=88 I C 768= 47 All 637 = 23 A L J 561 (F B).
11. Bhimraj Kanai Lal v. Munia Sethani, (1935) 22 A I R Pat 243=156 I C 1050= 14 Pat 799 =16 P L T 280.
12. Shavaksha Dinsha v. Tyab Haji Ayub, (1916) 3 A I R Bom 125=37 I C 140 = 40 Bom 386 =18 Bom L R 559.
13. Manilal M[illegible]ilal v. Gokaldas Rowji, (1921) 8 A I R Bo[illegible] 110=59 I C 53=45 Bom 245=22 Bom L R [illegible]8.
14. Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ram Chandra Krishna, (1914) 1 A I R Bom 184= 27 I C 46 =38 Bom 687=16 Bom L R 653.
15. Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan, (1902) 29 Cal 167=29 I A 51=8 Sar 154 =6 C W N 226 (P C).
16. Gulmoni Dasi v. Tarini Charan, (1927) 14 A I R Cal 887=104 I C 360= 55 Cal 538=47 C L J 59=33 C W N 390.
17. Dinkarrai Lakshmiprasad v. Yeshvantrai Hariprasad, (1930) 17 A I R Bom 98=124 I C 119=54 Bom 197=31 Bom L R 1403.

that the phrase "any other law" includes O. 23, R. 3 and that therefore an award of the kind which we find here can be recorded as an adjustment by compromise: see 47 All 637[10] at p. 648, 9 Rang 39[8] at p. 42, 6 Luck 591[7] at p. 594, 51 Mad 800[6] at p. 807 and 51 Bom 908[5] at p. 945. So far as the Allahabad Full Bench is concerned, one of the three Judges, Mukherji J. dissented and Walsh J. based his decision on general principles of law without adverting to S. 89 at all. Therefore the opinion on this point expressed by the third Judge, Kanhaiya Lall J., is really that of a single Judge. In the Rangoon case the learned Judges said that they knew of no other law to which these words could possibly be appropriate except O. 23, R. 3; but the answer is furnished by the Bombay Full Bench itself. Crump J. points out at p. 944 that there are statutes other than the Arbitration Act which deal with arbitration such as the Companies Act and the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and both the learned Chief Justice and Blackwell J. referred to the general law of contract as falling within the meaning of those words. We may add the Co-operative Societies Act and the Electricity Act as further examples.

In the Madras Full Bench the learned Judges came to the conclusion that O. 23, R. 3 conferred certain rights on the parties to a suit and that therefore full effect must be given to its terms unless these rights are curtailed or taken away by some specific enactment. They were therefore of the opinion that S. 89 ought not to be construed as having that effect unless it was necessary to do so. But we feel it is necessary. If considerations of this kind are to prevail then we think that the intention of the Legislature should be construed so as to restrict arbitrations in the manner specified by Sec. 89 and that therefore O. 23, R. 3 which does not form part of the body of the Code should not be construed so as to curtail S. 89 which does. The reasons given in the Bombay Full Bench are more difficult to answer. As we have said Marten C. J. was of the opinion that the general law of contract conferred the right in question and Blackwell J. was also of that view. But Crump J. considered that the words "any other law" suggested that statute law was meant. The Calcutta High Court is clear that the general law of contract is not included: see 49 Cal 608[9] at p. 614 and 55 Cal 538[16] at p. 544. On the whole we agree with the Calcutta view for the reasons given in the two cases cited and also for other reasons which we give below.

In construing a statute the usual rules of construction must be applied unless there is something to suggest the contrary. When therefore we find general words following particular and specific words of the same nature they must be construed as taking their meaning from the specific words which precede them and must be restricted to the same genus. This is the well-known rule of ejusdem generis which is explained in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (7th Edition), p. 284. We therefore agree with Crump J. in the Bombay Full Bench and with Courtney-Terrell C. J. at p. 808 of 14 Pat 799[11] at p. 816, that other statutory law dealing with arbitration is indicated; but we do not agree with the rulings which decide that another provision in the Code itself is also included. In the first place as was pointed out by Agarwala J. in 14 Pat 799,[11] > it would be contrary to all canons of the construction of statutes, that where a Code lays down that certain proceedings shall be governed by provisions contained therein and relating to those proceedings, words referring to "other laws" should be taken to refer to the Code itself. It is not open to us to substitute for the words "by any other law" in S. 89 the words "except as provided in this Act or by any other law".

Courtney-Terrell C. J. was of the same opinion at p. 809. In the next place as Mukerji J. points out at p. 661 of the Allahabad Full Bench, Sch. 2 and O. 23, R. 3 are as much a part of the Code as S. 89 itself and so the words "any other law" must mean law other than the Code in which the words are used as well as other than the Arbitration Act. Fawcett J. thought so too in 45 Bom 245[13] at p. 273, though he ultimately came to the opposite conclusion for other reasons. Moreover we find that whenever an exception contained in the Code itself has been made the Legislature has been always careful to say so specifically and to use expressions such as "subject to the provisions herein contained" or words having a like effect. See for example Ss. 9, 20, 96, 100, 104 and 146. On the whole therefore we think that the words "any other law" do not include the provisions of O. 23, R. 3.

There are two other points to notice. Though S. 89 states that all arbitration proceedings shall be governed by Sch. 2 except in so far as the provisions of the Arbitration Act or any other law provide, para. 1 of Sch. 2 uses the word "may". The Madras and Bombay Full Benches accordingly considered that parties who want to settle a pending suit by arbitration are not compelled to resort to Sch. 2 but are entitled to proceed under the general law of contract if they so prefer and the learned Chief Justice in the Bombay case criticizes the Calcutta decision, 49 Cal 608,[9] on the ground that Rankin J. had overlooked the word " may " and construed the provisions as compulsory, see pp. 933 and 951 of the Bombay Full Bench ; but we do not think he did. What he said was that the provisions in the Code relating to arbitration when viewed as a whole were compulsory and this we think follows from the use of the word "shall" in S. 89. In any case if we must choose between 'shall' in the body of the Code and 'may' in a Schedule, preference ought, we feel, to be given to the former.

The other point is this: The Bombay Full Bench was of opinion that the Schedules to the Code cannot apply unless they are brought into operation by some provision in the body of the Code itself and that as there is nothing else which brings O. 23, R. 3, into operation, S. 89 was introduced to fulfil this function. With the utmost respect we cannot agree. The Code must be regarded as a whole and it came into being as a whole as its first Section will show. On the contrary we are of opinion that the scheme was to make the body of the Code confer jurisdiction and the Schedules to detail the mode in which that jurisdiction is to be exercised. Therefore if there is any conflict between the body and the Schedules the former must prevail; not that we think there is any conflict between S. 89, and O. 23, R. 3. All that has happened is that one of the senses in which the word " compromise " is used in the English language has been cut out of the purview of O. 23, R. 3 by Section 89.

Turning now to the arguments about the general law of contract which the Bombay Full Bench considered so weighty, what we think was overlooked is Excep. 2 to Sec. 28, Contract Act. The Section itself enumerates the well known rule of law that agreements tending to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts are void. The second exception excludes certain references to arbitration, namely where disputes between the parties have already arisen, but the exception also states :

> Nor shall this Section . . . . affect any provision of any law in force for the time being as to the references to arbitration.

This, we think, clearly makes the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure the governing factors in so far as they apply. Sec. 21, Specific Relief Act, has a similar saving clause : "Save as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure . . . ." We do not mean to imply that such agreements are unlawful or altogether void. It is possible that they are not, though as that matter is not before us we say nothing about it. But it is one thing to say that an agreement is lawful for certain purposes and quite another to say that it can be enforced in a particular way. Sec. 21 shows that such agreements cannot be specifically enforced and in our opinion S. 89, shows that they cannot be recorded as an adjustment under O. 23, R. 3. Whether other remedies are available is a question with which we are not here concerned though we observe in passing that this possibly explains the use of the word "may" in para. 1 of Sch. 2. What we are clear about is that an award of the kind we have here cannot be recorded as an adjustment by compromise under Order 23, Rule 3.

In our opinion the true view of the matter is this: there was considerable conflict of opinion before the present Code of Civil Procedure was introduced as to whether such agreements could be recorded as adjustments or not. Then followed the observations of Lord Macnaghten in the case which we have quoted and so Sec. 89 was introduced to set this conflict at rest and to bring the law into line with Lord Macnaghten's observations. It is immaterial whether those remarks apply to the case we are considering or not (Marten C. J. thought they did not at page 930 of the Bombay Full Bench) for they undoubtedly indicate a desirable line of action and in our opinion Sec. 89 applies to it. In this view of the matter, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised in the appeal. We therefore allow the appeal and overrule 23 N L R 100[1] and 24 N L R 55.[2] The suit will now continue from the point at which it broke off.

As regards costs we are inclined at first to saddle the costs on the party resiling from the award ; but we find from the order sheet of the lower Court dated 13th December 1933 that the arbitration was not relied on, on that date and so the suit was ordered to proceed de novo. In the circumstances we see no reason why the usual rule about costs should not be enforced. The respondents will therefore pay the costs of the appeal and will also pay the costs incurred in the lower Court between 20th April 1933 and 31st October 1935. These will not be costs in the suit. Counsel's fee in this Court Rs. 50.

S.G./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 191

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Laxminarayan Ganeshdas — Judgment-debtor — Appellant.

v.

Ghasiram Dalchand Palliwal — Decree-holder — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 105 of 1935, Decided on 12th December 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 13th July 1935.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 1 — Decree awarding interest until payment — Sum paid into Court—Interest ceases to run from date of such payment.

Where a decree orders the payment of a sum of money awarding interest until payment and the money is paid by payment into Court under the provision of O. 21, R. 1, the interest does not run until notice has been given to the decree-holder under O. 21, R. 1 (2) but ceases to run from the date of such payment : A I R 1924 P C 133, Rel. on; A I R 1919 Mad 445 and A I R 1932 Cal 111, Ref.; A I R 1925 Nag 52, Expl. [P 191 C 1; P 192 C 1]

Fida Hussain — for Appellant.

W. K. Sheorey — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal raises a short point and one which would not normally be of very much importance. Even in this suit which originally involved approximately Rupees 50,000 the difference between the figures whether one takes this view or that is under Rs. 300. The point is as follows : Where a decree orders the payment of a sum of money awarding interest until payment and the money is paid by payment into Court under the provision of O. 21, R. 1, does the interest run until notice has been given to the decree-holder under O. 21, R. 1 (2)? or, does interest cease to run from the date of such payment?

The matter has been twice considered in India, so far as the report of the decisions indicate, that is to say in 42 Mad 576[1] where it was held that interest does not cease to run until notice of deposit is given, and in A I R 1932 Cal 111[2] where 42 Mad 576[1] was followed. A I R 1925 Nag 52[3] which is cited does not appear to us to be helpful because there the decree was specially worded and required not only payment but notice to be given. That case is concerned with whether notice should be given. It does however contain the following observation :

> Order 21, rule 1, sub-rule (2), Civil P. C., ... clearly shows that a notice in writing of the payment into Court has to be given to the decree-holder and served in the manner provided for the service of summons.

Unfortunately in none of those cases was A I R 1924 P C 133[4] at p. 135 adverted to. 42 Mad 576[1] was of course before that Privy Council decision but in A I R 1932 Cal 111[2] apparently the Court's attention was not directed to it. In A I R 1924 P C 133[4] what their Lordships were concerned with was the following question : In a suit to set aside a sale a conditional decree was passed. The condition was that the plaintiffs should pay a certain sum within a certain time. If they did so they would recover possession. If they did not, then the suit stood dismissed. In point of fact the plaintiffs' mortgagee, not a party, paid by paying into Court. The question was : Was the condition fulfilled ? At page 135 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe :

> Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that while the condition would have been satisfied by a payment to the appellant in person, which he accepted it was equally satisfied by a payment into Court, and that the latter was, in the circumstances, the appropriate mode of satisfying the condition.

If interest runs until payment and payment into Court is payment, then it is difficult to see why interest should run thereafter. 42 Mad 576[1] is largely based on considerations of convenience. Oldfield J. observed that > there would be nothing to compel compliance by the judgment-debtor with Cl. 2, which enjoins the giving of notice of the payment to the decree-holder, if the running of interest stopped.

Seshagiri Ayyar J. went rather on the analogy of O. 24, R. 3. That is a Rule which expressly stops interest where money has been paid into Court in satisfaction of the claim and the interest is stopped not from the date of payment in but from the

1. Ramaraya Shanbogue v. S. Venkataramanayya, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 445=50 I C 410=42 Mad 576.

2. Rangpur Raiyat Bank v. Hesabuddin, (1932) 19 A I R Cal 111=135 I C 799=35 C W N 544.

3. Baliram v. Ghasiram, (1925) 12 A I R Nag 52 =81 I C 1001.

4. Rahimtullah v. Esmail, (1924) 11 A I R P C 133=80 I C 411=48 Bom 404=51 I A 236 (P C).

date of the notice of the deposit which is required to be given through the Court by the person paying into Court. It must however be observed that, in our opinion, that analogy is not helpful because if interest stops only with the giving of notice in the absence of any provision one way or another R. 3 of O. 24 is unnecessary. The fact that that Rule is in O. 24 and no similar Rule is in O. 21, R. 1, suggests to our mind that where the decree provides that interest should be paid up to the date of payment then interest is paid up to the date of payment only. We are impressed with the argument based on convenience but at the same time in view of the Privy Council decision that payment in Court is equivalent to payment we think that it would be illogical to say that interest which is only payable up to the date of payment runs after such payment has been made. We therefore allow this appeal. We make no order as to costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 192

POLLOCK J.

Ramsingh Ranjitsingh and another — Appellants.

v.

Jalamsingh Sonusingh Rajput and another — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 22 of 1937, Decided on 12th December 1938, from appellate decree of Addl. District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 26th October 1936.

Hindu Law — Debts — Avyavaharika debt— Debt to buy motor to ply for hire is not avyavaharika and is binding on sons.

Where a Hindu father on behalf of himself and his two minor sons executed a mortgage of his family house, the consideration being the balance due on a previous mortgage loan taken by him and his brother to purchase a motor to ply for hire, and the sons challenged the transaction :

Held that a debt taken in order to purchase a motor to ply for hire not being repugnant to good morals was not avyavaharika ; and that the same was binding on the sons whose obligation to pay their father's debts extended to commercial debts: A I R 1933 Nag 89 and A I R 1926 Mad 323, Rel. on. [P 193 C 1]

J. Sen — for Appellants.

T. L. Sheode — for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—On 4th March 1924 Ranjit Singh, defendant 2, and his brother Umrao Singh mortgaged their house to Jalam Singh for Rs. 1800. In 1929 there was a partition between Ranjit Singh and Umrao Singh at which this house was allotted to Ranjit Singh, and on 18th December 1929 Ranjit Singh on behalf of himself and his two minor sons, the plaintiffs, mortgaged this house for the balance due on the previous mortgage, which was again Rs. 1800. The mortgagee brought Civil Suit No. 205 of 1933 against Ranjit Singh and his two sons to enforce the second mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The present suit has been brought by the sons of Ranjit Singh for a declaration that they have a two-third share in the above house which is not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree.

The plaintiffs, who were parties to the suit in which the mortgage decree was obtained, contend that they are not bound by the decree in that suit because their guardian ad litem was grossly negligent in not raising the plea that the debt incurred in 1924 was avyavaharika. It has been found that the money was borrowed in order to buy a motor to ply for hire. The learned Additional District Judge has held that this was a new business as Ranjit Singh was up till then a mason and a cultivator and that a debt incurred in order to start a new business is avyavaharika. The learned Additional District Judge's view seems to be that any debt incurred which is tinged with illegality or immorality is avyavaharika. That view cannot be accepted. The question was discussed in 29 N L R 107[1] and it was there stated :

> The word avyavaharika does not merely comprise debts which are illegal and immoral only but all debts which the Court regards as inequitable or unjust in point of Hindu law to make the son liable.

I do not think that it was ever intended to lay down the proposition that all debts except those for legal necessity or family benefit are avyavaharika, and Colebrooke's definition of avyavaharika debt as being "for a cause repugnant to good morals" was cited without disapproval. In 49 Mad 211[2] it was held that pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debts extends to commercial debts and that no one could pretend that the contrary view would be entertained today. In Mayne's Hindu Law at page 409, Edn. 10, there is the following comment :

> When Gautama says that a father's commercial debts need not be repaid by the son, he is certainly not referring to the debts incurred in the usual course of carrying on a business or trade but evidently to sums borrowed for speculative and hazardous ventures, involving something like gambling. For Gautama himself recognizes traders and their usages or laws and almost every Smriti does the same. . . . . It is impossible therefore to believe that commercial debts in the ordinary sense were regarded by Gautama as improper and no other Smriti refers to it. Interpreting the term as a commercial debt, the Courts have however held the rule to be obsolete.

1. Rajeshwar v. Mangniram Gangabisan, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 89=142 I C 242=29 N L R 107.
2. Achutaramayya v. Ratnajee Bhootaji, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 323=92 I C 977=49 Mad 211 =50 M L J 208.

I find it difficult to understand why anybody should say that the purchase of a motor to ply for hire was repugnant to good morals and I hold that the debt was not avyavaharika. In the previous case in appeal from Civil Suit No. 205 of 1933 this plea was taken before Staples A. J. C., who held that the debt was not avyavaharika. That finding is binding on the plaintiffs.

Once it is held that the debt is not avyavaharika it follows that the second mortgage which was executed for an antecedent debt is binding on the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' suit must therefore fail, though not for the reasons given by the learned Additional District Judge, and the appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 45.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 193

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Ganpatrao Madhorao Hatker and others—Plaintiffs—Appellants.

v.

Sheikh Badar Farid Musalman and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 8 of 1937, Decided on 10th February 1939, from appellate decree of Digby J. in S. A. No. 163 of 1937, D/- 2nd July 1937.

(a) Letters Patent — Practice — Leave — Judge, being satisfied that there is no case to be made out by appellant, refusing to admit second appeal — He is not justified in granting leave to file Letters Patent appeal.

As a rule one does not on motion hearing refuse to admit a second appeal unless one is satisfied that there is no case to be made out by the appellant. If the Court is so clearly satisfied as to even refuse to admit the appeal it is not justified in granting leave to file a Letters Patent appeal which leave is only given as a rule where there is a point of law of difficulty and importance about which Judge entertains a doubt. [P 193 C 2]

(b) Easement — Custom of burial — It is not necessary to establish immemorial user — Certain land used by Mahomedans for burial for 45 years — Court can infer that right to bury dead was granted to Mahomedans in past.

To hold that a good custom has been established it is not necessary to establish immemorial user because the English common law rule of immemorial user is not required to establish a custom in India. The custom must be (1) reasonable, (2) certain and it must be proved that (3) the user was not permissive, (4) the user was not exercised by stealth, (5) the user was not exercised by force, and (6) that the right had been enjoyed for such a length of time as to suggest that by agreement or otherwise the user has become the customary law of the locality. [P 194 C 2]

Where the suit land has been used by Mahomedans as a burial ground for 45 years, the Court is bound to infer that at some time in the past there was granted to this Mahomedan community the right to bury their dead in the suit land : 17 All 87; 20 Mad 389; 23 Bom 666; 33 All 257 and L. P. A. No. 31 of 1936, Rel. on. [P 194 C 2; P 195 C 1]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 26 — Act does not exclude other modes of acquiring easements.

The Limitation Act is remedial, and is neither prohibitory nor exhaustive. A man may acquire a title under it who has no other right at all, but it does not exclude or interfere with other titles and modes of acquiring easements : 6 Cal 394 (P C), Rel. on. [P 195 C 1]

M. R. Bobde—for Appellants.

A. Razak Khan—for Respondents 1 to 5 and 9.

Judgment.—This Letters Patent appeal comes before us in rather unusual circumstances. The learned Judge who granted leave did not hear the appeal but refused to admit it. As a rule, one does not on motion hearing refuse to admit a second appeal unless one is satisfied that there is no case to be made out by the appellant. If one is so clearly satisfied as to even refuse to admit the appeal it is difficult to see how the learned Judge felt justified in granting leave to file a Letters Patent appeal which leave is only given as a rule where there is a point of law difficulty and importance about which the learned Judge entertains a doubt. However the matter has come before us and we must deal with it.

The claim is by certain Hindus for possession of a plot of land as to part of which without doubt there are at the present moment a large number of Mahomedan graves. As to part of it there are no Mahomedan graves. The whole site is part of a field belonging to the plaintiffs who are Hindus. There has been an inspection by a Commissioner and his map appears at p. 50 and his report at page 20. The Judge also made an inspection and his inspection note is at p. 23. It is abundantly plain that in this sort of question that arises here the Judge who has made an inspection has an immense advantage over us. From the inspection notes, the map and the evidence it is apparent that the suit strip is on higher ground than the rest of the field, that the part of the suit strip which contains the tombs is the northern part which is higher than the southern part and that the sourthern part is marked by a neem tree which is surrounded by Massi goddess stones, that part of the southern portion shows signs of recent cultivation and disturbance but that for the most part it shows signs of cultivation and no disturbance. The learned lower Appellate Judge found as a fact that over the suit land (which means not only the northern portion, but the southern portion also) there had been burials by the Mahomedan community extending over a period of 45 years. The learned Judge considered whether that founded a good customary easement and he came to the conclusion that it did not because to establish such an easement or right it was necessary to prove immemorial user and 45 years is not immemorial. But although he found that there was no custom he found that the defendants had acquired a prescriptive right. The learned Judge from whose order dismissing on motion hearing the appeal this appeal is brought based his opinion on the view that as the defendants had used the plot in suit, that is to say both the northern half and the sourthern half as a burial ground for the last 45 years they had established a customary right and that one must conclude from such a user that they had exercised that right from time immemorial. Against that order this appeal is brought.

The ground of appeal is that the right in question is not a customary right which can be acquired by user, that you cannot acquire the right to bury the dead by custom, that the Judge was wrong in disagreeing with the lower Appellate Court that immemorial user was not established, that the claim based on customary right was inconsistent with the claim of title by adverse possession, that 40 years' user was not enough to establish custom and that the necessary elements giving rise to customary rights were neither pleaded nor proved. Before us the point is taken that what was pleaded by the defendants was a customary easement and that you cannot have a customary easement within the meaning of the Easements Act without a dominant tenement and that there is no proof of a dominant tenement here. There is no pleading as to customary right as distinct from a customary easement (see Ss. 2 and 18, Easements Act). Therefore the defence that there is here a customary right established cannot be entertained. It was also argued that one cannot acquire a right of burial by prescription. In point of fact, as we understand this case, the right is claimed as a right founded on custom and 23 Bom 666[1] is relied on. See also 13 A L J 1094.[2] In our opinion, the difficulty that was felt by the lower appellate Judge in holding that there was here a good custom established, viz. that it is necessary to establish immemorial user, was founded on a misapprehension of the law. As Peacock observes in his "Law Relating to Easements in British India" (Edn. 3) p. 33 :

> The Easements Act does not say how a local custom may be established. But it has been laid down by the Courts that the English Common law rule of immemorial user is not required to establish a custom in India.

See 17 All 87[3] at page 92, 20 Mad 389,[4] 23 Bom 666[1] and 33 All 257.[5] When dealing with Sec. 18, that is to say customary easements, this Bench laid down in L. P. A. No. 31 of 1936[6] the following requisites : The custom must be "(1) reasonable, (2) certain," and it must be proved that > (3) the user was not permissive, (4) the user was not exercised by stealth, (5) the user was not exercised by force, and (6) that the right had been enjoyed for such a length of time as to suggest that by agreement or otherwise the user has become the customary law of the locality.

Here, in our opinion, the finding is binding on us for two reasons: (1) this is a Letters Patent appeal from a second appeal, and (2) the point is not taken in the grounds of appeal. We are bound by the finding of fact, viz. that the suit land has been used, as a burial ground for 45 years as that, in our opinion, must mean this: bearing in mind the inspection note and the plan that has been made in this case although the graves do not occupy the whole of the suit land the whole of the suit land has been treated as a grave-yard in which the dead have been interred. We think that on those facts we are bound to

1. Mohidin v. Shivlingappa, (1900) 23 Bom 666 =1 Bom L R 170.
2. Mathura Prasad v. Karim Baksh, (1915) 2 A I R All 402=31 I C 805=13 A L J 1094.
3. Kuar Sen v. Mamman, (1895) 17 All 87=1895 A W N 10.
4. Palaniandi Tevan v. Puthirangonda Nadan, (1897) 20 Mad 389.
5. Shadi Lal v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan, (1911) 33 All 257=9 I C 198=8 A L J 10.
6. Karimbux v. Shamrao, L.P.A. No. 31 of 1936.

infer that at some time in the past there was granted to this Mahomedan community the right to bury their dead in the suit land. As their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in 6 Cal 394[7] at page 403 speaking of the Limitation Act :

> The Statute is remedial, and is neither prohibitory nor exhaustive. A man may acquire a title under it who has no other right at all, but it does not exclude or interfere with other titles and modes of acquiring easements. Their Lordships think that, in this case, there is abundant evidence upon the facts found by the Courts for presuming the existence of a grant at some distant period of time.

The grant would be of the whole strip. The right conferred by the grant would be to put graves therein. The user would of course be over such portion of the strip as within the proof period graves had been dug. But, we think that the Courts have correctly inferred that the right extends over the whole of the suit land. In any case as to what are the boundaries of the suit land, that is essentially a question of fact with which we are not concerned here. The plan made by the Commissioner shows the southern boundary of this strip as extending to the south of the neem tree. The decree of the trial Court however only declares the defendants entitled to bring their dead over the site marked B Z V on the plan at p. 50. That means the plot's southern boundary is fixed five feet north of the southern boundary shown on the plan. Mr. Abdul Razak taking notice of the observations of the Court that it would not be desirable to have within a Mahomedan burial ground a tree that was surrounded by the stones of a Hindu goddess agreed before us that the southern boundary of the strip as a matter of concession should be terminated within five feet to the north of the most northern Massi goddess stone which we are told is near the neem tree. The need for this concession however disappears when it is seen that the southern boundary fixed by the decree is that distance north of the southern boundary shown in the Commissioner's plan. It is accordingly not necessary to vary the decree. The appeal stands dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

7. Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein, (1881) 6 Cal 394 = 7 I A 240 = 7 C L R 529 = 4 Sar 199 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 195

GRUER J.

Kamruddin Yusaf Alli Bohra and another — Defendants — Applicants.

v.

Municipal Committee, Khandwa — Plaintiff — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 81 of 1938, Decided on 8th December 1938, for revision of decree of Small Cause Judge, Khandwa, D/. 23rd December 1937.

(a) Municipality — C. P. Notification No. 5931-1924-M-8, dated 25th October 1932, Sch. 2 (e)—Ammonium Sulphate and Sulphate of Potash are chemicals taxable under Sch. 2 (e) even if they are used as manure.

Ammonium Sulphate and Sulphate of Potash are chemicals taxable under Sch. 2 (e) of Notification No. 5931-1924-M-8, dated 25th October 1932, and the mere fact that they are to be used as manure does not take them out of the category of chemicals. There is nothing in the notification to show that manures as such are exempted if they fall under a head which is taxed. A chemical does not cease to be a chemical because it contains impurities. [P 196 C 1]

(b) Estoppel—Chemicals taxable by Municipality with terminal tax—Consignment received by shopkeeper but not taxed at that time — Shopkeeper selling his goods on this basis— Municipality subsequently is not estopped from holding shopkeeper liable for tax.

There cannot be an estoppel on a point of law. [P 196 C 1]

According to the Rules of a Municipality certain chemicals were liable to terminal tax. A shopkeeper received consignments of these chemicals but at that time he was not taxed. He therefore concluded that he was not liable to tax and sold his goods on this basis. Subsequently the Municipality claimed from him certain amount as terminal tax on the consignments :

Held that the Municipality was not estopped from holding the shopkeeper liable for the tax : A I R 1937 P C 114 and (1892) 1 Q B 43, Applied. [P 196 C 2]

Held also that according to S. 115, Evidence Act it would have to be shown that the Committee had intentionally caused the shopkeeper to believe that he was not liable for the tax. [P 196 C 1]

(c) Estoppel — Wrong representation to oneself is no estoppel.

If a person had been making wrong representations to himself, this is no estoppel. [P 196 C 2]

Fida Hussain — for Applicants.

Abdul Razak — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The claim of the Municipal Committee, Khandwa, against the defendants-applicants, Kamaruddin and Akbarali has been decreed for Rs. 322. This amount was claimed as a terminal tax at annas eight per maund on various consignments of Ammonium Sulphate and Sulphate of Potash imported by the defendants through Khandwa railway station for their shop in Khandwa during the years 1933 to 1935. The two questions for decision are whether these substances are chemicals which are taxable under Sch. 2 (e) of Notification No. 5931-1924-M-8, dated 25th October 1932, and secondly whether the plaintiff Municipal Committee is now estopped from holding the defendants liable. On the first point I have no doubt that the decision of the lower Court is correct. The defendants say that these consignments were imported as artificial manure, but the mere fact that they were to be used as manure does not take them out of the category of chemicals. There is nothing in the notification to show that manures as such are exempted if they fall under a head which is taxed. A chemical is described in the dictionary as a substance obtained or used in chemical operations. These substances were manufactured by the Imperial Chemical Company of Bombay. Also, in the dictionary "Ammonium" and "Sulphate" have the abbreviation "chem," after them which means "in Chemistry." In common parlance they are well-known chemicals. The evidence which defendants have attempted to give to the contrary is useless. A chemical does not cease to be a chemical because it contains impurities.

On the second point also, I agree with the lower Court that no estoppel is made out. There cannot be an estoppel on a point of law, and also according to Sec. 115, Evidence Act, it will have to be shown that the committee had intentionally caused the defendants to believe that they were not liable for the tax. Defendants' contention is only that as they were not taxed at the time they concluded that they were not liable and sold their goods on this basis: they are prejudiced because if they had known that the tax will be recovered they would have charged higher prices to their customers. Learned counsel for the non-applicant has referred me to a Privy Council case from Canada, which is very apposite. This is reported in A I R 1937 P C 114.[1] In that case the appellants had charged the respondents for use of electric energy required in the manufacture of ice cream and other products. By mistake the calculation was based on the actual dial reading of the electric meter, whereas in order to arrive at the correct amount of electric energy it was necessary to multiply the dial reading by 10. The respondents were therefore charged only 1/10 of what they ought to have been. The principles on which the plea of estoppel was negatived were that the appellants were not intending to induce any course of conduct on the part of the respondents other than the payment of the amounts stated to be due, and secondly that such a plea cannot enable the defendant to escape from a statutory obligation of such a kind, as the duty of each party was to obey the law. A similar case was quoted before their Lordships, (1892) 1 Q B 43,[2] in which a municipal body under a mistake of law had sent demands to a railway company for only one-third of the sums legally due. The error continued for four successive years, and in the fifth year when steps were taken to recover the amounts unpaid the company set up an estoppel based on the contention that it had acted on the statements sent to it and paid out the money in dividends, but the estoppel was disallowed. The same principles must apply to the present case.

There are also peculiar circumstances in this case which show that the defence is inequitable. During the period when these consignments were being received one of the defendants Kamaruddin was himself Chairman of the Tax Sub-Committee of the Municipality. In that capacity it was no doubt his duty to see to the proper collection of taxes, and he had a very special duty cast upon himself to see that the taxes for which he himself or his shop was liable were duly collected. Even if such goods were not being taxed previously or if there had been no such consignments before this —the record is not very clear on this point —still he ought to have been aware that prima facie such products did fall under the heading "chemical" and were taxable. As he was in a position to direct the actions of the Octroi Moharrir in the matter he is in no better position than if he had been making wrong representations to himself, which of course is no estoppel, and as he is one of the partners in the shop his brother, the other partner, likewise cannot be heard in equity on this defence. The decision is a correct and just one. The application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

1. Maritime Electric Co. Ltd. v. General Dairies, (1937) 24 A I R P C 114 = 168 I C 616 (P C).

2. Reg. v. Blenkinsop, (1892) 1 Q B 43= 61 L J M C 45 = 66 L T 187= 40 W R 272=56 J P 246.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 197

NIYOGI J.

T. Rajlu Naidu — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

M. E. R. Malak — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 374 of 1936, Decided on 21st December 1938, from appellate decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 15th April 1936.

(a) Second Appeal—Court considering documents as pieces of evidence involving no question of construction—Inference of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal.

When the Court only considers various documents as mere pieces of evidence involving no question of construction, its inference of fact is not open to challenge in second appeal : A I R 1931 Nag 189, Rel. on. [P 198 C 2]

(b) Easement — Suit by person for specific performance on basis of agreement of sale of certain land in his favour — This does not preclude him from claiming easement in respect of that land.

It is true that a person who enjoys a right under the belief that he is an owner, does not acquire an easement. A right of easement is a right which is capable of being acquired in respect of other's land and not one's own : A I R 1915 P C 131, Rel. on. [P 199 C 1,2]

But the mere fact that the person claiming easement had previously filed a suit for specific performance on the basis of an agreement of sale alleged to have been executed in his favour affecting the land in respect of which the right of easement is claimed by him does not preclude him from claiming the easement, because an assertion of a personal right against the owner does not imply an assertion of a right in the property. It is only an equitable right which is remote from ownership : A I R 1932 Bom 513, Disting.; A I R 1926 Mad 728 (F B), Rel. on. [P 199 C 2]

(c) Easements Act (1882), S. 15—Long user of right of way—Relation between parties not indicating that user was attributable to leave and license—User is presumed to be as of right.

It is no doubt incumbent on the person claiming easement to establish that his user was as of right but the law presumes that it is as of right, that is to say it has a lawful origin, if he proves open and notorious user. On proof of the fact of enjoyment from time immemorial there must arise a presumption of a legal origin for the right claimed. Hence where a person had been exercising his right of way for himself, for his servants and for his carts from remote past as appurtenant to his shop and relations between the parties were not such as to indicate that the user was attributable to leave or license, it must be presumed that his user was as of right : Case law referred. [P 200 C 1,2]

 (d) Easements Act (1882), S. 15 — Person by prescription acquiring right of way for himself, his servants and carts — Right of way cannot be presumed to include passage for sweepers.

The presumption of constructive enjoyment can no more be made in favour of a person acquiring easement by prescription than the presumption of constructive possession be made in favour of a trespasser acquiring prescriptive title. If there is a grant, it is construed against the grantor but in case of prescriptive right, its extent must be measured and determined by the accustomed user. It is on this principle that a servitude acquired for one purpose cannot lawfully be used for another. Hence where a person has by prescription acquired a right of way on other's land for himself, his servants and carts, the right of way cannot be presumed to include the passage for sweepers. Nor can such a presumption be based on the circumstances that the houses occupied by the parties had at one time belonged to a common owner unless the way was necessary for enjoying the tenement which was purchased by the person claiming easement. Moreover, right of way is not a continuous and apparent easement. The case therefore cannot fall within the terms of S. 13 (f), Easements Act. Nor can it be presumed that the way is for all purposes on the ground of its being a common way because it is only when the land that is used for passage is found to belong to both the neighbours that the way might be presumed to be used for all purposes : 13 Cal 136 (P C); 24 Bom 188 and A I R 1920 Bom 233, Rel. on. [P 201 C 1,2; P 202 C 1]

(e) Easement — Easement of necessity explained.

An easement of necessity is one without which the property retained upon the severance cannot be used at all; it is not one which is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of that property: (1902) 2 Ch 557, Rel. on. [P 201 C 2]

(f) Deed — Construction — Discrepancy between dimensions and boundaries—Area specified within boundaries will pass.

In case of a discrepancy between dimensions and boundaries the area specified within the boundaries will pass, whether it be less or more than the quantity specified : 15 C P L R 163, Rel. on. [P 202 C 2]

(g) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 120 and 142 — Gallery of person's house encroaching on land of other person — Latter bringing suit against former for relief under S. 54, Specific Relief Act coupled with prayer for possession of land beneath gallery — Suit is not governed by Art. 120.

Whether Art. 120 or Art. 142 would come into operation depends upon the nature of the relief claimed. If a gallery of a person's house encroaches upon another's land he is unquestionably a trespasser in view of the maxim "whosoever has the soil, also owns to the heavens above and to the centre of the earth." Hence, where the owner of the land on whose land the gallery encroaches brings a suit for relief under S. 54, Specific Relief Act coupled with claim for possession of land beneath the gallery to which the person making encroachment has asserted his title, the suit is not governed by Art. 120 : 13 Mad 445; 26 All 391; A I R 1925 Bom 373; A I R 1926 Nag 25 and 33 Cal 303, Disting. [P 202 C 2]

M. R. Bobde, M. B. Kinkhede and A. D. Mande — for Appellant.

D. T. Mangalmurti and S. R. Mangrulkar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal and Second Appeal No. 381 of 1936 arise out of a suit filed by the appellant in this appeal, which had been dismissed in toto by the original Court but was partially decreed in the lower Appellate Court. This judgment governs the disposal of both the appeals. The parties now own premises which are adjacent to each other. At one time, the land comprising them was owned by Mt. Laxmi Devi, appellant's sister. On 11th April 1908 she sold a portion of the premises to the respondent's father, who about the year 1922 constructed a building which is now known as the Sadar Bazar Mahdibagh Shop on a part of the site purchased by him. Laxmi Devi sold the residue of the premises to the appellant under sale deeds, dated 24th June 1919, 5th March 1921 and 22nd October 1927. The appellant's case was that the respondent, while constructing his building in 1922, encroached upon Laxmi Devi's land along the whole length of the southern wall varying in breadth from 1½′ to 9¾′ and along the whole length of the western wall from 1¼′ to 4¼′, that he constructed a wooden gallery projecting from the western wall, that he opened some windows and ventilators in the ground and first floors of his building and constructed a bathroom and a lavatory touching the southern wall of his building with the night-soil aperture opening on the appellant's land, that the respondent was wrongfully using the open space lying between the two premises as passage for his carts and sweeper; that he had also further encroached on the appellant's land by constructing pucca drain and two chabutras with steps below two doors D-1 and D-2 (marked in the map). The suit was hotly contested by the respondent and it was wholly dismissed in the trial Court.

The lower Appellate Court granted a decree to the appellant as follows: (a) The respondent shall remove the gallery on the west; (b) he shall fix the shutters of the door above that gallery and the windows below that gallery, in such a way that they open inside his building and not on the land of the appellant; (c) if the respondent fails to carry out these directions, the appellant will be at liberty to get them carried out through Court at the expense of the respondent; and (d) the respondent is perfectly restrained from making, use of the land on the south of his building as a way of sweeper for cleaning his latrine. The rest of the appellant's claim was dismissed. Both parties have filed separate appeals. I shall first deal with the plaintiff's appeal. Two points are pressed: (1) that the respondent encroached towards his southern side by building a part of his shop, drain, chabutras etc., (2) that the respondent did not acquire right of way for the passage of carts over the open space intervening the two premises.

The first point does not involve any question of law. The lower Appellate Court compared the extent of the area covered by the respondent's building with the measurements and other description contained in his sale deed, dated 11th April 1908 and came to the conlcusion that he had encroached on 3′ 7″ of land. It however found the encroachment to be towards the northern side of his building. That sale deed mentions the existence of a verandah and steps leading up to it on the southern side. The western and southern boundaries are described therein as being respectively the site and house of Laxmi Devi and the Avar (compound) and tabelas (stables) of Laxmi Devi. Examining the sale deeds in favour of the appellant the lower Appellate Court found that the appellant was entitled to 87′ north to south along the Residency Road, but that he was actually in possession of 89′ 2″, that is, 2′ 2″ in excess of what was transferred to him. This conclusion of fact is assailed here on the ground that the lower Appellate Court misunderstood the various instruments of title. It was pointed out in 27 N L R 213[1] that when the Court only considers various documents as mere pieces of evidence involving no question of construction, its inference of fact is not open to challenge in second appeal. It must be borne in mind that the lower Appellate Court's finding is concurrent with that of the original Court and it receives support from the recitals in the appellant's sale deeds of 1919 and 1927 (Exs. P-2 and P-3) as to the boundaries of premises sold to the appellant. The land sold to the appellant was described as being bounded inter alia by the Mahdibagh shop, and there is absence both in the sale deeds and Ex. P-13 of any complaint as to this particular encroachment by the respondent. There are also other considerations in support of the lower Appellate Court's finding but it is unnecessary to go into further details as I am not satisfied that the finding is vitiated by any error of law or that it is otherwise manifestly unreasonable or perverse.

1. Sheonarayan v. Dindayal, (1931) 18 A I R Nag 189=134 I C 673 = 27 N L R 213.

The other point relating to easement no doubt raises a question of law. The lower Appellate Court's finding is that the open space lying between the two buildings had been used as a passage for the respondent, his servants and carts from 1908 onwards and that he had acquired a right of way to that extent as an easement before the institution of the suit in 1933. It is urged for the appellant that the user was not proved to have been as an easement and as of right. It is necessary here to refer to a litigation between the parties which commenced in 1927 and terminated in 1931. The respondent filed a suit for specific performance on the basis of an agreement of sale alleged to have been executed by Laxmi Devi in respondent's favour on 9th August 1927 affecting the land in respect of which the right of easement is claimed by him. It is argued that inasmuch as in that suit the respondent asserted his claim as owner of the land, he could not be deemed to have used it as an easement. Reliance is placed on 49 Mad 820,[2] 56 Bom 427[3] and A I R 1935 Cal 282.[4] The first case negatives the contention, the last one is not in point. In the intermediate one, the person who claimed the right of easement claimed also the ownership of the land. It is now a well-established rule of law since it was enunciated in (1915) A C 599[5] that a person who enjoys a right under the belief that he is an owner, does not acquire an easement. A right of easement is a right which is capable of being acquired in respect of other's land and not one's own. But was this the case here? The right which the respondent asserted in his suit for specific performance was a right in personam against the contracting owner. S. 54, T. P. Act, lays down in clear terms that an agreement to sell does not of itself create any interest in or charge on the property. It is evident that an assertion of a personal right against the owner does not imply an assertion of a right in the property. The one is a right in personam, the other is a right in rem. The very object of the suit of the respondent was to acquire title to the land to the exclusion of any other claimant on the basis of the personal right which the contract of sale created in his favour. It is therefore inaccurate to say that from the time he instituted his suit in 1927 he had the animus of an owner when he exercised his right of passage as before. He was seeking to acquire title which eventually he failed to do. Throughout the course of the litigation he was only asserting an equitable right which is remote from ownership. In 49 Mad 820[2] at page 830 it was observed that a man is not finally precluded from claiming the benefit of an easement merely because in the course of legal proceedings he made an unfounded claim to be owner. Their Lordships further pointed out that the question of onus was one of fact. If that is so, it must, in the circumstances of the present case, be held that the defendant did not claim to be owner while he was exercising his right of way. The appellant's contention must therefore fail.

The next question is whether the right of passage was enjoyed as of right. Reference is made to 16 Bom 592[6] and 8 C W N 359.[7] In the first mentioned case the person who claimed to have acquired a right of easement claimed it by right of ownership which, in that case, was held to be inconsistent with enjoyment as of right as an easement. In the present case, the defendant never claimed ownership of the land as has been shown already and consequently this case has no application. In the other case, the original Court's finding was that there was no proof of the existence of any way and that even if there was any, it could not be as of right but was permissive. The first Appellate Court failed to determine the question whether the user was permissive or as of right. It was rightly observed that the burden lay on the claimant to prove that his user was as of right but it was clearly indicated that the onus could be discharged by the proof of circumstances which would found a presumption that the user was as of right and not permissive, with due regard to the habits of the people. The judgment cites

2. Subba Rao v. Lakhshmana Rao, (1926) 13 A I R Mad 728 = 96 I C 968 = 49 Mad 820 (F B).
3. Marghabhai v. Motibhai Mithabhai, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 513=139 I C 571=56 Bom 427= 34 Bom L R 1015.
4. Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Sm. Sachchnanda, (1935) 22 A I R Cal 282 = 155 I C 833 = 60 C L J 412.
5. Attorney-General of Southern Nigeria v. John Holt & Co. Liverpool, Ltd., (1915) 2 A I R P C 131=(1915) A C 599=84 L J P C 98=112 L T 955.
6. Chunilal Fulchand v. Mangaldas Goverdhandas, (1892) 16 Bom 592.
7. Shaikh Khoda Buksh v. Shaikh Tajuddin, (1904) 8 C W N 359.

with approval a passage from an unreported judgment:

> The nature and character of the servient land, the friendship or relationship between the servient and dominant owners and the circumstances under which the user had taken place may induce the Court to hold that the enjoyment was not "as of right" although there is no direct proof that the enjoyment was had with the permission of the servient owner.

It is pertinent to notice here that the learned Judge who decided the case alluded to the rule in England that evidence of mere user over a long period was by itself sufficient to warrant the inference of the user being as of right, but declined to apply it to India in view of the differing habits of the people. It is true that on the point there is a divergence of judicial opinion in India. This view found favour in 19 I C 66,[8] 18 I C 211,[9] 25 I C 499[10] and 56 Cal 927;[11] but, on the other hand, it was not endorsed in 45 Mad 633,[12] 45 Bom 1027,[13] A I R 1925 Lah 344,[14] A I R 1926 Pat 460[15] and A I R 1925 Cal 788.[16] In the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, C. P., it was consistently held that long user itself gave rise to a presumption of right: see A I R 1923 Nag 192,[17] A I R 1925 Nag 270[18] and 16 N L R 76.[19] In our High Court also this view received assent in 20 N L J 12.[20] As pointed out in this case it is no doubt incumbent on the plaintiff to establish that his user was as of right but the law presumes that it is as of right, that is to say it has a lawful origin, if the plaintiff proves open and notorious user. The expression "as of right" was explained by James L. J. in (1881) 17 Ch D 535[21] at p. 584 as meaning "a thing which the claimant was entitled to do under some right or another. On proof of the fact of enjoyment from time immemorial, there must arise a presumption of a legal origin for the right claimed: see 31 Cal 503[22] at p. 509. Regard being had to the weight of the authorities, the appellant's contention must be overruled. There is evidence, though meagre, to sustain the findings of the Courts below that the defendant was exercising his right of way for himself, for his servants and for his carts since 1908 as appurtenant to his shop. The land on which he exercised his right was and is admittedly set apart as a passage. The relations between the parties were not such as to indicate that the defendant's user was attributable to leave or license; on the contrary the circumstances leave no doubt for the inference that it was regarded as a natural and lawful mode of the beneficial enjoyment of his tenement. It must therefore be presumed that his user was as of right. For the foregoing reasons the plaintiff's appeal must fail.

The first point taken in the defendant's appeal is as regards the defendant's right to let his sweeper use the way for purpose of cleaning his latrine. There is ample evidence on the record to sustain the lower Appellate Court's finding that the latrine was built in 1922 at the place where it stands. The question of law which arises is whether the right of way which the defendant acquired as an easement comprised the right to use it also for conservancy purposes. On behalf of the defendant reliance is placed on 7 Cal 665,[23] 38 Mad 141[24] and 57 Bom 186.[25] In these cases the right of easement was granted in general terms and it was held that the grant of a general right of way included the right to admit scavengers to clean the latrine. That is a matter of mere construction of a grant. In the present case the defendant had not

8. Rameshur v. Nut Behari, (1913) 19 I C 66.
9. Baroda Kant v. Sreenath, (1912) 18 I C 211.
10. Ganga Sahai v. Shib Charan, (1914) 1 A I R All 407=25 I C 499.
11. Siti Kanta Pal v. Radha Gobinda Sen, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 542=119 I C 293=56 Cal 927=33 C W N 517.
12. Kunjammal v. Rathnam Pillay, (1922) 9 A I R Mad 5=66 I C 11=45 Mad 633 = 42 M L J 417.
13. Rambhai v. Vallabbhai, (1921) 8 A I R Bom 430=62 I C 65=45 Bom 1027=23 Bom L R 422.
14. Ishaqlal v. Pujarilal, (1925) 12 A I R Lah 344 =86 I C 595=26 P L R 110.
15. Nazir Hussain v. Aulad Haider, (1926) 13 A I R Pat 460=96 I C 1010.
16. Behari Lal v. Ashutosh Banerjee, (1925) 12 A I R Cal 788=87 I C 19=41 C L J 379.
17. Sonba v. Dattatraya, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 192 =71 I C 831.
18. Narain v. Ikram, (1925) 12 A I R Nag 270= 85 I C 81.
19. Ramchandra Rao v. Venkat Rao, (1920) 7 A I R Nag 26=54 I C 936=16 N L R 76.
20. Natharam v. Kalu, (1939) 26 A I R Nag 69= 171 I C 121=I L R (1938) Nag 21=20 N L J 12.
21. Earl De La Warr v. Miles, (1881) 17 Ch D 535 =50 L J Ch 754=44 L T 487=29 W R 809.
22. Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co., (1904) 31 Cal 503=31 I A 75=8 C W N 425=8 Sar 611 (P C).
23. Chunder Coomar Mookerji v. Koylash Chunder Sett, (1881) 7 Cal 665.
24. Venkiah v. Krishnamoorthy, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 795=19 I C 80=38 Mad 141=24 M L J 552.
25. Maneklal Harilal v. Maneklal Gordhan, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 574 = 141 I C 686 = 57 Bom 186=34 Bom L R 1150.

acquired any right of easement under his sale deed (P-2) from Laxmi Devi; nor does he rely on any grant apart from it. He claimed the easement on ground of prescription and he succeeded in proving his acquisition of that right so far as he, his servants and carts were concerned. His user which culminated in his prescriptive right had begun in 1908 when the latrine was not in existence. In the plan submitted by the defendant to the Municipality in 1922 (P-18) a latrine was shown in the extreme north of the west corner, i. e. towards the Dangerfield Road. The lower Appellate Court declined to believe that there was any regular latrine before even at the place shown in the plan. It is significant that Laxmi Devi protested against the construction of the latrine in the place where it stands (see Ex. P-13). The way could not therefore have been used as a sweeper's passage before 1922. It is clear therefore that the user of the land for this purpose began in or after 1922 and the statutory period of 20 years was interrupted by the institution of this suit in 1933. The defendant seeks to escape out of this difficulty by saying that the passage for sweeper must be presumed to have been acquired as being implicit in the general right of way. The answer clearly is that he did not acquire any general right of way but only for particular purposes already specified.

The defendant acquired the servitude by prescription, in consequence of his enjoyment and user in a particular manner and the requisite length of user would only culminate in a right of enjoyment of the particular description and no other. The presumption of constructive enjoyment can no more be made in favour of a person acquiring easement by prescription than the presumption of constructive possession be made in favour of a trespasser acquiring prescriptive title. If there is a grant, it is construed against the grantor but in case of prescriptive right, its extent must be measured and determined by the accustomed user. It is on this principle that a servitude acquired for one purpose cannot lawfully be used for another: see 13 Cal 136[26] at p. 142. S. 28 (a), Easements Act, expressly provides that a right of way of one kind does not include a right of way of another kind. In 24 Bom 188[27] it was held that a right of way enjoyed for agricultural purposes could not be converted into a way for carrying timber. In 22 Bom L R 1131[28] the defendants who had established their right of passage for persons, cattle and carts were held not entitled to use it as a way for sweepers. The argument that the right of way acquired by the defendants should be deemed to have been acquired for all purposes connected with the beneficial enjoyment of his house cannot prevail unless it was proved that it was used for a variety of purposes in general as was explained in the leading case in (1838) 4 M & W 245.[29] The contention that it being a "formed road" its user for a variety of purposes should be presumed was negatived in 26 Cal 311[30] at p. 313. Fry L. J. applied that description in (1888) 20 Q B D 225[31] to the land which was a formed roadway bounded on either side by turf banks and hedges and which, although it ran through defendant's land, had been used by plaintiff for many years and had been from time to time repaired by him. Nor can such a presumption be based on the circumstance that the houses occupied by the parties had at one time belonged to a common owner unless the way was necessary for enjoying the tenement which was purchased by the defendant. Such a right arises by implication of law and is regarded as an implied grant.

I need not dilate on the well-recognized distinction made in this particular species of easements: viz. those which are easements of necessity and those which are merely necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted. An easement of necessity is one without which the property retained upon the severance cannot be used at all; it is not one which is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of that property: see (1902) 2 Ch 557.[32] That is the principle

26. Jadulal Mullick v. Gopalchandra Mukerji, (1886) 13 Cal 136=13 I A 77=4 Sar 713 (P C).

27. Desai Bhaoorai v. Desai Chunilal, (1900) 24 Bom 188=1 Bom L R 658.

28. Chintamani v. Ratanji, (1920) 7 A I R Bom 233=59 I C 426=22 Bom L R 1131.

29. Cowling v. Higginson, (1838) 4 M & W 245=1 H & H 269=7 L J (N S) Ex 265=51 R R 555.

30. Ram Narain v. Kamala Kanta, (1899) 26 Cal 311.

31. Thomas v. Owen, (1888) 20 Q B D 225=57 L J Q B 198=58 L T 162=36 W R 440=52 J P 516.

32. Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co., (1902) 2 Ch 557=71 L J Ch 791=87 L T 381=18 T L R 754.

underlying S. 13 (e), Easements Act. In the present case the latrine was not built until 1922 at the place where it stands, that is 14 years after the defendant's purchase of his house, and it cannot be predicated that he was using the way as a passage for his sweepers at that time. Moreover, right of way is not a continuous and apparent easement. The case therefore cannot fall within the terms of S. 13 (f), Easements Act. An attempt was made to show that it was a way for all purposes for the reason that it was a common way; but, it cannot succeed in view of the fact that the entire land belongs to the plaintiff alone. It is only when the land that is used for passage is found to belong to both the neighbours that the way might be presumed to be used for all purposes (see Peacock's Easements, p. 511, Edn. 3.) The learned counsel for the defendant contended that a part of the land belonged to the defendant as it was not expressly included in the plaintiff's sale deed, Ex. P.5 dated 22nd October 1927. It must first be remarked that the land which was then being actually used as a passage was specifically mentioned in that sale deed and it must follow that the defendant had no title to this particular piece of land. His having filed Civil Suit No. 32 of 1927=19 of 1928 for specific performance itself refutes the contention. For the foregoing reasons, it must be held that the defendant did not acquire the right to use the way as a passage for his sweepers.

The next contention relates to the western gallery overhanging the plaintiff's land and the shutters of the doors and windows, when opened, projecting over the plaintiff's land. In this connexion, it is contended that about 3′ width of land behind the defendant's shop building, i. e. towards the west belonged to the defendant. As I see no error of law vitiating the lower Appellate Court's concurrent finding in this behalf, I cannot interfere with it. It is true that neither of the plaintiff's sale deeds of 1919 and 1927 covers some portion of the land on the south of the defendant's shop building, but the lower Appellate Court has given sound reasons why it should be presumed to have been transferred to the plaintiff. The defendant cannot claim anything more than was actually sold to him. The plaintiff purchased by his two sale deeds the residue of the land, and it must be presumed that Mt. Laxmi Devi, the seller, did not intend to reserve any land for herself. Moreover, in both the sale deeds of 1919 and 1927 (P.3 and P.5) she described the defendant's building as forming the boundary of the land sold to the plaintiff. In case of a discrepancy between dimensions and boundaries, the rule is now well-established that the area specified within the boundaries will pass whether it be less or more than the quantity specified. (See 15 C P L R 163.[33]) The contention must therefore fail.

It is next urged that the plaintiff's suit as affecting the gallery and the shutters is barred by time under Art. 120, Limitation Act. Whether this Article or Art. 142 would come into operation depends upon the nature of the relief claimed. The learned counsel who relies on 13 Mad 445,[34] 26 All 391,[35] 49 Bom 586,[36] A I R 1926 Nag 25[37] and 33 Cal 203[38] would be on firmer ground had the relief been one for injunction simpliciter under S. 54, Specific Relief Act, but, in this case, it is coupled with a claim for possession of land and the defendant also asserted his title to the land beneath the projections. The cause of action under S. 54, Specific Relief Act, is breach of an obligation existing in favour of the owner. If the defendant had admitted the plaintiff's title to the land beneath, the contention would prevail but his attitude has been otherwise. So far as the gallery is concerned, the defendant was unquestionably a trespasser in view of the maxim "whosoever has the soil, also owns to the heavens above and to the centre of the earth." This principle was applied in 29 Mad 511[39] to a case of a cornice overhanging neighbour's land and it was held that the projection constituted a trespass. The gallery has therefore been rightly ordered to be demolished. As regards the projecting shutters the trespass is not so pronounced. It is but nominal and the land is not of any present use to the plaintiff except theoretically as a part of the passage left between the two buildings. Since however the plaintiff is the de jure owner of the 33. Bhayalal v. Dwarka Prasad, (1902) 15 C P L R 163.

34. Kanakasabai v. Muttu, (1890) 13 Mad 445.
35. Waziran v. Babu Lal, (1904) 26 All 391.
36. Imambhai Kamruddin v. Rahimbhai, (1925) 12 A I R Bom 373=87 I C 977=49 Bom 586 =27 Bom L R 503.
37. Nathu v. Sheosa, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 25=89 I C 636.
38. Tituram Mukerji v. Cohen, (1906) 33 Cal 203 =32 I A 185=2 C L J 403=9 C W N 1703= 8 Sar 908 (P C).
39. Rathina Velu v. Kolanda Velu, (1906) 29 Mad 511=16 M L J 281.

land, it is but reasonable that the defendant should pay for his enjoyment of it. I would therefore give him the option either to carry out the lower Appellate Court's order or pay Re. 1 per annum as rent to the plaintiff.

Both the appeals substantially fail and are dismissed with costs. The costs of the Courts below will be paid as ordered by the lower Appellate Court. Counsel's fee Rs. 50 in each appeal.

D.S./R.K. Appeals dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 203

STONE C. J. AND CLARKE J.

Meghaji Jairam Bhate and another — Insolvents — Appellants.

v.

V. D. Bhake, Receiver and another, Creditor — Respondents.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 113 of 1936, Decided on 22nd September 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 4th April 1936.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 37—Receiver applying for annulment of insolvency—Court annulling adjudication and ordering sale of property in receiver's hands for distribution of proceeds among creditors—There was no vesting order—Reverter held subject to condition to distribute proceeds among creditors.

On an application of a receiver for annulment of adjudication the Court passed the following order: " . . . . order that adjudication is annulled subject to the property in the hands of the receiver which will be sold and assets will be distributed amongst the scheduled creditors." The former insolvents applied for the return of their moveable property and account books. There was no vesting order and no person was appointed under S. 37:

Held that the reverter was subject to the condition that the property would be sold and proceeds would be distributed among the creditors and it was all that was necessary: A I R 1933 Pat 84; A I R 1938 Nag 312; A I R 1934 Lah 468; A I R 1935 Mad 826; A I R 1933 Cal 386; A I R 1936 Rang 284 (F B) and A I R 1933 Rang 223 (F B), Disting.; A I R 1931 All 71, Ref. [P 204 C 2]

T. J. Kedar and R. G. Rau — for Appellants.

M. Adhikari and M. D. Khandekar — for Respondents 1 & 2 respectively.

Order.—This matter turns upon the true construction of an order made under the Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 37. In order to understand the point at issue, some facts are necessary. Meghaji and Jamnadas, sons of Jairam Bhate, were adjudged insolvent on 3rd October 1931 and Mr. V. D. Bhake was appointed receiver on 27th April 1932. On 30th April 1932 he filed an application to annul a sale. Apparently (the order sheet is not clear), on 17th February 1934 the sale was annulled and on 28th February 1934, Mr. Bhake filed an application for permission to sell the property the transfer of which was annulled and permission was granted. On the same date he also applied to annul the adjudication and on 13th March 1934 the adjudication was annulled. The order appears in the order sheet for 13th March 1934 as > . . . order that the adjudication is annulled subject to the property in the hands of the receiver which will be sold and assets will be distributed amongst the scheduled creditors.

It will be obvious there is no vesting order made and no person appointed under S. 37 or at all. The application to annul asked that "the property of the insolvents be ordered to vest in the receiver as before." The order as published in the Gazette is a simple annulment order; it is not made contingent or conditional upon anything, no appointee is mentioned. On 29th March 1934, the former insolvents asked for the return of their moveable property and account books in the hands of the receiver. On 26th April 1934, that application was disposed of in the following words:

> As the adjudication is annulled subject to the creditor (sic) whatever assets have been realized and will be (sic) realised will (sic) vest with (sic) receiver for the benefit of the creditors. This application is not maintainable.

Subsequently, property was put up for sale by the receiver and the alienation was challenged on a variety of grounds. These have now reduced to one, viz: Had the receiver power to realize the assets? It should be noted that there is here no such question as arose in A I R 1938 Nag 312.[1] Before the annulment of the adjudication the impugned alienation had been set on one side. The relevant words in S. 37 are:

> Where an adjudication is annulled . . . . dispositions . . . . and payments duly made . . . . acts therefore done, by the Court or receiver, shall be valid; but . . . . the property . . . . shall vest in such person as the Court may appoint, or, in default of any such appointment, shall revert to the debtor . . . . on such conditions (if any) as the Court may, by order in writing, declare.

In our opinion this is not a case of an appointee. There is no vesting order made under Sec. 37. The position is therefore as follows: When a person is adjudged insolvent and a receiver appointed the property of the insolvent is vested by the Court in the receiver. This was done by order of date, 27th April 1932 which runs inter alia as follows : "From to-day the insolvents' estate vests in him (Bhake). The receiver to realize the property . . . ." The receiver did realize the property, set aside an alienation and so forth. The result was that the estate in his hands became X. It is not disputed that at the time of annulment (1) there was a receiver, (2) the receiver had estate X in his hands, (3) X was property belonging to the insolvents' estate vested in the receiver, (4) apart from a vesting in an appointee under Sec. 37, X would have to go back to the insolvents either unconditionally or conditionally. Here a matter of disagreement arises. It is said that the gazetted annulment order is unconditional and therefore the property goes back to the insolvents unconditionally. On the other hand it is said this was a conditional order, or in any case there should now be a vesting order : 15 Lah 698.[2] We consider Sec. 37 is clear on the point. The property, which is vested in the receiver, > shall revert to the debtor . . . . on such conditions (if any) as the Court may, by order in writing, declare.

1. Suleman v. Laxman, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 312 =177 I C 760.

The Court here, by order in writing, has declared the following conditions :

> . . . . . subject to the property in the hands of the receiver which will be sold and assets will be distributed amongst the scheduled creditors.

Though the English is subject to criticizm the sense is reasonably plain. The Court is annulling an insolvency but is providing that there shall be no reverter of the property vested in the receiver under the receiving order to the debtors but that property is to be sold and the proceeds of the sale distributed amongst the creditors. Of course if there were a balance left that balance would go to the debtors the condition having been complied with. But it is said there is a mass of authority against this view.

In 12 Pat 163[3] an order vested the property in the receiver but that order was passed some six weeks after the order of annulment (see at page 169). There was no condition attached. It was held that the concluding words of Sec. 37 relate to the reverter to the quondam insolvent not to the vesting in the appointee. It was decided that the vesting order could be made after the annulment. The point does not arise here because here there has been no vesting order. Here there is a condition attached to reverter and that is all that is necessary. 58 Mad 908[4] at page 924 is concerned with the question whether the appointee is a mere custodian or whether the Court can give him directions enabling him to realize and distribute. We do not want anything we said in A I R 1938 Nag 312[1] to suggest that in our opinion there is no such power. We were not there expressing any view on that point. We were concerned not with a case of realizing property (X in the example above put) but a case of adding to X, Y (property which at the date of annulment was not the debtor's but a third party's)—an entirely different case. This present case is not however concerned with the Court's power to give instructions to an appointee. There is no appointee. This is a case in which the annulment has been made by an order which makes the reverter conditional. 15 Lah 698,[2] is a case of a careless order of annulment made apparently ex parte no person being present. No condition was attached, no appointee mentioned, no vesting order made. The result was that the property reverted to the quondam insolvent unless the error could be corrected by making a vesting order. It was held that such a vesting order could be made. It does not touch this case. 60 Cal 259[5] is a case of an ambiguous order of annulment. No vesting order was made and the only condition imposed was that > the money to the credit of the insolvent's estate be kept in the hands of the Official Assignee pending further order of the Court.

It was held that the intention was to vest the estate in the Official Assignee. It does not touch this case. 14 Rang 254[6] decides that where there is an appointee he holds on behalf of the debtor, not on behalf of the creditors. That is not the present case. Nor were we concerned in A I R 1938 Nag 312[1] with the question whether the appointee holds the property (X in the example given above) forming the estate at the time of the annulment order for and on behalf of the debtor or otherwise. We

2. Ishar Das v. Mt. Fatima Bibi, (1934) 21 A I R Lah 468=153 I C 993=15 Lah 698=36 PLR 499.
3. Chouthmal Bhagirath v. Jokhiram, (1933) 20 A I R Pat 84=141 I C 836=12 Pat 163=13 P L T 775.
4. Veerayya v. Sreenivasa Rao, (1935) 22 A I R Mad 826=158 I C 1060=58 Mad 908=69 M L J 364 (F B).
5 In re Keshab Lal Dhar, (1933) 20 A I R Cal 386=144 I C 214=60 Cal 259.
6. Annamally Chettiar v. R. K. Bannerjee, (1936) 23 A I R Rang 284=163 I C 217=14 Rang 254 (F B).

see great practical difficulties in regarding him as in a position analogous to a bailee but the point does not here arise. So also 11 Rang 287[7] is concerned with an entirely different point, viz. the power to set aside an alienation. 53 All 313[8] is somewhat nearer this case but does not assist the appellant. It follows that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

7. Jaing Bir Singh v. R. K. Bannerjee, (1933) 20 A I R Rang 223=145 I C 320=11 Rang 287 (F B).
8. Panna Lal v. Official Receiver, (1931) 18 A I R All 71=134 I C 848=53 All 313=1931 A L J 18.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 205

GRILLE AND NIYOGI JJ.

M. Abdul Hussain — Applicant.

v.

Mohmad Ebrahim Riza — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 340 of 1938, Decided on 13th February 1939, from order of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/. 25th April 1938.

 Mussalman Wakf Act (1923), Sec. 10— Scope and object of Act explained — When existence of wakf itself is in dispute inquiry under S. 10 cannot be held.

Considering the terms of the enactment and the scope and purpose of the Act it is clear that the Legislature intended to secure merely a record of the extent of income of wakf properties for the purpose of providing some control on the management of properties which are admittedly wakf. It could not have intended to include in its scope the enquiry into the vital question whether the disputed property is wakf property and the person in possession of it is a mutwalli, which are questions of fundamental character such as could be subject-matter of a suit alone. Where therefore the existence of the wakf itself is in dispute the District Judge has no jurisdiction to enquire under S. 10 : Case law referred. [P 207 C 1]

Nisar Ali — for Applicant.

A. V. Wazalwar and S. R. Mangrulkar— for Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application for revision against an order of the District Judge, Nagpur, passed on 25th April 1938 in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 54 of 1937. The question is whether the District Judge has jurisdiction under Sec. 10, Mussalman Wakf Act, 42 of 1923, to enquire into the existence of a wakf when that is in controversy. The applicant made an application under S. 10, Mussalman Wakf Act, alleging that in 1894 a wakf was created by means of a registered deed of certain malik makbuza field situated at Mehdibagh, Nagpur. The non-applicant was alleged to be in possession of the wakf property as mutwalli on behalf of the Bohra Shia Dawoodi Mahomedan community. According to the applicant therefore it was the duty of the non-applicant under Secs. 3 and 4, Wakf Act, to furnish to the Court a statement of particulars in respect of that property and to render an account of the income and expenditure of the wakf property under S. 5 of the Act, and as he failed to carry out his duty as aforesaid the applicant prayed for an imposition of the penalty on him in accordance with Sec. 10 of that Act. The non-applicant denied the existence of the wakf and claimed the property to be his personal property. He questioned the power of the District Judge to try the issue whether the property was wakf property and whether he was the mutwalli of it. The learned District Judge on an elaborate survey of the case law came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction and dismissed the application.

The question came up for consideration before several High Courts in India as will appear from 52 All 167,[1] 57 All 754,[2] A I R 1927 Pat 189,[3] 7 Luck 601[4] and A I R 1938 Pat 137.[5] The general trend of opinion is against the applicant's contention. The cases in which the question received elaborate treatment are A I R 1927 Pat 189[3] and 7 Luck 601.[4] Between these two cases there is a direct conflict of opinion on the question and we have consequently to decide which opinion harmonizes with the intention of the Act. In A I R 1927 Pat 189[3] Kulwant Sahay J. on a consideration of the scope and the terms of the Act expressed the view that the Act applied only to admitted wakf and not to properties which are denied to be wakf properties. In 7 Luck 601[4] the question was considered by a Full Bench of three Judges. Wazir Hasan C. J. and Raza J. were unanimous in holding that Sec. 10 of that Act invests the Court with jurisdiction to try questions

1. Nasrulla Khan v. Wajid Ali, (1930) 17 A I R All 81=118 I C 717=52 All 167=1930 A L J 233.
2. Wahid Hasan v. Abdul Rahman, (1935) 22 A I R All 254=157 I C 1088=57 All 754=1935 A L J 307.
3. Ali Mohammad v. Collector of Bhagalpur, (1927) 14 A I R Pat 189=101 I C 207=8 P L T 233.
4. Mohammad Baqar v. Mohammad Casim, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 210=138 I C 725=7 Luck 601=9 O W N 538 (F B).
5. Nanhe Shah v. Abdul Hasan, (1938) 25 A I R Pat 137=174 I C 152=19 P L T 617.

of title summarily if the Court so wishes to do. It was however conceded that the Act does not lay down any obligation on the Court as to the limits to which it should carry on any enquiry and that it was also open to the Court to decline to launch on an elaborate enquiry if the allegations of parties gave rise to a controversy fit to be determined in a regular suit. In their Lordships' opinion the jurisdiction vested in the Court was discretionary and in view of the facts of that case they took the view that the Court could well exercise its discretion in making an enquiry. With due respect to the opinion of the learned Judges we find considerable difficulty in accepting it. The decision in the circumstances of that case was unexceptionable as the only question which arose in that case was whether or not the will produced in the case purported to create a wakf. It involved no further enquiry than that of interpreting the terms of that document. It cannot reasonably be contended that a Court which has the power to admit documentary evidence would be incompetent to construe its terms. The question however becomes fundamental when a party denies the genuineness of the instrument produced by his adversary or asserts that it has no bearing on his title to or right to hold possession of the disputed property. When such a basic question of title is raised, it is obviously impossible to prescribe any limits to the enquiry. It is ordinarily bound to assume the form of a suit. The question is whether the framers of the Act ever intended to confer such wide powers on the Court.

The answer to the aforesaid question must be found on the proper interpretation of the Act itself. The Act seeks to make provision for the better management of wakf property and for ensuring the keeping and publication of proper accounts in respect of such properties. That being the scope and purpose of the Act, the provisions which follow must be construed so as to keep the effect of the Act within those prescribed limits. S. 2 contains the definition of the words 'mutwalli' and 'wakf' among others. S. 3 imposes an obligation on every mutwalli within six months from the commencement of the Act to furnish a statement containing certain particulars and requires that the statement should be accompanied by a copy of the deed or instrument created thereby or if no such deed or instrument is in existence it should contain full particulars so far as are available of the original nature and objects of the wakf. S. 4 provides for publication of particulars. S. 5 requires the mutwalli to file a statement of accounts within a stated period and S. 6 provides for their audit. Ss. 7 to 9 deal with some minor particulars. S. 10 prescribes penalty for failure on the part of the mutwalli to carry out the duties imposed on him under Ss. 3, 4, 5 and 6. It is pertinent to observe that the word "enquiry" occurs only in Sec. 4 (2) and that too in connexion with the elucidation of further particulars or documents in order that full information may be obtained regarding the original nature of the wakf or the condition of the wakf property. It is clear that Ss. 3, 4 and 10 postulate the existence of the wakf and on that premise the Act makes provisions authorizing the Court to take steps for ensuring the keeping and publication of proper accounts and for the better management of the wakf property. The transparent intention of the Legislature is to provide for effective control and supervision of properties which are admittedly wakf. The power given to the Court is to be exercised to enforce the duties and responsibilities of the mutwalli in respect of the wakf property in his possession and it must be presumed that the Legislature conferred such jurisdiction on the Court as would enable it to attain that object.

The reference to particulars regarding the original nature and object of the wakf in S. 3 does not signify conferral of power to try an issue as to whether certain person is a mutwalli or certain property is wakf. These particulars are required to be furnished only in the absence of the instrument creating the wakf. If the document is produced, a question of its interpretation may arise and if it is not produced it may be open to the Court to enquire into the origin and nature of the objects of the wakf for the purpose of securing a complete information regarding the wakf and that would be incidental to the Court's duty of effectively controlling the management of the wakf. It is remarkable as pointed out by Srivastava, J., in 7 Luck 601[4] that the Act does not contain any provision requiring the Court to enter upon an inquiry as to the existence of the wakf, as is clearly laid down in S. 5, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 14 of 1920. The absence of such a clear provision on an important issue which is bound to arise in cases relating to wakf properties negatives the assumption that the Legislature intended that the Court should deal with the controversy of such a fundamental nature. It is true that if it is held that the Court's jurisdiction is excluded when an alleged mutwalli denies his character as a mutwalli it would defeat the very object which the Legislature intended to attain by enacting this statute, but, on the other hand, it must be remembered that a person on whom a fine is inflicted under Sec. 10 of the Act has no remedy to get back his fine in case he succeeds in getting a declaration in a regular suit that the disputed property is not wakf. In one case there may be no hardship as it is always open to an aggrieved party to seek recourse to his remedy in the ordinary course but in the other case there is positive hardship against which the Act has provided no redress. The Act does not provide for any appeal or revision against orders passed under the Act including that imposing a fine under S. 10. It is inconceivable that the Legislature would give on the one hand wide judicial powers to the extent of adjudicating on issues relating to title and on the other hand denying the aggrieved party the remedy by way of appeal or revision.

Considering the terms of the enactment and the scope and purpose of the Act it is clear that the Legislature intended to secure merely a record of the extent of income of wakf properties for the purpose of providing some control on the management of properties which are admittedly wakf. It could not have intended to include in its scope the enquiry into the vital questions whether the disputed property is wakf property and the person in possession of it is a mutwalli, which are questions of fundamental character such as could be the subject-matter of a suit alone. We are therefore of opinion that where the existence of the wakf itself is in dispute the District Judge has no jurisdiction to enquire under S. 10, Mussalman Wakf Act. We dismiss the application with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

N.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 207

NIYOGI J.

Kashinath Ganesh Teli and another — Appellants.

v.

Ganesh Bhola Teli, Transferee and another, Insolvent — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 34 of 1937, Decided on 20th January 1939.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 28 (6) — Power of secured creditor to realize his security does not authorize him to secure out and out sale of equity of redemption from insolvent in satisfaction of his own charge decree — Such sale during pendency of insolvency proceedings is void.

The power of the secured creditor to realize his security does not authorize him to secure an out and out sale of the equity of redemption in satisfaction of his own charge decree, because the equity of redemption after adjudication vests in the Court under S. 28 (2) and thereafter the insolvent becomes wholly incompetent to deal with the property. To be able to dispose of interest in the property the transferor must have subsisting interest in it. When the interest devolves on somebody else by operation of law it could not validly be transferred by the person after he is divested of it. Since by virtue of sub-s. 7 of S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, the order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from the date of the presentation of the petition under which it is made, the transfer made by the insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency in full satisfaction of charge decree must be pronounced to be void and inoperative: A I R 1927 P C 108, Rel. on ; A I R 1926 Nag 29, Expl.; A I R 1921 All 232, held overruled by A I R 1927 P C 108. [P 208 C 1, 2; P 209 C 1]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 53 and 54 — Transfer made after presentation of creditors' petition on which order of adjudication is passed is not covered by Ss. 53 and 54.

Sections 53 and 54 deal with transfer which is voidable at the option of the creditors. The transfer which is made after the presentation of the creditors' petition on which an order of adjudication was passed, is void ab initio and is not covered by S. 53 or S. 54. [P 209 C 1]

W. R. Puranik, R. K. Rao and M. D. Khandekar — for Appellants.

B. R. Mandlekar and R. N. Padhye — for Respondent 1.

Order. — This is an appeal under S. 75 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, against the judgment passed on 15th December 1936 by the District Judge, Nagpur, in Misc. Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1936. The appellants are the creditors of respondent 2 who was adjudged insolvent on 1st March 1935 on the application made by them under S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act. That application was presented on 27th October 1934.

Respondent 1 Ganesh claimed to be a creditor of Ramchandra on the basis of an award dated 29th June 1934. He instituted proceedings for filing the award and a decree to be passed in terms thereof in the Court of the third Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Nagpur. He obtained a decree whereby the defendant was ordered to pay to him Rs. 863-2-0 in four instalments of Rs. 215-12-6 payable on 10th November 1934, 10th November 1935, 10th November 1936 and 10th November 1937 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, subject to the condition that in default of any two instalments the whole amount would become exigible. That debt was declared a charge on the defendant's two houses which are particularized in the decree. On 13th February 1935, Ramchandra during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings sold the two houses to respondent 1 Ganesh professedly in full satisfaction of the charge decree passed against him. That sale deed recites repayment of Rs. 263-2-0 leaving a balance of Rs. 600 to liquidate which the two houses were sold. The appellants applied on 4th May 1935 for annulment of the sale dated 13th February 1935 under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. The Court of first instance passed an order annulling the sale but the lower Appellate Court, having taken the view that the power of an incumbrancer to realize his security was not affected by the adjudication order, reversed the original Court's order and dismissed the creditors' application.

I find it difficult to uphold the lower Appellate Court's order. It took the view that S. 28 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act, operates to prevent the vesting of the insolvent's interest in the property in the receiver. The learned counsel for the respondents has addressed vigorous argument in support of the lower Appellate Court's view and contended that the power of the secured creditor to realize his security authorized him to secure an out and out sale of the equity of redemption in satisfaction of his own charge decree. He relied on 43 All 555[1] and A I R 1926 Nag 29.[2] It was indeed held in the last mentioned case that the power to realize security embraces the power to effect a private settlement. In that case, during the pendency of the proceedings in insolvency, the insolvent executed a mortgage in favour of a third party to pay off the first mortgagee and the issue as to the validity of that mortgage was raised in a suit filed on the foot of that mortgage. Although the learned Judges who decided that case took the view set forth above they qualified it by the remark that neither the receiver nor the Court that had appointed the receiver took any objection to the mortgage. That means that the learned Judges were of opinion that the second mortgage executed by the insolvent was not valid unless it was consented to by the Insolvency Court or the receiver.

The other case relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents overlooks the important qualifying observation made in 43 All 555[1] when it followed that case. At all events the view enunciated in 43 All 555[1] must now be regarded as overruled by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 54 Cal 595.[3] In that case a suit to enforce a mortgage was instituted against the insolvent alone without the receiver being impleaded in the suit, and on the question as to the validity of the decree as against the receiver the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court interpreted S. 16 (5) of the old Act which corresponds to S. 28 (6) of the Act of 1920 as entitling a secured creditor to deal with the security as though there had been no vesting in the Court or the receiver. Their Lordships of the Privy Council unequivocally disapproved of that construction and pointed out that although the rights of the secured creditor over a property are not affected by the adjudication order, that does not in the least imply that an action against him may proceed in the absence of the person to whom the equity of redemption has been assigned by the operation of law. Their Lordships further emphazised the point by the observation that the official assignee alone is entitled to transact in regard to the equity of redemption for the reason that he and not the insolvent has the sole interest in the subject-matter of the suit. Their Lordships took the opportunity to point out further that the contrary view would encourage collusive arrangements between the secured creditor and the insolvent and might involve the sacrifice of valuable equities of redemption which ought to be made available for the benefit of the unsecured creditors.

The lower Appellate Court obviously confused the security with the equity of redemption and overlooked the important fact that the equity of redemption after adjudication vests in the Court under S. 28 (2) and that thereafter the insolvent becomes wholly incompetent to deal with the property. To be able to dispose of interest in the property the transferor must have

1. Shyam Sarup v. Nand Ram, (1921) 8 A I R All 232 = 63 I C 366=43 All 555=19 A L J 511.
2. Ratanlal v. Govinda, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 29 =90 I C 349.
3. Kala Chand v. Jagannath Marwari, (1927) 14 A I R P C 108=101 I C 442=54 I A 190=54 Cal 595 (P C).

subsisting interest in it. When the interest devolves on somebody else by operation of law it could not validly be transferred by the person after he is divested of it. Since by virtue of sub-s. 7 of Sec. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, the order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from the date of the presentation of the petition under which it is made, the transfer made by the insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings must be pronounced to be void and inoperative. The lower Appellate Court was indeed right in holding that the case was not covered by S. 53 or S. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act. Those Sections deal with transfer which is voidable at the option of the creditors but the transfer in the present case, having been made after the presentation of the creditors' petition on which an order of adjudication was passed, was void ab initio as pointed out above. The result is that the lower Appellate Court's order is set aside and that of the original Court restored. Counsel's fees Rs. 40. The respondent will pay the appellants' costs in all the Courts.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 209

NIYOGI J.

Tukaram Manbaji Yeole—Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Shrikrishna Ramratan Marwadi and another — Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 16 of 1937, Decided on 9th December 1938, from appellate decree of 4th Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 24th September 1936.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 55 (6) (b) — Rights of vendee — Sale of minor's property by guardian — Purchaser has charge on minors' property for earnest money paid to guardian who contracts to sell portion of it to remove pressure on minor's estate from creditors.

Where a guardian in order to remove pressure on the estate of the minors who were badgered by their creditors for debts binding on their estates agrees to sell a portion of their property and receives earnest money, the sale contemplated by such agreement is of a nature that is binding on the minors; and if the guardian declines to fulfil the agreement the purchaser is entitled to a charge on the property affected by the contract of sale in his favour to the extent of the minor's interest therein for the amount of any purchase money properly paid by him in anticipation of the agreement being implemented by a regular conveyance. All that the Court has to see is whether or not the sale of the property was dictated by legal necessity or by considerations of benefit to the minors.

[P 210 C 1]

M. N. Gadgil — for Appellant.

V. R. Dhoke — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal from a reversing judgment of the Fourth Additional District Judge, Nagpur, delivered on 24th September 1936 in Civil Appeal No. 38-B of 1935. The facts are that on 18th March 1934, defendant 1, Mt. Radhabai, acting as guardian of her sons, defendants 2 and 3, Shrikisan and Sitaram, entered into an agreement to sell their fields specified in the plaint for Rs. 8750 out of which she received Rs. 500 in cash and the balance was to be received in the shape of an undertaking by the purchaser to satisfy the seller's debts due to other creditors. The defendants having failed to implement the agreement, the purchaser filed a suit out of which this appeal arises to recover Rs. 500 which he had paid as earnest money. He specifically alleged in the plaint that the transaction was for the benefit of the minors. The defendants did not expressly deny that it was beneficial to them and on the contrary through the oral statement made by their pleader admitted that at the time of the contract itself the purchaser had undertaken to pay Rupees 8250 in this way : Rs. 3000 to Bhikulal Nabira of Katol, Rs. 2400 to Govindrao Joshi of Paradsinga and Rs. 2850 to Asaram Mathuradas of Wadona. It is pertinent to notice that the defendants after having broken off the agreement with the plaintiff sold off their fields by two sale-deeds to satisfy the debts of their creditors. Both the Courts below have found that the minors had received benefit, but while the original Court decreed the plaintiff's claim, the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that unless it was charged on the property of the minors as laid down in 13 N L R 109[1] that money was not liable to be paid out of the minors' estate.

I have no doubt that the lower Appellate Court's view is erroneous. All that the Court has to see in such a case as this is whether or not the sale of the property was dictated by legal necessity or by considerations of benefit to the minors. In the present case there is overwhelming evidence to show that the minors were badgered by their creditors. They did not plead that the old debts were such as were not binding on them under their personal law. It was natural for the guardian to remove the pressure of the minors' estate, to have sold a part of their property. It must therefore be held that the sale which was contemplated in the agreement for sale under consideration was of a nature that was binding on the minors.

1. Jhitibai v. Tejmal, (1916) 3 A I R Nag 11=41 I C 35=13 N L R 109.

The only question that remains for consideration is whether the lower Appellate Court's view that unless the minors' estate was specifically charged it could not be liable is correct. That principle was no doubt enunciated in 13 N L R 109,[1] but in 24 N L R 54[2] it was explained by Prideaux A. J. C., who observed that the minor's estate would be liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which he is subject. The proposition is now well-settled that the minor's estate is liable for a debt which is binding on him under his personal law, although the debt may not have been expressly charged on the estate. Mere omission to create a charge on the minor's estate is not by itself material, but in the present case even that consideration does not arise. The guardian mother went much further than merely creating a charge. She entered into an agreement to sell the property and received Rupees 500 as earnest money. Under S. 55 (6) (b), T. P. Act, the purchaser is entitled to a charge on the property affected by the contract of sale in his favour to the extent of the seller's interest in the property for the amount of any purchase money properly paid by him in anticipation of the agreement being implemented by a regular conveyance. In 13 N L R 19[3] Mittra A. J. C. held that a charge which is created under S. 55 (6) (b), T. P. Act, has the same force as if it had been created by act of the parties. There can be no escape from the position that the property is subject to a charge. If so, it is immaterial whether that charge happens to be created by act of parties or arises by operation of law.

Inasmuch as the sale was of a nature binding on the minors and the property comprised in the sale became charged with the purchase money it is evident that the purchaser is entitled to recover his money out of the minor's estate. The lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored. The appeal succeeds with costs of this Court and the lower Appellate Court. Costs of the first Court will be paid as ordered by that Court. Counsel's fees Rs. 30.

S.G./R.K. Appeal allowed.

2. Lalchand v. Narhar, (1926) 13 A I R Nag 31 =89 I C 896=24 N L R 54.
3. Mt. Kesar v. Mt. Munna, (1916) 3 A I R Nag 78=39 I C 50=13 N L R 19.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 210

NIYOGI J.

Shobhalal Shyamlal Kurmi — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Sidhelal Halkelal Bania — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 563 of 1936, Decided on 31st January 1939, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Damoh, D/- 31st October 1936.

(a) Second Appeal — Court has only to see whether evidence is admissible and proper for consideration.

In second appeal the Court is not concerned with the weight that is to be attached to the evidence but whether the evidence is admissible and proper for consideration. [P 211 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 55 (4) (b)—Unpaid vendor's charge — Difference between English law and Indian law explained.

The equity which arises in favour of the vendor who has not received his purchase money is no doubt recognized in English law which gives him a lien, that is a right to enforce payment out of interest he has transferred and this lien continues even after he has parted with the legal estate. The reason is that as soon as the contract of sale is made the seller is deemed to part with the equitable estate, but in India contract of sale does not of itself create interest in or charge on such property. In India the vendor is no doubt entitled to a charge for unpaid purchase money but that is a right which comes into existence not at the date of the contract for sale but on the completion of the conveyance. This charge is created by the statute. Thus while in England the vendor's lien is a creature of equity and is capable of being moulded to suit the circumstances of each case the statutory charge is rigorous and inflexible : 31 Cal 57 (P C), Rel. on. [P 212 C 1]

 (c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 55 (4) (b)—Title passing to vendee — Suit by vendee for possession — Court though cannot pass conditional decree it is open to it, while decreeing possession, to incorporate in decree statutory charge under S. 55 (4) (b) — Vendor can enforce that charge by execution of decree and need not have recourse to separate suit.

Where title in the property has passed to vendee notwithstanding the non-payment of part of purchase money and vendee brings a suit for possession, although it is not competent to the Court to pass a decree for possession conditional on the vendee paying the balance of the purchase money, it is open to the Court, while decreeing possession to the vendee to incorporate in the decree the statutory charge under S. 55 (4) (b) in favour of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money. There is no reason why the unpaid vendor should be driven to a separate suit to recover his unpaid purchase money. When he has a charge on the property which he is called upon to deliver to the purchaser that charge continues to operate upon the property even when the possession of it passes to the vendee. It would therefore obviously be the proper course to avoid multiplicity of litigation, to declare in the decree granting possession to the vendee that it is subject to the charge of the vendor to the extent of the purchase money that remains to be paid. If the decree incorporates this charge it would be open to the vendor to enforce it by seeking execution of that decree: A I R 1932 Bom 247, Foll. [P 212 C 2 ; P 213 C 1]

D. N. Choudhary — for Appellant.

J. R. Mudholkar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from a varying judgment of the Additional District Judge, Damoh, delivered on 3rd October 1936 in Civil Appeal No. 20-A of 1936. The respondent, Sidhelal, executed a sale deed on 7th October 1932 affecting 8 pies share of mouza Tigra Fatehpur, tahsil Hatta, in favour of the appellant. The consideration as recited in the sale deed was Rs. 400 and the vendee undertook to satisfy certain taccavi loans which were charged in the property amounting to Rs. 639-12-6. The conveyance was duly executed and registered but there arose some hitch during the mutation proceedings and the vendor declined to deliver possession with the result that the appellant instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration of his ownership and for possession of the property. The defendant raised various contentions out of which the one that is material for the disposal of this appeal is that he did not receive the consideration which was stated to be Rs. 800 out of which Rs. 160-3-6 were intended to be paid in cash and the balance of Rs. 639-12-6 was to be paid as stated above. The lower Appellate Court found that the real consideration was Rs. 800 and that the vendee, namely the plaintiff, did not pay Rs. 160-3-6. It however held that the title to the property had passed to the vendee and decreed that the property should be delivered to him subject however to his depositing Rs. 160-3-6 into Court for payment to the vendor, the defendant. This appeal is directed mainly against the form of the decree as passed by the lower Appellate Court.

It is contended in the first instance that the lower Appellate Court's finding that the real consideration of the sale was Rs. 800 was at variance with the pleadings and the evidence in the case. I cannot assent to this contention in view of the fact that the defendant in his written statement dated 7th August 1935 clearly averred that as a result of an award by the arbitrators the plaintiff was to pay to the defendant Rs. 160-3-6 in cash and he was further to undertake the liability to pay taccavi loans of Rs. 639-12-6. He further expressly denied receipt of Rs. 160-3-6. The plaintiff pleaded that the consideration was only Rs. 400 but he did not affirm that he had paid this amount to the vendor, but contended that the failure to pay the purchase money did not prevent transfer of title to the vendee and that the appropriate course for the defendant was to file a separate suit to recover the purchase money if not paid. It is true that the evidence regarding the arbitration is not clear or complete but to the extent that there is evidence bearing on the issue it fully sustains the lower Appellate Court's finding. In second appeal I am not concerned with the weight that is to be attached to the evidence but whether the evidence is admissible and proper for consideration. It is not shown that the facts and circumstances considered by the lower Appellate Court were not relevant and proper for consideration. I therefore see no reason to dissent from the lower Appellate Court's finding that the real consideration was Rs. 800 out of which the vendee agreed to pay Rs. 160-3-6 in cash and bear the burden of the taccavi loan amounting to Rs. 639-12-6.

Since the vendee failed to pay the consideration which he agreed to pay in cash the question which arises is whether he is entitled to possession of the property without having to pay the part of the purchase money which he stipulated to pay in cash as a condition precedent to his obtaining possession of the property. In such a case as the present the points which require to be considered are : (1) whether the parties intended that the title should not pass to the vendee unless the vendor received the consideration and (2) if it is found that there was no such intention and that the title passed to the vendee notwithstanding the non-payment of the purchase money whether the vendee is entitled to unconditional possession of the property purchased by him and the remedy of the vendor for recovering his purchase money lies in a separate suit. As to the first point, the respondent indeed contends in support of the lower Appellate Court's decree that the title did not pass to the vendee. In the absence of any pleading to that effect I cannot listen to any such contention. It is also negatived by the plain recitals of the sale deed. I must therefore hold that the title in the property passed to the vendee notwithstanding non-payment of the part of the price as agreed.

As to the next question, it was held in 30 All 125[1] that although the non-payment of the purchase money does not prevent the passing of the ownership of the purchased property from the vendor to the purchaser and the purchaser is entitled to possession, it is open to the Court to subject the decree to restrictions and conditions appropriate to the circumstances of the case. On that view the learned Judges ordered the purchaser in that case to pay to the seller the amount of the purchase money as a condition precedent to the delivery of possession to him. This case was followed in 6 N L R 98[2] in a case of sale to which the Transfer of Property Act 1882 was not applicable. The case in 30 All 125[1] was not followed in 34 Mad 543[3] and for good reasons. The equity which arises in favour of the vendor who has not received his purchase money is no doubt recognized in English law which gives him a lien, that is a right to enforce payment out of the interest he has transferred and this lien continues even after he has parted with the legal estate. The reason is that as soon as the contract of sale is made the seller is deemed to part with the equitable estate, but in India contract of sale does not of itself create interest in or charge on such property: see Sec. 54, T. P. Act. In India the vendor is no doubt entitled to a charge for unpaid purchase money but that is a right which comes into existence not at the date of the contract for sale but on the completion of the conveyance. This charge is created by the statute.

Thus while in England the vendor's lien is a creature of equity and is capable of being moulded to suit the circumstances of each case the statutory charge is rigorous and inflexible. The distinction was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 31 Cal 57[4] at page 72, where they observed that the charge which the vendor obtains under the Transfer of Property Act is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by the Courts of equity to an unpaid vendor. The law in India does not recognize the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which that was understood when the equity was administered by the Court of Chancery in England and the Transfer of Property Act gives a statutory charge upon the estate to an unpaid vendor unless it be excluded by contract. In 34 Mad 543[3] it was held that the only remedy which the unpaid vendor in India could avail himself of is to counterclaim for the enforcement of his charge. As there is no equitable lien recognized in India and though it is recognized in England it is held to be non-possessory, their Lordships of the Madras High Court held that the defendant was bound to deliver possession unconditionally and he was relegated to a separate suit to recover his purchase money. That case was followed in 42 Mad 203[5] and 43 Mad 712.[6] In 56 Bom 556[7] it was held that although in a suit for possession by the vendee of immovable property it is not competent to the Court to pass a decree for possession conditional on the vendee paying the balance of the purchase money, it is open to the Court, while decreeing possession to the vendee to incorporate in the decree the statutory charge under S. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, in favour of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money.

It is true that the unpaid vendor in India is only entitled to a statutory charge provided for under S. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, and that the vendee under S. 55 (1) (f) is entitled to possession, but there is no reason why the unpaid vendor should be driven to a separate suit to recover his unpaid purchase money. When he has a charge on the property which he is called upon to deliver to the purchaser, that charge continues to operate upon the property even when the possession of it passes to the vendee. It would therefore obviously be the proper course, to avoid multiplicity of litigation, to declare in the decree granting possession to the vendee that it is sub-

1. Baijnath Singh v. Paltu, (1908) 30 All 125 = 1908 A W N 38 = 5 A L J 96.
2. Balkrishna v. Shripatsingh, (1910) 6 N L R 98 = 7 I C 541.
3. Velayutha Chetty v. Govindasawmi, (1911) 34 Mad 543 = 8 I C 364.
4. Webb v. Macpherson, (1904) 31 Cal 57 = 30 I A 238 = 6 C W N 41 = 8 Sar 554 (P C).
5. Kandasami Pillai v. Ramasami Mannadi, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 168 = 51 I C 507 = 36 M L J 313 = 42 Mad 203 (S B).
6. Krishnamma v. Mali, (1920) 7 A I R Mad 164 = 56 I C 530 = 43 Mad 712 = 38 M L J 467.
7. Baslingawa v. Chinnava, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 247 = 138 I C 534 = 56 Bom 556 = 34 Bom L R 427.

ject to the charge of the vendor to the extent of the purchase money that remains to be paid. If the decree incorporates this charge it would be open to the vendor to enforce it by seeking execution of that decree. I have therefore no hesitation in following the course adopted in the Bombay case[7] declaring in the decree that the property is subject to the charge in favour of the vendor and that he is entitled to enforce it in execution of the decree against the appellant.

The lower Appellate Court's decree will now be modified in the form described above. As the appeal virtually fails the appellant will pay the respondent's costs of this appeal. Costs of the lower Courts will be paid as ordered by the lower Appellate Court.

D.S./R.K. Decree modified.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 213

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Manaklal Bhimraj Mahesri — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Mt. Phulabai, widow of Bhimraj Mahesri, and another — Defendants — Respondents.

Misc. Appeals Nos. 165 and 171 of 1937, Decided on 16th March 1939, from order of Dist. Judge, Chindwara, D/- 8th April 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 17, R. 2 and O. 9, R. 8—Order under O. 17, R. 2 read with O. 9, R. 8 is not appealable.

If an order is made under O. 17, R. 2 read in with O. 9, R. 8, then it is as though it were an order under O. 9, R. 8 and is not appealable at all. [P 213 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 8 and O. 17, R. 2—Case reaching stage after issue stage has in part been passed—Court is not compelled to exercise its powers under O. 9, R. 8 but can, in doubtful case, make order under O. 17, Rule 2.

Courts should not lightly dispose of litigation without going into the merits. It is also equally plain that Courts are bound in certain circumstances to dismiss cases for default. One case is that indicated in O. 9, R. 8. It is true that when a case reaches the stage after the issue stage has in part been passed, the Court is not compelled to exercise its powers under O. 9, R. 8 but is given power to make another order under O. 17, R. 2, and in any doubtful case the Court should so act. [P 214 C 1]

M. B. Kinkhede, D. W. Kathalay and A. R. Kulkarni — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and R. N. Padhye — for Respondents.

Order. — This order governs Miscellaneous Appeals No. 165 of 1937 and No. 171 of 1937. The first of these appeals is from an order dismissing a suit. The nature of the order we shall examine later. The second of these appeals is from an order passed on an application to restore the suit. A preliminary objection is taken to the maintainability of the first of these appeals on the ground that the order in question was either under O. 17, Rule 3, or under O. 17, Rule 2 read in with O. 9, R. 8. If the first of the two, then clearly the order amounts to a decree which is appealable and indeed an appeal has been admitted and is pending but is not now before us. If the order was made under O. 17, R. 2 read in with O. 9, R. 8, then it is as though it were an order under O. 9, R. 8 and it is not appealable at all. In our opinion, the order in question was passed under the authority conferred by O. 17, R. 2 read in with O. 9, R. 8, and accordingly no appeal lies. The objection is upheld. But although that be so the second miscellaneous appeal does lie and raises the merits of the case sufficiently.

It is next urged that Miscellaneous Appeal No. 171 of 1937 cannot be entertained because the application on which the order was made was untenable. This is founded on the argument that the lower Court in passing its first order was operating under O. 17, R. 3. If that were so, the proceedings ended with a decree dismissing the suit and there could thereafter be no question of applying under O. 9. R. 9 for restoration. As we have already observed the Court operated under O. 17, R. 2 read in with O. 9, R. 8. There is therefore no substance in this objection. That leaves the question whether on an application being made under O. 9, R, 9 read in with O. 17, R. 2, the Court should have restored the suit. The Rule provides that a plaintiff so situate may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that no sufficient cause had been shown. The ground that was taken before him is the same as the ground that has been taken before us. The application was supported by an affidavit to the following effect :

That the plaintiff about a fortnight prior to the date fixed for evidence in the above case got an attack of typhoid and continued to be confined to bed upto 4th March 1937. That on account of the aforesaid illness plaintiff could not attend the Court on 4th March 1937 and was unable to instruct his counsel to examine his witnesses.

There is also a doctor's certificate put in to the following effect :

I hereby certify that I have examined Maneklal, son of Bhimraj, at village Karmadi, who is in extremely debilitated condition as a result of continued type of fever for 14 days (probably paratyphoid fever). He is not in a position to attend Court at least for a fortnight.

This is a claim which has been launched by the plaintiff in forma pauperis. It is a claim for a very substantial amount, approximately a lakh of rupees. It is a claim that is apparently founded upon the plaintiff's right springing out of adoption and the first question for determination was as to the factum of adoption. We gather this from the order sheets and the nature of the preliminary issue that was settled as long ago as 30th November 1936. That question of fact was going to be the subject of keen contest. The plaintiff alone named no fewer than 70 witnesses. The Court, seeing that it was likely to be a lengthy case, set aside a whole week, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10th March, for the hearing of these witnesses. On the very day that the first set of witnesses—and each day had its appropriate witnesses allocated to it were to be examined—counsel appeared for the plaintiff and asked for an adjournment, and on that being refused, said he had no instructions whereupon the case was dismissed.

It may be laid down as a certain proposition which hardly admits of exceptions that Courts should not lightly dispose of litigation without going into the merits. It is also equally plain that Courts are bound in certain circumstances to dismiss cases for default. One case is that indicated in O. 9, Rule 8. It is true that when a case reaches the stage that this had (that is to say, after the issue stage has in part been passed) the Court is not compelled to exercise its powers under O. 9, Rule 8, but is given power to make another order under O. 17, R. 2, and in any doubtful case the Court should so act.

It is however a matter for comment that for some years past in this Province the provisions of O. 17, Rule 1 were almost universally departed from. Those provisions, in our opinion, are extremely salutary. They make for justice, avoid coaching of witnesses, prevent to some extent perjury. Those provisions require that a case, once the witness stage is reached, shall be tried from day to day until it is concluded. If obeyed, long periods do not elapse between the giving of evidence by one side and the giving of evidence by the other or the giving of evidence by one witness and the giving of evidence by another. The strictest instructions have been given to all the Judges in this Province to see that that rule is complied with. Inspections are made to see whether those orders are being obeyed and Judges have their confidential files marked if it is found that they are not obeying those instructions. It is a little hard on Judges to require them to comply with a rule of that nature, and then when they set aside a suitable period (as this learned Judge did) for the disposal of a lengthy witness case for day to day trial, to excuse a litigant whose conduct has resulted in the time thus set apart being wasted. In this case the learned Judge took occasion to inspect the Courts over which he has administrative control. Some Judges would not be in a position to so spend their time. Fixing other cases would be quite impracticable bearing in mind the circumstances appertaining in this Province.

These considerations, powerful as they are, should not however be allowed to destroy a meritorious case where the bona fides are not in doubt and where a sufficient cause for the failure exists. But here there is no doubt that bona fides are completely lacking. It is said that the plaintiff could not instruct his lawyer because he (the plaintiff) was ill. It is within the experience of every one who has been a lawyer that instructions to lawyers are given long before a case is called on in Court, certainly in a case of this type involving the calling alone by one side of 70 witnesses. Here the critical date was 4th March 1937. The application for leave to sue as a pauper, which embodies the plaint, was filed on 9th November 1935. That plaint which is drafted by a pleader could clearly not have been drafted by him unless he received instructions. A preliminary issue was settled on 30th November 1936 after counsel had made statements in Court. Time for filing lists of witnesses was given on 23rd December 1936. On 2nd January 1937 the plaintiff gave a list of 70 witnesses and those witnesses were allocated their various days. It is, in our opinion, obvious that no counsel could array all his witnesses like that putting this man in the first day, that man in the second day and so on unless he had instructions as to what they would say or the sort of evidence they were going to give on the subject they were going to speak about. The question that was going to be spoken to by these witnesses was the factum of adoption. The date of that event was so far back into the past that the plaintiff who is now 20 was then 4. It is manifest that a child of 4 or a man of 20 speaking with the knowledge of a child of 4 with the defects of memory stretching over 16 years to overcome, would not be in a position to give anybody instructions as to the details of the events that occurred at that date. On the other hand the plaintiff's father who would be a prominent participant in the adoption ceremonies would be more likely to be acquainted with what on that date occurred. The plaintiff's father was in the Court on 4th March 1937. The learned Judge suggested to counsel who appeared and asked for an adjournment that he might take instructions from the father if he, the counsel, was not sufficiently acquainted with the case to be able to call witnesses. After consultation the counsel found the father unable to give him any instructions. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe in 24 N L R 182[1] at page 185 :

> Their Lordships cannot agree with the course taken by the Appellate Court. As found by it, there was no "good cause shown" before the lower Court, and without such "good cause shown" it was therefore bound to pass the judgment it did. The Appellate Court do not say that any such "good cause" was shown even before them, and it is difficult to understand, therefore, under what powers they claimed to overrule the lower Court.

We should be opening ourselves to similar criticizm if we in this case overruled an experienced Judge when he concludes that no good cause was shown for the non-appearance. Not only was it not shown to him, but it has not been shown to us. What has been shown to us is (accepting the medical certificate and the affidavit) that the plaintiff was too ill to attend the Court on that day. We have not been shown that he was unable to instruct anybody to appear for him on that date. Unless the work of Courts is to be reduced to chaos, or alternatively, unless the provisions of O. 17, R. 1, are to be given the go-by, some stop must be put to practices such as these—practices which as a rule have as their motive the unfair conduct of litigation. Whether that is so here or not we are not called upon to decide. All that we have to decide is whether the learned Judge was justified in concluding that sufficient cause had not been shown. In our opinion, the learned Judge was quite right in concluding on the evidence before him and the materials on the record that no sufficient cause for non-appearance was shown. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed.

The learned District Judge has, we think, perhaps exceeded what was called for in the matter of costs. But in view of the offer of the defendants-respondents to forgo their entire costs of appeal we let that order as to costs stand as being more beneficial to the plaintiff than half costs in both the Courts which we would otherwise have to award to the defendants.

D.S/.R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Motilal v. Ujiar Singh, (1928) 15 A I R P C 187=109 I C 467=55 I A 207=55 Cal 821=24 N L R 182 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 215

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Janardan Sadasheo Kunbi and others, Defendants — Appellants.

v.

Madanlal Mangulal Marwari and others, Plaintiffs — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 133 of 1937, Decided on 16th March 1939, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Yeotmal, D/- 30th January 1937.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 92—Mortgage split up—Each part should be treated as independent mortgage — Person redeeming any part in full can claim right of subrogation of that part and is entitled to be substituted as decree-holder under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C.

When a mortgage is split up it has to be looked upon as if it were in distinct parts with different considerations assigned to different portions of the property, and it has therefore to be treated as if it were two independent mortgages. Consequently, if there is redemption of either part in full then the provisions of Sec. 92 are complied with so far as that part is concerned. Hence a person who acquires the right of subrogation to such a part of the mortgage is entitled under O 22, R. 10, Civil P. C., to be substituted as decree-holder to the extent of his right : 36 Cal 193, Disting; A I R 1932 Oudh 268, Expl. and Doubted ; A I R 1916 All 81, Ref. [P 216 C 1, 2]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellants.

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Respondents 1 to 4, 7 to 11 and 13.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against an order refusing the right of subrogation to defendants 2 to 5. The facts are as follows : On 23rd December 1930, a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed against 14 defendants. The decree was split up into two parts, the first part directing that if defendants 1 to 14 paid a sum of Rs. 17,687-10-0 on defendant 1's 1/10th share in the mortgaged property then they could redeem that 1/10 share on payment of that sum, also that if defendants 2 to 14 paid a sum of Rs. 8524-7-0 due on the 9/10 share of defendants 6 to 14 in the mortgaged property then these defendants 2 to 14 could redeem that 9/10 share on payment of that sum. There was an appeal against this decree by defendants 6 to 14, the other defendants not appealing. The Judicial Commissioner's Court allowed the appeal and amended the decree of the lower Court in the following way: The modification was that defendants 6 to 14 were to be entitled to redeem their 9/10 share in the mortgaged property on payment of Rupees 4654 and that defendants 1 to 5 were to be entitled to redeem the whole mortgage on payment of Rs. 18,000. In each case some costs were also decreed. Defendants 6 to 14 did not redeem but defendants 2 to 5, who were subsequent mortgagees and had been joined in the suit as such, paid off the Rs. 4654 and costs due on the 9/10 share of defendants 6 to 14 and thereby freed that share from the mortgage. They now claim that having freed that share they are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees as against defendants 6 to 14 and to be brought on the record in that capacity under O. 22, Rule 10. The lower Court holds that there can be no subrogation unless the entire amount of the decree is paid off and relies on 8 Luck 103[1] and on the Proviso to S. 92, T. P. Act. S. 92, so far as is relevant, provides :

> Any of the persons referred to in S. 91 (other than the mortgagor) .... shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

So far as that is concerned the decree has split up the mortgage and has allowed redemption of 9/10 of the property on payment of a certain sum. That portion of the property has been redeemed in full by defendants 2 to 5 and consequently under that part of S. 92 they are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees in so far as that portion of the property is concerned. So far as the Proviso is concerned, it is in these terms :

> Nothing in this Section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full.

That of course assumes that the mortgage has not been split up. When it is split up, the mortgage has to be looked upon as if it were in distinct parts with different considerations assigned to different portions of the property, and it has therefore to be treated as if it were two independent mortgages. Consequently, if there is redemption of either part in full then the provisions of S. 92 are, in our opinion, complied with so far as that part is concerned. That being so, defendants 2 to 5 have the right of subrogation which they claim. If they have that right then they are entitled under O. 22, R. 10 to be substituted as decree-holders to the extent of their right. The learned counsel for the respondents relies on 36 Cal 193[2] but that was not a case in which the mortgage was split up. In that case the subsequent mortgagee paid only part of the price fixed for redemption and claimed subrogation in respect of the amount paid. That is clearly against the provisions of the law even as it stood before the amendment, and consequently the ruling cited does not apply here. As regards 8 Luck 103[1] the facts are somewhat complicated and we are unable to determine whether there had been any splitting up of the mortgage in respect of which the right of subrogation was claimed or not. If there was, then we respectfully dissent from that decision. If there was not, then we are in agreement with it. As far as we can gather from the report the facts were as follows : On 26th July 1912 one Riasat Ali mortgaged a 5 biswa share to four persons, through his guardian, by a deed Ex. 1. On the same day he executed Ex. 2, which is called 'a deed of further charge' in the judgment at page 105 and is referred to later as a mortgage. On 7th October 1915 he mortgaged another 5 biswa share by a deed, Ex. 3, to the plaintiff, also through his guardian. He then died and was succeeded by his mother who had acted as his guardian in the above transactions. She then executed Ex. 4 on 9th February 1917 which is called "a deed of further charge" in one place and a mortgage in another, also to the plaintiff. Having done this she

1. Kanhaiya Lal v. Ikram Fatima, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 268=139 I C 358=8 Luck 103=9 O W N 557.

2. Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh, (1909) 36 Cal 193=1 I C 913=5 C L J 611.

sold the entire 10 biswa share to the plaintiff on 12th April 1917. The consideration for this sale was Rs. 15,000 which was made up as follows: Rs. 2444 "were credited in respect of the amount due to the plaintiff on account of the mortgage deed (Ex. 3) and the deed of further charge (Ex. 4)." Rs. 2050 were left with the plaintiff "for redemption of the mortgage deed (Ex. 1) and the deed of further charge (Ex. 2)." Three sums of Rs. 156, Rs. 3800 and Rs. 466-15-0 were otherwise accounted for "and the rest was to be left in the hands of the vendee for payment to certain creditors of the vendor." Then follows a sentence in the judgment which we are not altogether able to understand.

In 1917 and 1923 Kahaiya Lal (the plaintiff) obtained deeds of release (Exs. 6 and 7) from two out of the four (mortgagees) of the deeds (Exs. 1 and 2) and redeemed 2½ biswas out of the 5 biswas mortgaged under those deeds.

It will be seen from the facts given above that the plaintiff was a mortgagee of half the mortgaged property; not a subsequent mortgagee because the 5 biswas mortgaged to him had no connexion with the other 5 biswas mortgaged in the year 1912. In the year 1917, he purchased the entire 10 biswas and so stepped into the shoes of the mortgagor. What happened after this is not clear but we gather that he redeemed 2½ out of the 5 biswas which were mortgaged in 1912, and we take it that this was done by the common consent of the mortgagees and himself. If that was so, then it had the effect of splitting up the mortgage with the result that the original transaction had to be regarded as if it had consisted of two separate and independent mortgages over different properties for different considerations. A number of other complications arose because of subsequent transactions but we need not enter into them. It is enough to state that the suit was decided against the plaintiff mainly on two grounds, res judicata and the fact that he had not intended, when he purchased, to keep any of the four encumbrances alive. At the end of the judgment the learned Judges also stated in a short paragraph:

It may also be pointed out that the plaintiff cannot claim any right of subrogation in respect of the mortgages (Exs. 1 and 2), because admittedly only a half share in those mortgages has been redeemed.

They then referred to Sec. 92, T. P. Act, and to two cases one of which is 36 Cal 193[2] which we have already distinguished, and the other is 38 All 502[3] which at pp. 504 and 505 draws the same distinction which we have done. The learned Allahabad Judges state:

The contention is that this right of the purchaser is limited to cases in which he has discharged the prior incumbrance in its entirety. It is difficult to see upon what principle this distinction proceeds. No doubt the prior incumbrancer is entitled to refuse a part payment of his mortgage debt. If however he accepts the part payment and allows the liability upon the property to be discharged in part, the puisne incumbrancer benefits in exactly the same way as he would if the entire debt had been discharged, though not (to) the same extent. His security is enhanced to the extent that the debt has been discharged. There seems to be no reason why the purchaser of the equity of redemption should not be entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior incumbrancer where he has with the consent of that incumbrancer partially discharged the liability.

The Lucknow decision therefore largely depends upon the facts there. If we have stated the facts correctly then with the utmost respect we cannot agree. It may however be that the facts have not been fully given in the judgment because it proceeded in the main on the other two grounds, and therefore it is impossible that there was there some important point of distinction which does not appear in the facts given. The fact that the Allahabad case was also referred to appears to indicate that. But in any case the ruling does not alter our view. The appeal is allowed and the costs of the appellant will be paid by the plaintiffs-respondents throughout. Counsel's fee Rs. 60.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

3. Udit Narain Misir v. Asharafi Lal, (1916) 3 A I R All 81=35 I C 732=38 All 502=14 A L J 662.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 217

NIYOGI J.

Sunderlal Shanker Lal Mahesri — Appellant.

v.

Amrut Rao Daulat Rao Deshmukh — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 321 of 1937, Decided on 27th February 1939, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khamgaon, D/- 21st August 1936.

Mortgage — Subrogation — Land burdened with prior and subsequent mortgages purchased by person for full price and free from incumbrance — Purchaser compelled to discharge prior mortgage, when disclosed, to protect his interest — He is subrogated to rights of prior mortgagee.

Where land burdened with prior and subsequent mortgages is purchased by a person for full price and free from any incumbrance and he is subsequently compelled to discharge the prior mortgage, when it is disclosed to him, to protect his own interest, he is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee as against the subsequent mortgagee: 10 Cal 1035 (P C) and A I R 1924 P C 36, Rel. on; A I R 1937 Nag 372 (F B), Disting. [P 218 C 2; P 219 C 1, 2]

R. N. Padhye and S. P. Kotwal — for Appellant.

V. K. Rajwade — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal from the concurring judgment of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, in Civil Appeal No. 63-A of 1935 delivered on 21st August 1936. Sawanjee executed a mortgage in favour of Zango on 17th April 1916 and another mortgage in favour of Punamchand on 11th November 1918. The respondent, Amrutrao, purchased the property comprised in the two mortgages on 6th January 1919 for Rs. 1500. The property was represented to be sold free from any incumbrance, as will be clear from the terms of the covenant of freedom from incumbrance contained in the sale deed, namely:

The aforesaid field has not been transferred to anyone either by mortgage, or patta or the like. And if it be found, the entire liability therefor shall be mine.

Zango, the prior mortgagee, filed a suit to enforce his mortgage. That was Civil Suit No. 415 of 1919 in which he impleaded the respondent Amrutrao and the puisne mortgagee Punamchand. The respondent satisfied the preliminary decree passed in that suit by payment of Rs. 956-4-0 in 1921. On 14th March 1931 Punamchand assigned his mortgagee rights to the appellant Sunderlal who instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises to recover the debt due on Punamchand's mortgage of 1918. The respondent claimed right of subrogation on the ground that he had paid off the prior mortgagee Zango. To escape from this defence the appellant alleged that the respondent had retained with him Rs. 1400 out of the consideration of the sale in his favour under an agreement to discharge the prior incumbrances and that consequently he was not entitled to hold the prior mortgage as a shield against the subsequent mortgage. The plaintiff's plea was negatived by both the Courts below, who held that the appellant was bound to pay the amount due on the Zango's mortgage, which had been paid off by the respondent, before he could claim foreclosure of the property.

The question which arises upon this appeal is whether in the circumstances of this case the respondent was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee as against the subsequent mortgagee. The lower Appellate Court relied on Illus. 5 in the commentary on S. 92, T. P. Act, by Sir Dinshah Mulla, which is based on 49 All 233.[1] The case reported in 54 All 897[2] also took the view that if a third mortgagee pays off the first of the two prior mortgagees out of consideration left with him for redeeming both the earlier mortgages that he would be entitled to be subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee so as to enable him to claim priority. That was also the view which I had taken in 30 N L R 164.[3] The learned counsel for the appellant contends that in view of the Full Bench ruling of this Court in I L R (1938) Nag 206[4] the respondent who was the purchaser of the property subsequent to the mortgages is not entitled to claim subrogation against the puisne mortgagee unless there was an express agreement to that effect in writing and registered as required by S. 92, T. P. Act, as amended by Act 20 of 1929. In order to bring the present case within the ambit of that ruling, an attempt is made to attack the concurrent finding that the respondent did not retain with him Rs. 1400 for discharging the incumbrances but that he paid the full consideration to the mortgagor. The burden of substantiating the contention lay on the appellant and it has rightly been held by the Courts below that he failed to discharge it. From the recitals in the sale deed, which have been reproduced above, it is clear that the mortgagor purported to sell an unencumbered property for Rs. 1500 which were actually received by him. Nothing has been said here to induce me to interfere with that finding.

The position is this: the respondent purchased the property free from any incumbrance and yet he was compelled to discharge the first mortgage when it was disclosed to him. The Full Bench ruling of this Court

1. Madho Singh v. Pancham Singh, (1927) 14 A I R All 211=101 I C 409=49 All 233 = 25 A L J 45.
2. Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, (1932) 19 A I R All 489=139 I C 107 = 54 All 897 = 1932 A L J 627 (F B).
3. Mohanlal v. Mohammad Sujat, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 155 =144 I C 96)=30 N L R 164.
4. Taibai Laxmanrao v. Wasudeorao, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 372 = 172 I C 142 =I L R (1938) Nag 206 (F B).

referred to above can have no application to this case in view of different sets of circumstances. It is true, as pointed out in that case, that under S. 59-A, T. P. Act, as amended in 1929 the term mortgagors may include persons deriving title from them. The question whether a person who purchases an unencumbered estate and then discovers an incumbrance which he redeems should be regarded as a mortgagor or not was, in that case, left open. That case discussed only the respective rights of a purchaser who purchased an encumbered estate that is only an equity of redemption and a purchaser who purchased an unencumbered estate subject to the condition of paying off any undisclosed incumbrance. It has therefore no application to the present case.

The respondent paid full price of the property as if it was free from incumbrance. He had in the bargain to pay off the prior mortgage and that payment was made out of his own funds to protect his own interest. He paid not only the price of the equity of redemption but also the debts which were charged on the property when he purchased it in ignorance of those incumbrances. Whether a purchaser of encumbered property stands in the shoes of the mortgagor or not would depend upon the nature and extent of the interest purchased by him, and also the nature of the agreement he makes with the mortgagor. When a person mortgages his property for a certain consideration he converts a part of his proprietary right into cash which becomes the debt for which the property remains a security. What is left of his right in the property is only an equity of redemption. If a purchaser purchases only the equity of redemption he stands in the position of the mortgagor and when he pays off the debt he discharges a liability openly accepted by him. When one purchases the equity of redemption only but pays consideration exceeding the price of the equity of redemption and intends that the surplus should be devoted to the discharge of the incumbrances he stands in principle on no different footing. The respondent in the present case cannot be put into the category of these persons. The mortgagor professed to sell him an unencumbered freehold and he never undertook to discharge any undisclosed incumbrance. When he was compelled to pay off the prior mortgage he did so to safeguard his own interest and not that of the mortgagor. His case would therefore fall within the rule enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 10 Cal 1035.[5] When he paid off the first mortgage he might have intended either to keep alive that mortgage or let it merge in his ownership but, as their Lordships remarked, when there is no express evidence of such intention the ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of the two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest, that is to say, the presumption would be in favour of the mortgage being kept alive. In 47 Mad 190[6] at page 194 their Lordships reiterated the rule in this way:

> It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property, the owner of the property, subject to the mortgages may, if he pays off an earlier charge, treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor, or to put in it another way, he may keep the incumbrance alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. This rule would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later mortgage debt, but in this case there was no such personal covenant.

The present case must be decided on this principle inasmuch as there was no covenant by the respondent to pay off the incumbrances. Nothing that was decided in 59 Mad 359,[7] A I R 1937 All 588[8] or I L R (1938) Nag 206[4] can affect the authority of the two Privy Council decisions referred to above. It is unnecessary to go into the question whether S. 92, T. P. Act, has or has not retrospective operation, since if it has no retrospective operation the case would be determined on the well-recognized equitable principle laid down in the two Privy Council cases and if it has retrospective operation the case would fall to be governed by para. 1 of Sec. 92 which does not require any registered instrument to confer the right of subrogation. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

---

5. Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukhdas, (1884) 10 Cal 1035 =11 I A 126 = 4 Sar 543 (P C).
6. Malireddi Ayyareddi v. Gopalakrishnayya, (1924) 11 A I R P C 36=79 I C 592 = 51 I A 140=47 Mad 190 (P C).
7. Lakshmi Amma v. Shankara Narayana, (1936) 23 A I R Mad 171=160 I C 137=59 Mad 359 =70 M L J 1 (F B).
8. Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, (1937) 24 A I R All 588 = 171 I C 153 = I L R (1937) All 880 = 1937 A L J 659 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 220

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Ramchandra Krishnaji Kunbi — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Zolba Balaji Kunbi and another — Plaintiffs — Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 1 of 1938, Decided on 9th February 1939, from appellate decree of Pollock J. in S. A. No. 566 of 1934, D/- 18th November 1937.

Stamp Act (1899), S. 36—Once improperly stamped document is admitted S. 36 comes into play and Court should proceed as though it were properly stamped.

Where a document which is not duly stamped is once admitted in evidence, S. 36 comes into play and thereafter the Court should proceed as though it were properly stamped ; the letting in of document cannot be regarded as an imperfection in procedure which can be corrected in appeal : Case law discussed. [P 221 C 1]

M. B. Kinkhede and N. M. Dharasker — for Appellant.

A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The point that is raised in this appeal has been so recently decided in favour of the view taken by the learned Judge, against whose judgment this appeal is brought, that it seems unnecessary to do more than quote from the Bench decision in First Appeal No. 73 of 1935 :

Section 61 admittedly has nothing to do with the point here. It has been argued in a large number of cases that S. 36 only applies where the admission was not contrary to S. 35. In other words the admission must be rightful. But it has been decided time after time that once it is admitted that concludes the point so far as the stamp question is concerned. We have had our attention directed to 27 C W N 513[1] at p. 519 followed in 53 Cal 515,[2] 39 Cal 669[3] at p. 678, 57 Mad 779,[4] 16 Pat 84,[5] A I R 1937 Mad 431,[6] 13 Lah 800,[7] and there is also the case reported in 63 M L J 548.[8] There is the Privy Council decision, 7 Rang 624[9] at p. 631 which would render the citation of the others unnecessary were it precisely on the point now raised. There the objection was taken in the written statement; after the objection was taken the plaintiff applied to the Court for the return of the document in order to apply to the Collector for the rectification of the stamp. The District Judge, acting under S. 33, Stamp Act, impounded the document. Eventually under the direction of the High Court the document was forwarded to the Collector. The Collector on payment of a further duty of Rs. 100 and a penalty of Rs. 5 certified it to be duly stamped. It was then received in evidence by the District Court. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say: "It follows that, in accordance with S. 36 of the Act, its admission could not be called in question at any stage of the suit on a stamp objection. The question of admissibility is thus disposed of."

Counsel for the appellant cited 40 M L J 479[10] to establish his proposition but on examination it is found to tend in the same direction.

It has been argued : (1) that S. 36 only applies where no contest has been raised at the time of admission. There are two answers to that. One is it is highly doubtful whether a contest ought to be at the instance of counsel because this is not a matter that affects parties at all. It is a matter in which the State is interested. Secondly, objection was taken in the Privy Council case as above observed as well as in the case reported in 57 Mad 779.[4] Next it is urged (2) that it cannot be the intention of Sec. 36, Stamp Act, to preclude an Appellate Court from considering what on its true construction is the correct classification of the document in question. The answer to that is that the Appellate Court is not precluded. In this very case it would have been quite within our power to hold that what the learned Additional District Judge has decided is a bond is in point of fact a promissory note. But that decision of ours would not in the least affect its admissibility on the stamp point because that is concluded by S. 36, and that distinction their Lordships of the Privy Council quite clearly make.

It is however necessary to refer to the argument that has been urged before us by the counsel for the appellant because the points that have been raised by him were not taken in that case. It will be seen from the above that there is not a single case in favour of the appellant's view on S. 36. On the contrary, there are a large number of authorities in favour of the view taken by the learned Judge on S. 36. But it is argued with some ingenuity that all those cases have attached too much importance to admissions and have not attached suffi-

1. Rung Lal v. Kedar Nath, (1921) 8 A I R Cal 613=77 I C 845=27 C W N 513.
2. Joyman Bewa v. Easin Sarkar, (1926) 13 A I R Cal 877=95 I C 483=53 Cal 515=43 C L J 493=30 C W N 609.
3. Bombay Co. Ltd. v. National Jute Mills Co. Ltd., (1912) 39 Cal 669=16 I C 153.
4. Venkata Reddi v. Hussain Setti, (1934) 21 A I R Mad 383=150 I C 51=57 Mad 779=66 M L J 709.
5. Krishna Kumar v. Jagpati Kuer, (1937) 24 A I R Pat 73=167 I C 152=16 Pat 84 = 17 P L T 769.
6. Satyavati v. Pallaya, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 431 =169 I C 641.
7. Harnarainsahib Ram v. Bihari Lal Chiranji Lal, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 582=142 I C 729= 13 Lah 800=34 P L R 92.
8. Alagappa Chetty v. Narayanan Chettiar, (1932) 19 A I R Mad 765=140 I C 315= 63 M L J 548.
9. Ma Pwa May v. S. R. M. M. Chettiyar Firm, (1929) 16 A I R P C 279 = 120 I C 645 = 7 Rang 624=56 I A 379 (P C).
10. Venkatarama Aiyer v. Chella Pillai, (1921) 8 A I R Mad 413=62 I C 607=40 M L J 479.

cient importance to the prohibition against acting upon a document that is not stamped. The argument is that although by S. 36 the Court is directed, once a document has been admitted in evidence, not to object to its admissibility on the ground that it is improperly stamped, yet when it comes to passing a decree the Court need not act upon it and can refuse to pass a decree based upon it. In support of that argument the following cases have been cited : 18 Bom 369[11] at page 371, 30 Mad 386[12] at p. 387, 6 I C 903[13] at p. 905, A I R 1934 Lah 606,[14] 64 M L J 79[15] and A I R 1935 Rang 282.[16] These cases, especially the first four, are all dealing with the position that arises where it is not strictly necessary owing to admissions in pleadings or otherwise to prove the document on which the suit is really founded and therefore the question of admitting or not admitting a document in evidence never arises, and then the Court when it comes to pass judgment discovers that the fundamental document is unstamped. Should the Court pass a decree based on admissions in pleadings or should it pass a decree based on the unstamped document ? The above group of cases decide that the Court should refuse to pass a decree based on an unstamped document. As to that we would say that we have not heard the other side because, in our opinion, the whole difficulty in the appellant's way here is due to S. 36 and were it not for S. 36 we have no doubt at all that the document would not have been admitted in evidence. But when the document has been admitted, then S. 36 comes into play and thereafter the Court should proceed as though it were properly admitted. That view, in our opinion, takes away the protection afforded by S. 100, Civil P. C., read with O. 13, R. 3 of the Code. The latter gives power to the Court to reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible and S. 100 gives powers to the Court in second appeal to correct imperfections in procedure. There is no imperfection here excepting the imperfection of letting this document in, but that cannot be regarded as an imperfection after it has been let in and it has not been challenged, the reason being the reason that was assigned in the above quoted passage from the Bench decision in First Appeal No. 73 of 1935.

There remains one point to mention and that is based on A I R 1919 Nag 141[17] where it was decided that mere letting in and exhibiting a document is not admitting a document in evidence so as to attract the provisions of S. 36, and the trial Judge before whom the document was exhibited has decided in his judgment that it is inadmissible. Here the position is that the Judge held that the document was admissible. The order holding that it was admissible went in revision on the preliminary point and ended in a very unfortunate way. The order on the revision application is as follows :

> Even assuming that the lower Court has erroneously decided the question of law involved in the first part of issue 2, I decline to interfere with its preliminary finding as the mistake if any can be rectified in appeal when the case terminates in a decree in the lower Court.

In point of fact the application for revision was dismissed without notice to the other side, with the result that the order remained as it was, that the document was admitted and that S. 36 is attracted, and now the defendant finds himself subject to a decree which might not have been passed had his revision application not been rejected. We are however clear that the learned Judge against whose judgment this appeal is brought is correct on the law, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

S.G./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

11. Chenbasapa v. Lakshman Ramchandra, (1894) 18 Bom 369.
12. Thaji Beebi v. Tirumalaiappa Pillai, (1907) 30 Mad 386=17 M L J 308.
13. Chunilal Tulsiram v. Mulabai, (1910) 6 I C 903=12 Bom L R 466.
14. Sohan Lal v. Raghu Nath, (1934) 21 A I R Lah 606=153 I C 1076=37 P L R 494.
15. Achutaramana v. Jagannadham, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 117=140 I C 833=64 M L J 79.
16. Maung Po Chein v. Chettiyar Firm, (1935) 22 A I R Rang 282=158 I C 533.
17. Sitaram v. Thakurdas, (1919) 6 A I R Nag 141=50 I C 781.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 221

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Firm Madhodass Gulabdas — Decree-holder — Appellant.

v.

Appaji Raoji Jadhao and others — Judgment-debtors — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 184-B of 1934, Decided on 16th March 1939, from appellate decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 23rd June 1934.

Second Appeal —Question of fact—Omission of lower Appellate Court to mention this or that piece of evidence is no ground for interference.

No second appeal has any chance of success where the only ground is that the lower Appellate Court has omitted to mention this or that piece of evidence. The Legislature rightly or wrongly has decided that the first Appellate Court is to be trusted and it behoves first Appellate Judges to bear in mind the fact that their findings of fact are conclusive and that they therefore have a great responsibility and should be especially careful in such cases. If they are not, it may be a matter for administrative discipline but a second Appellate Court cannot put the matter right in second appeal : 18 Cal 23 (P C), Rel. on ; Case law discussed. [P 223 C 2]

V. K. Rajwade and D. M. Deshpande — for Appellant.

R. S. Dabir and R. G. Pande — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder who was the plaintiff in a suit on a contract entered into between him and one Sheoram. He obtained a decree. Sheoram died and the decree-holder now seeks to execute that decree against the joint Hindu family of which, it is said, Sheoram was the representative when sued on the debt contracted by Sheoram with the decree-holder. That is to say, that suit is, it is said, a suit brought against Sheoram as representing the family : the decree, though passed against Sheoram, is really a decree passed against the family and the family assets can accordingly be taken in execution of that decree. The family in question now consists of the father and brothers of Sheoram. The respondents resist any effort to execute that decree against the family property on the ground that the suit in which the decree was given was a suit against Sheoram personally and could not be otherwise because Sheoram was contracting personally and was not representing the family. That in turn raises the question as to whether in point of fact Sheoram, who admittedly was carrying on some sort of business, was carrying on that business as a joint family business or on his own behalf. There is a finding by the lower Appellate Court to the effect that he was carrying on the business on his own behalf. That is a finding of fact and as such it is binding on us in second appeal. As so often happens in these second appeals however we are induced to go into the evidence on the representation that this is yet another case which is an exception to the broad rule laid down in a number of Privy Council decisions to the effect that the second Appellate Court has no jurisdiction whatever to go into questions of fact. The ground on which it is said that we should go into the question of fact in this case is that the lower Appellate Court completely overlooked a mass of relevant evidence. Although in support of that no authority has been cited to us there are some observations that seem to give countenance to it made by Niyogi J. in I L R 1938 Nag 535[1] at p. 541 where the learned Judge observes :

There is an error of law when a Court's finding proceeds upon a misconception of the real nature of the issue in the case, when several facts admitted or proved are not considered in their relation to each other and weighed as a whole, when a certain legal consequence which naturally flows from admitted and proved facts is overlooked, or when a material part of admissible evidence which vitally bears on the point at issue is disregarded. A case which involves such an error of law must in my opinion fall within the ambit of S. 100, Civil P. C. : see 25 N L R 68,[2] 15 N L R 97[3] and 17 I A 122[4] at p. 127, where Lord Macnaghten pointed out that an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure. Where there is an error of defect in the procedure the finding of fact is vitiated and cannot be accepted as final in second appeal.

If the last case quoted there is referred to (and it will be found in 18 Cal 23,[4] and Lord Macnaghten's remarks are seen at page 30), it will be found that the Privy Council there observed :

Where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding.

14 Cal 740[5] and 17 Cal 291[6] are referred to. If the first case of the three cited by Niyogi J. is referred to it will be found that there their Lordships of the Privy Council were not concerned with a second appeal but with an appeal under the Land Acquisition Act. In the second of the cases their Lordships observed that the second Appellate Court was competent to go into findings of fact where it appeared that the lower Appellate Court had misconceived the point, that is to say had addressed his

1. Mt. Anupa Bai v. Bhagwant Singh, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 470=179 I C 285=I L R (1938) Nag 535.
2. Atmaram Bhagwant v. Collector of Nagpur, (1929) 16 A I R P C 92=114 I C 587=25 N L R 68 (P C).
3. Damusa v. Abdul Samad, (1919) 6 A I R P C 29=51 I C 177=46 I A 140=47 Cal 107=15 N L R 97 (P C).
4. Mt Durga Choudharain v. Jawahir Singh, (1891) 18 Cal 23=17 I A 122=5 Sar 560 (P C).
5. Anangamanjari Chowdhrani v. Tripura Sundari, (1887) 14 Cal 740 = 14 I A 101 = 5 Sar 45 (P C).
6. Pertab Chunder Ghose v. Mohendra Nath Purkait, (1890) 17 Cal 291 = 16 I A 233 = 5 Sar 444 (P C).

mind and had marshalled the evidence in relation to the wrong question so that he never addressed his mind to the question that had to be answered. In 46 Cal 189[7] their Lordships observe that the powers of the second Appellate Court are completely circumscribed by the provisions of a statute passed for the express purpose of securing some measure of finality in cases where the balance of evidence, verbal and documentary arose for decision.

There their Lordships observe that the proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law; so also is the question of admissibility of evidence, "so is the question whether there is any evidence at all to support a finding." But the question whether the fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact.

At page 195 they observe :

Their Lordships have carefully considered the judgment of the High Court with these matters present to their minds, but they are unable to find that the decision of the District Judge stood in any shadowy borderland between fact and law. The question for determination was as to the character of certain lands, and as to what was the measurement properly applicable, and the real objection to the judgment of the District Judge was that there were underlying assumptions which vitiated his decision and that the form of his judgment showed that he had misweighed the evidence.

Again at page 197 :

. . . it really amounts to no more than a finding that upon the documents and evidence placed before the learned District Judge the High Court would have come to a different conclusion.

In this case we are asked to upset the finding of fact on the ground that the lower Appellate Court has ignored a mass of documentary evidence. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 54 All 6[8] observe :

The misreading or ignoring of important documentary evidence amounts to a substantial error or defect in the procedure within the meaning of Sec. 100 (1) (c).

As to that observation, as regards misreading we have nothing to say except that caution is necessary in applying any such rule. But as regards ignoring we entertain a doubt with respect, as to whether that is not putting the proposition in too wide a form. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 18 Cal 23[4] at p. 29 observe:

The lower Appellate Court, it was said, had clearly misapprehended the effect of the settlement proceedings in 1864; undue weight had been attached to the registration in Beni Singh's sole name; the oral evidence had been wholly discarded; sufficient weight had not been given to the important statement in Beni Singh's petition, or to the separate dealings of his two sons; the Court had thus been led to misconceive the case entirely, and to find for the defendant when the finding should have been for the plaintiff.

It would be an unprofitable task to inquire how far this contention is well founded, because their Lordships cannot accept the rulings of the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad as a correct statement of the law. Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in S 584. No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds. It is always dangerous to paraphrase an enactment and not the less so if the enactment is perhaps not altogether happily expressed. Their Lordships therefore will not attempt to translate into other words the language of S. 584. It is enough in the present case to say that an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure, and that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be.

We apprehend that what their Lordships are there saying in the clearest possible terms is that the discarding of the whole of the oral evidence is not an error or defect in procedure and that if it results in an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable, that finding of fact is conclusive. Different considerations of course arise where there is no evidence to support the finding if the evidence discarded is put on one side. In our opinion, it is desirable in the interests of the litigant public that it should be understood that no second appeal has any chance of success where the only ground is that the lower Appellate Court has omitted to mention this or that piece of evidence. The Legislature rightly or wrongly has decided that the first Appellate Court is to be trusted and it behoves first Appellate Judges to bear in mind the fact that their findings of fact are conclusive and that they therefore have a great responsibility and should be especially careful in such cases. If they are not it may be a matter for administrative discipline, but a second Appellate Court cannot put the matter right in second appeal. So to do would be to go in the face of the clear provisions of the Code and the equally clear decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In this particular case, we are satisfied that there has been no such finding as can be stigmatized as inexcusable. The items of evidence overlooked are of the kind requiring a most strenuous argument to show their relevance. We are satisfied that there is evidence to support the finding which is binding upon us in second appeal. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

7. Nafar Chandra v. Shukur Sheikh, (1918) 5 A I R P C 92 = 51 I C 760 = 45 I A 183 = 46 Cal 189 (P C).
8. Municipal Board Benares v. Kandhaiya Lal, (1931) 18 A I R All 499 = 134 I C 21 = 54 All 6 = 1931 A L J 757 (F B).

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 224

GRUER J.

Syed Ahmad Syed Shahazada— Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Ram Gopal Bhagwandeen Trivedi and another — Defendants — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 179 of 1938, Decided on 31st January 1939, from decree of Small Cause Court Judge, Ramtek, D/- 17-1-1938.

(a) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Sec. 12 — Scope — Settlement by transfer of lands.

Section 12 contemplates a settlement by way of payment of money and not by transfer of lands : 1938 N L J 472, Rel. on. [P 224 C 2]

(b) Contract — Novation — Agreement with respect to debts, entered between creditor and debtor, subsequently backed out by debtor — Creditor cannot file suit on original debt.

Where a creditor and a debtor enter into a private agreement with respect to the debts and the agreement is partly performed by both the parties but the debtor afterwards backs out of the agreement and refuses to carry it out, the creditor may well put an end to the contract under Sec. 39, Contract Act but he is not allowed to file suit upon the original debt : A I R 1935 Lah 897; A I R 1929 Sind 49 and A I R 1923 All 518, Rel. on. [P 224 C 2]

T. B. Pendharker — for Applicant.

R. S. Dabir — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The parties to this application went before a Debt Conciliation Board for conciliation of the defendants-nonapplicants' debts. On 29th May 1937, they reached an agreement whereby the creditor agreed to take shares in two villages and to pay Rs. 150 in cash to the debtors and give up five houses in another village while the debtors agreed to execute a sale deed for these village shares and sir and khudkasht lands. The settlement was partly performed by payment of Rs. 150 and by the defendants giving up possession of these two villages, but thereafter defendants refused to execute the sale deed. The plaintiff therefore brought the present suit in the Court of Small Causes on his original debt due on a bond and cash advanced. The Judge found that the agreement was still valid and operative and plaintiff's only remedy was to sue the defendants for breach of it and he could not fall back on the original debt.

Section 12, Debt Conciliation Act, contemplates a settlement by way of payment of money and not by transfer of lands. This is pointed out by Binney F. C. in 1938 N L J 472.[1] It is conceded that this agreement must be looked on as purely a private one and not one under Sec. 12. Learned counsel for the applicant however contends that seeing that the contract has been broken he has two remedies, either to sue for specific performance or to fall back on the original contract. He certainly may put an end to the contract under S. 39, Contract Act, but the question is whether he can be allowed to sue on the original debt. The other side urges that he could either have sued for specific performance or for damages for breach of the contract. Applicant relies on Ss. 64 and 65, Contract Act. I do not see how either helps. The contract was not voidable and S. 65 would only support a claim for damages. Applicant argues that so long as no sale deed was executed there was no novation or substitution of a new contract. I do not think that this argument can be supported. From S. 62 of the Act it will be seen that a mere agreement to substitute a new contract does away with the necessity for performance of the first one. In A I R 1935 Lah 897[2] it was held that even where there is an alteration in the original contract the creditor cannot fall back on it. In A I R 1929 Sind 49,[3] where there had been a composition between the debtor and his creditors which it was alleged by the creditors had not been properly carried out the latter were not allowed to fall back on the original liability. So in 45 All 472[4] the parties had agreed to be bound by the decision of a panchayat, and one side was not allowed to fall back on the original contract when the other had failed to make payment in accordance with that decision. For the above reasons I think the lower Court's conclusion was correct, that the suit in its present form is not maintainable. The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

N.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

---

1. Dajiba v. Narayan, (1938) N L J 472.
2. Balak Ram v. Telu, (1935) 22 A I R Lah 897 =160 I C 963.
3. Teomal v. Dharamdas, (1929) 16 A I R Sind 49=114 I C 109.
4. Ram Nath v. Mannu Lal, (1923) 10 A I R All 518=73 I C 615=45 All 472=21 A L J 380.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 225

GRUER J.

Ramlalsao Gupta — Defendant — Applicant.

v.

M. E. R. Malak — Plaintiff — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. Nos. 625, 717, 718 and 797 of 1938, Decided on 17th March 1939, from decree of Addl. Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, D/- 31st August 1938.

(a) Companies Act (1913), S. 101 (3)—Provisions of sub-s. (3) are mandatory—Application for share not accompanied by 5 per cent. of share amount does not constitute valid offer—Hence company cannot demand share amount from applicant.

Sub-section (3) of S. 101 lays down a mandatory requirement. The applicant for a share is under a statutory obligation to pay five per cent. of the nominal amount of the share along with his application and the Company is also under the obligation to see that he does so and it is against public policy that any allotment should be made without compliance with this requirement. Hence an application for share, if not accompanied by any such payment does not legally constitute a valid offer so as to entitle the Company to demand the share money from the applicant : A I R 1936 Lah 790 and A I R 1934 All 855, Rel. on. [P 225 C 2]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 6 (2) — Scope — Proposal for purchase of shares made in July 1933 and December 1934 — Allotment of shares not made till August 1935—No notice of allotment sent—Revocation not waived by proposers—Proposals held must be deemed to have been revoked.

If a proposer revokes his offer before its acceptance then Sec. 6 (1) applies. Even if he does not revoke, Sec. 6 (2) applies unless of course the proposer's conduct amounts to a waiver of the revocation which would follow on the lapse of a reasonable time. [P 226 C 1]

Applications for shares were made to a Company in March and July 1933 and December 1934. But allotment of shares was not made by the Company till August 1935. No notice of allotment was given to proposers till then and there was nothing in the applicant's conduct which amounted to waiver of the revocation :

Held that Sec. 6 (2) applied and the proposals must be deemed to have been revoked : A I R 1934 Bom 97 and (1866) 1 Ex 109, Ref. [P 226 C 1, 2]

R. S. Dabir — for Applicant.

R. K. Manohar — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This order will dispose also of Revision Applications Nos. 717, 718 and 797 of 1938. The relevant facts in the case are not disputed, and they are that the various defendants-applicants made applications for shares in the Central India Press Ltd., Nagpur, on 15th March 1933, 14th July 1933, 24th December 1934 and 27th December 1934, respectively. Allotment was made to them on 26th August 1935, and on 12th September 1935 the Company called upon them to pay the amounts due on their shares. The Company, I am informed, has subsequently gone into liquidation. These defendants failed to pay the money demanded and have resisted the present suits against them on two grounds: (1) that there was no valid offer and acceptance of shares, and (2) that there was revocation of the proposal under S. 6 (2), Contract Act. S. 101, Companies Act, 1913, sub.cl. 3, provides that the amount payable on application on each share shall not be less than 5 per cent. of the nominal amount of the share. It is admitted that these applications were subsequent to the first allotment of shares and also that they were not accompanied by any payment. The question is whether the applications were legal so as to constitute a valid offer. Sub-section 1 of this Section mentions two conditions, (a) and (b), which must be complied with before any allotment can be made. The payment of 5 per cent. on an application is not one of these conditions, but it does not necessarily follow that the allotment is valid unless the conditions in sub-section 1 are violated. Sub-s. 5 says that any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares to waive compliance with any requirement of this Section shall be void. Sub-sec. 3 is one of such requirements and sub-sec. 6 makes it clear that sub-sec. 3 applies to allotments of shares subsequent to the first allotment. In A I R 1936 Lah 790[1] it was laid down by a Division Bench that any allotment which is made without payment of at least 5 per cent. of the nominal value of the shares by the applicant is invalid. I respectfully agree with that dictum. Sub-s. 3 lays down a mandatory requirement. The applicant for a share is under a statutory obligation to pay 5 per cent. of the nominal amount of the share along with his application, and the Company is also under the obligation to see that he does so and it is against public policy that any allotment should be made without compliance with this requirement. In A I R 1934 All 855[2] it was similarly held that an allotment of shares by directors without having received the minimum subscription was a misfeasance. That being so, the Company should not be allowed to take advantage of its own wrong-doing and neglect of the provisions of the Act by demanding the share money subsequently.

1. Mutual Bank of India v. Sohan Singh, (1936) 23 A I R Lah 790=161 I C 952.

2. Indian States Bank, Ltd. v. Sardar Singh, (1934) 21 A I R All 855=154 I C 33.

In support of the second ground about revocation by the lapse of a reasonable time without communication of acceptance of the offer, reference is made to an English case, (1866) 1 Ex 109.[3] In that case application for 50 shares accompanied by a deposit of one pound per share was made on 8th June 1864. On 8th November the defendant having received no communication from the Company withdrew his application, and on 23rd November the Company intimated that 50 shares had been allotted and demanded payment of the balance of the first call. It was held that the allotment had not been made within a reasonable time and so judgment should be given for the defendant. It is true that in that case the defendant had withdrawn his application before the demand was made. But Sec. 6, Contract Act, does not lay down that this must happen before S. 6 (2) comes into play. If the proposer revokes his offer before its acceptance then S. 6 (1) applies. Even if he does not revoke, Sec. 6 (2) applies unless of course the proposer's conduct amounts to a waiver of the revocation which would follow on the lapse of a reasonable time. In the cases before me there is no allegation in the plaints that intimation of their enrolment was sent to the defendants before 12th September 1935. In the case of Mr. C. B. Parakh, there is no doubt an allegation in the plaintiff's reply that acceptance of the proposal was duly communicated to the defendant, but the date is not given. Their failure to protest until demand for payment was made on them cannot therefore be imputed to them as waiver. In A I R 1934 Bom 97,[4] (1866) 1 Ex 109[3] was referred to with approval. It was remarked that if the defendant had been given notice of the allotment and had not objected to it promptly he would have been bound. In the cases before me, except perhaps in the case of Mr. C. B. Parakh, there is nothing to show that such notice was given. I therefore hold that in three of these revision applications S. 6 (2) does apply and the proposal should be held to have been revoked, and in the case of all four, the application was invalid and no money can be recovered as there was no valid contract. The reasons given by the lower Court for holding that the delay was reasonable because the defendants are gentlemen of good status and the Company believed they would pay up—these reasons appear to me to be beside the point. It is also immaterial that the present plaintiff is a transferee for valuable consideration. He is a business man, who no doubt undertook the risk of failing to recover all the amount said to be due to the Company. The applications are allowed with costs and these suits will be dismissed. I fix counsel's fee at Rupees 20 in each case.

N.S./R.K. Revision allowed.

3. Ramsgate Hotel Co. v. Montefiore, (1866) 1 Ex 109=4 H & C 164 = 35 L J Ex 90 = 12 Jur (N S) 455=13 L T 715=14 W R 335.

4. Indian Co-operative Navigation and Trading Co. Ltd. v. Padamsey Premji, (1934) 21 A I R Bom 97=150 I C 645=36 Bom L R 32.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 226

POLLOCK J.

Sarup Singh Murat Singh Chhatri Accused
v.
Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 514 of 1938, Decided on 3rd February 1939, from reference by Addl. Sess. Judge, Bhandara, D/- 7th December 1938.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (1) (b)—Complaint alleged to be false made to police and then to Court — Prosecution under Sec. 211, Penal Code, cannot proceed without complaint of Court.

Where an alleged false complaint is made to the police and then to the Court, a complaint under S. 211, Penal Code, subsequently filed is a complaint of an offence alleged to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court, and hence the prosecution under Sec. 211, Penal Code, cannot proceed without the complaint of the Court. [P 227 C 1]

It is undesirable that where a case has been taken into Court it should thereafter be open to the police to evade the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C., by filing a complaint under Sec. 211, Penal Code, on the complaint by a police officer; and the wording of S. 195 (1) (b) is quite wide enough to require that in such circumstances the Court itself shall make a complaint. It is certainly undesirable in such circumstances that the police should file a complaint under S. 182, Penal Code: A I R 1917 Cal 596; A I R 1927 Cal 95; A I R 1932 Pat 152; A I R 1927 Mad 851 and A I R 1928 Rang 254, Rel. on; A I R 1931 Rang 12, Expl.; A I R 1928 All 765, Not approved. [P 227 C 1, 2]

M. Adhikari — for Accused.

S. R. Mangrulkar — for Complainant.

Order.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., by the Additional Sessions Judge, Bhandara, recommending that the prosecution of Sarup Singh under S. 211, I. P. C., should be quashed on the ground that it is barred by S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. On 11th March 1938, Sarup Singh made a report to the police that certain named persons had cut and taken away some of his trees. The police did not prosecute these persons, and on 4th May Sarup Singh filed a complaint of theft in Court. On 23rd May the police filed a complaint against Sarup Singh under S. 211, I. P. C., and it is now contended that no such complaint could be filed without a complaint from the above Court.

At the time the police filed their complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., a complaint of theft had already been filed in Court, and therefore in my opinion the complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., was a complaint of an offence alleged to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court. This is the view taken in 44 Cal 650,[1] 53 Cal 824,[2] 11 Pat 155,[3] A I R 1927 Mad 851[4] and A I R 1928 Rang 254.[5] The decision in 8 Rang 499,[6] to which I have been referred, is not a decision the other way, because there it was held that a complaint under S. 182, I. P. C., could be filed by the police after a complaint to the Court ; the question whether a complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., could be filed was not considered. The only decision the other way is 51 All 382,[7] and with due respect I prefer the contrary view adopted by most of the High Courts. It seems to me undesirable that where a case has been taken into Court it should thereafter be open to the police to evade the provisions of Sec. 195, Criminal P. C., by filing a complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., on the complaint by a police officer ; and the wording of S. 195 (1) (b) is quite wide enough, in my opinion, to require that in such circumstances the Court itself shall make a complaint. It is certainly undesirable in such circumstances that the police should file a complaint under S. 182, I. P. C., as has been remarked in some of the above cases and in A I R 1929 Sind 115,[8] but on the question whether it is legal or not, it is not necessary to express any opinion here. I hold that the present prosecution under S. 211, I. P. C., cannot proceed without a complaint of the Court, and the Court has already stated that it considers that the complaint was made bona fide. The reference is accepted and the prosecution under S. 211, I. P. C., is quashed.

D.S./R.K. Revision allowed.

1. Brown v. Ananda Lal, (1917) 4 A I R Cal 596 =36 I C 857=44 Cal 650 = 25 C L J 59=18 Cr L J 25=20 C W N 1347.
2. Samir v. Sajidar Rahman, (1927) 14 A I R Cal 95=99 I C 118=28 Cr L J 86=53 Cal 824.
3. Subhag Ahir v. Emperor, (1932) 19 A I R Pat 152=1932 Cr C 269=135 I C 520=33 Cr L J 153=11 Pat 155=12 P L T 905.
4. Murugan v. Gutha Rami Naidu, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 851=104 I C 625=28 Cr L J 849 =53 M L J 455.
5. Rambrose v. Emperor, (1928) 15 A I R Rang 254=114 I C 685 = 30 Cr L J 342 = 6 Rang 578.
6. Ma Paw v. Emperor, (1931) 18 A I R Rang 12 =1931 Cr C 28=128 I C 836=32 Cr L J 202 =8 Rang 499.
7. Emperor v. Prag Datt, (1928) 15 A I R All 765=111 I C 858=29 Cr L J 938=51 All 382 =1929 A L J 68.
8. Ramchand v. Emperor, (1929) 16 A I R Sind 115=1929 Cr C 106=115 I C 313=30 Cr L J 399=23 S L R 225.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 227

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Shridhar Krishnarao and another — Appellants.

v.

Narayan Namaji and another — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 306 of 1937, Decided on 24th February 1939, from order of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/. 27th September 1937.

(a) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (3 of 1933), Ss. 12 (1), 12 (2), 13—Payment of debts can be agreed to be made in cash or in kind—Amount made payable in cash—S. 13 applies—Jurisdiction of Civil Court does not arise until S. 13 (3) is complied with — Amount payable in kind — Agreement is enforceable as decree by Civil Court as soon as it is registered.

The settlements contemplated by the Debt Conciliation Act are not restricted in their scope, and payment of the debts can be agreed to be made either in cash or in kind. If the amounts due are made payable in cash, then the provisions of S. 13 are attached and in that case the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts does not arise until the provisions of S. 13 (3) have been complied with; but if the amounts are payable in kind, then the agreement is enforceable as a decree by the Civil Courts the moment it is registered. No suit for specific performance of the contract is necessary : 1939 N L J 85, Rel. on. [P 230 C 1, 2]

(b) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (3 of 1933), S. 12 (1)—Word "amounts" in S. 12 (1) is not limited to sums of money — Both liabilities as well as payments in kind are contemplated.

The word "amounts" in S. 12 (1) is not limited to sums of money and both liabilities, as well as payments in kind, are contemplated. The word "amounts" in S. 12 (1) is used in a wider sense, than usual and it includes the total quantity of the debtor's liabilities in cash or in kind and the payments of these "amounts" can be either in cash or in kind. [P 228 C 2]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Construction — Grammatical and ordinary sense of words leading to absurdity or inconsistency—It can be modified so as to avoid these consequences.

In construing all statutes the grammatical and ordinary sense of words is to be adhered to unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the statute in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified so as to avoid that absurdity or inconsistency but no further : (1857) 6 H L C 61 and A I R 1939 P C 47, Ref. [P 229 C 2]

D. V. Gharpurey — for Appellants.

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises an important question which is likely to affect a large volume of litigation in this Province. The respondents applied to the Debt Conciliation Board for a settlement of their debts. Their creditors are the appellants here, and one Jankibai with whom we are not concerned. A settlement was reached in which the creditors undertook to receive payment, not in cash but in kind. The exact terms were that the respondents should sell certain immovable property to the appellants in satisfaction of the debt of Rs. 1300 which the respondents owed the appellants and of Rs. 825 which they owed Jankibai, bringing the total consideration for the sale up to Rs. 2125. The appellants undertook to pay Jankibai her Rs. 825 and she agreed to release the respondents and to look to the appellants for her money. The agreement was thereupon registered in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Up to this point the matter never reached the Courts. It was all accomplished without any suit being filed. The respondents now refuse to fulfil their undertaking and so the appellants come to Court and seek execution of the agreement under S. 12 (2), C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, treating the agreement as if it were a decree. The question is whether they can do so or whether a regular suit for specific performance is required. The lower Court holds that the Debt Conciliation Act does not contemplate agreements of this kind and that consequently the agreement here cannot be executed under Sec. 12 (2); a separate suit specifically to enforce it is necessary. Gruer J. held otherwise in (1939) N L J 85.[1] The Act is not easy to construe; in fact, to put it bluntly, it is ill-drafted, and hastily considered provisions are in many cases antagonistic to each other and thus place an impossible strain upon the Courts in interpreting them. The object of the Act is to enable debtors who are agriculturists to reach amicable settlements with their creditors and thus to relieve them from indebtedness. The Preamble recites :

> Whereas it is expedient to relieve agriculturists from indebtedness by amicable settlement between them and their creditors;

No restrictions have been placed on the nature of the settlement which can be reached in respect of debts which fall within the purview of the Act and so it would be wrong for us to infer them unless they are necessarily implied. What we have to see then is whether there is any necessary implication. S. 12 (1), which deals with the conditions of settlement, merely states :

> If the creditors . . . come to an amicable settlement with the debtor, such settlement shall forthwith be reduced to writing in the form of an agreement recording . . .

and then follow a list of matters which must be recorded. Among them are

> (1) "the amounts payable to such creditors", and
>
> (2) "the manner in which and the times at which they are to be paid."

Now the word "they" clearly refers to the word "amounts" which precedes it, and so the Section directs that among the matters to be recorded are the "amounts" due to the creditors specified and the time at which and the manner in which these "amounts" are to be paid. What we have to see then is whether an "amount" can be paid in kind. That in turn depends upon what an "amount" is. One of the definitions given to the word in Webster's International Dictionary is "the sum total of two or more sums or quantities," and the definition of "debt" given in S. 2 (e) of the Act is "debt includes all liabilities owing to a creditor in cash or kind," while S. 12 (1) speaks of the "total amount of the debtor's debts." It is clear then that the word "amount" is used here in a wider sense than usual and that it includes the total quantity of the debtor's liabilities in cash or in kind. Consequently, the payment of these "amounts" can also be either in cash or in kind. It follows that the word "amounts" is not limited to sums of money and that both liabilities as well as payments in kind are contemplated. That being so, and there being no express restriction on the nature of the agreement which may be reached, we would not be justified in curtailing the scope of this otherwise unrestricted Section

1. Seth Shankardas v. Seth Nandlal, (1939) N L J 85.

unless there be "necessary implication." Then follows S. 12 (2) which states that an agreement thus made shall. . . . . be registered . . . . . and it shall then take effect as if it were a decree of a Civil Court.

That clearly means that it takes effect as if it were a decree from the moment of registration, and of course every decree of a Civil Court is, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, executable at once by the Civil Courts. But then follows S. 13:

If a debtor defaults in paying any amount due in accordance with the terms of an agreement registered under sub-s. (2) of S. 12, such amount shall be recoverable as an arrear of land revenue.

Now it is clear that only sums of money can be recoverable as arrears of land revenue, and had it not been for the word "then" in S. 12 (2), it might have been possible to hold that since the Act must be read as an intelligible whole, therefore the word "amount" in the former Section must be restricted to sums of money. Such a construction would have been strengthened by a reference to sub-ss. (3) and (4) of S. 13. The former states that:

Where the Deputy Commissioner fails, under sub-s. (1) to recover as an arrear of land revenue any part of the amount referred to therein, he shall certify that it is irrecoverable and thereupon the agreement shall cease to subsist.

Sub-s. (4) then continues:

Where an agreement ceases to subsist, any amount which was payable under such agreement but has not been paid shall be recoverable as if a decree of a Civil Court had then been passed for its payment.

What S. 13 says is therefore clear. In the first place, it speaks of sums of money and not of liabilities in kind imposed by the agreement. It then says that this agreement shall not, in the first place, operate as a decree but shall be enforced instead in a particular way by the revenue and not the Civil Courts. If that fails, then the agreement must be officially killed by a certificate of the Deputy Commissioner and it is only when it has thus "ceased to exist" as an agreement that any "amount" due under it is to be recoverable "as if a decree of a Civil Court had been passed." Therefore clearly the agreement does not lose its character as such and become a decree until the contingency contemplated has occurred, that is to say until the agreement ceases to exist as an agreement for the reason given; until that happens, there is only an agreement and not a decree. But all this is directly counter to the word "then" in S. 12 (2) which states that the agreement shall take effect as a decree of a Civil Court from the moment it is registered. It is clearly impossible for it to take effect from that moment as a decree and yet at the same time be deemed not to be a decree until it has ceased to subsist because of the Deputy Commissioner's certificate. We are sensible of the fact that the present S. 13 was not introduced into the Act until the year 1936 and that it was not there when the Act first came into force. But the original Section used exactly the same language so far as this matter is concerned. Sub-ss. (1), (2) and (3) of the old Section are exactly the same as sub-s. (1), (3) and (4) of the present. The only departure is contained in sub-s. (2) of the new Section and that does not affect the present question. In these circumstances, it being impossible to reconcile these contradictory provisions, it becomes necessary for us to modify the ordinary sense of the words used. Our power to do so is contained in a passage from Lord Wensledale's speech in (1857) 6 H L C 61[2] at p. 106 which was quoted with approval by the Privy Council in Privy Council Appeal No. 81 of 1938[3] on a question relating to the construction of a statute:

I have been long and deeply impressed with the wisdom of the rule, now I believe, universally adopted, at least in the Courts of law in Westminster Hall, that in construing wills and indeed statutes, and all written instruments, the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words is to be adhered to, unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the instrument, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid that absurdity and inconsistency, but no further.

We have now to see how and in what way the modification is to be made. As regards this we bear in mind (1) the fact that this legislation makes drastic inroads upon vested rights and that therefore (2) we should not attempt to fetter the usual freedom of contract permissible under the law for the settlement of these vested claim except in so far as we are expressly or by necessary implication directed to do so; and (3) we note that S. 12 not only imposes no restrictions upon the kind of settlement which may be made, but on the contrary indicates that it is using at least one word, the word "amounts," in a much wider sense than usual. We also think it right to take into consideration other matters to which reference would not have been permissible

2. Grey v. Pearson, (1857) 6 H L C 61 = 26 L J Ch 473=3 Jur (N S) 823=5 W R 454.

3. Pakala Narayanaswami v. Emperor, Reported in (1939) 26 A I R P C 47=180 I C 1.

had the words of the Act been clear and unambiguous. In the official introduction to the Provincial Government's introduction to the Central Provinces Debt Conciliation Act, the following passage occurs at page 2 :

In cases in which the debts are too heavy to be liquidated from surplus annual income in a reasonable number of years, one way out of the difficulty is to satisfy a portion of the compounded debt by a transfer of a part of the property.

It is true that the passage continues :

Strictly speaking, such settlements are not within the purview of the Act.

But it goes on to say :

But there is no bar to the Board using its good offices to bring them about, and in practice they are made whenever possible.

Therefore not only have these Boards been encouraged to bring about such settlements but here is an official statement by Government that the practice is to do this whenever possible; and the present case is one of these instances. Now it seems clearly wrong to us that an authority of this kind, in whom all parties should have confidence and trust, should be encouraged to bring about a result which is said to be beyond the scope of his powers without his being told in the clearest terms that he must explain to these parties that he is acting, when matters reach this stage, only as a mediator and a friend and not in an official capacity; that he must explain that he has no official status to intervene. If the present case is a sample, and we are told it is, then clearly the parties are left under the impression that his good offices are being exercised under the Act itself. All the procedure of the Act has been used and the agreement is drawn up in the specified form and it has been registered as an agreement under the Act. It seems to us therefore that a large number of these settlements must have been effected under these conditions and under the impression that they come under the Act. In these circumstances it behoves us to uphold them under the Act if we can; otherwise much injustice will result. And lastly we have here the fact that the Act has already been judicially interpreted along those lines by a Judge of this Court in (1939) N L J 85.[1]

In these circumstances we feel that the nearest we can come to reconciling these conflicting Sections is to hold (1) that the settlements contemplated by the Act are not restricted in their scope and that payment of the debts can be agreed to be made either in cash or in kind, and (2) that if the "amounts" due are made payable in cash, then the provisions of S. 13 are attracted and in that case the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts does not arise until the provisions of S. 13 (3) have been complied with; but (3) if the amounts are payable in kind, then the agreement is enforceable as a decree by the Civil Courts the moment it is registered. The appeal is allowed and the order of the lower Court is reversed. The agreement will be treated as a decree for specific performance of the contract to sell the land contained in the agreement and execution will proceed accordingly. Costs here and in the Courts below will be paid by the respondents.

R.M./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 230

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Thakur Chudaman Singh Rajput — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Babu Kamtanath Gauri Shanker Bhargava — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 35 of 1936, Decided on 15th March 1939, from appellate decree of Gruer J., in S. A. No. 31 of 1935, D/- 29th October 1936.

(a) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920), Ss. 49, 110 — S. 49 has no retrospective effect in respect of leases of sir land validly granted under old Act by ex-proprietor when he was proprietor — Rights acquired under the lease are saved by S. 110.

The provisions of Sec. 49 have no retrospective effect in respect of leases of sir land, validly granted under the old Act, by an ex-proprietor, when he was proprietor. The leases and the rights acquired by the tenant under them, under the old Act are expressly saved by S. 110 of the present Act : A I R 1933 Nag 378, Rel. on; 9 N L R 158, Ref. [P 232 C 1]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes — Construction of Acts.

No Act should be construed so as to destroy existing rights unless there is unambiguous language to that effect. [P 231 C 2]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Marginal notes — Marginal notes can be looked into if particular construction leads to conflict of rights granted by Act and those acquired under old Act repealed by it.

Where a particular construction of a Section of an Act leads to a conflict of rights granted by the Act and those acquired under an old Act repealed by it, the Court is entitled to look to the marginal note in the Section for purpose of interpreting it. [P 231 C 2]

M. B Kinkhede, J. Sen and A. R. Kulkarni — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye and R. K. Rao — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a Letters Patent Appeal which raises an important question about the retrospective effect of S. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. One Tikaitsingh was the proprietor of an 8 annas share in Mouza Chhapara Khurd and held certain sir land in connexion with that share. On 13th January 1908 he mortgaged his proprietary rights to the defendant-appellant. The mortgage was for foreclosure and in 1919 the defendant sued upon it. But before he did that Tikaitsingh granted two leases of his sir fields to one Gauri Shankar, the father of the present plaintiff, by two documents dated 12th March 1917 and 6th August 1917. They were permanent leases and the plaintiff now claims title under those documents and claims the right to possess this land under rights derived from them. It was conceded in the trial Court that these two permanent leases were valid. After the suit on the mortgage had been instituted, the new Tenancy Act came into force, that is to say it came into force on 1st May 1920 save as to S. 96 with which we are not here concerned. Then on 12th March 1921 the defendant obtained a decree for foreclosure and thereby the original mortgagor Tikaitsingh, or rather his son Dillisingh, Tikaitsingh being dead, became the exproprietary occupancy tenant and the mortgagee became his landlord. Dillisingh defaulted in paying his rent and consequently the defendant sued him in 1930 for arrears of rent and obtained a decree on 11th June 1930. In pursuance of this decree he obtained an order for ejectment on 11th April 1931 and took possession of the land. It is to be observed that the present plaintiff was not a party either to the mortgage suit or to the rent suit or to the proceedings for ejectment. But in spite of that the defendant obtained possession though exactly how is not clear. Because of that the plaintiff filed the present suit for possession and obtained a decree in the trial Court which was confirmed in second appeal, the decree of the intervening Court to the opposite effect having been set aside.

It is urged on behalf of the defendant that S. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act, either has retrospective effect or at any rate operates so as to destroy any vested interests which the plaintiff might have obtained under the old law. It is said that sub-s. (1) enacts that > notwithstanding any contract to the contrary . . . a proprietor who temporarily or permanently loses . . . . . his right to occupy any portion of his sir land as a proprietor, shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land and any tenancy right granted by him in such sir land for a period exceeding five years, without the sanction of a Revenue Officer, shall thereupon lapse.

Our attention is also drawn to S. 49 (3) which states that > nothing in this Section shall affect rights under any document duly registered before 21st October 1898.

It is argued that such documents having been saved and no other documents having been saved, S. 49 has retrospective effect, or at any rate destroys these vested rights.

It is a rule of construction that no Act should be construed so as to destroy existing rights unless there is unambiguous language to that effect. When we turn to S. 110 of the present Tenancy Act it enacts that > all rules . . . . . made . . . . . and leases granted . . . . rights acquired and liabilities incurred . . . . under any of the enactments hereby repealed shall, so far as may be, be deemed to have been respectively made . . . . . granted . . . . . acquired and incurred . . . . . under this Act.

It is thus clear that so far as rights acquired are concerned, provided they were acquired under one of the former Acts repealed by the present Act, they have been saved and are deemed to have been acquired under the present Act. A difficulty may arise as regards the word "leases" in this way: if the leases in question are deemed to have been acquired under the present Act then they are inoperative, or at any rate inoperative beyond the term of five years, because of S. 49. But since such a construction would lead to a conflict between rights under the leases deemed to have been so granted and the rights acquired under the old Acts hereby saved we are entitled to look to the marginal note : see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 7, page 186. The marginal note indicates that the Section is dealing with the extent of the savings made by the Act. Therefore, in our opinion, the leases granted, together with all rights acquired, are being saved and not destroyed. We were referred to the words "so far as may be." But as there is no difficulty in saving the leases and the rights acquired and liabilities incurred under them, provided they can be said to have been acquired and incurred under one of the old Acts repealed by the present one, these words introduce no complication into this case. We have now to see what rights the plaintiff acquired under the old Tenancy Act. Under that he was an ordinary tenant. Tenants of that kind were divided into two classes, namely those whose holding consisted entirely of sir, and others. So far as the former are concerned they held, according to the old law, under the terms of the contract entered into between the landlord and themselves except as regards certain particulars which do not concern us here. This is not to be found in express terms in the old Act but it must be implied from Ss. 63, 64, 67 and 69, and it was so held in 9 N L R 158[1] at page 159. Sec. 45 conferred ex-proprietary occupancy rights upon the proprietor of sir land who transferred his rights, but sub-s. (5) expressly saved the rights of a tenant whose holding consisted exclusively of sir. It is in these words :

> The accrual of occupancy-tenant right under sub-s. (1) shall not affect the rights of an ordinary tenant holding any part of the sir land at the time of such accrual.

Therefore it is clear that under the old Act the rights which accrued to the plaintiff by his leases were expressly saved by S. 45 (5). It follows that those rights were acquired under that Act and consequently are deemed to have been acquired by Section 110 of the present Act, under the present Act. Therefore his rights under these leases are saved to him and remain as they were before. That being so, it follows that the decrees of the first Court and this Court which decree his right to possession are correct. In support of this view are 19 N L R 110[2] and 30 N L R 109[3] at p. 111 which hold that the provisions of the present Act relating to this matter have no retrospective effect in respect of leases of sir granted by the ex-proprietor when he was proprietor. Most of the arguments on behalf of the appellant, and the rulings cited by his learned counsel, were based on the assumption that the present position of the plaintiff is that of a sub-tenant because of the definition in S. 37 (2) (b) of the present Act. Those rulings are : 13 C P L R 19,[4] at p. 21, 14 N L R 107,[5] 28 N L R 93,[6] 30 N L R 25[7] and 50 Cal 419.[8] Reference was also made to Secs. 115 and 117, T. P. Act. But since in our view the plaintiff's rights are expressly preserved by him by S. 110 no further reference to these arguments and authorities is necessary. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Narayan v. Bisram, (1913) 9 N L R 158 = 21 I C 607.
2. Hindusingh v. Mangal, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 227=72 I C 438=19 N L R 110.
3. Bholu v. Chajjulalsa, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 378=147 I C 561=30 N L R 109.
4. Venkat Rao v. Kohlu Gond, (1900) 13 C P L R 19.
5. Sarjerao v. Tukaram, (1917) 4 A I R Nag 86= 46 I C 244=14 N L R 107.
6. Baldeoprasad v. Premnarain, (1932) 19 A I R Nag 107=139 I C 369=28 N L R 93.
7. Sheolal v. Abdul Husein, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 255=148 I C 257=30 N L R 25.
8. Ramkissendas v. Binjraj Chowdhury, (1923) 10 A I R Cal 691=77 I C 910=50 Cal 419.

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 232

POLLOCK J.

Liquidator of Society Sangakheda Kalan Co-operative Bank, Hoshangabad — Appellant.

v.

Ayodhyaprasad Shiamlal and others — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 77 of 1938, Decided on 16th January 1939, from order of Addl. District Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 1st December 1937.

 Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 2 (17) (h) and 80— Liquidator appointed under S. 42, Co-operative Societies Act, is public officer—Attachment by him in execution of award issued by Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies — Objection by person to attachment dismissed — Suit by that person under O. 21, R. 63 must fail for want of notice to liquidator.

The duties of the liquidator appointed under S. 42, Co-operative Societies Act, are quasi-judicial duties and he has authority to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel the production of documents in the same way as the Civil Court. As the liquidator is appointed by Government and performs public duties, he is an officer in the service of Government when acting as liquidator and is therefore a 'public officer' as defined in the Civil Procedure Code. Hence where in execution of an award issued by the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies the liquidator has attached a house and an objection to the attachment brought by a person on the ground that the house belonged to him being dismissed, a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., is brought to establish his title, the suit must fail for want of notice to the liquidator : A I R 1927 P C 176, Rel. on ; A I R 1934 Nag 201, Disting.

[P 233 C 1]

B. L. Gupta — for Appellant.

K. B. Tare — for Respondents.

Judgment.—In execution of an award issued by the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies against Ramcharan for a debt due to the Sangakheda Society under liquidation the liquidator attached a house. The respondents Ajodhya Prasad and Banwari objected to the attachment on the ground that the house belonged to them, and, after that objection had been dismissed, brought a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., to establish their title. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that no notice had been given to the defendant liquidator as required by S. 80, Civil P. C. The lower Appellate Court held that no notice was necessary under Sec. 80 and remanded the case for trial.

In the lower Court it was assumed that a liquidator is a public officer as defined in S. 2 (17), Civil P. C. This was also assumed in 30 N L R 240[1] without discussion. The point has been taken in this Court that the liquidator is not a public officer. Under cl. (h) of S. 2 (17) a 'public officer' includes every officer in the service or pay of the Government. An affidavit that has been filed in this Court shows that the liquidator is the manager of the Co-operative Central Bank Ltd., Hoshangabad, and is paid a salary of Rs. 50 p. m. by that institution; that he had been appointed a liquidator under Sec. 42 (1), Co-operative Societies Act, (2 of 1912) by order of the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies and has the powers mentioned in S. 42 (2) of that Act; and that as liquidator he is not paid any allowance. The duties of the liquidator appointed under Sec. 42, Co-operative Societies Act, are quasi judicial duties and he has authority to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel the production of documents in the same way as the Civil Court. As the liquidator is appointed by Government and performs public duties, I consider that he is an officer in the service of Government when acting as liquidator and is therefore a "public officer" as defined in the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 80, Civil P. C., requires that no suit shall be instituted against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been given to him. The decision of the Privy Council in 51 Bom 725[2] makes it quite clear that no suit can be brought without previous notice against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity even if the relief claimed is merely a declaration or injunction. Here the action of the liquidator that gave rise to the present proceedings was his attachment of the house. The remark in 30 N L R 240[1] that notice was not necessary in that case, was obiter and the facts were different because there, there had been no attachment by the liquidator. I therefore agree with the trial Court that the suit must fail for want of notice. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee in this Court Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

1. Yedha Society, Nimar v. Pragdas, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 201=148 I C 714=30 N L R 240.
2. Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secy. of State, (1927) 14 A I R P C 176=104 I C 257=54 I A 338 =51 Bom 725 (P C).

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 233

FULL BENCH

STONE C. J., GRILLE AND VIVIAN BOSE JJ.

Mohammad Azizullakhan Mohammad Salamullah Khan — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Mohammad Noorullah Khan and others —Defendants — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 26-B of 1935, Decided on 14th April 1939, from order of the Addl. Dist. Judge, Buldana, D/- 9th January 1935.

(a) Registration Act (1908, as amended by Act 21 of 1929), S. 17 (1) (b) — Applicability to Berar — Notification No. 3510-B issued by Governor-General in Council in 1913 stating that Registration Act (1908) shall apply to Berar subject to any amendments to which that enactment is for the time being subject in Central Provinces is not ultra vires — Amendment of 1929 therefore applies to Berar and award is compulsorily registrable under Section 17 (1) (b).

Notification No. 3510-B issued by the Governor-General in Council in 1913 stating that not only should the enactments specified in the Schedule (which included the unamended Registration Act of 1908) apply to Berar but also those enactments subject to any amendments to which the enactments are for the time being subject in the Central Provinces is not ultra vires. Cl. 4 of the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council, 1902, can be read as meaning that the Governor-General in Council may, if he thinks fit, and if that is the more convenient way of introducing modifications of existing laws into Berar, (as indeed it is), pass such a general administrative measure. There is nothing inherently wrong in it. As a matter of broad practice, Berar is governed along with the Central Provinces as one large administrative unit although legally and technically it is entirely separate, and in general, laws which obtain in the Central Provinces are introduced almost automatically into Berar as a mere routine of administration. Therefore this is clearly the more convenient way of dealing with amending enactments. As this practice is in vogue for a long time and has been followed without question or objection for a number of years and which has affected for better or for worse the lives and properties of countless numbers of people it behoves the Court, if that be at all possible, to try and find a legal origin for it. Hence the amendment of 1929 to Sec. 17 can be regarded as legally applicable to Berar and therefore award is compulsorily registrable under Section 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. [P 235 C 2; P 236 C 1, 2]

 (b) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 17 (1) (b) and 49—Effect of unregistered award — Filing of award under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., affects immovable property comprised in award and therefore requires registration when it is used for purpose of being filed under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C.

There is no law which requires an award to be registered before it can operate as an award in the same sense as the Transfer of Property Act requires the registration of sales and mortgages dealing with immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees and more. An unregistered award is not therefore invalid for all purposes. The only drawbacks attached to it are those mentioned in S. 49, Registration Act, that is to say, it cannot be used to "affect any immovable property comprised therein" and it cannot be received "as evidence of any transaction affecting such property." The filing of an award under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., does not merely form a document which forms part of a judicial proceeding but it affects immovable property comprised in the award and hence requires registration when it is used for the purpose of being filed under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. : A I R 1929 P C 269 and A I R 1938 Bom 422, Rel. on; Case law reviewed.

[P 236 C 2; P 237 C 1; P 239 C 1; P 240 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23, R. 3 — Parties agreeing in stating that suit has been adjusted —Court must record it even if compromise was embodied in unregistered document (Obiter).

When both parties come before the Court and are agreed in stating that the suit has been adjusted, then the Court has no option (except perhaps an inherent power to prevent its proceedings from being used to work substantial injustice) but to record it. It does not then matter whether the compromise was embodied in an unregistered document or not because the authority to proceed is grounded on the statements made to the Court, the admissions of both sides on which the Court is warranted to, and in fact must, act when both sides are agreed. That is the "proof" of which the rule speaks. The reason is that that which is admitted in the pleadings or statements made to the Court need not be proved. Under the law the writing becomes (unless registration is necessary to effect the transaction itself in certain sales and mortgages) the only evidence when the matter is in dispute, but that evidence becomes unnecessary when the agreement is not in dispute: A I R 1930 P C 158, Rel. on; 24 Cal 20; A I R 1924 Cal 558; 5 Bom 143 and 3 Mad H C R 342, Ref.

[P 238 C 1]

(d) Arbitration — Award — Award need not be in writing — Proof of oral award is not excluded by provisions of Registration Act.

An award need not be in writing. An arbitrator can validly deliver an oral award whatever the nature and value of the property involved. The Registration Act only fastens upon written instruments and therefore proof of an oral award would not be excluded by its provisions. [P 239 C 1]

(e) Arbitration — Award — Registration — Unregistered award affecting immovable and moveable properties — Portion dealing with moveable property not separable with reasonable clearness from portion dealing with immovable property—Award must be rejected as a whole.

The doctrine that unregistered award is bad only in so far as it affects the immovable property and that therefore effect can be given to it so far as the moveables are concerned cannot apply unless the good portion of the award can be separated with reasonable clearness from the bad. If it cannot, and if the two are inextricably mixed up, then the award has to be rejected as a whole, and this even though the Court should approach an award with a desire to support rather than to destroy it. [P 240 C 2]

Y. V. Jakatdar — for Appellant.

V. K. Rajwade, A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar, and A. Razak Khan—for Respondents 1, and 2 to 7 respectively.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit under Para. 20 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., in which the plaintiff sues for the filing of an award. The parties are heirs of the late Nawab Khan Bahadur Salamullah Khan of Deulghat. Of them the second son is the plaintiff-appellant. The other heirs are the defendants-respondents, the eldest son being respondent 1. The third son died during the pendency of these proceedings and respondents 2 to 5 are his heirs. The remaining heirs, namely respondents 6, 7 and 8, are the deceased's daughters. When the late Khan Bahadur died and questions arose about the division of his estate, all his heirs, that is to say, his three sons and his three daughters, referred the matter to arbitration and agreed to abide by the award of Mr. M. Sharfuddin, a pleader of Amraoti, whom they appointed as arbitrator. The agreement to refer was signed on 11th June 1931 and the award was delivered on 21st March 1932.

All the parties to this suit accept this award except the eldest son, respondent 1, and he contends that the award not having been registered no suit will lie on it, and also that the suit is in any case barred by time. The first of these points has been found in his favour by the learned Judge of the lower Court and the second against him, with the result that the suit has been dismissed. The plaintiff appeals. We will deal with the question of registration first. The argument under this head consists of several parts. The first, and the most important from an administrative point of view, is whether a certain amendment to S. 17, Registration Act, has ever been legally applied to Berar, or whether the Notification of the Gevernor-General in Council under which it has hitherto been assumed that the amendment applies, is ultra vires. It is admitted that if the amendment does not apply to Berar, then registration will not be necessary. The question arises in this way. Sec. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, requires registration of all non-testamentary instruments [not being gifts of immovable property; that is separately dealt with in cl. (a)] which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, etc. . . . any right, title or interest . . . . of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immovable property.

There can be no doubt that awards, when they relate to immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, fall within the ambit of this clause. But in the Registration Act, as it stood before the amendment in question, awards were expressly exempted under S. 17 (2) (vi) which in its unamended form was in the following terms:

Nothing in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) applies to. . . . . .

(vi) any decree or order of a Court and any award.

Therefore up to the date of the amendment awards did not require registration. Then came S. 10 of Act 21 of 1929 which introduced amendments to S. 17. In so far as they are relevant to the present matter the words "and any award" were deleted from cl. (vi) above and in their place were substituted except a decree or order expressed to be made on a compromise and comprising immovable property other than that which is the subject-matter of the suit or proceeding.

This, of course, had the effect of making cl. (b) of sub-sec. (1) applicable, and so awards now require registration wherever the Act and its amendment apply. We now turn to the question at issue here, which is, has this amendment ever been properly introduced into Berar. There can be no doubt that Berar is not British India and that until the passing of S. 47 of the present Government of India Act of 1935 it was technically administered as a separate unit by the Governor-General in Council acting under the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council, 1902. Among the administrative powers conferred by that Order were those of legislation. These, as their Lordships of the Privy Council point out in 26 N L R 326,[1] are derived from cl. 3 of the Order in Council of 1902 referred to above. Therefore the Governor-General in Council has the right to legislate for Berar either personally or by delegating any such power or jurisdiction "to any servant of the British Indian Government." Cl. 3 having thus conferred powers of legislation, cl. 4 then clothes the same authority with the right to make such rules and orders as may seem expedient for carrying "this Order into effect," that is to say, in so far as the present matter of legislation is concerned, for carrying into effect such legislative measures as the Governor-General in Council, or his authorized agent as above, may think fit to make for Berar. One of these means is by applying "with or without modifications all or any of the provisions of any enactment in force elsewhere or otherwise." Now the Registration Act of 1908, that is to say the unamended Act which did not require the registration of awards, was introduced into Berar by the Governor-General in Council on 3rd November 1913 by Notification No. 3510-B, but the Amending Act of 1929 (Act 21 of 1929) has never been so introduced. What the Governor-General has done instead has been to state in the above Notification that not only shall the enactments specified in the schedule (which includes the unamended Registration Act of 1908) apply to Berar but also those enactments subject to any amendments to which the enactments are for the time being subject in the Central Provinces.

The question is whether he has power to do this. It is argued, and not unnaturally, that the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council clothes the Governor-General in Council with authority to legislate and that he cannot delegate this authority to any other person or body except as provided in the Order, that is to say except to "any servant of the British Indian Government." But what he has done here has been completely to abrogate his functions in so far as all amending measures are concerned and not even to appoint a subordinate authority to determine whether a measure which is deemed by a Legislature in British India, even a subordinate Provincial Legislature which can in no sense be considered a servant of the British Indian Government, to be suitable for British

1. Dattatraya Krishnarao v. Secy. of State, (1930) 17 A I R P C 267=128 I C 664=57 I A 318=58 Cal 570=26 N L R 326 (P C).

India, is also suitable for Berar. It is argued that the Governor-General in Council cannot thus abandon his responsibilities and that no measure can become law in Berar, even if it be only an amending enactment, until the Governor-General in Council has brought his mind to bear upon the question and has determined whether it is suitable for introduction there or not. We confess that there is considerable force in this contention and had it not been for the long continued practice, we would have been inclined to decide that way. But the effect of so deciding would be so disastrous and the consequences so serious (it would have the effect of rendering important amending enactments between 1913 and 1935 null and void in Berar) that we hesitate to do so. When Courts find in vogue a long continued practice which has been followed without question or objection for a number of years and which has affected for better or for worse the lives and properties of countless numbers of people it behoves them, if that be at all possible, to try and find a legal origin for it. This we think is to be found in cl. 4 itself. In the first place, it is perfectly general :

> The Governor-General in Council may make such rules and orders as may seem expedient for carrying this Order into effect.

It is not entirely impossible though we confess the construction is strained, to read this as meaning that the Governor-General in Council may, if he thinks fit, and if that is the more convenient way of introducing modifications of existing laws into Berar, (as indeed it is), pass a general administrative measure of the character we find here. There is nothing inherently wrong in it. As a matter of broad practice, Berar is governed along with the Central Provinces as one large administrative unit although legally and technically it is entirely separate, and, in general, laws which obtain in the Central Provinces are introduced almost automatically into Berar as a mere routine of administration. Therefore this is clearly the more convenient way of dealing with amending enactments. Consequently, since cl. 4 is worded so generally, it is not impossible to construe it as conferring the powers which in fact we find have been exercised. This is especially so as sub-cl. (a) is also worded widely, > for determining the law and procedure to be observed, whether by applying with or without modifications all or any of the provisions of any enactment in force elsewhere or otherwise.

It is not easy to determine the force of the words "or otherwise" but we think it is possible to ascribe to them a meaning which does not tie the Governor-General in Council down to the procedure of issuing a fresh notification in respect of each amending enactment. We observe that this does not necessarily imply a complete abdication of function and we have no doubt that in practice that is never the case. The Governor-General in Council can always state that notwithstanding the notification we are considering any particular amendment of an enactment which would apply to Berar under the notification shall not apply, and we have no doubt that he would do so if it were undesirable that it should. When carefully analyzed therefore the matter merely comes to this: that there are two ways of doing the same thing, one a positive and direct way and the other an indirect one. When therefore we find that the functions bestowed by the Order in Council of 1902 have been exercised in the indirect way for a large number of years and in respect of a large volume of important legislation, and when we find that such a construction of the Order is not an impossible one, it behoves us to accept it even though we would not have so interpreted it if the matter had been one of first impression.

It is also possible to conclude that cl. 3 of the Order in Council deals with legislation which is being initiated for the first time, such for example, as the Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law of 1921 with which their Lordships were dealing, while cl. 4 refers to enactments which are already in force elsewhere and which merely have to be incorporated in whole or in part into the laws of Berar. It is possible to conclude that the powers of the Governor-General are wider in the latter case. We therefore hold that the notification we have been discussing was not ultra vires, and that means that the award in suit was compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (b).

We have next to consider the effect of that. There is no law which requires an award to be registered before it can operate as an award in the same sense as the Transfer of Property Act requires the registration of sales and mortgages dealing with immovable property of the value of one hundred rupees and more. An unregistered award is not therefore invalid for all purposes. The only drawbacks attached to it are those mentioned in S. 49, Registration Act, that is to say, it cannot be used to "affect any immovable property comprised therein" and it cannot be received "as evidence of any transaction affecting such property." The question is whether the mere filing of an award under para. 20 can be said to amount to one of these purposes or whether the award when used solely for this purpose merely forms a document which forms part of a judicial proceeding. If it does, then, according to repeated decisions of the Privy Council, it will not require registration in so far as it is used for that purpose.

It will be necessary however to examine carefully the exact scope of their Lordships' pronouncements. The rule as originally enunciated was simply this. Their Lordships stated in 20 All 171[2] that the provisions of S. 17 of the Act do not apply to proper judicial proceedings, whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties, or of orders made by the Court.

These remarks were made in respect of a petition for extension of time put in by the mortgagors in that suit in foreclosure proceedings, and the question was whether the petition could be used in evidence in another suit between the same parties in respect of the same property. In a later case, 22 Mad 508,[3] somewhat similar remarks were made in the following circumstances. There was a suit for the possession of certain lands and certain other lands were expressly excluded from the scope of the suit. This suit was compromised by two documents. One was called a razinamah and the other an agreement of union. The former related exclusively to the lands in suit and set out the proportions in which the parties had agreed to share them. It also made independent reference to the lands which had been excluded from the scope of the suit and about which the parties had also compromised, and set out the effect of that compromise. It placed the lands in a separate schedule called Sch. D. The other document, the deed of union, referred to both sets of land.

The parties produced the razinamah in Court and asked the Court to pass a decree in accordance with it "under S. 375, Civil P. C., after settling." That was done, but the decree made no reference to the lands in Sch. D which had been excluded from the scope of the suit. The parties acted upon the entire agreement but subsequently disputes again arose and this time a suit was brought for possession of the lands which had been excluded from the scope of the former suit, namely the lands contained in Sch. D of the razinamah. The defendant endeavoured to defend her possession by setting up a title derived under the compromise. Their Lordships held that in maintaining this defence the defendant could derive no aid from the agreement of union because it had not been registered. But as regards the razinamah they said :

The razinamah was not registered in accordance with the Act of 1877; but the objection founded upon its non-registration does not, in their Lordships' opinion, apply to its stipulations and provisions in so far as these were incorporated with, and given effect to by, the order made upon it by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1885. The razinamah, in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially by the learned Judge, was in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration; and any order pronounced in terms of it constituted res judicata, binding upon both the parties to this appeal who gave their consent to it.

But their Lordships went on to point out that the razinamah itself was not admissible in evidence and that since the portion of the compromise relating to the lands in Sch. D had not been incorporated in the decree and that since the suit in question related solely to those lands, any defence based exclusively upon the razinamah must fail. This question was again considered by their Lordships in 47 Cal 485[4] where their earlier decision was examined at length and they stated that what the Board were considering in the earlier case was the effect of S. 375, Civil P. C., and they went on to hold that a decree of a Court which recorded a compromise was always admissible as evidence of the adjustment in so far as the adjustment was incorporated and recorded in it even though its terms might not be executable without registration in so far as it affected property outside the suit. Their exact words are :

They think the document did purport to create a contingent right or interest in immovable property, and they do not think that in treating the decree pro tanto as a nullity the learned Subordinate Judge has given effect to the difference between receiving the decree in evidence as a decree and executing its terms as against property outside the suit.

The reference to Sec. 375 (now O. 23, R. 3) is, in our opinion, important. What that Rule states is that :

Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in

2. Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu, (1898) 20 All 171=25 I A 9=7 Sar 273 (P C).
3. Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni, (1899) 22 Mad 508=26 I A 101=7 Sar 516 (P C).
4. Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zamindari Co., (1919) 6 A I R P C 79 = 53 I C 534 = 46 I A 240 = 47 Cal 485 (P C).

part by any lawful agreement or compromise . . . the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or, satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit.

Now when both parties come before the Court and are agreed in stating that the suit has been adjusted, then the Court has no option (except perhaps an inherent power to prevent its proceedings from being used to work substantial injustice) but to record it : 57 Cal 1311[5] at p. 1321. It does not then matter whether the compromise was embodied in an unregistered document or not because the authority to proceed is grounded on the statements made to the Court, the admissions of both sides on which the Court is warranted to, and in fact must, act when both sides are agreed. That is the "proof" of which the Rule speaks. See on this point 24 Cal 20[6] at pp. 23, 25; 28 C W N 1033,[7] 5 Bom 143[8] at pp. 152, 153 and 3 Mad H C R 342[9] at p. 345. The reason is that that which is admitted in the pleadings or statements made to the Court need not be proved : see S. 58, Evidence Act. Under the law the writing becomes (unless registration is necessary to effect the transaction itself in certain sales and mortgages) the only evidence when the matter is in dispute, but that evidence becomes unnecessary when the agreement is not in dispute.

This we think is what their Lordships stressed in 47 Cal 485,[4] for they state at p. 499 that in their opinion the view which Beachcroft J. took in the High Court was accurate. The learned Judge had disagreed with his colleague Mookerjee J. and held that the petition before them (which embodied the terms of the compromise) "was not an agreement to lease but a mere statement to the Court that the parties had made such an agreement." The view of Mookerjee J. which we take it was not accepted, was that the document afforded the necessary proof qua document and not qua a statement made to the Court. These two differing views are to be found at pp. 489 and 490 of the report.

5. Sourendranath v. Tarubala Dasi, (1930) 17 A I R P C 158 = 123 I C 545 = 57 I A 133= 57 Cal 1311 (P C).
6. Satyesh Chunder Sircar v. Dhunpul Singh, (1897) 24 Cal 20.
7. Lakshan Chandra Mandal v. Takin Dhali, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 558 = 80 I C 357 = 28 C W N 1033 = 39 C L J 90.
8. Burjorji Cursetji Panthaki v. Muncherji Kuverji, (1880) 5 Bom 143.
9. Chidambara Chetty v. Karunalyavalangapuly Taver, (1866) 3 Mad H C R 342.

We take it that the effect of this difference would be this: when the parties are not agreed, then an issue has to be struck and the matter has to be "proved" in the ordinary way, and in that event the usual rules of evidence, including those embodied in S. 49, apply. The result is that when the agreement is embodied in a document which requires registration (such for instance as an agreement to lease, as in the Privy Council case) and the formality of registration is not complied with, then the document is not receivable in evidence and no oral evidence of its contents is permissible because of S. 91, Evidence Act. The point, as we see it, is that it is not the document upon which the Court proceeds in such cases but the statements or rather the admissions made before it as provided for in S. 58, Evidence Act. Therefore the document, qua document, forms no part of the proceedings of the Court. It can only do so in so far as it constitutes the statement of one or other of the parties; and in so far as it does that, no Court can decree a claim or act on such a statement, if it is contested, to the detriment of the person challenging it. If that stage is reached, then proof is required in the ordinary way.

The question then resolves itself into this: does the award have to be proved under para. 20, and if so, does S. 49, Registration Act, shut it out when it is not registered and when it relates to property of the requisite value? We wish to make it clear that we are not dealing with a case such as may arise where the arbitration is on a suit where the award is a step in the course of a suit. To such case different considerations apply. The filing, in such a case, is by the arbitrators and no contest is contemplated: see Sch. 2, Para. 10. On the other hand, where the arbitration is without the intervention of the Court the award is filed by a party. Para. 20 makes provision for an application to file. That application initiates a contest. That contest has as an essential part the proof of the award. Then comes para. 21 :

Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon, and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award.

Clause 2 provides that "upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow." Three things are therefore necessary: first, the Court must be satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration; secondly, that an award has been made thereon; and thirdly, that no matter, such as is referred to in paras. 14 and 15, is proved. No; so far as the first is concerned, an agreement to refer to arbitration does not require either writing or registration. Therefore that can clearly be proved by oral evidence unless it has been reduced to writing and in that case the writing must be produced. In either case want of registration is no bar.

The next step is more difficult: the plaintiff [for that is what the applicant is now termed under para. 20 (2)] has to prove that an award has been made. Now an award need not be in writing: an arbitrator can, we conceive, validly deliver an oral award whatever the nature and value of the property involved. The Registration Act only fastens upon written instruments and therefore proof of an oral award would not be excluded by its provisions. But that is a contingency we need not consider here because para. 20 contemplates only written awards. The application must ask "that the award be filed in Court," and it is clear that only a written award can be so filed. Therefore we shall confine our attention to written awards, and so far as this case is concerned, to awards of a kind which require registration under S. 17 (1) (b).

Section 49 states that in such a case the document shall not (a) affect any immovable property comprised in it, nor shall it (b) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property, but that it can be used as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be evidenced by a registered instrument. This, we agree, does not shut out proof of the terms of the document in all cases. It merely prevents the document from being used for the purpose of affecting immovable property of the requisite value, or as evidence of any transaction which affects such property. Founding upon this however it was argued that when a person applies to have an award filed in Court he is not endeavouring to affect the property in it. He is only asking that a piece of paper be filed in Court and that, it was urged, is a transaction affecting that piece of paper only and not the property comprised in it. This contention, though ingenious, has, we think, been negatived by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 33 C W N 1150.[10] That was a case in which a plaintiff who had obtained a sale deed which required registration, and which therefore he was unable to enforce, brought a suit for specific performance and endeavoured to use the deed, not for the purposes of enforcing the sale, but in proof of an agreement to sell. Their Lordships declined to countenance such a subterfuge. They stated at p. 1155 that an instrument which requires registration > cannot be used in any legal proceedings to bring about indirectly the effect which it would have had if registered. It is not to "affect" the property, and it is not to be received as evidence of any transaction "affecting" the property.

They also stated:

> Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this is within the prohibition of the Section. They think that an agreement for the sale of immovable property is a transaction "affecting" the property within the meaning of the Section inasmuch as, if carried out, it will bring about a change of ownership. The intention of the Act is shown by the provision of Sec. 17 (2) (V), which exempts from registration, and therefore frees from the restriction of Sec. 49, a document which does not itself create an interest in immovable property but merely creates a right to obtain another document which will do so. In the face of this provision, to allow a document which does itself create such an interest to be used as the foundation of a suit for specific performance appears to their Lordships to be little more than an evasion of the Act.

These remarks, we think, apply with equal force to arbitration awards. The matter becomes evident upon an examination of para. 21, which states that the Court must be satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon. This, as we see it, means not merely that an award has been made but that the award sought to be filed is the award in question, that is to say the Court has to be satisfied not merely that the piece of paper produced was signed by the arbitrators but that it contains the very terms and conditions which the arbitrators intended should govern the rights and liabilities of the parties. It may be that the document will be the only means of proving this in the ordinary way but that will not always be so. Para. 21 also states that the Court must be satisfied that no ground such as is mentioned in para. 14 or para. 15 exists. Among these grounds is the following:

> Where it (the award) determines any matter not referred to arbitration, unless such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred.

Therefore the Court may have to examine evidence in suitable cases about the actual making of the award, that is to say of the transaction which affects the property in dispute. Another possible ground of investigation is whether either party has been guilty of "fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed, or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire." Then also there may be allegations of forgery, as for instance, that terms have been fraudulently inserted or substituted or erased from the document by one of the parties or their agents, after it had been duly signed and delivered. Therefore it is clear that when para. 21 directs the Court to be satisfied that "an award has been made thereon" the Court has to examine the transaction itself and this it can only do by receiving evidence of it. It does not matter in the least whether the objections which we have indicated are actually raised in any particular case or not because the Court is nonetheless examining the transaction when the only evidence produced—and it may well be the only evidence receivable—of its terms, is the document itself.

10. James R. R. Skinner v. Robert Hercules Skinner, (1929) 16 A I R P C 269 =119 I C 633= 56 I A 363=51 All 771=33 C W N 1150 (P C).

This is further evident from the fact that the Court is directed under para. 21, when it is satisfied about the matters we have referred to above, to order the award to be filed, and then to "pronounce judgment" according to the award, and upon this judgment follows a decree. It will be noted that the Court does not merely direct the award to be filed and then draw up a decree in accordance with its terms but has first to "pronounce judgment," that is to say to give a "statement . . . . . of the grounds of the decree." [See the definition of judgment in S. 2 (9), Civil P. C.]

We are clear that none of this can be done without at least using the award as evidence of the transaction which affects the property comprised in it even if it can be contended that the award is not being used in these proceedings to affect the property itself within the meaning of S. 49 (a). But, as we have shown, such a contention is effectively negatived by their Lordships of the Privy Council. After their pronouncement it is impossible to contend that the filing of an award under para. 21 with its necessary concomitant of judgment and decree does not affect the property comprised in it just as much as the filing of a sale deed in a suit for specific performance (the case before their Lordships), or for possession. This is also the view of the Bombay High Court in 40 Bom L R 952[11] at p. 955.

The last contention which we have to examine is this. It was urged that even if this be so, the award is bad only in so far as it affects the immovable property and that therefore effect can be given to it so far as the moveables are concerned. It was argued that the two have been separately dealt with in the award and that the one can be separated from the other. Reliance was placed upon the following authorities: Russell on Arbitration, 13th Edition, page 214, (1917) 1 K B 736[12] at pp. 747 and 748, 36 All 336[13] at p. 342, 21 Bom L R 716[14] and 15 Mad 336.[15]

We need not examine the applicability of this doctrine to the present case because it cannot apply unless the good portion of the award can be separated with reasonable clearness from the bad. If it cannot, and if the two are inextricably mixed up, then the award has to be rejected as a whole, and this even though, as McCardie J. says in the English case cited "the Court should approach an award with a desire to support rather than to destroy it."

Now so far as this award is concerned, the arbitrator has divided the bulk of it into separate compartments, but towards the end when dealing with the Jagir income he states that before the income is paid over to each sharer in the shares he gives, Nurullah Khan will be entitled as Jagirdar to deduct, among other things, > such amount for the maintenance of the fort and other property that has been ordered to remain in common as would be agreed before by all the sharers.

It will be impossible to do this without giving effect to the other portions of the award which divide most of the immovable property but keep some of it, including the fort referred to above, joint. Therefore the portion dealing with the moveables is unfortunately bound up with that which deals with the immovable property and we cannot disentangle the two without re-writing this portion of the award, and that of course we have no power to do.

An objection of limitation was also raised but on this point we agree with the learned Judge of the lower Court for the reasons 11. Chimanlal v. Dahyabhai, (1938) 25 A I R Bom 422=177 I C 911=40 Bom L R 952.

12. Shelby v. Whitbread & Co., (1917) 1 K B 736=86 L J K B 974=116 L T 690=33 T L R 214=81 J P 165=15 L G R 279.

13. Amir Begam v. Badruddin Husain, (1914) 1 A I R P C 105=23 I C 625=17 O C 120=36 All 336 (PC).

14. Hanmant v. Ramabai, (1919) 6 A I R Bom 38=51 I C 954=21 Bom L R 716.

15. Thandavan v. Valliamma, (1892) 15 Mad 336=2 M L J 130.

given by him in para. 5 of his judgment that the time occupied by the proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, should be allowed under S. 14, Limitation Act. In view of our other findings it is not necessary to say more than this on this point. The decision of the lower Court declining to file the award is therefore right and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 241

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Sheikh Rahman Sheikh Rahim — Appellant.

v.

Seth Sheodas Daga and others — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 37 of 1937, Decided on 16th March 1939, from order of Additional District Judge, Raipur, D/- 17th October 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47, O. 21, R. 90 — Judgment-debtor's application for setting aside sale falls under O. 21, R. 90 and not under Sec. 47 even though auction-purchaser is not made party to it.

An application by a judgment-debtor for setting aside an execution sale falls under the specific provisions of O. 21, R. 90 and not under the general provisions of Sec. 47 even though the auction purchaser may not have been made a party to such application : A I R 1934 Nag 21, Dissent.; A I R 1930 Nag 5, Ref. [P 241 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 90—Sale of portion of houses when entire houses proclaimed to be sold amounts to material irregularity—Whether it results in substantial injury depends upon facts of case.

If the sale proclamation states that the entire houses would be sold but actually only a portion of them is sold, this constitutes an irregularity and even perhaps a material irregularity, but whether such irregularity results in substantial injury depends upon the facts of each case : A I R 1933 Mad 225, Ref. [P 242 C 1]

D. N. Chaudhuri — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde, and Y. V. Jakatdar — for Respondents 1 and 2, and 3 respectively.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal against an order in execution refusing to set aside a sale. The decree-holders who are the respondents before us obtained a mortgage decree for sale which embraced three houses. Three separate proclamations were issued in which each of these three houses was put up for sale. The sale was fixed for 3rd October 1936 and on that date one of the houses was sold. As regards the other two, although the proclamations indicated that the entire houses would be sold, in point of fact only a 7/10 undivided interest in those two houses was sold. Judgment-debtor 1 thereupon applied to have these sales set aside on the ground that there had been a material irregularity which had caused him substantial injury. This prayer was refused in the lower Court and the appeal is against that order. The reason why a 7/10 share only was sold in each of the other two houses was because after the decree-holders had obtained their decree against these three houses certain other persons instituted another suit, entirely unconnected with the suits with which we are concerned here, claiming a 3/10 share in the two houses of which only 7/10 undivided interest is sold. They thereupon obtained an order from the Court staying the sale to the extent of 3/10 share in these two houses. That order was of course communicated to the sale-amin and consequently he sold only the remaining 7/10 share. One of the points urged in the appeal here is that there was nothing in the stay order to specify which of the two houses was to be sold partially and that that constitutes an illegality. We do not think there is anything in this because the order of stay refers to the suit in which the order had been obtained and in that suit only two of the houses were in question. Therefore the order clearly referred to those two houses. The judgment-debtor had an opportunity of objecting at the time of the sale and also after that and he has not made this one of the grounds of his objection in the lower Court.

The next question is whether this application is under S. 47 or under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. It is urged that as the auction-purchaser did not appear the application must be deemed to have been made under S. 47 and that consequently the limitations imposed by O. 21, R. 90 do not apply here. In support of that 31 N L R 67[1] at p. 80 is relied on. O. 21, R. 90 states the conditions on which alone an application for setting aside a sale may be made. It states inter alia that :

> Where any immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale.

It will be seen that the persons entitled to apply include the judgment-debtor.

1. Brijlal v. Manohar Prasad, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 21=150 I C 611=31 N L R 67.

Therefore we are unable to see how a judgment-debtor when he applies to set aside a sale can be said to apply under S. 47 when there is this specific provision in the Code. So far as the Nagpur ruling[1] we have just cited is concerned, that states that if the auction-purchaser is not joined and the application does not purport to be under O. 21, R. 90, then it must be taken to have been made under S. 47. With the utmost respect we are unable to agree. As we have said, as there is a specific provision in the Code for the setting aside of sales the application can only be under that provision and not under a general provision like S. 47. Also we are unable to see how a person who is obliged to come under O. 21, R. 90, can evade that provision by the simple expedient of not joining a person interested in the auction-sale. If the person is not joined and if his presence is necessary then the proper procedure would be to dismiss the application as was done in 26 N L R 127.[2] We are consequently of opinion that the application is under O. 21, R. 90, and not under S. 47. That being so, the applicant-appellant has to show that there was material irregularity and also that substantial injury was caused to him by reason of that irregularity. The irregularity pleaded here is that whereas the sale proclamation stated that the entire houses would be sold only a portion was sold. We have no doubt that that does constitute an irregularity and perhaps even a material irregularity, but whether substantial injury would flow from that is another matter. The learned counsel for the appellant relied on 56 Mad 356[3] where in somewhat similar circumstances the learned Judges of the Madras High Court came to the conclusion that substantial injury had not occurred. But, in our opinion, the ruling does not really support him. What was said there is to be found in the decision of Reilly J. at page 364:

I do not wish it to be understood that the absence of direct evidence in such a case as this, that is the evidence of some witness coming before the Court and saying that he was misled by such a notice as these which were published in the villages, would in all cases prevent a reasonable inference being drawn that by such an irregularity in the publication of the proclamations substantial loss had been caused to the judgment-debtors.

2. Haridas v. Mofatlal, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 5 = 121 I C 658=26 N L R 127.

3. Sivaskhandaraju v. Narasimha Pattamani, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 225 = 144 I C 414 = 56 Mad 356=64 M L J 439.

In point of fact they found that in that case substantial injury had not been traced to the irregularity. They found that there was no substantial injury. In our opinion, each case must depend on its own facts. There may be cases in which a defect of this kind clearly leads to injury, but in this case it has not been shown that any injury at all occurred. Nor has it been shown that if it did, it was by reason of the irregularity. On the contrary there are indications to show that a full price was paid. The auction-purchaser was joined as a party to the application which incidentally purported to be under O. 21, R. 90, and notices were served on him. He remained absent as is evident from the order sheets of 20th June 1936 and 22nd August 1936. We do not think he would have remained absent if he had obtained a bargain. The fact that he did not turn up indicates to our mind that he paid a proper price for the property purchased and that therefore it did not matter very much to him whether he retained the property or not. There is in addition the fact that no objection was raised by the judgment-debtor to the sale being allowed in respect of a 7/10 undivided share. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 50.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 242

GRILLE AND NIYOGI JJ.

Sarju Prasad Gillelal Agarwal — Defendant 4 — Appellant.

v.

Badri Prosad Ramaiya Prasad Tiwari, Plaintiff and others, Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 46 of 1935, Decided on 8th March 1939, from decree of the Addl. Sub-Judge, First Class, Jubbulpore, D/- 15th January 1935.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 1 —Object of joining necessary parties — Mortgage in favour of B and D —Suit by B alone—D dying during course of suit — B acquiring D's rights of recovering debt — Non-joinder of D held immaterial.

The object of joining the necessary parties is to enable the Court to pass an effective decree : AIR 1930 Mad 714, Rel. on. [P 244 C 1]

A mortgage was executed in favour of B and D. B alone brought a suit upon the mortgage. During the course of the suit D died and his right to recover the debt devolved upon B :

Held that although B alone had no right to sue on the day when he instituted the suit, he acquired the full and exclusive right when D died. On the date on which the decree was passed the non-joinder of D became wholly immaterial as he died pending the suit and hence B was entitled to the decree. [P 244 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908) O. 6, R. 14 and O. 4, R. 1—Scope of O. 6, Rule 14—Mortgage suit by one of two co-mortgagees presented by pleader for plaintiff-mortgagee is deemed to have been properly presented.

Order 6, R. 14 which requires a pleading to be signed by the parties is merely a matter of procedure. That provides for signature being made by any person who is authorized by the party. Hence a mortgage suit brought by one of the two mortgagees but duly authorized by the other is competent. Plaint in such case if presented by the pleader of the litigating mortgagee is deemed to have been properly presented : 17 Cal 580 (P C) and A I R 1918 All 275, Rel. on; 4 N L R 117 and A I R 1924 All 54, Disting. [P 244 C 1, 2]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 132—Operation of—Debtor's default during term of mortgage when furnishes starting point of limitation stated — Mortgage for certain period also providing that debt would become exigible on default by mortgagor in payment of annual interest —Provision enures for benefit of mortgagee but not of mortgagor — Limitation against mortgagee begins when mortgage debt becomes due and not when default is made by mortgagor in payment of interest.

Article 132 comes into operation only when the mortgagee is bound to sue and not when he has an option to sue. [P 245 C 2]

The period fixed by the parties for payment of the mortgage debt means that during that period neither the debtor is liable to pay nor the creditor is entitled to recover the debt. It only fixes the term of the mortgage and from the point of view of the mortgagee it marks the temporal limit of his investment. For the debtor's default during the term of the mortgage to be regarded as a cause of action for the suit the default ought to be such as would entitle the mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the term as much as it would entitle the mortgagee to recover his debt in full. [P 245 C 1]

Where a mortgage for a certain period also contains a proviso that the debt would become exigible on default by mortgagor in payment of the annual interest payable under the mortgage bond, such a clause only purports to give the mortgagee an option either to enforce the security at once or if the security is ample, to stand by his investment for the full term of the mortgage. The mortgagor cannot claim to redeem the property after having broken his own contract by refusing to pay interest. The proviso therefore enures only for the benefit of the mortgagee and not the mortgagor, and consequently time begins to run against the mortgagee under Art. 132 not when default is made by mortgagor in payment of interest but when the mortgage debt becomes due: A I R 1932 P C 207, Foll.; A I R 1934 All 152, Rel. on. [P 245 C 1, 2]

E. M. Joshi — for Appellant.

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal from the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jubbulpore, delivered on 15th January 1935 in Civil Suit No. 31 of 1933. The appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage executed by Damarilal, respondent 2, on 10th November 1919 in favour of the plaintiff Badriprasad and his uncle Durga Prasad, since deceased, to secure a debt of Rs. 3200. The appellant and respondents 3 to 6 were impleaded in the suit as subsequent mortgagees. The suit was resisted on various grounds out of which those which are material for decision of this appeal were that the plaint bore a forged signature of Durga Prasad and that it was not properly presented, and further that the suit was barred by time. The lower Court found that Durga Prasad's signature on the plaint was made by Badriprasad and that it having been made under his authority the suit was properly filed, and it negatived the plea of limitation. The lower Court's decree is contested on these points. At the outset it is urged that the suit ought to have been thrown out for non-joinder of Durga Prasad as the promise to pay the debt was a joint promise which under S. 45, Contract Act, was not capable of being enforced by one only of the two joint promisees. Reference is made to a number of decided cases but none of them, as will be shown presently, have any applicability to this case in view of the fact that Durga Prasad died during the pendency of the suit.

In 6 Cal 815[1] the additional plaintiffs were made parties to the suit but as the claim had become barred by S. 22, Limitation Act, so far as the added plaintiffs were concerned, it was held that in view of S. 45, Contract Act, the claim of the original plaintiff was also barred. The same view was taken in A I R 1923 Mad 337,[2] A I R 1930 Mad 714,[3] A I R 1931 P C 229[4] and 1 All 453.[5] It must be observed however that in these cases it was held that the excluded parties could be joined in the suit at any time before the judgment provided the claim was not barred by limitation at the time of their joinder. In the present case

1. Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) 6 Cal 815=8 C L R 457.
2. Mohana Velu Mudaliar v. Annamalai Mudaliar, (1923) 10 A I R Mad 337=72 I C 63=44 M L J 249.
3. Amirchand Nagindas and Co. v. Raoji Bhai Moti Bhai, (1930) 17 A I R Mad 714 = 130 I C 453=58 M L J 613.
4. Naba Kumar v. Radhashyam Mahish, (1931) 18 A I R P C 229=134 I C 654 (P C).
5. Dular Chand v. Balram Das, (1875-77) 1 All 453.

Durga Prasad died pending the suit and his right to recover the debt devolved on Badriprasad. Although he had no right to sue alone on the day on which he instituted the suit he acquired full and exclusive right to enforce the mortgage in the course of the suit when Durga Prasad died. As pointed out in A I R 1930 Mad 714[3] at p. 717 the object of joining the necessary parties is to enable the Court to pass an effective decree. On the day when the decree was passed the non-joinder of Durga Prasad became altogether immaterial as he had died. If it was open to Durga Prasad to join in the suit at any time before his claim was barred by limitation he could have signed the plaint and entered the suit any time before the judgment, but he could not obviously do so as he died pending the suit.

The lower Court has found that the signature of Durga Prasad was made by Badriprasad with his consent. Badriprasad who went into the witness-box as P. W. 1 affirmed that he read over the contents of the plaint to Durga Prasad and he was believed by the lower Court. Nothing has been said here to discredit the testimony of Badri Prasad. Badri Prasad's evidence clearly goes to show that the signature was made with Durga Prasad's consent. O. 6, R. 14, which requires a pleading to be signed by the parties is merely a matter of procedure. That provides for signature being made by any person who is duly authorized by the party. If it is found that the suit was duly authorized by Durga Prasad the question whether his signature was made by him or by somebody else on his behalf becomes immaterial : see 17 Cal 580[6] and 40 All 147.[7] It is urged on the authority of 4 N L R 117[8] and A I R 1924 All 54,[9] that the plaint was not properly presented. The cases relied on are those in which the suits were filed by the sole plaintiffs. In the present case the mortgage was in favour of Badriprasad as well and he signed the plaint and the power of attorney. The plaint was presented by his pleader. Whatever objection to the suit there can be on the ground of non-joinder, the contention that the plaint was not properly presented is untenable.

Turning to the question of limitation it is urged that the cause of action to enforce the mortgage arose on 10th November 1921 and not on 10th November 1924 as stated by the plaintiff for the reason that under the terms of the contract the debt became exigible when there was a default in payment of the interest in the year following the mortgage deed. The contention is negatived by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 7 Luck 442[10] but before applying the law, it is desirable to see what the precise nature of the agreement was. The relevant passage in the mortgage deed, dated 10th November 1919, runs as follows :

> I have therefore taken from you this day a loan of Rs. 3200 before the Sub-Registrar, Mandla. I will pay interest thereon at the rate of 10 as. per cent per mensem. I agree to pay the same in five years and will pay the interest annually. If I fail to pay I will pay interest at the same rate till full satisfaction thereof and I will pay it in a lump.

The interpretation that is sought to be put upon this passage is that in default of payment of interest on the due date in any year the mortgage debt including the principal was to be exigible. This cannot be accepted as the true construction of the words. The expression "if I fail to pay" may be related to the expression "I agree to pay the same in five years" and the expression "will pay the interest annually." If it is read as referring only to the latter, as is argued, it would be meaningless to say that if interest is not paid annually it will be paid till full satisfaction and in a lump sum. It can acquire sense only when it is read in relation to the expression "I agree to pay the same in five years." It would then mean that if he failed to pay the mortgage debt in five years as stipulated he would pay interest thereafter until satisfaction. The secondary contract is to pay post diem interest, that is interest after due date. Thus it is clear that there was no intention that the mortgagee should be given the right to recover the entire amount of mortgage debt simply on the occurrence of a default of payment of the annual interest. On this view the cause of action for the suit could not arise, as contended on behalf of the appellant, on 10th November 1920 on which date there was failure to pay interest. Even on the assumption that the interpretation

6. Mohini Mohan Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha, (1890) 17 Cal 580=5 Sar 498 (P C).
7. Bisheshar Nath v. Emperor, (1918) 5 A I R All 275=44 I C 28=19 Cr L J 865 = 40 All 147=16 A L J 64.
8. Chandramal v. Ganpat Rao, (1908) 4 N L R 117.
9. Ruhul Amin v. Shankar Lal, (1924) 11 A I R All 54=77 I C 30=45 All 701=21 A L J 626.
10. Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar, (1932) 19 A I R P C 207=138 I C 779=59 I A 376 = 7 Luck 442 (P C.)

proposed on behalf of the appellant is correct, it cannot prevail in the face of the abovementioned Privy Council ruling. In that case it was pointed out that a proviso of this nature is inserted in a mortgage deed exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees and that it only purports to give them an option either to enforce their security at once, or, if the security is ample, to stand by their investment for the full term of the mortgage. It is however argued that as the mortgage debt was payable within the period of five years the proviso operated both for the benefit of the creditor and the debtor and not unilaterally for the benefit of the creditor. The Hindi expression used in the document is panch sal me deyenge; that is the mortgage debt was payable in five years. A similar expression occurred in the mortgage deed of a case reported in 17 N L R 202[11] and the question there was whether the mortgagor was entitled to redeem before the expiry of the term fixed and it was held on the authority in 36 All 195[12] that in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created the right of redemption can only arise on the expiry of the specified period. Any doubt which existed once upon a time on the point was resolved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case just mentioned. The period fixed by the parties for payment of the debt means that during that period neither the debtor is liable to pay nor the creditor is entitled to recover the debt. It only fixes the term of the mortgage and from the point of view of the mortgagee it marks the temporal limit of his investment. For the debtor's default during the term of the mortgage to be regarded as a cause of action for the suit the default ought to be such as would entitle the mortgagor to redeem before the expiry of the term as much as it would entitle the mortgagee to recover his debt in full. In A I R 1934 All 152[13] Sulaiman C. J. specifically refers to this dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council made in 7 Luck 442[10] and observes that it would be an impossible result if the mortgagor can claim to redeem the property after having broken his own contract by refusing to pay the interest. Thus, it is obvious that the debtor's default in the present case would enure only for the benefit of the mortgagee and unless there was mutuality the mortgagor could not compel him to sue and consequently the time would not begin to run against the mortgagee under Art. 132, Limitation Act. That Article would come into operation only when the mortgagee is bound to sue and not when he has the option to sue. On 10th November 1920 on which date the appellant failed to pay the annual interest the mortgagee had the option to sue but when he failed to pay the mortgage debt on 10th November 1924 the mortgagee had no alternative but to sue. The suit is within time from that date. The appellant's contention fails. The result is that the appeal stands dismissed with costs in both the Courts. Counsel's fees Rs. 125. The respondent will pay to the appellant the costs of the handwriting expert.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

11. Bala v. Ghasi, (1921) 8 A I R Nag 22=64 I C 730=17 N L R 202.
12. Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanum, (1914) 1 A I R P C 36=23 I C 355 =41 I A 84 = 36 All 195 (PC).
13. Abdul Rahman v. Sheo Dayal, (1934) 21 A I R All 152 = 151 I C 900 = 56 All 496 = 1934 A L J 371.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 245

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Yadorao Wasudeorao Pathak — Decree-holder — Appellant.

v.

Govindrao Ramji Pant — Judgment-debtor — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1937, Decided on 12th April 1939, from appellate order of Puranik J., in S. A. No. 106 of 1935, D/- 23rd July 1937.

 Civil P. C. (1908), S. 48 — S. 48 is not controlled by S. 6, Limitation Act.

Section 48, Civil P. C., lays down a rule of limitation and controls Art. 182, Limitation Act, and not vice versa. As S. 6, Limitation Act, merely allows extensions in respect of periods prescribed in the first schedule and as the aggregate of the periods prescribed there for successive applications (other than the first) is confined within certain limits by outside legislation and not by the schedule itself, it follows that expansion outside those limits is not permissible. In other words, S. 6, Limitation Act, does not govern S. 48, Civil P. C., and therefore the twelve years rule laid down in S. 48 most also apply to minors: A I R 1938 Cal 25, Rel. on; A I R 1929 Mad 394, Dissent; A I R 1915 Mad 449, Ref. [P 247 C 1]

B. L. Gutpa—for Appellant.

D. T. Mangalmurti—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question for decision in this Letters Patent Appeal is whether S. 6, Limitation Act, governs S. 48, Civil P. C. The High Courts are divided, the majority view being that it does not and that therefore the twelve years' rule laid down in S. 48 must also apply to minors. The matter is of first impression in this Province. The facts are simple. The decree-holder appellant, who is a minor, obtained the decree, which he is now seeking to execute, on 19th December 1919. On 16th December 1922 he put in an application for execution. He was represented by his father who acted as his next friend. We are informed by counsel that the father died on 15th May 1923; anyway, nothing happened and the application was dismissed as wholly infructuous on 10th March 1923. Thereupon on 8th February 1934, the applicant, who by then had attained majority, put in a fresh execution application. This application is more than 12 years after the decree and so is beyond time under Sec. 48, Civil P. C., unless the appellant can avail himself of the provisions of S. 6, Limitation Act. The question is whether he can.

The first Court decided that he could not. The lower Appellate Court held that he could. The learned Judge who has granted leave to appeal agreed with the trial Judge. The decree-holder therefore appeals here. All the available cases, except the following, have been discussed in the judgment appealed from. Those which have not been mentioned are A I R 1915 Mad 449,[1] A I R 1929 Mad 394[2] and I L R (1937) 2 Cal 373.[3] It would, we think, be bootless to cover the same ground, and so except for a reference to these three cases, we will confine ourselves to a discussion of the two Sections in question and of the general principles which apply to them. So far as S. 48 is concerned, in itself it is perfectly clear. Ignoring portions not relevant to the present case, it reads as follows :

> Where an application to execute a decree . . . . . has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of 12 years from (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed . . .

An application for execution of the decree under consideration was made in this case; therefore under that rule no fresh application after the expiry of 12 years from the date of the decree was competent. The application we are considering was made more than 12 years after that date and therefore so far as S. 48 is concerned it did not lie. S. 6, Limitation Act, enacts :

> Where any person entitled to . . . . . make an application for the execution of a decree is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor . . . . . he may . . . . . make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in col. 3 of Sch. 1.

The time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned in this case is 10th March 1923, that is to say, the date on which the first application for execution was dismissed. The appellant was a minor on that date. Therefore, according to this Section, he would be entitled to make his second application within the same period after attaining majority as would otherwise have been allowed under col. 3 of Article 182, the Article in Sch. 1 applicable to cases of this kind. That Article prescribes three years from the date of the final order passed on the previous application for execution. Therefore under this rule, the appellant had three years from the date on which he attained majority, and admittedly his application was made within that time. There is thus apparently a clash between these two Sections and the question is which is to prevail. In our opinion, the clash is more apparent than real.

Under S. 6 the respite granted to a minor is the period which he would "otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed in col. 3 of Sch. 1." If therefore the period is not prescribed in col. 3 of Sch. 1 but is to be found elsewhere, then S. 6 does not assist, for, it only purports to control the periods prescribed by Sch. 1. Art. 182 allows three years from the date of the decree in respect of the first application. S. 48 does not apply at all to the first execution application. Its provisions do not come into play until there has been at least one prior application. What it prohibits is a fresh application after the 12 years prescribed. Therefore in respect of the first execution application the minor has three years from the date on which he attains majority, and thus in conceivable circumstances, the total period permissible may amount to as much as 21 years, and in still others to 24.

But as regards subsequent applications the position is different. Art. 182 allows an indefinite number of applications for execution provided each is made within three years from the date of the final order in

1. Kumara Venkata v. Velayuda Reddy, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 449=24 I C 195=27 M L J 25.
2. Mannarswami v. Ramaswami, (1929) 16 A I R Mad 394=119 I C 39.
3. Kartik Chandra v. Bata Krishna, (1938) 25 A I R Cal 25=176 I C 212=I L R (1937) 2 Cal 373=65 C L J 403.

the one which preceded it. So far as the Limitation Act is concerned, this could go on for ever, for there is no restriction upon the number which can be so made. But S. 48 steps in and prohibits any application after the first, which is made more than 12 years after the date of the decree. S. 48 therefore clearly controls Art. 182. If therefore S. 6 merely allows extensions in respect of periods prescribed in Sch. 1 (and that is what it says), and if the aggregate of the periods prescribed there for successive applications (other than the first) is confined within certain limits by outside legislation and not by the schedule itself, then it follows that expansion outside those limits is not permissible, for otherwise S. 6 would be controlling these outside Acts and not merely Sch. 1. That is the view taken in the majority of the cases cited, and we think it follows from a careful reading of the two Acts.

We are further fortified in this conclusion by an examination of S. 48 (2). After laying down a general rule controlling the provisions of Art. 182 in sub-s. (1), it proceeds in sub-s. (2) to make certain exceptions, and it does not place either S. 6 or Art. 182 among them, whereas it does place Art. 180, Sch. 2 to the Limitation Act of 1877 (Art. 183 of the present Act). We can only conclude from this that S. 48 was intended to control Art. 182 and not vice versa, and when we find it exempting only certain of the provisions of the Limitation Act and not others, it must mean that the others were not meant to be excluded.

Of the three new cases cited before us, I L R (1937) 2 Cal 373[3] agrees with the majority view, which we follow, at p. 385. In A I R 1915 Mad 449[1] one of the learned Judges remarked that the Code of Civil Procedure was not a special statute but a general law of procedure and therefore S. 48 does not control the Sections in the Limitation Act relating to the exclusion of time and those which allow the time spent in the doing of certain necessary acts, etc. We say nothing as to this. We are only concerned with the apparent conflict between S. 6 read with Art. 182 on the one hand and S. 48 on the other. We have no doubt that S. 48 controls Art. 182 and the only question is whether this control ceases when minority intervenes. As we have said we do not think it does. That also is an answer to A I R 1929 Mad 394.[2] With the utmost respect we cannot agree that S. 48 does not lay down a rule of limitation which is the assumption upon which that decision is based. In our opinion, the heading to S. 48 places that beyond doubt: "Limit of time for execution." The Bombay High Court agrees that that Section is expressly limited to cases where the limitation is prescribed by Sch. 1. The learned Judges there however state that under general principles of law a minor is entitled to an extended period. With the utmost respect, we are unable to see how general principles of law can be invoked when there are special statutory enactments dealing with the matter. Also this is not the present view of that Court. The later decisions follow the earlier ones merely on the principle of stare decisis. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 247

GRUER J.

Amraoti Town Municipal Committee — Plaintiff — Applicant.

v.

Minamal Manbhar Das Agarwal and others—Defendants—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 210 of 1938, Decided on 23rd February 1939, from decree of Additional Small Cause Court Judge, Amraoti, D/- 22nd January 1938.

(a) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 of 1922), S. 25, Rules under, R. 7 — R. 7 does not provide for representation on behalf of Committee — Members of Committee, engaging counsel without sanction to represent Committee in appeal by dismissed employee — Members are liable for payment made to counsel.

Rule 7 makes no provision for representation on behalf of the Committee but only for the employee in special cases. Engaging of counsel for the Committee, being outside the scope of the rules, would certainly require special sanction which can justifiably be applied for only in extraordinary circumstances. Hence where in an appeal by a dismissed employee to the Local Government against dismissal, the members of the Committee engage counsel to represent the case of the Committee without obtaining sanction and pay him, the members are liable for the payment made to him. [P 248 C 2]

(b) C. P. Local Fund Audit Act (9 of 1933), Ss. 8 to 13 — Civil suit is maintainable even if procedure laid down by Secs. 8 to 13 is not followed.

There is nothing in the Local Funds Act to indicate that the procedure laid down in it is exclusive or must necessarily be followed before a civil suit is launched. Hence a civil suit can be launched even if procedure laid down by Ss. 8 to 13 is not followed. [P 248 C 2]

Dr. D. W. Kathale and K. V. Brahma— for Applicant.

P. Y. Deshpande — for Opposite Party.

Order.—The non-applicants-defendants were members of the Town Municipal Committee of Amraoti. They had dismissed their Assistant Secretary, one Gosawi. He appealed to the Local Government, and non-applicant 1, who was then President of the Committee, by order dated 20th July 1934 engaged Mr. Y. G. Deshpande, Pleader, on Rs. 100 to represent the case of the Committee and sanctioned an advance payment to him of Rs. 50. This payment was confirmed by resolution, dated 20th January 1935 of the Special General Committee of which the defendants were members. In fact they were actually present and voted for the resolution. Audit objection to this payment was taken in the audit note for 1934-35, and it was recommended that this sum should be recovered from the ex-President and members who voted for it. Thereupon the Committee on 8th January 1937 resolved to file a suit against these defendants, and sanction of the Provincial Government was obtained on 3rd April 1937. It should be added that on 6th July 1934, Government intimated to the Committee that the appeal would be heard on 27th July 1934. Some time between 21st July 1934, when the payment of Rs. 50 was sanctioned, and 26th July 1934, the Committee applied to Government for sanctioning the appointment of counsel. The Revenue Secretary replied by telegram (Ex. P-7) which reads: "Law does not permit representation by counsel in such cases; regret unable to grant request."

The defence to the present suit was that it was considered necessary for the Committee that it should be defended in appeal and that the action of the defendants was bona fide showing due care and attention and hence they are not liable to refund the money. The Judge of the Additional Small Cause Court held that as difficult points of law were involved and when the rules say that the appointment of a legal practitioner may be sanctioned by the authority holding the enquiry or hearing the appeal the defendants may have reasonably anticipated that they would get sanction from the Government: they acted bona fide as was shown by the fact that when the Local Government refused permission they refrained from paying the balance of the Rs. 100 to the pleader. The lower Court also holds that neither neglect nor misconduct of the defendants has been shown and therefore they are not liable under S. 49 and are protected under S. 47, C. P. Municipalities Act. The learned Judge cannot have read the rules very carefully. The relevant rule is No. 7 found under S. 25, Municipalities Act (page 69 of the Manual):

> Representation by a legal practitioner shall ordinarily not be permitted. When however the charges are complicated or special cause is shown, the officer hearing the appeal or revision petition may allow the employee concerned to be represented.

The rule makes no provision for representation on behalf of the Committee but only for the employee in special cases. The inference to be drawn by a prudent man is that engaging of counsel for the Committee being outside the scope of the rules would certainly require special sanction which could justifiably be applied for only in extraordinary circumstances. There was no question of an emergency here. The Committee had ample time to get previous sanction. The administration of public funds has to be jealously scrutinized. It was all the more incumbent on the defendants to consider whether this expenditure was unavoidably necessary, as their own Secretary was a law graduate and so presumably capable of dealing with the legal aspects of the case by submitting a written or oral argument. It appears that this expenditure is not covered by any provision of the Act or rules thereunder and by incurring it needlessly and without sanction, the defendants wasted public money for which they must be held responsible. Their good faith is not impugned, but the facts show that they have acted without due care and attention, and the unnecessary and unauthorized expenditure of Rs. 50 is a direct consequence of their negligence. It is also urged on their behalf that the procedure laid down by Ss. 8 to 13, C. P. Local Funds Act (9 of 1933), not having been followed the present suit does not lie. I cannot accept that argument. There is nothing in the Local Funds Act to indicate that the procedure laid down in it is exclusive or must necessarily be followed before a civil suit is launched. The application succeeds. I set aside the decree of the lower Court and pass a decree for Rs. 50 against the defendants. I am not inclined to award any interest, but the defendants must pay costs in both Courts. Pleader's fee here will be Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Revision allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 249

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Trimbak Wamanrao and others — Defendants — Appellants.

v.

Mt. Bhagu Bai w/o Damuji Mali — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 10 of 1937, Decided on 16th March 1939, from appellate decree of Pollock J., in Misc. Appeal No. 12-B of 1935, D/- 22nd March 1937.

(a) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance—Agreement by members of Hindu family to pay maintenance to widow at certain rate—In absence of express terms to contrary agreement is subject to implied condition that rate will be subject to variation in family fortunes—Only method of obtaining variation is by showing that circumstances justifying variation have come into play.

Under the Hindu law the widow's right to maintenance is dependant upon the family fortunes and so is liable to fluctuation both up and down in sympathy with them; and though the parties concerned can contract themselves out of this and undertake to pay and receive a fixed and unvariable sum irrespective of the state of the family's finance at any given time, they cannot be said to intend to do so altogether unless they say so in express terms. When they agree to a certain rate, and say nothing more, the ordinary law will continue to apply in all other respects. An implied term has to be read into the contract that the agreement is subject to the variation in the family fortunes. Variation is permissible only when the circumstances have altered to such an extent as to justify a variation of the figure agreed upon, and they are altered before the cause of the action for maintenance accrued. The only method of obtaining relief of variation in the rate would be by showing that the agreement has ceased to subsist or that the circumstances which according to its implied meaning will justify a variation, have come into play. Case law referred. [P 250 C 2; P 252 C 1; P 253 C 2; P 254 C 1; P 255 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance—Deed agreeing to pay maintenance to widow must be construed with reference to practice and usage in these matters.

The deed agreeing to pay maintenance to widow must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the practice and usage in these matters. [P 251 C 1]

(c) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance—Practice of Court.

In decrees where maintenance is awarded Court should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved : 24 Bom 386, Rel. on. [P 253 C 1]

(d) Hindu Law — Widow — Maintenance—Right of alteration.

The right to alter or rescind rate of maintenance fixed for payment to widow does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both. [P 253 C 2]

(e) Decree—Variation—Decree can be varied by Court itself and only in particular way (Obiter).

If a decree directs the doing of a certain thing, then that thing must be done unless and until the decree is altered or provides on the face of it for the limits of its own existence. It is not like a contract which can be varied by common consent and which the law recognizing the unwillingness of the average person to put into writing clauses which are too obvious to his mind to require mention, takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances. No such laxness can ordinarily be imputed to Judges. Their decrees can only be varied or altered by the Court itself and only in a particular way. [P 254 C 1, 2]

(f) Hindu Law—Maintenance — Agreement by manager to pay maintenance is binding on family.

The manager of a joint Hindu family has the right to settle maintenance claims. When he does so he acts on behalf of the family as a whole ; so it is bound by his action. [P 256 C 1]

(g) Hindu Law — Maintenance — Past and future.

Ordinarily the questions regarding the payment of past and future maintenance would be separate and independent and so in the absence in a deed of an express statement to the contrary, it must be assumed that they are treated separately there. [P 256 C 1]

K. B. Tare and G. S. Brahamrakshas — for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde —for Respondent.

Judgment. — The plaintiff is a Hindu widow who is suing the members of her late husband's family for maintenance. The claim is founded on a deed, Ex. P-1, dated 4th June 1925, which was executed by Bapuji, the plaintiff's father-in-law, who is now dead. The suit is against his sons. The following genealogical tree will show the relationship between the parties.

The deed, in so far as it is relevant for the purposes of this case, is in the following terms :

I promise to give you Rs. 250 annually for your maintenance. I shall give you the abovementioned rupees every year on the 1st April. According to that deed your first year of maintenance begins from the date 1st April 1925. I promise to give you your maintenance every year in advance that is as soon as the new year begins. I have already promised to give you Rs. 250 for the first year of your maintenance that is for the year 1925-26 before the registering officer. I shall give you Rs. 250 on the date 1st April 1926 for your second year of maintenance, that is for the year 1926-27. Thus in this way I shall give you Rs. 250 every year for your maintenance until you are alive. I have got three sons at present. There has been no partition between them and myself. We are all one family. My eldest son died while we were a joint family. At present I am the karta of the family. I shall give you your maintenance amount as I have agreed till my life. But after my death all my sons must also give you Rs. 250 for your maintenance once every year as I have agreed. By this deed all my sons are bound to maintain you. A mutual understanding between you and me has been concluded for your past maintenance. I do not owe anything to you for your past maintenance.

It will be observed that the deed has three marked features. The first is that the maintenance is payable in advance: accordingly the suit which was filed on 16th November 1933 is in the main for the Rs. 250 due on 1st April 1933 for the year 1933-34. There is also a small claim for Rs. 2-8-0 on account of the previous year, the contention being that the amount paid for that year fell short of the Rs. 250 due by this sum of Rs. 2-8-0. The balance of Rs. 60 is for the interest which the plaintiff says she has made herself liable for on a loan which she was forced to borrow owing to the defendants' omission to pay the Rs. 250 for which this suit has been brought. The second outstanding feature of the deed is that Bapuji, though acting as karta of the family and though settling a maintenance allowance which under the Hindu law would normally vary according to the fortunes of the family, has nevertheless contracted on behalf of his sons as well as himself, that the plaintiff will be paid Rs. 250 a year for the period of her life.

The defendants contend that this contract must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and that there must be read into it an implied clause which makes the undertaking to pay Rs. 250 a year subject to variation in the family fortunes. They also urge that Bapuji had no power to bind them contractually except to the extent that the manager of a joint Hindu family can bind the other members that an undertaking of this sort, (if there is no implied term as above), which takes no account of possible fluctuations in the family fortunes, is on the face of it imprudent, and therefore the family is not bound to honour it when its fortunes decline, as they have at the present juncture.

The third feature is that the agreement settles not only the amounts payable in the future but also all claims in respect of arrears. The plaintiff's contention is that she gave up her right to a lump sum in respect of arrears; which she says were then due, on condition that she would be paid a steady and unvarying allowance of Rs. 250 a year irrespective of fluctuations in the family fortunes. The argument against this is that the clause dealing with arrears has nothing to do with the rest of the agreement. It merely states that the parties have come to a mutual understanding about the matter and agree that nothing is now due. This forms no part of the consideration for the remainder of the agreement and merely recites a settled fact. The defendants admit that the agreement was executed by their father, and admit the plaintiff's right to maintenance, but they contend that since that agreement was executed there has been a sharp decline in the family income and that therefore the amount fixed in the agreement must now be reduced. The plaintiff replies that there can be no reduction and relies on the terms of her bond.

The First Court upheld the plaintiff's contention and decreed her claim, though on agreement (which also gave the defendants liberty to appeal) instalments were allowed. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the defendants. In second appeal, the learned Judge from whose decision the appeal has been filed agreed with the first Court and so allowed the appeal and restored the original decree. The defendants appeal again. Two things are, we think, beyond doubt. First that under the Hindu law the widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon the family fortunes and so is liable to fluctuation both up and down in sympathy with them; and second that the parties concerned can contract themselves out of this and undertake to pay and receive a fixed and unvariable sum irrespective of the state of the family's finance at any given time; that is to say as Pollock, J. has put it, they can contract themselves out of the realm of status and enter the domain of contract and can agree to regulate their relations henceforth according to the terms of an agreement. The first thing therefore to look to is the deed and that is what the learned Judge whose decision we are now considering has done. According to him the deed is plain. It says that the plaintiff is to be paid Rs. 250 for her life and is to be paid not only by the father Bapuji but also by his sons after his death. It does not make this payment subject to fluctuations and does not say that the figure is liable to variation on the happening of a given event. Therefore the learned Judge holds, full effect must be given to these terms.

There can be no doubt that that is what the deed actually says and had there been no complications, we would have had no hesitation in agreeing with that view. But we feel that the matter is not as simple as that. The deed must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the practice and usage in these matters; to do otherwise would result in an unjust conclusion. The right and in fact the duty to do so is conferred by proviso 5 to S. 92, Evidence Act. The reason for allowing an exception of this kind is given by Lord Campbell in (1857) 110 R R 587[1] at p. 593. His remarks with the necessary modification are apposite here. He says :

> Merchants and traders with a multiplicity of transactions pressing on them and moving in a narrow circle and meeting each other daily desire to write little and leave unwritten what they take for granted in every contract. In spite of the lamentations of Judges they will continue to do so; and in a vast majority of cases of which Courts of law hear nothing, they do so without loss or inconvenience; and upon the whole, they find this mode of dealing advantageous even at the risk of occasional litigation. It is the business of Courts reasonably so to shape their rules of evidence as to make them suitable to the habits of mankind and such as are not likely to exclude the actual facts of the dealings between parties when they are to determine on the controversies which grow out of them. It cannot be doubted in the present case that in fact this contract was made with the usage understood to be a term in it; to exclude the usage is to exclude a material term of the contract and must lead to an unjust decision.

If we might paraphrase that we would say that in spite of the lamentations of Judges, Hindu widows and members of joint Hindu families dealing with widows and other maintenance holders will not employ skilled draftsmen for the drawing up of their deeds and will persist, much to the embarrassment of Courts and Judges, in resorting to crude instruments fashioned by crude craftsmen. It is possible that in a poor country like India where skilled legal advice is not easily available and indeed is a luxury resorted to only as a last resort, this occasions no great ill in a large class of cases which never reach the Courts, but unless this is borne in mind when a case does find its way into the Courts, injustice is likely to result. People who enter into these agreements may not be learned in the law but they are usually steeped in an atmosphere of Hindu tradition and know well enough Hindu ideas and usage about these matters. They know that the amount claimable by a Hindu widow for her maintenance fluctuates with the family fortunes and consequently when agreeing to any particular rate all that they mean is that that is the fair rate when the family fortunes are at a certain ebb. Therefore their undertaking is to pay at that rate so long as the family income and expenditure remains where it is at the date of the agreement. All concerned understand that if the income increases and there is no corresponding increase in the expenditure, as for example having more mouths to feed, then so also will the amount claimable by the widow; on the other hand, if it decreases, then so also will the sum agreed upon. The agreement in such cases is not so much about the right, nor yet the circumstances in which it is claimable, for about that ordinarily there neither is nor can be room for controversy, but about the rate which is reasonable in a given set of circumstances and that is all that they usually apply their minds to. There is thus force in the appellants' contention that an implied term should be read into the contract, and we think this follows from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 6 M I A 526[2] at page 550 :

> The Hindu law, no less than the English law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily, the words of the will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the Testator's wishes; but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case those circumstances no doubt must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded is the law of the country under which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the testator, in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption.

The right to maintenance is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, governed by the Hindu law, and is, as Pollock J. has put it, matter of status. The incidents attaching to it are well known and the term itself has acquired a particular meaning when used in relation to a given set of facts like the ones we have present here, and although it is true that such persons may contract themselves out of this status we hardly think that they intend to do so altogether unless they say so in express terms. When they agree to a certain rate, and say nothing more, they are, we think, merely reaching agreement on one question, namely the fair rate applicable to a given set of circumstances. We do not think that they usually mean to abrogate the rest of the law which states that that rate shall be liable to variation if and when circumstances alter, and indeed, to cease altogether under certain conditions.

1. Humfrey v. Dale, (1857) 7 El & Bl 266=26 LJ Q B 137=3 Jur (N S) 213=110 R R 587.

2. Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick, (1854-57) 6 M I A 526=4 W R 114=1 Suther 291 (P C).

The force of this is seen when we turn to another class of cases. It is a rule of Hindu law that a widow loses her right to maintenance (except at a starving rate) if she becomes unchaste, also that while unchaste she is not entitled to any maintenance at all. So also it is well settled that the right ceases upon remarriage. It has never been doubted that these rules obtain in full force, unless expresly abrogated, even when there has been a decree or an agreement of the kind now under contemplation : see 9 Bom 108[3] at p. 110, 15 All 382,[4] 17 Mad 392,[5] Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, p. 831. The true principle then is, we think, that when one contracts oneself out of status one must include in the agreement expressly or by necessary implication every point on which the laws appertaining to that status are intended to be set aside; either that or agree wholly to leave the realm of status and expressly agree from thenceforth to be governed, solely by the laws of contract in all matters touching the subject-matter of the agreement. Unless that is done, the ordinary law will continue to apply in all other respects. An implied term has to be read into the contract that the agreement is subject to the usual incidents of Hindu law and is to be read along with it and interpreted in that light.

This, as we understand it, is the principle upon which decrees, including compromise decrees, and also agreements, have so repeatedly been held to be subject to variation in the absence of an express direction to the contrary, when on the face of it they do not appear to be so. In any event it is the only legal foundation we are able to find for the long line of rulings which deal with this matter. But however that may be, and whether these were the reasons which prompted the learned Judges who so interpreted the law or not, the fact remains that maintenance decrees and agreements have so repeatedly been treated as subject to variation in the absence of an express direction to the contrary that that has now become the settled practice, and to hold otherwise at this stage would seriously disturb existing rights and might ruin families which have placed their hands to documents on the assumption that that was the law. It is, in our opinion, a class of case to which the rule of stare decisis should apply.

Turning now to the rulings on this point, they can be summarized thus. The Calcutta High Court enunciated the rule as far back as 1868 in 9 W R 152[6] and applied it to a compromise decree in the year 1879 in 5 C L R 18.[7] The Bombay High Court made similar observations in connexion with decrees in a Full Bench case decided in the year 1878. It is reported in 2 Bom 624[8] at p. 630. The Allahabad High Court followed suit in a case decided in the same year in which an earlier decree had directed payment of a particular sum "so long as the firm of Gulab Rai Chura Mal (the family firm) should exist," a provision not unlike the one found here. That decision is reported in 1 All 594.[9] Madras comes next with three decisions, one in 1884, one in 1888 and the other in 1899. The first two, though obiter, uphold this principle, and the third is directly in point. These decisions are 8 Mad 94[10] at p. 96, 12 Mad 183[11] at p. 185 and 22 Mad 175[12] at p. 177. Then comes a decision from this province decided in 1900: 13 C P L R 156.[13] It was also a case of a decree. There is also another Bombay case to the same effect in that year: 24 Bom 386.[14] These decisions have been followed

3. Vishnu Shambhog v. Mangamma, (1885) 9 Bom 108.
4. Daulta Kuari v. Meghu Tewari, (1893) 15 All 382=1893 A W N 149.
5. Nagamma v. Virabhadra, (1894) 17 Mad 392.
6. Sreeram Bhuttacharjee v. Puddomokhee Debia, (1868) 9 W R 152.
7. Rajendernath Roy v. Putto Soondery Dassee, (1879) 5 C L R 18.
8. Sidlingapa v. Sidava, (1878) 2 Bom 624 (F B).
9. Ruka Bai v. Ganda Bai, (1875-77) 1 All 594.
10. Vijaya v. Sripathi, (1885) 8 Mad 94.
11. Venkanna v. Aitamma, (1889) 12 Mad 183.
12. Bangaru Ammal v. Vijayamachi Reddiar, (1899) 22 Mad 175.
13. Narayan Rao v. Mt. Janki Bai, (1900) 13 C P L R 156.
14. Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, (1900) 24 Bom 386 =2 Bom L R 191.

since and the rule has been reproduced in the latest text books: see Mayne's Hindu Law, 10th Edn., p. 835 and Mulla's Hindu Law, 8th Edn., p. 596, para. 568. The same rule was applied to agreements as distinct from decrees in 11 Luck 607[15] and in 14 M L J 339.[16] We have not been shown any case to the contrary. There are therefore strong reasons for applying the principle of stare decisis.

A decision the other way round is 47 Mad 308.[17] There the agreement provided expressly that the sum fixed was not to be varied. That illustrates the rule we have been expounding. When the contract or decree, either expressly, or by necessary implication, provides that there shall be no variation, then the Hindu law rule of variation is excluded. To the same effect is A I R 1937 Bom 358.[18] We may observe in passing that it would save trouble, and in many cases unnecessary litigation, if agreements, and certainly decrees, were to be more specific and were to include clauses allowing variation instead of leaving them to be inferred. So far as decrees are concerned, it is the more logical, and certainly the more convenient course, and in England there would always have to be a "liberty to apply" clause. Without it variation would not be permissible. Of course, the rules of Hindu law do not obtain there and that makes a difference, but the rules for construing decrees ought to be the same in both countries; and in any case a clause of that kind would avoid the necessity for bringing a fresh suit to have the decree varied. This was pointed out by Parsons J. in 24 Bom 386[14] and we reproduce his observations for the future guidance of Courts in this province:

> We think that, in decrees where maintenance is awarded, Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved.

We turn now to a more difficult question. Granting that an agreement of the kind we are considering can be varied, the question arises as to how it can be done and from what date the variation is to take effect. It was argued that the only logical rule is that so long as the contract subsists, it must be enforced as it stands and if variation is desired, then the contract itself must be varied in one of the ways known to law before variation can be permitted, and then the variation will, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, take effect from that date and will affect only the future and not the past. We agree that this is so but what is the contract ? If what we have said is correct, then there is an implied condition in it incorporating the usual incidents of Hindu law relating to this matter. It must be remembered that there is no case here either for rescission or for rectification of an instrument. The only circumstances in which rectification is possible are enumerated in S. 31, Specific Relief Act, namely when through "fraud or mutual mistake of the parties . . . . the instrument . . . . does not truly express their intention." There is no case of fraud here nor yet of mutual, or to use a more correct expression, common mistake, nor does the instrument fail to express the intention of the parties. If the principles which we have been analyzing are correct, then both sides understood quite clearly what was meant and expressed their intention adequately enough for all legal purposes. There is therefore no room for rectification : nor are there grounds for rescission. That is dealt with in S. 35 and the only ground relevant here is the one given in cl. (a) : "where the contract is voidable or terminable by the plaintiff." As we read the law the right to alter or rescind does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both.

The issue before the Court in such cases is therefore a simple one. Have the circumstances changed to the necessary extent ? If they have, then variation is permissible; if not, then it is not. If that is so, then it does not matter when the question is raised ; that is to say whether by a suit in which the family sue for a declaration (not for rescission or rectification, be it observed, for on these assumptions there is nothing to rectify or rescind), or by way of defence when the maintenance holder sues. The issue in either case will be the same : have the circumstances altered to such an extent as to justify a variation of the figure agreed

15. Sheo Mangal Singh v. Bodhi Kuar, (1936) 23 A I R Oudh 60=159 I C 356=11 Luck 607=1935 O W N 1249.
16. Subramanian Patter v. Vembammal, (1904) 14 M L J 339.
17. Mohieswara Rao v. Durgamba, (1924) 11 A I R Mad 687=78 I C 831=47 Mad 308=46 M L J 189.
18. Purshottamdas v. Rukmini, (1937) 24 A I R Bom 358=170 I C 897 = I L R (1938) Bom 1 =39 Bom L R 458.

upon, and did they alter before the cause of action for the maintenance accrued? This, we think, follows from a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. It was doubted for a time whether a widow could sue in respect of arrears, and some Courts held that this was a matter within the discretion of the Courts and that the Court could for sufficient reason refuse to award any arrears, or that it could award arrears at a lower rate than that fixed for her future maintenance. But their Lordships of the Privy Council overruled this in 8 Pat 840[19] at p. 847 and held that "such arrears if they truly exist, fall within the range of the widow's right to maintenance." Therefore, as we see it, all that the Courts are required to determine is whether the right to the figure claimed existed when the cause of action accrued. If it did, the widow is entitled to it whatever the date of suit (questions of limitation aside); if not, then the figure must be fixed in accordance with the state of the family fortunes at the date when the right accrued. Whether the issue is raised by way of attack or in defence is immaterial. The point for determination is the same in either event.

We observe in passing that it is not any and every alteration in circumstances which will justify variation. The alteration in fortune must be substantial and of a kind which will justify an inference that the parties could not possibly have intended the old rate to continue in the altered circumstances. It is also to be observed that the alteration must have occurred before the cause of action to the maintenance holder accrued. It is only when both elements are present that a departure from the figure agreed upon can be justified. The decisions deal mainly with decrees and would appear to indicate a different rule, namely that unless a decree provides on the face of it machinery for its own alteration, variation can only be obtained by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose. But a decree, we think, stands on a different footing. There is not there, or at any rate ought not to be, room for implied clauses and unexpressed understandings. If a decree directs the doing of a certain thing, then that thing must be done unless and until the decree is altered or provides on the face of it for the limits of its own existence. It is not like a contract which can be varied by common consent and in which the law, recognizing the unwillingness of the average person to put into writing clauses which are too obvious to his mind to require mention, takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances. No such laxness can ordinarily be imputed to Judges. Their decrees can only be varied or altered by the Court itself and only in a particular way.

It is true that owing to the unfortunate practice which has grown up in the matter of drawing up maintenance decrees, they now have to be construed, for reasons of stare decisis, as liable to alteration even though they do not say so. But though we would not feel justified in making a greater departure than is necessary from normal rules of construction in the case of decrees, we do not think that the same considerations apply to contracts which have not merged in a decree. The rulings are as follows: In the following cases a decree had fixed the rate and it was allowed to be varied as regards the future, or so we gather, though it is not expressly so stated in some of the judgments: 1 All 594,[9] 22 Mad 175,[12] 24 Bom 386.[14] To the same effect is 14 M L J 339,[16] the only difference being that the rate there was fixed by a document and not in a decree. These rulings are not of much assistance because they do not determine whether a separate suit is necessary. That question can naturally only arise in a suit for arrears. It did arise, however, in the following cases: In 26 Bom 707[20] modification of the rate fixed de futuro was sought in execution of the decree fixing it. It was held that the decree could not be altered in execution and that the proper remedy was a separate suit. This, we think, lays down the right rule as regards decrees in spite of a sentence in the judgment of Westropp C. J. in 2 Bom 624[8] at p. 630 which indicates other possibilities:

> Unless either party, by suit or otherwise brought to the notice of the Court that circumstances rendered it equitable that the rate should be enhanced or reduced.

But, as we have said, we do not think this rule applies to agreements for, as we have explained, an agreement can only be varied or rescinded (apart from common consent) when the conditions specified in S. 31 or S. 35, Specific Relief Act, are present. Therefore unless the agreement provides

19. Ekradeshwari Bahuasin v. Homeshwar Singh, (1929) 16 A I R P C 128=116 I C 409=8 Pat 840=56 I A 182 (P C).

20. Maharana Shri Ranmalsingji v. Bai Shri Kundankuwar, (1902) 26 Bom 707=4 Bom L R 531.

on the face of it for variation, or that is the necessary implication, it cannot, in the absence of a subsequent agreement modifying it be varied either by suit or otherwise so long as it subsists. Consequently, the only method of obtaining relief would be by showing that the agreement has ceased to subsist, or that the circumstances which, according to its implied meaning will justify a variation, have now come into play.

The decision in 2 Bom 624[8] does not assist us because there the claim was made for the first time in the suit itself. The rate had not been fixed previously either by agreement or in a decree. In 11 Luck 607[15] the rate had been fixed in an agreement. The suit was by the maintenance holder for arrears, claiming at the agreed rate. The defendant was allowed to set up a plea of altered circumstances by way of defence and to obtain relief accordingly. Similar prayers were allowed in 5 C L R 18[7] and 13 C P L R 156;[13] in both these cases the rate had been fixed by a decree, a compromise decree in the first case and an ordinary decree after contest in the other. There can therefore be no doubt that the plea can be set up either by way of attack or by way of defence and that it can relate to arrears of maintenance. But none of these cases decide when the altered circumstances must come into existence so as to affect the claim, nor is it possible to deduce any rule in respect of this from the facts given. This therefore is a matter which is of first impression. In our opinion, the only possible rule is the one we have given. As we have said the Judicial Committee has decided that if the widow's right to arrears truly exists, then she is entitled to recover them. The extent of this right can only be determined with reference to the circumstances as they exist on the date when the right accrues. Therefore, any alteration in circumstances after the right has matured cannot avail either side. They can only affect a right which accrues after they themselves have come into existence.

Turning back now to the deed sued on and reading it in the light of these observations, we do not think that the parties contracted themselves wholly out of the realm of status. All they did was to settle the rate of maintenance applicable to the circumstances of the family at the date of the agreement. We hold therefore that it is subject to variation both up and down if the circumstances of the family can be shown to have altered, and the basis for this decision is that that was the implied understanding between the parties and the sense in which the words found in the document were used.

We do not think that the words making the sum settled payable for life make any difference, for that would be the case under the Hindu law as well. The right enures through life, but the amount payable is subject to variation, and if the true principle be that the amount was settled with reference to the circumstances of the family as they existed at the date of the agreement, then the true construction of the document, read in the light of the circumstances in which it was executed, is that maintenance is to be paid for life, and that the rate fixed is to enure for life also, unless the fortunes of the family change either for better or for worse. In that event the rate will be liable to alteration either up or down provided of course the circumstances altered before the sum became due. The defendants raised this plea in this case. Therefore the burden will be on them to show that the agreement to which their father set his hand has ceased to subsist. That is to say they will have to prove that the family circumstances altered for the worse before 1st April 1933 when the Rs. 250 due for 1933-34 became due; and as regards the sum of Rs. 2-8-0 due on account of the previous year that they had altered on 1st April 1932 as well.

There is also an item of Rs. 60 in the claim. The plaintiff says that she had to borrow money because the maintenance due to her was not paid in advance and that this represents the interest on that loan. If she succeeds in proving this, then she will, in our opinion, be entitled to it provided she borrowed at a reasonable rate, reasonable, that is to say in the circumstances in which she was placed. The test will be whether she could have obtained money at a lower rate if she had made reasonable efforts to do so. The state of the family circumstances is a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the other side, and so, unless they either pay the widow her money when it is due, or make her a reasonable offer, telling her the reason for the reduction, on or before the date on which the sum is due, she is entitled to assume that there has been no alteration in the circumstances. If that has not caused her to act to her detriment, then of course no complication arises, for no damage or loss can be said to have resulted to her. But if she has been caused thereby to act to her detriment (and that is a matter which she must allege and prove), then an estoppel arises and she will be treated exactly as if the circumstances had not altered. If they had not altered, she would have been entitled to her money on the dates due, and if she was not paid promptly, she would be entitled to borrow on such reasonable terms as she was in a position to obtain. The defendants would then be liable to make good that loss to her.

Two more points remain but they need not detain us long. The defendants contended that they were not liable for an agreement made by their father. We are of opinion that they are. The agreement was made as manager, and the manager of a joint Hindu family has the right to settle maintenance claims. When he does so, he acts on behalf of the family as a whole; so it is bound by his action. On the interpretation which we have placed upon the agreement, the father acted within his powers and there is no suggestion that the sum fixed was so unreasonable as to place the matter beyond the manager's implied authority.

The other point is that the rate was fixed at Rs. 250 on consideration that the plaintiff gave up her right to arrears. We are unable to read the document in that way. It does not state that this formed any part of the consideration for the payment of the Rs. 250 a year. We are of opinion that that clause is an independent one reciting a settled fact. Ordinarily the two questions would be separate and independent and so in the absence of an express statement to the contrary, we must assume that they were treated separately there.

The result is that the appeal succeeds. The decree of this Court is reversed and the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case for a determination of the remaining issues is upheld. As regards costs it was the duty of the defendants either to pay the sum promised or to tender a lesser amount, giving their reasons. Since they have done neither, they will pay the entire costs of this litigation from the beginning whatever the result.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 256

NIYOGI J.

Haridas Narayandas Koshti — Appellant.

v.

Jagannath Das and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 116 of 1937, Decided on 17th March 1939, from appellate decree of 4th Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 15th October 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 6—Misjoinder of causes of action and parties is not invariably fatal to suit — When such misjoinder is objectionable stated.

The joinder of causes of action and parties is not invariably fatal to the suit. O. 2, R. 6 is a rule of expediency and convenience. Whether the trial would be convenient or not is a matter which has to be determined on the facts of each case and no hard and fast rule of an absolute character can be laid down. No doubt the misjoinder of claims and parties is to be discouraged when it is calculated to defeat the ends of justice; but such joinder would be unexceptionable unless it is apparent that the defence will be embarrassed by confusing different issues and proofs in the same litigation. The trial would be manifestly irregular when the causes of action or claims are so distinct and independent as to be incapable of coalescence and would be objectionable only when the union of such claims embarrasses the trial and renders adjudication impracticable. [P 257 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Secs. 59-A and 68 (1) (c)—'Mortgagor' includes subsequent purchaser.

In view of the provisions of S. 59-A, the word "mortgagor" in S. 68 (1) (c) must include the subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property: A I R 1932 Pat 273 and A I R 1938 Oudh 210, Foll.; A I R 1930 Nag 139, held Overruled; 34 All 63 (P C), Ref. [P 258 C 1]

(c) Appeal—Abatement—Decree for damages passed — Judgment-debtor dying after appeal filed — Appeal does not abate — Maxim "actio personalis moritur cum persona"—Application of.

No doubt the general rule applicable to causes of action in tort is embodied in the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona but that maxim cannot operate when the suit has ended in a decree for damages so as to result in the abatement of the appeal, where the judgment-debtor dies after the filing of appeal : 26 Bom 597 and 26 Mad 499, Rel. on. [P 258 C 1]

(d) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 68 (1) (c)—Mortgagor's liability under—Value of materials removed by him resulting in depreciation is no criterion.

Under S. 68 (1) (c) a mortgagor is liable to the extent to which the security has been rendered insufficient by him. The cost of materials removed by the mortgagor, resulting in the depreciation of the security is not the criterion. [P 258 C 1, 2]

M. B. Kinkhede and K. A. Pote — for Appellant.

R. N. Padhye and T. B. Pendharkar — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant 3 from the concurring judgment of 4th Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 30-A of 1936 delivered on 15th October 1936. Mahadeo and Shrawan, defendants 1 and 2, who are now respondents 2 and 3, had on 21st April 1927 executed a mortgage, affecting a house, in favour of plaintiff-respondent 1, Jagannathdas. The mortgage debt was due on 21st April 1929 and the property was to be foreclosed on default of payment of the debt. On 2nd September 1929 the appellant's father Narayandas purchased the mortgaged house but he re-conveyed it in their favour on 6th July 1934. During the interval that he was in possession of the house, in the month of May 1933, he, in common with the mortgagors, removed the wooden materials, fixtures and corrugated iron sheets of the house whereby the value of the house was substantially diminished. The mortgagee alleged that the value of his security was, at the date of the mortgage, Rs. 5000 and that in consequence of the wrongful act of the defendants it had been reduced to Rs. 1500. He therefore prayed for a decree for foreclosure against the mortgagors defendants 1 and 2 and a personal decree for Rs. 3500 against all the defendants. Later on, the plaintiff asked for a decree for sale instead of a decree for foreclosure. The trial Court passed a decree for Rs. 3634-6-9 including interest and costs against defendants 1 and 2 and ordered the property to be sold on default of payment of that amount and passed a personal decree against defendant 3 Narayan for Rs. 1500. The lower Appellate Court affirmed that decree. Defendant 3 Narayan preferred this second appeal on 6th February 1937 disputing the correctness of the personal decree passed against him. He having died pending the appeal his son Haridas brought himself on record as appellant and has prosecuted the appeal.

On behalf of the appellant it is at the outset contended that the trial was defective on account of multifariousness, namely misjoinder of causes of action and of parties. It is true that there has been a joinder of two causes of action, namely (1) failure to pay the mortgage debt, and (2) the wrongful act of removing the wooden materials, etc. whereby the security was rendered insufficient; but the question is whether this joinder of separate claims or causes of action and of parties vitiated the trial. It must be observed in the first instance that under O. 2, R. 7, the objection as to misjoinder of causes of action and parties ought to have been taken at the earliest opportunity in the suit, but that was not done. Apart from this initial weakness of the appellant's contention it would appear that the contention itself is untenable. The joinder of causes of action and parties is not invariably fatal to the suit. O. 2, R. 6, Civil P. C., provides that when it appears to the Court that several causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials. That shows that it is a rule of expediency and convenience. Whether the trial would be convenient or not is a matter which has to be determined on the facts of each case and no hard and fast rule of an absolute character can be laid down. No doubt the misjoinder of claims and parties is to be discouraged when it is calculated to defeat the ends of justice; but such joinder would be unexceptionable unless it is apparent that the defence will be embarrassed by confusing different issues and proofs in the same litigation. The trial would be manifestly irregular when the causes of action or claims are so distinct and independent as to be incapable of coalescence and would be objectionable only when the union of such claims embarrasses the trial and renders adjudication impracticable. Can that be predicated of this case? The obvious answer is "no." In so far as the claims for the enforcement of the mortgage and for personal decree were made against the mortgagors themselves, it could hardly be said that there was any misjoinder, and the joinder of defendant 3, Narayan, in respect of the claim for personal decree would not be open to attack in view of the allegation that he made common cause with the mortgagors in damaging the security: the cause of action against the defendants being one and indivisible justified their joinder. Under O. 2, R. 3, it is open to a plaintiff to unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly and it was not possible to file a separate suit against defendant, 3 Narayan, alone. The contention therefore must be overruled.

The next contention is that Narayan who was only a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property could not be made personally liable. Reliance is placed on 34 All 63.[1] This argument cannot prevail in view of the important fact that Narayan's liability here is rested on his wrongful act in causing damage to the security. The claim against him is sought to be made out under S. 68 (1) (c), T. P. Act, because the mortgagee was deprived of a part of the security in consequence of the wrongful act of Narayan. It is true that the Section only speaks of the mortgagor, but in view of S. 59-A of that Act the word "mortgagor" must include the subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. No doubt a different view was taken in 26 N L R 312,[2] but that must be deemed to have been overruled by S. 59-A. The proposition is too plain to need any authority for its confirmation, but if one were needed, I may refer to A I R 1932 Pat 273[3] and A I R 1938 Oudh 210.[4] The next contention is that the cause of action came to an end with the death of Narayan and that in any case the present appellant Haridas would not be liable for the tortious act of his father. The first branch of this contention is self-contradictory and if given effect to would destroy Haridas's right to prosecute this appeal. No doubt the general rule applicable to causes of action in tort is embodied in the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona, but that maxim cannot operate when the suit has ended in a decree for damages so as to result in the abatement of the appeal: see 26 Bom 597[5] and 26 Mad 499.[6] Haridas as the legal representative of Narayan cannot raise any defence personal to himself. The issue before me is only this, whether or not the decree was rightly passed against Narayan. The question whether it would be binding on his son or not is totally irrelevant and I need not pronounce my opinion at this stage as it can well be raised in execution.

1. Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande, (1912) 34 All 63=13 I C 304=39 I A 7 (P C).

Lastly, it is urged that inasmuch as the plaintiff in his notice dated 19th October 1934 estimated the damages to amount to Rs. 500 he was not entitled to a decree exceeding that amount. The materials which had been removed might have been worth Rs. 500 but that is not the criterion. The mortgagee is entitled to compensation for the depreciation of his security. He would be liable to the extent to which the security was rendered insufficient. On this point Narayan himself as D. W. 1 admitted that when he had purchased the mortgaged house it was worth Rs. 3000 but that as the result of the wrongful act its value was reduced to Rs. 1500. Both the Courts have agreed in estimating the depreciation at Rs. 1500 and that finding cannot be disputed in the face of Narayan's admission. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 25. The costs of the lower Courts will be paid as ordered by the lower Appellate Court.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

2. Tretanath v. Ajodhyaprasad, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 139=124 I C 690=26 N L R 312.
3. Janki Saran Singh v. Mohammad Ismail, (1932) 19 A I R Pat 273 = 139 I C 525 = 13 P L T 373.
4. Mt. Mathura Devi v. Mohan Lal, (1938) 25 A I R Oudh 210=177 I C 100=1938 O W N 806.
5. Gopal v. Ramchandra, (1902) 26 Bom 597 = 4 Bom L R 325.
6. Paramen Chetty v. Sundararaja Naick, (1903) 26 Mad 499.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 258

GRUER J.

Pannalal Singhai and another — Judgment-debtors — Applicants.

v.

Firm Hasan Dada through its owner Haji Wali Mohammad — Defendants — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 50 of 1938, Decided on 5th December 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 23rd December 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 90—Irregularity and illegality — Difference — Holding of sale few hours before advertised time is illegality which renders sale void — Court can set aside sale on its own initiative — It is at least material irregularity and can be dealt with under O. 21, R. 90.

The difference between an irregularity and an illegality is one of degree. An irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords some main security for fairness of public sales must be deemed to be an illegality. Hence, the holding of a sale two or three hours before the time fixed is not merely an irregularity but an illegality which in itself renders the sale void, because it is more than likely that intending bidders relying on the proclamation would not turn up until too late. The fact that there was beat of drum in the village just before the sale was actually held would not make any difference to intending bidders. In such a case therefore the Court can set aside the sale on its own initiative: 16 Cal 794; 17 Cal 769; 7 All 289 and A I R 1921 Mad 583, Rel. on. [P 259 C 2]

In any case such an illegality is at least a material irregularity and the matter can therefore be dealt with under O. 21, R. 90: A I R 1919 Nag 128, Rel. on. [P 260 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 90—Irregularity apparent from record but not taken in application — Objection based on such irregularity can be considered by Court at any stage.

Where an irregularity is demonstrable from the record itself it is within the power of the Court to consider the objection based on such irregularity even if not specifically taken in the application and the Court's dealing with it cannot be questioned at a later stage on the ground of delay. [P 260 C 1]

(c) Execution sale — Setting aside — Application by one of several judgment-debtors — Property sold consisting of only one item — Irregularity not apportionable — Sale must be set aside as a whole.

There is a distinction between an irregularity and injury which can be allotted to one part only of the sale, in which case a Court may be justified in setting aside the sale of that part only, and an irregularity affecting the whole property and all the lots, where the sale should be set aside in toto: A I R 1933 Pat 223, Rel. on. [P 260 C 1]

Where an application for setting aside a sale is made by one of the judgment-debtors and the property sold consists of only one item and the irregularity cannot be apportioned, the sale must be set aside as a whole : 41 C W N 224, Disting. [P 260 C 1]

N. T. Mangalmurti — for Applicants.

R. N. Padhye — for Opposite Party.

Order. — On an objection preferred by one of the judgment-debtors, Babulal under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., the first Court set aside the sale in execution of the judgment-debtors' house. This order was reversed by the District Judge in appeal and the judgment-debtors now come up in revision. The findings of the first Court are that the house was worth Rs. 1500 and the price obtained in auction (Rs. 350) was inadequate, that there was an irregularity, as the sale was proclaimed for 12 midday but was held at 9 A. M. and that by reason of this irregularity substantial injury had been caused to the judgment-debtors. The District Judge's order proceeds on the ground that this objection had not been raised by the judgment-debtors in their application and in fact not till some time later in February 1937. In his opinion this was too late, and the objection should not have been entertained at that stage. The application says that the price obtained is inadequate and that there has been a mistake in the proclamation. The real objection now put forward is not of course any mistake in the proclamation but in the holding of the sale at a time at variance with that given in the proclamation. The applicants-judgment-debtors contend however that they should not be tied down to defective phraseology in their application, that the objection was taken when after renewal of the proceedings which had been stayed the matter was taken up for disposal, that issues were framed, evidence led and the irregularity clearly made out and so it is improper now to disallow the objection altogether. It is also contended that the holding of a sale before the hour fixed is not merely an irregularity but an illegality, which means that there was no sale at all and that the Court itself should set it aside, apart from any application under O. 21, R. 90. The findings of the first Court about inadequacy of price and injury caused by reason of the irregularity have not been upset by the Appellate Court and so must stand good.

On the other hand it is contended that the objection was an afterthought which occurred to the judgment-debtors' legal advisers later on when they went through the auction papers. It is not made out that the holding of the sale at this time had anything to do with the low price obtained. The matter must be decided under O. 21, R. 90, and not on the wider ground of illegality. Finally it is said that as only one of the judgment-debtors took objection the sale could be set aside only so far as his interest is concerned.

There is no doubt authority for the view that the holding of a sale before the time fixed is not merely an irregularity but an illegality which in itself renders the sale void. It was so held in 16 Cal 794,[1] which was followed in 17 Cal 769[2] at p. 782; see also 7 All 289.[3] In 44 Mad 35[4] at p. 38 it was said that the difference between an irregularity and an illegality was one of degree, and that an irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords one main security for the fairness of public sales must be deemed to be an illegality. Now when sale is held two or three hours before the advertised time it is more than likely that intending bidders relying on the proclamation would not turn up until too late. It is said that in the present case there was beat of drum in the village just before the sale was actually held. Still that would not make any difference to intending bidders from outside; and even in the village, the beat of drum and its import may not have been appreciated by all. I therefore think that there was a good cause for the Court to set aside the sale on its own initiative. In any

1. Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt, (1889) 16 Cal 794.
2. Mohendro Narain v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) 17 Cal 769.
3. Bakhshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand, (1885) 7 All 289=1885 A W N 42.
4. Jayarama Ayyar v. Vridhagiri Aiyar, (1921) 8 A I R Mad 583=59 I C 167=44 Mad 35=39 M L J 188.

case the matter can be dealt with under Order 21, Rule 90, Civil P. C., as the illegality is at least a material irregularity. In 15 N L R 125[5] the omission to state the time of sale was held to be a material irregularity. It was within the power of the Court to consider the objection even if not taken specifically in the application, and seeing that the irregularity was demonstrable from the record itself I do not think that the Court's dealing with it should have been questioned at a later stage on the ground of delay. There is a finding which has not been reversed that an inadequate price was obtained. The sale papers show that there were only two bidders, one of them being plaintiff's agent, and there were only three bids. There is a strong probability that there might have been more bidders if the advertised time had been adhered to, so that it is reasonable to conclude, as the first Court did, that substantial injury has been caused by reason of the irregularity. It is unfortunate that the execution proceedings should be so delayed, but the decree-holder himself might have noticed the wrong procedure and pointed it out to the sale Amin.

Although only one judgment-debtor has objected I do not think that the sale can be set aside in part. That would be most inconvenient and unfair because the half of a house is not necessarily half as valuable to an auction-purchaser as the whole of it is. In 41 C W N 224[6] in which the sale was not entirely set aside the facts and circumstances were different and the other judgment-debtors had previously put in applications which failed. In 12 Pat 181[7] a good distinction was drawn between as irregularity and injury which could be allotted to one part only of the sale, in which case a Court may be justified in setting aside the sale of that part only, and an irregularity affecting the whole property and all the lots, where the sale should be set aside in toto. In the present case there is only one house, and the irregularity cannot be apportioned. Also, on the view that there has been illegality it is immaterial whether both judgment-debtors objected or not. The application is allowed with costs, and the order of the first Court setting aside the sale is restored. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

N.S./R.K. Revision allowed.

5. Narhar v. G. M. Buti, (1919) 6 A I R Nag 128 =51 I C 864=15 N L R 125.
6. Amulya Krishna v. Dilip Kumar, (1936) 41 C W N 224.
7. Chhaterbijai Singh v. Damodar Das, (1933) 20 A I R Pat 223=144 I C 62=12 Pat 181 = 14 P L T 493.

---

* A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 260

NIYOGI J.

Pannalal Baliram and others — Defendants — Appellants.

v.

Sumranlal Rupram — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 214 of 1936, Decided on 19th October 1938, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 16th March 1936.

(a) Hindu Law—Widow—Remarriage—Effect of, on rights of widow to hold property. (Obiter).

Re-marriage according to the accepted view of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Central Provinces, results in the forfeiture of the widow's right to hold possession of the property that devolves on her from her husband or from his lineal heir. [P 261 C 1, 2]

 (b) Adverse possession—Widow—Adverse possession against widow does not affect reversioner's rights.

Adverse possession, howsoever long held, cannot impair the right of a person who was not during the continuance of that adverse possession, entitled to possession. The right of the reversioner as is well known is spes successionis and his reversionary estate falls into possession only on the death of the intermediate owner, namely the widow. Consequently the adverse possession against the widow can hardly be recorded as hostile to the reversioners whose right was until the widow's death only an expectancy: Case law discussed. [P 263 C 1, 2]

M. B. Kinkhede and V. R. Dhoke — for Appellants.

J. R. Mudholkar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal from a reversing judgment of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, delivered on 16th March 1936 in Civil Appeal No. 8-A of 1935. The appellant and the respondent are related in the way that will appear from the undermentioned genealogy :

The respondent filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for possession of the property in suit in his capacity as reversioner to Chaitram who died as far back as 1884. The plaintiff dated the cause of action for the suit on the death of Mt. Chukho, the widow of Chaitram, which occurred on 15th November 1926. The question that arose in the suit was whether the defendant Baliram who was in possession of the property in suit continuously from 1884 to the exclusion of and adverse to Mt. Chukho acquired such a prescriptive title in respect of the property as to extinguish the plaintiff's reversionary right. I need only refer to the material facts to elucidate the issue of law that arises in the case. Rupram's widow, Mt. Premabai, was living with Chaitram as his mistress and she bore him a son by name Baliram who was the defendant in the suit but is now represented by his son, the appellant. Some time after Chaitram's death his widow Chukho left her husband's house and lived with one Sheoram of mouza Barela as his mistress. She died as already stated above on 15th November 1926. When Chaitram died in 1884 the mutation proceedings were started in which the mother and step-mother of Chaitram by name respectively Mt. Dulia and Mt. Chukho and Chaitram's widow Mt. Chukho and his illegitimate son Baliram figured in those proceedings. The mutation officer remarked that although Baliram was an illegitimate son there was no difference made in point of legal rights between illegitimate and legitimate sons in the family of Chaitram and he therefore recorded the whole property in the name of Baliram with lambardari right and provided at the same time that 2 annas share in the property would be recorded in pattidari against the names of each of the three widows above named. The suit was contested on several grounds out of which those that are material are two: (1) that Mt. Chukho had left her husband's house after she became a widow and began to live openly with Sheoram of Barela as his mistress, and (2) the effect of adverse possession on the part of Baliram as against the widow Mt. Chukho on the reversionary right of the plaintiff Sumran.

On behalf of the appellant it is urged that it ought to have been held that Mt. Chukho had contracted remarriage with Sheoram and that she was not his mistress as was found by the original Court. I do not see my way to enter into this question for the reason that this question which was one of pure fact was not agitated in the lower Appellate Court as it ought to have been done. It may be conceded that if Mt. Chukho had been remarried then a question would arise whether the plaintiff Sumran would be entitled to claim possession on the date of the remarriage, as re-marriage according to the accepted view of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner Central Provinces results in the forfeiture of the widow's right to hold possession of the property that devolves on her from her husband or from his lineal heir, but obviously the appellants are not entitled to raise this question of law unless they are in a position to displace the original Court's clear finding against them that Mt. Chukho was Sheoram's mistress. This point should have been canvassed in the lower Appellate Court. It is true that the appellants in this Court were respondents in the lower Appellate Court but even then they were entitled under O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., to support the trial Court's decree in their favour on any points which were decided against them. As it was open to them to take that opportunity in the lower Appellate Court and they failed to avail themselves of that opportunity, they cannot now ask the Court in second appeal to go into the evidence bearing on that issue. As however I have perused the pleadings as well as the evidence, I may briefly state that the respondent's pleadings are devoid of any averment to show that Mt. Chukho had re-married Sheoram. There is no express allegation made as to the re-marriage, nor is the date of re-marriage suggested in any place. There was no issue on the point and whatever evidence there is on the record tends to discount the story of re-marriage. The first contention therefore must be overruled.

The second contention no doubt involves an important question of law. Baliram was admittedly the illegitimate son of Chaitram. He was not entitled to possession yet the mutation order was made in his favour in 1884 and he continued to be in possession all along up to the date of the suit. His possession was admittedly adverse to Mt. Chukho who died on 15th November 1926. The question is whether that adverse possession would bar the reversioner's right. That has been answered in the negative by the lower Appellate Court. It is that finding which is being challenged here. Reliance is placed on 48 Mad 883[1] for the proposition contended for. It is not necessary for me to deal, at any great length, with this contention as their Lordships of the Privy Council themselves have explained the scope and the effect of the decision reported in that case in 51 All 439.[2] Reading the decision in 48 Mad 883[1] correctly, I do not understand it as laying down the rule as contended, that the principle of the Shivaganga case[3] should be extended to the case of adverse possession against the widow. On the particular facts of that case, their Lordships no doubt had to deal with both the questions, namely the effect of a decree obtained against a widow and the adverse possession against her. It was in relation to the first point that their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to the Shivaganga case[3] and other cases, but they treated the question of limitation on quite a different footing unconnected with any considerations of the Shivaganga case[3] as is clear from the discussion of that point at p. 904. Their Lordships took the view that they did for the reason that under Art. 129, Sch. 2, Act 9 of 1871, it was incumbent on the reversioner to sue not only for a declaration as to the invalidity of an adoption but also for possession. That Article ran in these terms: for a suit to set aside an adoption the period of limitation is 12 years from the date of the adoption or (at the option of the plaintiff) the date of the death of the adoptive father.

1. Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni, (1925) 12 A I R P C 249 = 92 I C 85=52 I A 322=48 Mad 883 (P C).

The question naturally arose whether that Article applied also to a suit for possession, and in 13 Cal 308[4] their Lordships of the Privy Council held that if the plaintiff could not succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the opposite party was in possession, a suit by the plaintiff for possession fell under that Article. That case was followed in 20 Cal 487,[5] and the view taken in 48 Mad 883[1] was quite in accordance with the current of the old rulings bearing on the effect of Art. 129 of Act 9 of 1871. It was because the reversioners in that suit had failed to file a suit not only to set aside the adoption which took place in 1862 but also to claim possession for more than 12 years before the Act of 1877 was passed, that it was held that Art. 141 of the Act of 1877 had no application as the adverse possession against the widow as well as the reversioners was completed before the new Act came into force. It is therefore clear that the considerations which were applied in 48 Mad 883[1] cannot be extended to a suit which is filed in terms of Art. 141 of the Act of 1877. That this is so is made clear by their Lordships themselves in certain cases which arose after the Act of 1877, where their Lordships held that Art. 118 of the Act of 1877, which now supersedes Art. 129 of the Act of 1871, refers only to a suit for bare declaration and not to suit for possession of property, even though it may be necessary in such suits to decide that a given adoption is invalid: see 28 All 727,[6] 39 Cal 418[7] and 48 Bom 411.[8]

In 55 Cal 903[9] the observations made in 48 Mad 883[1] were obviously misunderstood and it was thought that the question of adverse possession against the widow fell to be decided by the same considerations as would apply to a case of a decree fairly and honestly obtained against a widow, namely by the principle of the Shivaganga case.[3] That was a decision by a single Judge of that Court and the erroneous view taken in that case was pointed out in 57 Cal 289,[10] but the authority which clinches the issue is the decision reported in 51 All 439[2] where their Lordships of the Privy Council explained the scope of the decision in 21 Cal 8[11] and 48 Mad 883,[1] and pointed out that those cases illustrate the application of the rule in the Shivaganga case[3] where a decree found against a widow had been obtained against her in her lifetime and that they do not lay down that adverse possession against a widow per se would extinguish the reversioner's right. Their Lordships referred to the case in 23 Bom 725.[12] That was a case in which the trustees had been in adverse possession against

2. Jaggo Bai v. Utsava Lal, (1929) 16 AIR P C 166 =117 I C 498=56 I A 267=51 All 439 (P C).
3. Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivaganga, (1861-63) 9 M I A 539=2 W R 31 = 2 Sar 25 (P C).
4. Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri, (1886) 13 Cal 308=13 I A 84= 4 Sar 715 (P C).
5. Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra, (1893) 20 Cal 487=20 I A 30=6 Sar 261 (P C).
6. Tribhuwan v. Rameswar, (1906) 28 All 727 = 33 I A 156=9 O C 377 (P C).
7. Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan, (1912) 39 Cal 418=13 I C 344= 39 I A 19=15 C L J 172 = 16 C W N 458 = 126 P R 1912 (P C).
8. Kalyandappa v. Chanbasappa, (1924) 11 A I R P C 137 = 79 I C 971= 51 I A 220=48 Bom 411 (P C).
9. Aurabindo Nath v. Manorama Debi, (1928) 15 A I R Cal 670=112 I C 496=55 Cal 903=32 C W N 913.
10. Abinashchandra Ghosh v. Narhari Mathar, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 165=123 I C 444=57 Cal 289=50 C L J 260.
11. Hari Nath v. Mothurmohan, (1894) 21 Cal 8 =20 I A 183=6 Sar 334 (P C).
12. Runchordas v. Parvatibai, (1899) 23 Bom 725 = 26 I A 71 = 1 Bom L R 607 = 7 Sar 543 (P C).

the widow and it was held that their adverse possession was not a bar to the reversioners' right to sue in terms of Art. 141 of the Act of 1877. The case in 51 All 439[2] was not a case in which a decree had been obtained against a widow but a case of mere adverse possession against the widow and their Lordships pointed out that the case was governed by the dictum that was laid down in 23 Bom 725.[12]

That there is a well-defined difference between a case of a decree obtained against a widow and a case of adverse possession against a widow is made amply clear in the observations made by their Lordships at page 452 of 51 All 439.[2] They are as follows:

It is therefore established by this decision that where a decree founded upon the law of limitation is obtained against the widow in her lifetime the reversionary heir is barred and does not get the benefit of Art. 141. The question raised by the present case is whether the same result follows where there has been no decree, though at the death of the widow a stranger had been in adverse possession for 12 years or more.

Their Lordships pronounced their opinion in these terms:

In their Lordships' judgment where there has been no decree against the widow or other act in the law in the widow's lifetime depriving the reversionary heir of the right to possession on the widow's death, the heir is entitled, after the widow's death, to rely upon Art. 141 for the purpose of the determination of the question whether the title is barred by lapse of time. To hold otherwise would in their Lordships' opinion, in effect, compel the Court in determining a question within the scope of the Article to ignore the express words of the Article.

It appears to me that this case conclusively disposed of the question now raised that the appellants' adverse possession against Mt. Chukho operated to extinguish the reversionary right of the respondent. I may in passing refer to some cases decided by the High Courts in India which sustain the view that I have taken: see 57 Cal 289,[10] 63 Cal 155[13] and A I R 1932 Bom 434.[14] The general principle, it appears to me, is indisputable that the adverse possession, howsoever long held, cannot impair the right of a person, who was not during the continuance of that adverse possession, entitled to possession. The right of the reversioner, as is well known, is spes successionis and his reversionary estate falls into possession only on the death of the intermediate owner, namely the widow. Consequently, the adverse possession against the widow can hardly be recorded as hostile to the reversioners whose right was until the widow's death only an expectancy. For the foregoing reasons I agree with the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 50.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

13. Hemendranath Ray v. Jnanendraprasanna Bhaduri, (1935) 22 A I R Cal 702 = 159 I C 1101=40 C W N 115 = 62 C L J 49=63 Cal 155.

14. Bai Manchha v. Tribhawan, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 434=139 I C 28=34 Bom L R 385.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 263

NIYOGI J.

Provincial Government, C. P. and Berar — Applicant.

v.

Dinanath Lala Ganpatrai and others — Accused — Non-applicants.

Criminal Revn. No. 159 of 1939, Decided on 10th June 1939, from order of the Sess. Judge, Raipur, Dated 13th and 16th February 1939.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 120-A—Difference between S. 34 and S. 120-A explained.

There is not much substantial difference between conspiracy as defined in S. 120-A and acting on a common intention as contemplated in S. 34, Penal Code. While in the former the gist of the offence is the bare engagement and association to break the law even though the illegal act does not follow, the gist of the offence under S. 34, Penal Code is the commission of a criminal act in furtherance of a common intention of all the offenders which means that there should be a unity of criminal behaviour resulting in something for which an individual would be punishable if it were all done by himself alone: A I R 1925 P C 1, Rel. on. [P 264 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 239 — Prosecution alleging unity of criminal behaviour actuated by common intention on part of all accused to extort confession—All accused are triable jointly.

Where the prosecution has alleged that there was unity of criminal behaviour actuated by a common intention on the part of all the accused to extort confession, all the accused would be jointly triable under S. 239, Criminal P. C. The unity of criminal behaviour and the common intention prompting it would render all that was done in furtherance of an object as a part of one transaction. The necessity of a joint trial is strengthened if there is the additional element of proximity in time as well: 2 N L R 147, Rel on. [P 264 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 239—"Sameness of transaction"—Relevant point of time is time of accusation.

The relevant point of time in the proceedings at which the condition as to the sameness of transaction must be fulfilled is the time of accusation and not that of the eventual result: A I R 1938 P C 130, Foll. [P 264 C 2]

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for Applicant.

Order.—This is an application in revision made against the order passed in Sessions Case No. 4 of 1939 on 13th February 1939 directing separate trials. The issue is considerably simplified by the fact that the learned Advocate-General has announced his readiness to withdraw the prosecution against accused 13, 14 and 15, Nanjatia, Bhagua and Jageshwar respectively, and also to withdraw the charges in regard to the incidents of 25th and 26th May 1938. The trial will thus proceed only against accused 1 to 12 in respect of wrongful confinement and use of violence for the purpose of extorting information leading to the detection of the culprits. The result of the learned Judge's order had been to multiply trials. While all the accused and Nos. 1 and 2 would be jointly tried on the charge of wrongful confinement and beating respectively, accused 3 to 12 would each be separately tried. The learned Sessions Judge observes in para. 5 of his order under revision that the complaint filed before the committing Magistrate did not contain any allegation that all the accused formed a conspiracy in order to extort confession. The complaint in para. 4 says:

> All these persons were kept confined from 27th May 1938 to 31st May 1938, in the bada of the malguzar at Sajapali and they were not allowed to go out and talk with anybody..... During this confinement, all these persons were beaten by the accused and their thighs were trampled upon by them, while some were pricked with pins in order to extort confession, restoration of property.. .....

Then in para. 7 there is an allegation:

> The accused have committed offence under Ss. 330 and 348 read with S. 34, I. P. C., and that each one of them has abetted the commission of the offence committed by every other of them either by actual participation or by omission and have thus committed offences under Ss. 330 and 348 read with S. 114, I. P. C.

Although the word "conspiracy" is not used, there is a very clear indication given by the nature of the allegations made in para. 4 and the reference to S. 34, I. P. C., made in para. 7 to make it clear that all the accused were animated by the common intention of extorting confession from the suspects by resorting to illegal means, namely wrongful confinement and the use of violence and force. There is not much substantial difference between conspiracy as defined in S. 120-A and acting on a common intention as contemplated in S. 34, I. P. C. While in the former the gist of the offence is the bare engagement and association to break the law even though the illegal act does not follow, the gist of the offence under S. 34, I. P. C., is the commission of a criminal act in furtherance of a common intention of all the offenders—which means that there should be a unity of criminal behaviour resulting in something for which an individual would be punishable if it were all done by himself alone as explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 52 Cal 197.[1] What was alleged by the prosecution was that there was unity of criminal behaviour actuated by a common intention to extort confession. Consequently, all the accused persons from 1 to 12 would be jointly triable under S. 239, Criminal P. C. The unity of criminal behaviour and the common intention prompting it would render all that was done in furtherance of an object as a part of one transaction. The acts of violence committed by several persons in respect of the several suspects were so related to one another in point of purpose as to constitute one continuous action. There is the additional element in this case of proximity in time as well: see 2 N L R 147[2] at page 149.

It may turn out in the end that the acts were done without any common intention but that is a consideration which is foreign to the issue. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A I R 1938 P C 130,[3] the relevant point of time in the proceedings at which the condition as to the sameness of transaction must be fulfilled is the time of accusation and not that of the eventual result. For the foregoing reasons the order of the Sessions Judge is set aside and it is directed that the trial of accused 1 to 12 be proceeded with relating to the incidents which occurred from 27th to 31st May 1938 in the bada of the malguzar of Sajpalli. Presumably the learned Sessions Judge was misled by the terms of the charges framed. It is open to him to amend the charges, if necessary.

D.S./R.K. Order set aside.

---

1. Barendra Kumar Ghosh v. Emperor, (1925) 12 A I R P C 1=85 I C 47=52 I A 40=26 Cr L J 431=52 Cal 197 (P C).
2. Emperor v. Hari Raot, (1906) 2 N L R 147=4 Cr L J 420.
3. Babulal Chaukhani v. Emperor, (1938) 25 A I R P C 130=174 I C 1=65 I A 158=39 Cr L J 452=I L R (1938) 2 Cal 295=32 SLR 476 (P C).

:9 Nagpur 265

:OGI J.

Chandra Sharma — Appellant.

v.

Kumar — Respondent.

No. 224 of 1937, Decided 39, from appellate decree udge, Saugor, D/- 28th yance and contract of sale — Distinction between ex-on between conveyance and a minor's property. When the lready alienated, the Court is ıd whether the alienation is r or not. In such a case no ity arises. The relief of specific ef in equity and the question aced with is whether it should so perform the onerous act of rty in consequence of the con- incurred by his guardian: , Dissent.; A I R 1933 Mad [P 266 C 2] ntract of sale by guardian on — Purchaser cannot ask for ıce against minor.

ıtract for sale or purchase made minor is not enforceable by or . The reason is that a contract ovable property is a contract of ıture and as no personal liability ı the minor, the minor cannot be orm the contract; for the same ; take advantage of the contract fic performance. There is another stion. In every case when there lement the contract of sale by the each is committed by the guardian the minor. The purchaser therefore can [illegible]m compensation against the guardian and not against the minor or his property except in the case where the guardian uses the money obtained from the purchaser for the improvement of the minor's estate, a case which stands on a separate footing. The purchaser is not entitled to hold the minor personally responsible for the breach of contract of sale made by his guardian and he is not therefore entitled to claim compensation from him. As that is so, S. 24-A, Specific Relief Act, debars the purchaser from claiming the relief of specific performance against the minor: Case law reviewed. [P 267 C 1, 2]

J. Sen — for Appellant.

V. V. Kelkar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal from the concurring judgment of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 24-A of 1936 delivered on 28th November 1936. The suit out of which this appeal arises was to enforce specific performance of a contract of sale, in respect of a house belonging to the minor defendant, made by his mother acting in her capacity as his guardian. The sale deed had in fact been executed on 14th October 1934 but the guardian mother changed her mind and refused to have it registered. The sale deed was not however produced in Court as it was alleged to have been lost. The plaintiff had at first claimed the relief that the defendant be directed to get the sale deed registered and also for rectification of the contract, but subsequently he withdrew these reliefs and prayed for a decree for specific performance. The plaintiff averred that the sale was justified by legal necessity and also for the minor's benefit. The original Court did not formulate the issues of fact arising out of the pleadings but tried the suit only on the preliminary issue whether on the facts pleaded by the plaintiff he was entitled to a decree for specific performance. It held that he was not, and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court agreed with that view and affirmed the decision.

The general rule is that a contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must be mutual, that is to say, such that it might, at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. When, therefore, whether from personal incapacity to contract, or the nature of the contract or any other cause, the contract is incapable of being enforced against one party, that party is generally incapable of enforcing it against the other, though its execution in the latter way might in itself be free from the difficulty attending its execution in the former: see Fry on Specific Performance, Edn. 6, Chap. 8, page 219. In (1895) 1 Q B 683[1] at p. 684, Lindley L. J. observed: "You cannot get specific performance against an infant." The doctrine has, no doubt, some limitations which it is not necessary to indicate here. The weight of authorities in India is opposed to the granting of specific performance in favour of or against a minor. In 20 Cal 508[2] Norris J. following (1828) 4 Russ 298[3] held that a minor could not maintain a suit for specific performance of a contract entered into on his behalf by his guardian on the ground of mutuality. That view was not accepted by the Madras High

1. Lumley v. Ravenscroft, (1895) 1 Q B 683=64 L J Q B 441=14 R 347=72 L T 382=43 W R 584=59 J P 277.
2. Fatima Bibi v. Debnath Shah, (1893) 20 Cal 508.
3. Flight v. Bolland, (1828) 4 Russ 298=28 R R 101.

Court in 18 Mad 415[4] in which it was held, following the opinion of Mr. Whitley Stokes, that the doctrine of mutuality had no application in India. The same view was taken in 27 Cal 276.[5]

In 34 Cal 163[6] the Calcutta High Court held that if a contract is validly entered into on behalf of a minor, and there is mutuality in such contract, it is capable of being specifically enforced. In that case, the manager of an infant's estate entered into an agreement to purchase certain property on behalf of the minor and the question was whether the minor on attaining majority could sue for specific performance of the agreement. The appeal was taken to the Privy Council in 39 Cal 232.[7] Their Lordships approved of the application of the doctrine of mutuality but reversed the decision on the ground that it was not within the competence of the manager of a a minor's estate to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immovable property, and further that as the minor in that case was not bound by the contract there was no mutuality and that he could not obtain specific performance of the contract.

It is pertinent to notice that although the minor being a Muslim the guardian's contract was void their Lordships did not rest the non-enforceability of the contract on its being ab initio void but on the ground that the guardian's contract, valid or void in itself, did not affect the minor or the minor's estate. Their Lordships applied the doctrine of mutuality and refused specific performance on the ground of want of mutuality notwithstanding that the contract sought to be enforced was advantageous to the minor. In 47 Mad 692[8] Ramesam J. held that where a guardian of a minor enters into a contract on behalf of the minor that contract cannot be specifically enforced though it may be for the purpose of necessity or for the minor's benefit. In 47 All 784[9] the Allahabad High Court declined to recognize the distinction between a case where a minor is a purchaser and a case where he is a vendor on the ground that in either case there is absence of the element of mutuality. In 57 Cal 268,[10] which was a case of a contract by the manager of a joint family to sell land belonging to joint family including a minor, it was held that the application of the principle laid down in 39 Cal 232[7] was not limited to the case of a contract for the purchase of immovable property and that consequently the contract was not enforceable against the minor's share.

In A I R 1924 Pat 81[11] it was pointed out that no distinction could be drawn between a contract of purchase and a contract of sale and that the decision of the Judicial Committee was based on the broader ground that it is impossible for the Court to decree specific performance against a minor. Das J. rested his decision on the ground of mutuality which Foster J. was not prepared to accept although for other reasons he agreed with the decision of Das J. A different view was taken by Wort J. in A I R 1935 Pat 237.[12] The criterion which the learned Judge appears to have adopted was whether the sale of the minor's property was justified by legal necessity or benefit and acting on the principle that a guardian's alienation made for legal necessity or benefit of the minor is binding on the minor he decreed specific performance. With due respect, the learned Judge overlooked the distinction between a conveyance and a contract. When the minor's property is already alienated the Court is required only to find whether the alienation is binding on the minor or not. In such a case no consideration of equity arises. The relief of specific performance is a relief in equity and the question which the Court is faced with is whether it should compel the minor to perform the onerous act of alienating his property in consequence of the contractual obligation incurred by his guardian. This was pointed

4. Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyar, (1895) 18 Mad 415=5 M L J 164.
5. Khairunnessa Bibi v. Loke Nath Pal, (1900) 27 Cal 276.
6. Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhury, (1907) 34 Cal 163=11 C W N 34 =4 C L J 431 (F B).
7. Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed, Chowdhuri, (1912) 39 Cal 232 = 13 I C 331= 39 I A 1=16 C W N 74 (P C).
8. Narayan Chetty v. Muthiah Chetty, (1924) 11 A I R Mad 680=80 I C 658=47 Mad 692=46 M L J 575.
9. Swarath Ram-Ram Saran v. Ram Ballabh, (1925) 12 A I R All 595=89 I C 27 = 47 All 784=23 A L J 625.
10. Nripendrachandra Sarkar v. Ekherali Joardar, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 457=127 I C 66=57 Cal 268=34 C W N 272.
11. Abdul Haq v. Yehia Khan, (1924) 11 A I R Pat 81=78 I C 483=4 P L T 553.
12. Brahamdeo v. Haro Singh, (1935) 22 A I R Pat 237=157 I C 327.

out by Sundaram Chetti J. in 56 Mad 433[13] at p. 441. The Madras High Court, with the exception of 18 Mad 415,[4] which was decided before the clear pronouncement of the principle by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 39 Cal 232,[7] has been quite consistent in declining specific performance against a minor on the ground of want of mutuality as is evident from the two cases cited already, and A I R 1924 Mad 863[14] and A I R 1928 Mad 830.[15] I may in passing refer also to A I R 1927 Lah 355[16] which applied 39 Cal 232[7] in the wider sense indicated by the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council cited above.

The review of the authorities shows that barring Wort J., all the High Courts are unanimous on the view that a guardian's contract for sale or purchase made on behalf of the minor is not enforceable by or against the minor. The principle underlying the view enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council evidently appears to be that a minor is not personally bound by any contract made on his behalf by his guardian as was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 11 Bom 551[17]: see also 42 Mad 185.[18] A contract for sale of immovable property does not of itself create an interest in or charge on such property: see S. 54, T. P. Act. If it is a contract of purely personal nature and no personal liability can be imposed on the minor it must logically follow that the minor cannot be compelled to perform the contract; for the same reason he cannot take advantage of the contract and ask for specific performance. There is another aspect to the question: can the purchaser recover compensation from the minor for a breach of contract by the guardian? In every case when there is refusal to implement the contract of sale by the guardian the breach is committed by the guardian and never by the minor. The purchaser therefore can only claim compensation against the guardian and not against the minor or his property except in the case where the guardian uses the money obtained from the purchaser for the improvement of the minor's estate, a case which stands on a separate footing. The purchaser is not entitled to hold the minor personally responsible for the breach of contract of sale made by his guardian and he is not therefore entitled to claim compensation from him. If that is so, S. 24-A, Specific Relief Act, debars the purchaser from claiming the relief of specific performance against the minor. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 25.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

13. Venkatachalam Pillai v. Sethuram Rao, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 322=142 I C 315=56 Mad 433 =64 M L J 354 (F B).
14. Chidambara Swamigal v. Ramakrishna Reddiar, (1924) 11 A I R Mad 863=82 I C 926 = 47 M L J 688.
15. Nageswara Rao v. Mandava, (1928) 15 A I R Mad 830 = 110 I C 492.
16. Malla v. Muhammad Sharif, (1927) 14 A I R Lah 355=99 I C 684=8 Lah 212=28 P L R 492.
17. Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin, (1887) 11 Bom 551=14 I A 89=5 Sar 16 (P C).
18. Ramajogayya v. Jagannadham, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 641 = 49 I C 872 = 42 Mad 185 = 36 M L J 29 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 267

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Seth Laxminarayan Ganeshdas — Applicant.

v.

Seth Ghasiram Dalchand Palliwal — Opposite Party.

Misc. Civil Case No. 113 of 1937, Decided on 12th December 1938, from decree of Judicial Commissioner's Court, Nagpur, in F. A. No. 163 of 1930, D/- 16th January 1931.

C. P. Reduction of Interest Act (32 of 1936), S. 2—"Secured debt" — Attachment does not cause judgment-debt to be secured debt.

In India attachment of the judgment-debtor's property after judgment does not create a charge on attached property. It also does not create equitable or judicial lien and hence does not cause judgment-debt to be a secured debt so as to affect the interest that may be allowed after 1st January 1932: A I R 1918 Cal 351; 29 Cal 428 (F B); A I R 1914 P C 129 and A I R 1933 Nag 229, Rel. on. [P 268 C 1,2]

Fida Hussain — for Applicant.

J. Sen and M. Adhikari — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This miscellaneous civil case is connected with First Appeal No. 105 of 1935.* This matter raises a point under the Central Provinces Reduction of Interest Act (Act 32 of 1936) which can be expressed as follows: There was in this case an attachment of the judgment-debtor's property after judgment. The question is whether that causes the judgment-debt to be a secured debt so as to affect the interest that may be allowed after 1st January 1932. "Debt" as defined by S. 2 of that Act includes a liability created by a decree. "Secured debt" is defined as meaning a debt due to a creditor from his debtor for which the creditor holds a mortgage, charge or lien .... as a security for that debt.

* Reported in (1939) 26 A I R Nag 191.

The argument is that an attachment, though not creating a charge, creates what is described as a judicial lien, alternatively an equitable lien. In support of that argument para. 698, p. 554, Vol. 20 of Halsbury's Laws of England (2nd Edn.) is referred to. That paragraph runs as follows:

A lien in its secondary sense, where the person claiming the lien has not got possession of the thing in respect of which the lien is claimed, is either judicial, equitable or statutory. Judicial liens are obligations established by judgments or orders of Courts of justice binding the property but giving no right of possession. Equitable liens are founded upon the consideration of a duty or implied intention on the part of the owner to make property answerable for a specific claim.

The equitable lien can be put on one side at once because quite clearly, as appears from the same volume of the same book, para. 714, p. 567:

An equitable lien may be defined as an equitable right, conferred by law upon one man, to a charge upon the real or personal property of another.

Admittedly an attachment does not create any kind of a charge and consequently does not create that particular type of charge known as an equitable lien. But it is said that an attachment falls within the meaning of the term "judicial lien" as it is an obligation established by a judgment or order binding the property without giving a right to possession. It has been held—that this is recognized by counsel for the appellant—in a number of cases that an attachment does not create a charge. It was observed in 44 Cal 1016[1] at p. 1024:

I do not think that an attachment in this country creates any charge or lien upon the attached property such as attaches in England upon seizure under a writ of fi.fa. Attachment in this country only prevents alienation, it does not confer any title.

That is an observation which is based on 29 Cal 428[2] and 42 Cal 72[3] at p. 80, a Privy Council decision, and it expresses the law as well settled now in India and would appear to dispose of the argument at once. So far as the Judicial Commissioner's Court is concerned, the matter was considered by a Bench in a case reported in 29 N L R 303[4] where it was held that an attachment by itself, whether it is before or after judgment, does not give the attaching creditor any charge or lien on the property, nor does it give him any priority in respect of the property attached as against the official assignee or receiver; the only effect of the attachment is to prevent private alienation.

In that case the following cases were relied on: 57 Cal 122,[5] 26 Mad 673,[6] (1903) 2 K B 41[7] and 39 Mad 903.[8]

It is ingeniously suggested that in 44 Cal 1016[1] the lien that is being spoken about is the ordinary lien and is not concerned with that unusual type of lien known as the judicial lien, and so far as the Reduction of Interest Act is concerned the term "lien" is not defined and must be deemed to include any conceivable kind of lien. If one turns to the Provincial Insolvency Act one will find in S. 2 (e) the same sort of definition that one has in the Reduction of Interest Act. There the definition is of a secured creditor whereas in the Reduction of Interest Act what we have defined is secured debt. In the Provincial Insolvency Act "secured creditor" means a person holding a mortgage, charge, or lien on the property of the debtor or any part thereof as a security for a debt due to him from the debtor.

The cases above cited are concerned with insolvency and it is permissible to apply the reasoning in those cases to this case, but even beyond that in our opinion judicial lien is not the same thing as that which arises where property is attached. As an example of a judicial lien one may refer to (1870) 4 H L 414.[9] Such lien arises, e. g., where in a judgment in rem a lien is established by the judgment. It has never been held that an attachment creates that type of a lien any more than any other kind of lien so far as India is concerned at any rate. In our opinion therefore this point fails and interest will be calculated at the rate provided in the Act for unsecured debts as from 1st January 1932. The applicant will pay the costs of this application fixed at Rs. 25. The amount of the variation in the decree amount caused by the operation of the Reduction of Interest Act will be worked out

1. In re Premlal Dhar, (1918) 5 A I R Cal 351=43 I C 348=44 Cal 1016.
2. Peacock v. Madan Gopal, (1902) 29 Cal 428=6 C W N 577 (F B).
3. Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das, (1914) 1 A I R P C 129=24 I C 304=41 I A 251=42 Cal 72 (P C).
4. Bansilal v. Kashinath, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 229=145 I C 695=29 N L R 303.
5. Haranchandra Chakravarti v. Joy Chand, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 524=123 I C 737=57 Cal 122.
6. Kristnasawmy Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras, (1903) 26 Mad 673=13 M L J 278.
7. In re H. E. Pollard, (1903) 2 K B 41=72 L J K B 509 = 88 L T 652 = 51 W R 483 = 10 Manson 152.
8. T. Errikulappa Chetty v. Official Assignee of Madras, (1917) 4 A I R Mad 743=32 I C 190 =39 Mad 903.
9. Castrique v. Imrie, (1870) 4 H L 414=39 L J C P 350=23 L T 48=19 W R 1.

in office on this basis and the decree modified accordingly.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 269

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Lokman Chhabilal Jain Bani — Auction-purchaser — Appellant.

v.

Motilal Tulsiram Agarwala and another, Decree-holder and another, Judgment-debtor — Respondents.

Misc. Appeals Nos. 140 of 1938 and 130 of 1936, Decided on 14th April 1939, from order of Addl. Sub-Judge, First Class, Jubbulpore, D/- 5th April 1938.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 77— Sale of moveable property is complete when officer conducting sale declares who is purchaser and receives purchase money and grants receipt.

So far as the sale of moveable property is concerned, it is the officer who is holding the sale who concludes the matter by saying who has purchased, within what time the purchase price must be paid by receiving the purchase money and by granting a receipt. Thereupon the sale becomes complete, property passes and the matter is over. [P 270 C 2; P 271 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 84— Officer conducting sale can declare highest bidder to be purchaser — He need not ask Judge to declare who is purchaser.

In the Central Provinces a time is set aside during which persons may make their bids which are entered in a list. When that time is up, the highest bidder is declared by the officer conducting the auction, to be the purchaser. It is not the practice for the officer conducting the sale merely to take the list of bidders to the Judge and ask the Judge to declare who is the purchaser : Case law reviewed. [P 271 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 84—Failure of officer conducting sale to wait for payment of deposit is not material irregularity.

It cannot be said that the officer conducting the sale has to wait for the payment of the deposit; he cannot be compelled to wait. Hence it is not material irregularity if the officer conducting the sale has not waited for the payment of the deposit. [P 272 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 84—'Forthwith'—Meaning of—Re-sale can be held on same day as date of default in payment of deposit if circumstances permit.

The word 'forthwith' in R. 84 governs the time at which the re-sale is to be held. The word 'immediately, governs the time when the deposit is to be made. "Forthwith" means " as expeditiously as circumstances permit." The officer conducting the sale can hold a re-sale the same day as the default in payment of deposit if circumstances permit and if it is proper to do so. [P 272 C 1; P 273 C 1]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 71—Decree-holder can apply to recover deficit even if judgment-debtor, and not he, is damnified by default.

O. 21, R. 71 gives the right to recover the deficit to either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor. Though one might well expect in circumstances where the decree-holder is not damnified by default that he would leave the matter to the judgment-debtor he need not do so. He may decide to recoup himself from the defaulter. Anything left over from these realizations will of course go to the judgment-debtor so that the decree-holder is in effect fighting the judgment-debtor's battles for him. [P 273 C 1]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 71—Bid made on behalf of temple by its managing trustee —Default in payment of deposit — Trustee is not personally liable for deficit.

The temple, unlike an idol, not being a juristic person, cannot sue or be sued but somebody has to sue or be sued on behalf of the temple. Where the bid was made on behalf of the temple by the managing trustee (sarbarahkar) of the temple the liability for deficit in case of default is not of the trustee personally but of the trustee representing the temple. In other words deficit is to be payable out of temple funds. [P 273 C 2]

J. Sen—for Appellant.

R. S. Dabir, and W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, and 3 respectively.

Order. — This order governs Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 140 of 1938 and 130 of 1936. The second of these appeals is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against an order refusing to set aside a sale held in execution on the ground of material irregularity resulting in inadequate price. The first of these appeals is an appeal by one Lokman who has been treated as an auction-purchaser who defaulted in depositing 25 per cent. of his bid with the result that the property was forthwith re-sold. Miscellaneous Appeal No. 140 of 1938 raises a point of some importance in the practice of conducting auction sales and makes it necessary to consider in some detail the various relevant rules contained in O. 21, especially in view of the decisions arrived at in other High Courts : see 2 Pat 548,[1] 58 Cal 788,[2] A I R 1929 Lah 673[3] and 6 Rang 609.[4] These (with the exception of 2 Pat 548[1]) are cases which follow 2 Pat 548[1] and decide that a declaration under R. 84 of O. 21 must be made by the Court and should not be made by the officer conducting the sale. 2 Pat 548[1] to

---

1. Jaibahadar Jha v. Matukdhari Jha, (1923) 10 A I R Pat 525=76 I C 113=2 Pat 548 = 4 P L T 498.
2. Surendramohan Sarkar v. Manmathanath Banerji, (1931) 18 A I R Cal 583 = 134 I C 447=58 Cal 788.
3. Punjab National Bank v. Sundar, (1929) 16 A I R Lah 673=118 I C 901.
4. Afazuddin v. Howell, (1929) 16 A I R Rang 12=114 I C 522=6 Rang 609.

some extent turns upon local practice. At p. 551 the matter is stated as follows :

The rule laid down by the High Court, which is also in accordance with long standing practice, is that the auction should be conducted in the immediate presence of the presiding officer, and where that is not possible, in another place within the Court premises to be selected by the presiding officer.

In that particular case accordingly the bid was not finally accepted by the officer conducting the sale but was referred to the Munsif, that is the presiding officer or the Court. The Munsif wrote "close." Thereafter, on certain representations being made, he cancelled that order. The question was whether he was entitled so to do. It seems to have been assumed throughout that in Patna owing to the rules obtaining there bids are not accepted by the officer conducting a sale but that the officer conducting the sale refers the matter to the Judge and it was for the Judge to say whether the bid shall be accepted or not. Similar rules do not obtain here. The rules relating to the conduct of sales are to be found in the Rules and Orders (Civil) of 1938, Part 1, Ch. 10, p. 78 et seq. Para. 213 provides as follows :

Sales of immovable property in execution of decrees other than those which have been transferred to the Collector shall be conducted by the following officials, viz. (i) when the sale is held at the District Court house, by the Sale Amin or an official not inferior in rank to a Naib-Nazir ; (ii) when the sale is held at a place other than the District Court house, by a Sale Amin or a Naib-Nazir or an official superior in rank to a process server.

In 29 N L R 52[5] the position was considered where the auction sale was held in the mofussil and it was held there that the sale is complete if the final bid is accepted by the Sale Amin who conducts it. The permission of the Court ordering the sale is not necessary under the law to make the sale binding on the parties concerned. That decision, to some extent, is founded on 7 Rang 425[6] which distinguishes 2 Pat 548[1] and dissents from 6 Rang 609.[4] 2 Pat 548[1] was distinguished on the ground that the practice obtaining in Patna was as stated above, viz., the officer conducting the sale does not accept the bids but places them before the Court. It was observed in 7 Rang 425[6] :

There has been no such practice in the Courts of this Province (Burma). Under R. 65 of O. 21, Civil P. C., every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed. Under R. 258 of the Rules of this Court published at p. 126 of the High Court Rules and Orders sales of immovable property in execution of a decree for money are to be conducted by the Bailiff under the direct supervision of a Registrar. There is no provision in the Rules which requires a Judge to accept a bid.

Here also there is no rule requiring the Judge to accept the bid. In 7 Rang 425[6] it was held that neither the provisions of O. 21, Civil P. C., nor the rules of the High Court or of the Courts Manual require a bid to be accepted by a Judge before the contract of sale can be held to be complete. The officer conducting the sale can declare the highest bidder to be the purchaser.

58 Cal 788,[2] which follows 2 Pat 548,[1] appears to overlook the special local rules and practice obtaining in Patna and the fact that there in fact the bid was sent to the Judge for acceptance and the question was as to whether the Judge had or had not finally accepted the bid. Nevertheless there being authority against the view that we are taking we consider it desirable to examine the various relevant rules relating to sales. Court auction sales in execution are of two kinds, (a) of immovable, and (b) of moveable property. In either case the sale results in the transfer of property from the judgment-debtor to the auction-purchaser, but according as the subject-matter is immovable or moveable the mode of transfer is necessarily somewhat different. In the case of immovable property it is necessary to have some sort of vesting order which operates to transfer the property and this is done by means of confirmation of sale and the granting of a certificate of sale which has the effect of a vesting order. Title of course is not guaranteed. On the other hand moveable property does not require a vesting order and so far as title to moveable property is concerned that is dealt with in R. 77 (2) which provides as follows :

On payment of the purchase money, the officer or other person holding the sale shall grant a receipt for the same and the sale shall become absolute.

Further R. 77 (1) says :

. . . the price of each lot shall be paid at the time of sale or as soon after as the officer or other person holding the sale directs . . . .

It appears clear from those provisions that so far as the sale of moveable property is concerned it is the officer who is holding the sale who concludes the matter by saying who has purchased, within what time the purchase price must be paid, by receiving the purchase money and by granting a receipt. Thereupon the sale becomes complete, property passes and the matter is over. If the sale is of immovable property further safeguards are introduced to guard against cases where the vendor has no title (R. 91), of irregularity or fraud (Rule 90), where the judgment-debtor pays the decretal amount together with a sum by way of compensation to the purchaser (R. 89). The importance of R. 77 is to be found in the fact that the relevant rules relating to sales generally, Rr. 64 and 65, are concerned with sales either of moveable or immovable property. If the officer conducting the sale is in sufficient charge of the sale in the case of moveable properties to be able to say who is the buyer, when he must pay, and to be empowered to receive the price and, by giving a receipt, to pass title it is difficult to see how he is merely ministerial officer in the case of a sale of immovable property. R. 64 empowers the Court to order a sale. R. 65 directs how the sale shall be conducted and provides that save as otherwise prescribed, every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction.

5. Mannulal v. Nanhelal, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 123=141 I C 367=29 N L R 52.
6. Maung Ohn Tin v. Chettyar Firm, (1929) 16 A I R Rang 311=120 I C 142=7 Rang 425.

The auction having been proclaimed in the prescribed manner and the time for the auction having arrived this officer conducts the auction and prima facie it seems to us to be clear that any person conducting an auction must be in a position to say who is the highest bidder. How he says it will depend upon the rules laid down for the conduct of an auction. In England, the practice is to announce by the falling of a hammer when the bidding for a particular lot has ended and it is the highest bidder at that moment who is declared the purchaser. In the Central Provinces, the practice is different. A time is set aside during which persons may make their bids which are entered in a list. When that time is up, the highest bidder is declared by the officer conducting the auction to be the purchaser. It is not the practice for the officer conducting the sale merely to take the list of bidders to the Judge and ask the Judge to declare who is the purchaser. Nor do we think that such a rule would work satisfactorily in these Provinces. Many sales are held far away from any Judge, and in a vast number of cases a rule requiring the bid to be taken before a Judge, would involve trouble and delay and the Judge, so far as we can see, would have nothing to do but select the highest bidder. No arguments would be addressed to him, no parties would appear before him. There is nothing on which he can exercise a judicial mind. He would merely be doing the simple work, within the competency of the Sale Amin, of deciding who is the highest bidder. It is to be observed that R. 69 gives the officer conducting the sale as well as the Court power to adjourn the sale and before the officer adjourns the sale it is not necessary for him to take the orders of the Judge except in the case where the sale is within the precincts of the court-house. Further, the officer conducting the sale is entitled to stop the sale if, before the lot is knocked down, the debt and cost (including the costs of the sale) are tendered to the officer conducting the sale, or proof is given to his satisfaction that the amount of such debt and costs has been paid into the Court which ordered the sale, [R. 69 (3)].

Appendix E (Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, page 1235) shows the normal conditions of sale as contained in the proclamation of sale. Condition (3) is to the following effect:

The highest bidder shall be declared to be the purchaser of any lot, provided always that he is legally qualified to bid, and provided that it shall be in the discretion of the Court or officer holding the sale to decline acceptance of the highest bid when the price offered appears so clearly inadequate as to make it advisable to do so.

It will be seen from Rule 84 that the deposit of 25 per cent. has to be paid immediately to the person conducting the sale and it has to be paid immediately after the declaration that he is the purchaser. Bearing in mind the fact that sales are frequently held far away from a Court and that the sales frequently consist of many lots it is the intention, in our opinion, of the Rule to treat the person conducting the sale as the person who makes the declaration. Otherwise, there would be in many cases a long period stretching between the declaration and the payment which would consequently, of necessity, not be immediately after the declaration. If after the officer conducting the sale has declared a certain person to be a purchaser that person does not immediately pay the 25 per cent. R. 84 requires that the property shall forthwith be re-sold. The question that has been much debated is : What is the value to be given to the word "forthwith"? It has been said that "forthwith" means "as expeditiously as circumstances permit" as was held in 53 Mad 900[7] and that here the circumstances did not permit of the sale being held the same day and that the sale should have been held the next day. In 44 All 266[8] a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court were concerned with the case where the abortive sale ended towards the end of a day. Being late, the officer conducting the sale announced that the property would be re-sold the next morning. At the abortive sale the highest bid was Rs. 5050. Next morning the property fetched Rs. 2850. The argument there addressed to the Court was that this re-sale was not forthwith and that it should have been held the same day. In 53 Mad 900[7] the re-sale was some weeks later after a proclamation and again it was argued that it was not held forthwith. It is true that in both cases the argument failed but the argument was the other way round to that addressed to us. We were pressed with the view that when the re-sale is immediately after the abortive sale it is not forthwith because "forthwith" means "as expeditiously as circumstances permit" and circumstances did not permit of a re-sale so soon.

7. Hanumayamma v. Ankamma, (1930) 17 AIR Mad 761=127 I C 303=53 Mad 900=59 MLJ 267 (F B).

We have however no material before us to say that the re-sale was held more expeditiously than circumstances permitted. There is nothing to show that the circumstances did not permit of the sale taking place the same day. It is to be observed that the upset price was Rs. 10,000 and that the successful bid was Rs. 12,600, Rs. 2600 in excess of the upset price. In the second auction which was held somewhere between 3-30 and 5-45 P. M. — not an unreasonable time of the day—there were 37 bids. In the first auction there were 31 bids. The first auction started with Rs. 3000, the second with Rs. 6000. In the first auction there were only 18 bids of Rs. 6000 or over. There is nothing to show that the bidders had dispersed except the evidence of the bidder for Rs. 15,000 who said that because of the temple bid he went away. There is nothing to show that the second sale was a mere mockery of a sale. On the contrary there were more bids. At both sales the decree-holder, who had been given leave to bid, bid the same figure, viz. Rs. 12,500.

It is suggested that had the sale taken place the next day the loss would not have occurred. In 44 All 266[8] the sale did take place next day and the loss was proportionately much more serious. It does not encourage bidders to go to high prices when it is known that the successful bidder in the former sale had defaulted. When the successful bidder is a rich temple the inference is that the failure to pay the deposit is an excuse for getting out of the purchase. When one finds as here a private servant bidding Rs. 15,000 and then a person who has chanced to drop in bidding Rs. 15,001 on behalf of the temple and then one finds the bidder of Rs. 15,000 giving evidence to the effect that as the temple had bid he did not increase his bid although he thought that the property was more valuable and when one finds him going away forthwith one is left in some doubt as to whether this bid of Rs. 15,001 was not a means of getting out of a bad bargain not only on behalf of the temple but on behalf of the bidder of Rs. 15,000. However that may be, here the values do not suggest that the second sale was wholly for an inadequate price. The decree-holder put the value at Rs. 15,000 but he had not tried at the sale to go beyond Rs. 12,500. The bidder of Rs. 15,000 put the value up to Rs. 17,000, it is true, and other witnesses for the judgment-debtor valued it at Rs. 16,000, Rs. 17,000 and Rs. 18,000. But these valuations carry very little weight. The one who gave Rs. 18,000 as the value thought that the rent "ought to" be Rs. 50 or Rs. 60. In fact it is Rs. 40, and if his valuation was based on a number of years purchase of the rental instead of Rs. 18,000 it should be Rs. 12,000.

We cannot set aside a sale with consequential loss and inconvenience to the purchaser unless there be some invalidating fact present. Before us the argument was that this sale was not held forthwith because it was held sooner than was reasonably proper and practicable. For the reasons above given we do not think that this is so. The matter was put somewhat differently in the preliminary stages. An effort was made then to set aside the second sale on the ground of irregularity and the allegation of irregularity is to be found at p. 25 of Miscellaneous Appeal No. 130 of 1936 as follows: "The material irregularity consists in not waiting for Lokman's deposit of 1/4th money offered." We cannot possibly say that the officer conducting the sale has to wait for the payment of the deposit. He cannot be compelled to wait. The relevant issues are:

(2) Whether Lokman offered a bid for Rs. 15,001 and failed to deposit one-fourth price forthwith.

8. Sita Ram v. Janki Ram, (1922) 9 A I R All 200 =65 I C 813=44 All 266=20 A L J 105 (FB).

(3) Whether re-sale upon Lokman's failure to deposit the 1/4th price amounted to a material irregularity.

We have dealt with issue (3). As to issue 2 we have two observations to offer: (1) Lokeman did not offer a bid of Rs. 15,001. The temple through Lokman offered a bid of Rs. 15,001. This is made quite clear in the decree-holders' application where they say, or in case it is proved that he was authorized by the temple to bid and purchase the property for the alleged temple, the said temple is liable to make good the loss.

Before us it was not disputed that he was authorized to bid and was bidding for the temple; it so appears in the list of bidders and it so appears in the order sheets that the purchaser was the temple. (2) The question is not whether the offerer failed to deposit "forthwith" but whether he failed to deposit "immediately." The word "forthwith" in Rule 84 governs the time at which the re-sale is to be held. The word "immediately" governs the time when the deposit is to be made. We are clearly of the opinion (1) that the officer conducting the sale was justified in holding a re-sale the same day, (2) that the re-sale resulted in a deficiency of price by reason of the purchaser's default (in the first sale) within the meaning of R. 71 of O. 21, and (3) that as a consequence either the decree-holders or the judgment-debtor can recover the difference from the defaulter (Rule 71).

The point was taken that here the decree was for much less than Rs. 12,600 and that accordingly the decree-holders-applicants were not damnified. It was the judgment-debtor that lost as a consequence of that default and therefore it is said that the judgment-debtor should have made the application and not the decree-holders. In our opinion, however, R. 71 gives the right to recover the deficit to either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor. Though one might well expect in circumstances such as these that the decree-holder would leave the matter to the judgment-debtor he need not do so. He may decide to recoup himself from the defaulter. Anything left over from these realizations will of course go to the judgment-debtor so that the decree-holders are, in effect, in these proceedings fighting the judgment-debtor's battles for him. Why they should do so is neither here nor there.

This leaves outstanding the question of whether these proceedings are against the right person. The difficulty is due to the fact that the temple is shown as the purchaser and yet the notice of the application to recover the deficit was served on Lokman, not on anybody as representing the temple. The order sheet in the judgment-debtor's application to set aside the sale (M. A. 130 of 1936) shows on 25th January 1936 as follows:

Decree-holder 2 Kisanlal with Mr. Agarwal. Mr. Nathulal with Mr. Mukherjee. Auction purchaser Harpershad in person with Mr. Agarwal. Defaulting bidder Digamber Jain Temple by one Lokeman. Prospective purchaser Babulal in person.

As we have already pointed out the decree-holder having claimed against Lokman—in the alternative he claimed against the temple — an order for the payment of the deficit has been given against Lokman personally. We think that this is clearly wrong. On the facts it is beyond contest that the bid was made on behalf of the temple by Lokman. Before us it was not denied that Lokman was the managing trustee (sarbarahkar) of the temple and it was not disputed that he was entitled to bid and he bid on behalf of the temple. Indeed the bid was repeated before us on behalf of the temple. The temple, unlike an idol, not being a juristic person cannot sue or be sued but somebody has to sue or be sued on behalf of the temple. Nobody has disputed that the appropriate person to represent the temple in proceedings such as these is Lokman. In those circumstances it appears to us plain that the liability is not Lokman's personally but Lokman's as representing the temple. In other words the order will be against him to pay the deficit out of the temple funds. As this matter was however much disputed in the lower Court and as we are in an important respect, so far as Lokman is concerned, varying the lower Court's orders so as to make the deficit payable by Lokman out of the temple funds, not by Lokman personally, the appeal so far as Miscellaneous Appeal No. 140 of 1938 is concerned is allowed, without costs, to the above extent, that is to say, the order will be varied by making Lokman liable in his capacity as managing trustee of the temple.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 130 of 1936 is based on the view that there has been an irregularity in the conduct of the second sale which irregularity has resulted in a loss to the judgment-debtor and that therefore the sale should be set aside. There is on the above conclusions a double answer: (1) There is no irregularity. (2) There is no loss because the difference will be made good through the decree-holders to the judgment-debtor. That is to say the decree-holders, having recovered the deficit from the temple, will credit the judgment-debtor with the amount so recovered. Miscellaneous Appeal No. 130 of 1936 is accordingly dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 274

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

B. L. Chouda and others — Appellants.

v.

B. K. Rai and another — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 36 of 1937, Decided on 23rd February 1939, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Saugor, D/- 17th October 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 66 — S. 66 does not draw distinction between purchase by person in name of stranger and one by father in name of son.

There is no difference between purchases by A in the name of B where A and B are strangers and where A and B are closely related as in the case of father and son. Consequently S. 66 applies also to purchase by father in the name of son: 6 M I A 53 (P C); A I R 1928 P C 172 and A I R 1925 P C 181, Expl. [P 275 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 66 (1) — S. 66 (1) does not deal with cases in which A purchases at court auction in his own name though on behalf of somebody else.

Section 66 (1) does not deal with the kind of cases where A has purchased at court auction property in his own name though he purchased on behalf of somebody else. It deals with a case where "any person" has made the purchase "on behalf of the plaintiff." [P 276 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 66—Object.

The object of S. 66 is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales. [P 276 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 32 (2) — Cancelled will used in support of statement made by testator against his own interest is admissible.

A cancelled will is admissible under S. 32 (2) if it is used in support of a statement made by the testator in the interest of other persons, his sons, and against his own interest : A I R 1928 P C 172, Disting. [P 277 C 2]

D. N. Choudhary — for Appellants.

R. N. Padhye and W. B. Pendharkar — for Respondents 1 and 2 respectively.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiffs' appeal from a judgment dismissing the suit. The plaintiffs are three executors under the will of a gentleman who was in his lifetime a member of the English Bar but obviously towards the end of his life had shed those ideas which sometimes come with education in Europe. He died a man of considerable property leaving a small sum of money (Rs. 30 a month) to his widow, some small presents to friends and nothing to his two sons and daughter. Most of his will is concerned with directions with regard to certain religious and charitable purposes which appear to be designed to secure him favourable reception in the world to come. This is the kind of will which the Romans treated as an inofficious will which a dependant could upset. It is a kind of will that does not look well unless there are grave reasons for disinheriting those who have some claim upon the author of their being. However with those considerations we are not in this case concerned because in this case we are not concerned with whether this is a good or a bad will but whether a particular item of property belonged to the testator at all. If it did, then he has disposed of it under this will. If it did not, the will and any other dispositions of the testator have nothing to do with the passing of title. This is not a case of a beneficiary being put to his election. The property in question is a somewhat valuable one, a bungalow occupied at the present moment by the European Club, Saugor, and a property which was purchased some time ago for a sum of Rs. 15,000. The question is : Did it belong to the testator so as to now form part of the testator's estate or does it belong to his sons? The learned Judge has found that it belongs to the sons. He has founded that conclusion on two different grounds : (1) the conclusive presumption created by S. 66, Civil P. C., and (2) the facts of the case (assuming that presumption does not arise).

On 30th March 1919 the subject-matter of this suit was sold in a Court auction. The persons mentioned in the sale certificate as the purchasers are the defendants, B. K. Rai and B. P. Rai. The case of the executors is however that the true purchaser was the deceased, the defendant's father. At the time of the purchase the defendants were minors and it is said that the testator has, in his will, declared it to be his property and that there is abundant evidence to show that the purchase price was paid out of the money standing to his credit with his bankers, Bansilal Abirchand. It is therefore urged that this is a case of a purchase by a father with that father's money in the name of his sons ; in other words it is a benami transaction. All the property of the testator is to be treated as his self-acquired property. The sons are not to be regarded as members with him of a joint Hindu family. We proceed on the basis therefore that all his property was self-acquired and that we are dealing with a father and two children who are not joint. The applicability and construction of S. 66, Civil P. C., are the first points that arise. That Section, in sub-s. (1), provides as follows :

> No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims.

The argument addressed to us would involve reading that sub-section as follows: "No suit shall be maintained against [a stranger] claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made [by the person certified as the purchaser] on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims."

We have placed in square brackets the words which it is said should be read into this Section. It is said that there is a big difference in these benami matters, including cases that fall within S. 66, between purchases by A in the name of B where A and B are strangers and where A and B are closely related as in the case of father and son. I L R (1936) Nag 65,[1] 6 M I A 53[2] and 55 Cal 944[3] are referred to. In our opinion there is no difference at all between such purchases. In 6 M I A 53[2] an endeavour was made to draw a distinction between them. The argument that was then addressed to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was to the following effect :

In English law if A pays the purchase price for the conveyance of Blackacre which is taken in the name of B a resulting trust arises whereby B becomes trustee for A and therefore where it is once established that the price has been paid by A the presumption arises that the title is in A although it appears to be in B. This in India is reflected in the law relating to benami transactions so that if one finds in India a transfer taken in the name of B and the purchase price supplied by A then the presumption is that the title, despite the fact that the transferee is B, is in A. The argument was then advanced that in India, as in England, different considerations arise when A and B are so related as to raise a presumption in such circumstances, that A paid that money, not with a view to get title in himself, but with a view to the advancement of B. Such circumstances arise in England in the case of a child or in the case of a wife. 6 M I A 53[2] was a case of a child and 55 Cal 944[3] was a case of a wife. In both cases (see also 48 Mad 605[4]) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee upheld the Courts in India, came to the conclusion that Indian social conditions did not attract that particular rule of advancement and that there was no presumption of advancement in such circumstances in India. Therefore, their Lordships decided that even where A was a father and B was a son or a wife still the rule that the purchase is benami holds good. But, although that be so, the person alleging that the transaction is benami would have to give evidence in the first place to show that the deed did not speak the truth. In the most common case he would discharge that burden if he established that he supplied the consideration. If he established that, the burden of proof would shift. It would then be for the person in whose name the transfer was taken to show that it was not a benami transaction. That burden is not discharged by merely proving that he is a son.

In this present case the converse was argued in an endeavour by Rai Bahadur Choudhari to get us to read for "any person" "a stranger." It was said that a difference exists in the case of strangers and in the case of a father and son. The difference, it was said, was so deep as to make it necessary to limit the cases that S. 66 is concerned with two cases other than those where a father purchases in the name of a son, or a husband in the name of a wife. In developing that argument he relied on a further series of Privy Council cases, that is to say 37 All 545[5] and the earlier Privy Council case therein referred to at p. 555, 12 Beng L R 317,[6] together with two more decisions one of which purports to follow 37 All 545,[5] that is to say A I R 1919 Mad

1. Gopal v. Keshosa, (1936) 23 A I R Nag 185 = 165 I C 350=I L R (1936) Nag 65.
2. Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gossain, (1854-57) 6 M I A 53 = 2 Suther 13=4 W R 46=1 Sar 493 (P C).
3. Guran Ditta v. Ram Ditta, (1928) 15 A I R P C 172=109 I C 723 = 55 Cal 944 = 55 I A 235 (P C).
4. Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai, (1925) 12 A I R P C 181=88 I C 327=52 I A 286=48 Mad 605 (P C).
5. Ganga Sahai v. Kesri, (1915) 2 A I R P C 81 =30 I C 265=42 I A 177=37 All 545 (P C).
6. Bodh Singh Dodhoria v. Gunesh Chunder Sen, (1873) 12 Beng L R 317=19 W R 356=3 Sar 253 (P C).

942[7] and A I R 1937 Lah 471.[8] The last named case decided that on the facts there present S. 66 did not apply and accordingly the benami nature of the transaction could be gone into. 37 All 545,[5] as we read it, is a case in which it was found that a fraud had been perpetrated and is a case quite different on its facts from the present. The fact that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee founded their view on fraud is seen when their observations at page 555 are read.

That leads us to the second alteration in the wording of the Section which it is said should be made if one is to arrive at a true construction of S. 66 (1), that is to say after the words "was made" should be added "by the certified purchaser." That however in our opinion is a hopeless construction because that would mean that we are not dealing with benami transactions at all but are dealing with cases in which A has purchased at court auction property in his own name though he purchased on behalf of somebody else. That is not the kind of case that S. 66 (1) is dealing with. It is dealing with a case where "any person" has made the purchase "on behalf of the plaintiff." In such a case if the person in whose name the purchase is taken is certified as the purchaser the plaintiff cannot maintain a suit against him claiming title on the ground that the purchase was made on his behalf. The most important case is where the purchaser is the plaintiff and where he has taken a transfer in the name of another who is the person certified as the purchaser. The reason why such a distinction has been made between court auction sales and private sales is brought out in Sir Dinshah Mulla's Notes to S. 66. As he observes the object of the Section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales. Of course these provisions, like other provisions, are not permitted by Courts of law to operate so as to work a fraud, but where is the fraud in the present case?

In the present case the facts are as follows : The testator attended this auction sale and bought this property in the name of his two sons. He paid off the purchase price by a cheque drawn on his bank. He fed the bank from a variety of sources, partly from his business, and round about the time of this sale undoubtedly from the sale of property which was equally undoubtedly his. But he has himself made it quite clear in a document that we shall refer to later, that he was buying this property not on his own behalf but on behalf of his sons. He was not buying it on behalf of his sons by way of advancement out of his own money but he was buying it on behalf of his sons with the sons' own money, only the sons' money had been used by him in the past and he was not in effect repaying them out of his own money. That is, as we understand this case, the truth of the matter. We derive that from the documents. Before we come to the documents it is desirable to make one or two preliminary observations.

This gentleman made at least two wills. The one was made in 1927 and will be referred to as the cancelled will and the other in 1929, the effective will. He was at the time of his death well advanced in years, as things go in the East and between those two dates, whether it was due to declining mental powers or to other reasons, he appears to have entirely changed his attitude not with regard to one of his dependants only but with regard to them all. In the earlier cancelled will there is the following statement :

> List of property which is separately owned by respective persons is not included in mine ; for it was separately purchased with their amounts.
>
> Club bungalow [the suit property] which at present fetches a rent of Rs. 100 per month. It was purchased in the names of Bhairo Prasad and Balkrishna [the two defendants] only with the amount accumulated, of all the four sons. Money used always to be given to them in their early life since their birth by way of presents which was laid by in a Savings Bank and led to profit being invested into the business. As for the way in which the rent of the same should be distributed. . . . .

If reference is made to Ex. D-1, one finds a corroboration of the defendants' story that in addition to the sums which came to them by way of gift in the manner stated in the cancelled will they also obtained substantial sums from their mother. Exhibit D-1 refers to two sums, one of Rs. 3000 and another of Rs. 2300 which appears as credited to Bhairo Prasad and Bal Krishna respectively. There is also an entry: "His mother paid from ornaments, etc. Hence credited to him." All these moneys would appear to have been mixed by the testator with his own moneys.

After this purchase was concluded one finds in the testator's books the following entries : Under date 28th March 1921

7. Patrachariar v. Ramaswami, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 942=49 I C 734.
8. Jai Kishan v. Parmeshri Das, (1937) 24 A I R Lah 471=171 I C 856=39 P L R 152.

"Rs. 90 credited on account of rent of the Club House of Bhaiya Bhairo Prasad Bal Krishna for the month of February." Similar entries are to be found under dates 28th June 1921, 2nd August 1921, 30th September 1921 and 5th November 1921. On 7th December 1921 we have this entry:

Credited to the khata of Bal Krishna Bhairo Prasad on account of rent of the Club House for the month of October 1921.

The last entry of this kind that we have is under date 1st February 1922. It will be observed that in the entry dated 7th December 1921 a reference is made to the khata of these two sons "on account of the rent of the Club House." If Ex. P-6 is referred to we find "khata 1, khata of the Club House . . . from 24th October 1919," then certain credits and debits are given. Altogether a sum of Rs. 1534-2-0 is credited and that shows not only that those payments were put into a separate khata of the Club House but, read in with the entry that we have mentioned under date 7th December 1921, that that khata was the khata of the two sons. There is also the oral evidence of the son who went into the witness-box and gave evidence to the effect that he was 11 when this property was purchased for him and therefore was then told what had been done for him. Putting that quite on one side it seems to us that the documentary evidence is all one way until we come to the last will of the testator. The last will of the testator is obviously made either after a quarrel or, what appears more probable, after he had commenced to lose his mental faculties. We incline to the latter alternative because a son is disinherited apparently because he was active in causing an ailing sister to go into hospital and undergo an operation which probably saved her life. We are not to be taken as saying that the testator was of non-testamentary capacity, but the will does bear on its face the signs of being made by a man who had lost all regard for his dependants. That is a state of mind that does occasionally afflict people who are not well. In his last will, unquestionably, he treats the suit property as property belonging to him, property that he bought benami in the name of his sons, and he claims to exercise full disposing power over it. But we do not in any way regard the evidence supplied by this last will as comparable with the evidence supplied by the cancelled will. The cancelled will has no force or effect as a will and Rai Bahadur Choudhari argued that it has no evidentiary value at all founding himself on 55 Cal 944.[3] But the reason their Lordships of the Privy Council treated the will there as being of no evidentiary value was because the cancelled will was there being used in support of a statement made by the testator in his own interest. Here the statement is being made by the testator in the interest of other persons, his sons, against his own interests, and is accordingly admissible under S. 32 (2), Evidence Act.

We observe that in this case we are sitting as an Appellate Court and the learned Judge, who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses, has arrived at a certain conclusion of fact which ends the matter if upheld. That is to say the question under S. 66 does not arise if his finding of fact is correct. We, looking at the whole record, at a very early stage in this appeal arrived at the same conclusion of fact. That is enough to dispose of the appeal. Accordingly the appeal is dismissed with costs. We observe that the costs in the lower Courts have been given against the plaintiffs without in any way indicating that they are to come out of the estate. There has been no appeal from this part of the decree but the respondents leave the matter to us to deal with according to equity and bearing in mind what is usual in executors' cases. We have no reason to think that this is a litigation undertaken maliciously or with the sole desire to cause trouble to the defendants, but we think that the executors really considered, acting under legal advice, that the case was one that should, in the interests of the testator's estate and the charities, be filed. In such cases it is not usual to impose the burden of costs on executors or trustees personally. Accordingly the costs throughout will be paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants out of the estate.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 277

NIYOGI J.

Pitambar Ramchandra Paliye — Defendant—Applicant.

v.

Sahebchand Harakchand Shop through Kasturchand and another — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 301 of 1938, Decided on 26th July 1939, from decree of Small Cause Court, Nagpur, D/- 15th February 1938.

(a) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Rules under, R. 18—R. 18 does not cure illegality occurring under R. 47.

Rule 18 only deals with a notice sent in an irregular form but does not cure the illegality occurring under R. 47. [P 278 C 2]

(b) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Rules under, R. 47 and S. 8—Failure of Board and debtor to have proper guardian appointed after due notice to minor and guardian—Proceedings are null and void.

Where the Board and the debtor have failed to have proper guardian appointed after due notice to minor creditor and his guardian, the proceedings are initially illegal and minor is gravely prejudiced if this has resulted in failure to submit a statement of debt due to minor. The proceedings therefore being irregular minor is entitled to a declaration in Civil Court that the proceedings are null and void. [P 279 C 1]

T. B. Pendharkar—for Applicant.

B. R. Mandlekar—for Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application to revise the judgment of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 125 of 1937, decided on 15th February 1938. The non-applicant Sahebchand Harakchand Shop represented by the proprietors Kasturchand and Kapurchand, both minors, filed the suit out of which this application arises to recover a debt due on an instalment bond, dated 16th June 1933 for Rs. 487 executed by the defendant in favour of the shop (Sahebchand Harakchand) then represented by the proprietor Premchand Punamchand, the father of the plaintiffs. Prior to the suit there were proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board initiated by the defendant for settlement of his debt. The plaintiff was described there by the name of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand as being represented by the owner Kasturchand Premchand who was shown as a major. Notice was issued by the Board in the name of Sahebchand Harakchand, proprietor Kasturchand Premchand. Although Premchand had died and his sons Kasturchand and Kapurchand were minors, no guardian was appointed to represent the minors. The notice issued in the name of the shop as above was received by Hemkaran who was one of the agents appointed under a power of attorney executed by the minors' mother. It is not known whether Hemkaran was present at the proceedings before the Board but from the fact that a note is made in the order sheet as to the presence of all the creditors it may be presumed that somebody on behalf of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand was present at the proceedings. The plaintiffs' mother died during the pendency of the proceedings. That was on 2nd November 1936. That fact was apparently brought to the notice of the Debt Conciliation Board but no attempt was made to appoint a guardian for the minors. It appears one Panmal became the natural guardian. No notice was sent to Panmal or to anybody else on behalf of the minors. According to S. 8 (1), Debt Conciliation Act, statement of debt owed to the minors ought to have been submitted to the Board but that was not done with the result that the Board declared that the debt owed to the shop of Sahebchand Harakchand was discharged. In view of that order the defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable. The lower Court overruled the contention on the ground that the minor had not been served in accordance with law and that the proceedings before the Board were null and void. It therefore passed a decree in plaintiffs' favour.

On behalf of the applicant it is urged that although there has been irregularity, that was only technical and that it did not prejudice the minors' interest in any way. Reliance is placed on O. 30, R. 10, Civil P. C., S. 99, Civil P. C. and R. 18 of the rules framed under the C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933. It is true that the agents appointed by the minors' mother were fully aware of the proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board as is clear from a telegram, Ex. D-5, and the letter, dated 31st May 1936. There was however an irregularity in not issuing notice to the minor Kasturchand whose name was mentioned as the proprietor of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand. He was there described as a major and his brother Kapurchand was not impleaded at all. Under R. 47 of the rules framed under the C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933, the Board and the debtor were bound to follow the procedure laid down in O. 32, Civil P. C., 1908. They have ignored that rule altogether. R. 18 of those rules only deals with a notice sent in an irregular form but does not cure the illegality occurring under R. 47. Under O. 32, R. 3 it was incumbent on the debtor first to have a proper guardian appointed after due notice to the minor and to the guardian. The proceedings were initially illegal as this important step to secure the minors' representation in the proceedings was not taken. Even on the death of the minors' mother no step was taken to have a fresh guardian appointed. In short, the parties who were intended to be affected by the proceedings of the Debt Conciliation Board were not properly brought before the Board. The fact that Hemkaran appeared in the Court is non sequitur as he happened also to be one of the creditors and had notice to appear before the Board. It is not clear from the record whether Hemkaran appeared on his own behalf or on behalf of the minors. Even if he had appeared in the latter capacity it was imperative on him to submit a statement of debt due to the minors and his failure to do so has resulted in grave prejudice to the minors' interest in that the debt due to them was declared to be discharged. The proceedings before the Board were so irregular as to entitle the minors to a declaration in the Civil Court that the proceedings were null and void and inoperative to affect their interest. Consequently, the lower Court was right in holding that the order discharging the plaintiffs' debt made by the Debt Conciliation Board was void and of no avail. The Civil Court has under S. 8 (2) power to revise the debt which has been illegally declared by the Debt Conciliation Board to have been discharged.

I may add that this is particularly a case in which the Civil Court cannot overlook serious irregularities in the procedure of the Debt Conciliation Board on the ground that they were of a technical character. If the irregularity is condoned in this case the minors' debt would be wiped off and that would result in great injustice to them. On the other hand to take serious notice of these irregularities and regard them as invalidating the order of the Debt Conciliation Board would induce a sense of responsibility in the mind not only of the parties but also the Board when the minors are arrayed as parties before it. R. 47 lays the responsibility of securing the due representation of minor parties on the Board as well. Weighing the considerations advanced on either side there is no doubt that the interests of justice would be served better by exacting a stricter standard of procedure before the Board as the lower Court has done than otherwise. This will not mean any injustice to the debtor as it is open to him even now to move the Board, if in existence, or to move its successor for settlement of the debt. The fact that a decree has been passed does not impair his right to have the debt settled. The application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 279

NIYOGI J.

Kisan Dewaloo Mali—Decree-holder — Appellant.

v.

Ganga Bai w/o Jairam Mali and others — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 125 of 1938, Decided on 26th July 1939, from order of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 19th January 1938.

Pre-emption — Holder of decree for pre-emption depositing pre-emption price within prescribed period but withdrawing it on reversal of decree in appeal — In second appeal decree of trial Court restored—Pre-emption price which is withdrawn should be allowed to be deposited.

The pre-emption decree made in terms of O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C., is in the nature of a preliminary decree. It becomes operative as a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in case the plaintiff fails to pay the full pre-emption price within the time allowed by the Court. On the other hand it becomes operative as a decree entitling the plaintiff to claim possession of the pre-empted land in case he deposits the pre-emptive price within the prescribed time : 18 All 223, Rel. on. [P 280 C 2]

Where a holder of a decree for pre-emption has deposited pre-emption price within the prescribed period and withdraws it on the reversal of the decree in appeal, he should be allowed to deposit it when in second appeal the decree of the trial Court is restored, because the deposit of the pre-emptive price completes the sale in favour of the plaintiff and the title passes to him. If thereafter he withdraws the amount the vendor would be entitled to claim the price. He cannot get back his title which had already passed away from him unless the plaintiff on demand made by the Court declines to pay the pre-emption price. [P 280 C 2]

W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

V. K. Rajwade — for Respondents.

Order.—This is a decree-holder's appeal from an order passed on 19th January 1938 in Transferred Civil Appeal No. 38-A of 1937 by the First Additional District Judge, Akola. The facts are that the appellant Kisan had filed a suit for pre-emption in respect of field No. 614 against Bhagai, Damodar and Gangabai. The field belonged to defendant 2 Damodar who sold it to defendant 1 Bhagai who in turn sold it to Gangabai just on the eve of the institution of the suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff succeeded in the first Court and he was ordered to deposit into Court Rs. 100 any time between 15th February 1934 and 15th March 1934 for payment to defendant 1. The plaintiff deposited that amount on 7th March 1934 and had thus become entitled to possession of the field. Defendant 3 filed an appeal from that decree and succeeded in getting that decree reversed on 13th April 1934. The plaintiff thereon filed a second appeal in the High Court. The High Court decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts but omitted to extend time for depositing the pre-emption price. The plaintiff who had on 2nd May 1934 withdrawn the amount which he had deposited within the time prescribed by the trial Court tendered that amount in Court, but the tender was rejected on the ground that the time fixed by the original pre-emption decree had expired. The plaintiff's suit was consequently dismissed and his appeal also was unsuccessful.

It appears to me that in this case technicality has been pushed to the extreme. It is true that the executing Court cannot extend time fixed in the decree for payment of the pre-emption price. The cases relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents, namely 19 N L R 8,[1] 18 All 223,[2] 45 All 456[3] and 6 Lah 316[4] lay down the same proposition, but no case has been brought to my notice in which the plaintiff obeyed the decree of the original Court by depositing the money within time as the plaintiff did in the present case. If the High Court's decree superseded the decree of the original Court, and it omitted to fix the time within which the money was to be paid the natural inference would be that the High Court permitted the plaintiff to deposit within reasonable time. If, on the other hand, the effect of the High Court's decree was to restore in terms the decree of the original Court then the direction in that decree was obeyed by the plaintiff when he deposited the sum of Rs. 100 in the Court on 7th March 1934, that is before 15th March 1934 which was the last date fixed for payment. If the plaintiff is held bound by the terms of the first Court's decree he must, in equity, be given the benefit of his deposit made within time. The pre-emption decree made in terms of O. 20, Rule 14, is in the nature of a preliminary decree. As pointed out in 18 All 223[2] it becomes operative as a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in case the plaintiff fails to pay the full pre-emption price within the time allowed by the Court. On the other hand it becomes operative as a decree entitling the plaintiff to claim possession of the pre-empted land in case he deposits the pre-emptive price within the prescribed time. On 7th March 1934, when the plaintiff deposited the pre-emptive price, there was in the eye of the law a final decree in his favour. That final decree was vacated as the result of the lower Appellate Court's dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. When the High Court restored the original Court's decree the final decree, as the result of the deposit of 7th March 1934, was also automatically restored. The fact that the plaintiff withdrew the amount after the dismissal of the suit by the lower Appellate Court is inconsequential so far as his substantial right to recover possession of the pre-emptive land is concerned. The deposit of the pre-emptive price completed the sale in favour of the plaintiff and the title passed to him. If thereafter he withdrew the amount the vendor would be entitled to claim the price. He cannot get back his title which had already passed away from him unless the plaintiff on demand made by the Court declined to pay the pre-emption price.

As the plaintiff tendered the amount which he had once deposited but had withdrawn because the vendor refused to accept that amount and his suit also was dismissed in the lower Appellate Court, it ought to have been allowed to be deposited in the Court. The lower Appellate Court's order is set aside and the Court of first instance is directed to accept the deposit made by the plaintiff. I grant the plaintiff one month's time for depositing the amount in Court. If he fails to deposit within time his suit will be dismissed with costs. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellant in all the Courts. Counsel's fees Rupees 15.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

1. Ambadas v. Laxman, (1923) 10 A I R Nag 210 =71 I C 401=19 N L R 8.
2. Jaggarnath Pande v. Jokhu Tewari, (1896) 18 All 223=1896 A W N 43.
3. Girdhari Singh v. Bhupal Singh, (1923) 10 A I R All 516=74 I C 745=45 All 456.
4. Sukhram Das v. Nazar Muhammad, (1925) 12 A I R Lah 380=89 I C 163=6 Lah 316=26 P L R 183.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 281

NIYOGI J.

Laxman Namdeo Koshti—Accused Applicant

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 166 of 1939, Decided on 17th June 1939, from order of the Addl. Sess. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 24th January 1939.

C. P. Protection of Debtors Act (4 of 1937), Secs. 3 and 4 — Creditor going to debtor to demand money and being told to go to Civil Court hitting him — This act does not amount to offence under Sec. 3.

Where a creditor goes to the debtor to demand debt due to him and, on being told by the latter to go to Civil Court for its recovery, gets annoyed and beats him, his act does not amount to an offence under S. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, though he may be prosecuted for hurt or insult under Penal Code: Criminal Revn. No. 358 of 1938, Disting. [P 282 C 1, 2]

T. J. Kedar — for Applicant.

Order.—This is an application to revise the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, in Criminal Revision No. 58 of 1938, decided on 24th January 1939. The case involves the question of construction of Sec. 3, Central Provinces Protection of Debtors Act, 1937. The facts are that one Upashya was indebted to the accused Laxman. On 13th January 1938, the accused demanded payment of his debt, whereon Upashya became angry and bade him go to Civil Court. The accused lost his temper and beat Upashya with a shoe and left the place. The accused was prosecuted for an offence punishable under S. 4, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, 1937, for molesting the debtor for the recovery of a debt owed by him. In a summary trial he was convicted of the offence and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. The accused applied to the Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, for revising the order of conviction and sentence on the ground that his assault on the debtor did not constitute an offence punishable under S. 4, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, 1937. The learned Additional Sessions Judge followed Criminal Revn. No. 358 of 1938[1] and held that the object of the intimidation was to make the complainant to pay a debt without forcing the accused to take proceedings against him in a Civil Court, that a threat which would prevent him from taking up a position which the law allows him falls within the mischief of molestation as defined in Sec. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act; and that the Act does not permit a money-lender by threatening his client to deter the debtor from forcing his creditor to take action against him in a Court of law.

On this view he held that the assault on the debtor amounted to an offence of molestation as defined in S. 3 of that Act.

The situation in the case which came up before this Court in Criminal Revn. No. 358 of 1938[1] was somewhat different. In that case the creditor threatened the debtor while he was going to his office on duty as an Assistant Foreman at the Power House. The threat was made in the vicinity of the place where he worked. The creditor was fined Rs. 100. The Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur, referred the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., for the opinion of the High Court as, in his opinion, no debtor could claim a right of not paying his creditor and that therefore the threat to induce the debtor to pay up his debt did not constitute molestation as defined in S. 3 of that Act. The reference was not accepted by this Court and the reason given was that the object of the intimidation was to make the debtor pay a debt without forcing the accused to take proceedings against him in a Civil Court. It was conceded that a debtor could not claim a right that he would not pay his creditor but it was explained that the object of the threat was to prevent a case being brought in the Civil Court which would prevent the debtor from urging pleas in mitigation such as an exhorbitant rate of interest and any other pleas which the law would allow him. The rule was propounded that a threat which would prevent a debtor from taking up a position which the law allows him falls within the mischief of molestation as defined in S. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act. To understand the precise meaning of the foregoing expression, I have made an analysis which shows that the learned Judge had envisaged the position as follows : The creditor wants to avoid going to Civil Court and the debtor wants to force him to go to it for recovering his debt. The law allows the debtor to force the creditor to go to Civil Court although the debtor has no right to abstain from paying off his debt if he is able to do so. When the creditor threatens the debtor with evil consequences to compel him to pay a debt without recourse to Civil Court, he thereby intends to cause the debtor to do an act which he has a right to abstain from doing. The material words in Sec. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, 1937, are as follows :

1. Emperor v. Mohammad Khan, Criminal Revn. No. 358 of 1938 dated 7th November 1938.

For the purposes of this Act, a person who, with intent to cause another person to abstain from doing or to do any act which he has a right to do or to abstain from doing, (a) obstructs, or uses violence to, or intimidates, such other person .... shall be deemed to molest such other person.

The terms of the definition indicate that the obstruction or using violence or intimidation to constitute molestation should be accompanied by the intent to cause the debtor to abstain from doing what he has a right to do or to compel him to do what he has a right to abstain from doing. It is evident that the particular intent is a question of fact in every case. If the Court holds that the creditor's intention in obstructing, or using violence to, or intimidating, the debtor is to compel him to pay a debt which he has a right in certain circumstances to abstain from doing, the creditor's act would amount to molestation. In the present case, the circumstances in which the creditor used violence do not warrant any assumption that the creditor's intention was to compel him to pay the debt. But on the contrary its effect would presumably be to confirm the debtor's resolve not to pay. The trial Magistrate says in para. 5 of his order :

It has thus been proved that the accused did go to Upashya's house to dun him for recovery of debts, that as the complainant asked him with impunity to have a recourse to the Civil Court the accused got annoyed and abusing the complainant hit him. It is thus clear that the accused molested the complainant as contemplated under S. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act.

The finding of fact is that the creditor hit the debtor as a result of the annoyance caused to him by the debtor having asked him to go to Civil Court for recovering his debt. The violence done to the debtor was never regarded by the creditor as a means to compel him to pay his debt. I can well imagine a case where, in circumstances such as those proved in the present case, a creditor might use violence to his debtor and ask him to pay up his debt to avoid further violence. That would indeed be a case of clear molestation. But here the creditor did not resort to violence as an instrument to compel the debtor to pay when he was not disposed to pay. It was only a manifestation of the pitch of his passion that was aroused by the debtor's remark that the creditor should look to Civil Court. The violence was not intended to operate on the debtor's mind so as to induce him to pay but it was intended to be a punishment for his impertinence in asking the creditor to go to Civil Court.

The creditor was indeed liable to be punished for assault under the Penal Code, but I cannot persuade myself to concur in the view that his act amounted to an offence under Sec. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, 1937, in the particular circumstances of the present case. For the foregoing reasons I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the applicant be acquitted. The fine, if recovered, will be refunded to the applicant. It would be open to the complainant to prosecute the applicant for assault or causing hurt or insult, which are offences punishable under the Penal Code, if he so wishes to do.

D.S./R.K. Revision allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 282

NIYOGI AND VIVIAN BOSE JJ.

Akbar Ali Fida Hussain — Defendant — Judgment-debtor — Appellant.

v.

Sobharam Motiram Parwar and another — Plaintiffs — Decree-holders — Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No. 82 of 1937, Decided on 14th April 1939, from order of Dist. Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 1st February 1937.

(a) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Ss. 15 and 21— Sale in execution before application under S. 4 is made — Power of Civil Court to confirm sale under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., is not affected either by S. 15 or S. 21.

Section 15 can have no application where after the sale, but before its confirmation, the judgment-debtor puts in an application to the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4. Moreover, the proceedings under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., for the confirmation of a sale already made cannot be said to be proceedings in respect of a debt for the settlement of which application has been made, within the meaning of S. 21. Hence neither S. 15 nor S. 21 affects the power of the Civil Court under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., to confirm a sale held in execution proceedings when such sale has taken place before an application under S. 4, Debt Conciliation Act, has been made to the Debt Conciliation Board : AIR 1937 Nag 98 ; AIR 1938 Nag 273 ; 1938 N L J 229 and A I R 1938 Nag 109, Approved; 1938 N L J 150, Dissent. [P 287 C 1]

(b) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933) —Act must be construed strictly.

The Debt Conciliation Act is a coercive measure intended to affect vested interests and rights and to bring pressure upon creditors to effect a settlement with their debtors; therefore however beneficent it may be from the point of view of debtors, it operates to the detriment of another class of persons, namely creditors, and consequently, the Act must, in accordance with the usual rules of construction, be construed strictly. Any ambiguity in its clauses must therefore be resolved along lines which interfere as little as possible with existing rights unless the contrary is unmistakably indicated in other parts of the Act. [P 285 C 2]

(c) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), S. 21 and R. 11—Object of certificate.

Rule 11 of the Rules framed under the Act merely empowers a Board to issue a certificate in respect of proceedings which should be suspended under S. 21. The object of the certificate is merely to bring to the notice of the Court officially that there are proceedings pending before the Board which must be stayed under S. 21. [P 286 C 1, 2] (d) C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), S. 21—Stay operates from date on which certificate is produced in Court.

The stay under S. 21 operates from the date on which the certificate is produced in Court and not from the date on which it is granted : A I R 1938 Nag 109, Rel. on. [P 286 C 2]

Hidayatullah — for Appellant.

S. P. Kotwal and R. N. Padhye — for Respondents.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Niyogi J. — This is an appeal from the judgment of the District Judge, Chhindwara, in Miscellaneous Civil Appeal No. 15 of 1936, dated 1st February 1937. The respondent in execution of his decree attached the appellant's share in mouza Dongaria and got the decree transferred to the Collector for sale. The property was sold but as the appellant produced before the Civil Court a certificate of the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 21, Debt Conciliation Act, declaring that an application for settlement of the appellant's debts had been filed, that Court stayed the confirmation of sale. On appeal the learned District Judge following the view of Pollock J., in 19 N L J 296,[1] set aside the original Court's order. Pollock J.'s view was that when property is sold in execution, the proceedings thereafter cease to be execution proceedings and that S. 21, Debt Conciliation Act, does not operate to prevent the Court from confirming the proceedings. This view was followed by me in Civil Revision No. 319 of 1937 and Civil Revision No. 534 of 1937 reported respectively in 1938 N L J 60[2] and 1938 N L J 229.[3]

The learned counsel for the appellant has brought to my notice a decision of Grille J. reported in 1938 N L J 150,[4] in which the learned Judge virtually dissented from Pollock J.'s opinion. On a question which affects interests of the debtors in general and is of frequent occurrence, it is essential that the High Court should pronounce its authoritative opinion. I am therefore of opinion that the question formulated below should be determined by a Bench of two Judges of this Court.

Do Ss. 15 and 21, Debt Conciliation Act, affect the power of the Civil Court under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., to confirm a sale held in execution proceedings?

The case will be submitted to my Lord the Chief Justice for necessary orders.

OPINION

This reference raises a question relating to the construction of Ss. 15 and 21, Debt Conciliation Act. The question referred is as follows and speaks for itself:

Do Ss. 15 and 21, Debt Conciliation Act, affect the power of the Civil Court under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., to confirm a sale held in execution proceedings ?

The matter was considered by Pollock J. in 19 N L J 296,[1] and by one of us, Niyogi J., in 1938 N L J 60[2] and in 1938 N L J 229.[3] The decision in 19 N L J 296[1] was upheld by a Division Bench consisting of Pollock and Digby JJ. in A I R 1938 Nag 109.[5] In all these cases the question was answered in the negative. But recently Grille J. dissenting from 19 N L J 296[1] reached the opposite conclusion in 1938 N L J 150.[4] We have now to choose between these two views. In our opinion, though there is much to be said in favour of both views, the former is to be preferred. The question referred is couched in a wide form but since it can only have reference to the facts of the case out of which it arises, we will deal with the matter only in so far as it relates to the facts of that case. They are as follows :

The respondent obtained a simple money decree against the appellant and in execution attached the appellant's share in Mouza Dongaria. The decree was transferred to the Collector for execution and he put the property up for sale. At the auction it was purchased by the decree-holder himself, that is to say by the respondent here. After the sale, but before its confirmation, the judgment-debtor-appellant put in an application to the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4 and obtained a

1. Firm Haji Dada Kachhi-Malik Haji Wali Mohammad v. Pannalal, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 98=169 I C 99=19 N L J 296.
2. Madhao v. Ramchandra, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 278 = 178 I C 268 = 1938 N L J 60= I L R (1939) Nag 104.
3. Hari Sadasheo v. Waman Vithal, (1938) N L J 229.
4. Thakur Prasad v. Thakur Raghurajsingh, (1938) N L J 150.
5. Mahtabsingh Pransingh v. Krishnachandra Tarachand, (1938) 25 A I R Nag 109 = 172 I C 592.

certificate under R. 11 to S. 21, Debt Conciliation Act. He then produced it before the Civil Court. It was in the usual terms and recited that an application under S. 4 of the Act for the settlement of the appellant's debts had been filed before the Board. That Court thereupon stayed the confirmation proceedings. This decision was reversed in appeal and so the matter came up here. In our opinion Sec. 15 does not apply to cases of this kind. It deals, so far as this point is concerned, with only two situations. S. 15 (2) states :

> Where any creditor sues in a Civil Court for the recovery of a debt in respect of which a certificate has been granted under sub-s. (1).

The suit contemplated is therefore one filed after the grant of the certificate under S. 15 (2). This is also clear when this Section is compared with S. 21 which recites:

> When an application has been made to a Board under Sec. 4, any suit or other proceedings, then pending before a Civil Court, etc.

The Act refers to several different points of time, namely (1) the date of the application under Sec. 4; (2) the date of the certificate under S. 15 (2); (3) the date of the registration and so on; and deals with suits and other proceedings instituted before and after these several dates differently. In the case of Sec. 15 (2), the point of time is the date of the certificate under S. 15 (1), and what is struck at is suits instituted after that date. It will be observed that the words "or other proceedings" are not used in this sub-section. Apart from that the only penalties provided are: (1) that the plaintiff is to be deprived of his costs and (2) that certain restrictions are to be placed upon the amount of interest which he can claim. It is clear when sub-s. (2) is read in conjunction with sub-s. (1) that a person who has instituted his suit before the application to the Board is made is not being struck at. The penalties are imposed upon creditors who having been taken before the Board, and having been offered a fair settlement, refuse it, and then sue. Therefore in no event can S. 15 (2) stop confirmation proceedings in respect of a suit instituted before the grant of the certificate. Turning next to S. 15 (3), the point of time dealt with there is the date of registration of the agreement. It runs thus:

> Where, after the registration of an agreement under sub-s. (2) of Sec. 12 any unsecured creditor sues, etc. . . . or any creditor sues for the recovery of a debt incurred after the date of such registration, etc.

The present suit was instituted before the registration; in fact, we understand that there has been no registration at all so far, but whether that is so or not, the suit was instituted before that date and so S. 15 (3) cannot apply. That being so, S. 15 is not a bar to confirmation in the present case. We are not concerned with other kinds of cases and so limit our observations to the facts of the present case. That answers the reference in so far as it relates to S. 15. We now turn to S. 21. It refers to suits, "or other proceedings," filed before an application to the Board under S. 4 has been made, and this is the third point of time upon which we must rivet our attention. The Section speaks of any suit or other proceedings "then pending before a Board," and the word "then" relates back to the opening sentence: "when an application has been made to a Board under S. 4." Therefore S. 21 deals with suits and other proceedings instituted before the application under S. 4 is made and which are still pending at that date.

There is also another limitation. Not only must the suit or other proceedings have been pending at the date of the application under S. 4, but it must also be "in respect of any debt for the settlement of which application has been made." It is only suits or other proceedings which fulfil both these requirements that can be stayed under S. 21. The question therefore arises whether proceedings under O. 21, R. 92, for the confirmation of a sale already made can be said to be proceedings "in respect of a debt for the settlement of which application has been made." Now we have no doubt that if the execution proceedings are continued after a certificate under R. 11 has been brought to the notice of the Court, and in spite of it, then the proceedings after that date will be incompetent if they fulfil both the requirements specified above, and in that event the matter would have to be set right in revision or in appeal. But if the proceedings up to and including the sale are valid, then we do not see how mere confirmation can be stayed unless the confirmation proceedings can be regarded as proceedings in respect of a debt, etc.

That brings us up against a conflict of authority. When the auction-purchaser is a stranger, there is not much difficulty. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in 27 N L R 95[6] at p. 100 that once the sale has taken place and the property is purchased by a stranger, then the execution proceedings cease to be solely between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder. The interests of a third party have come into existence and they cannot be disregarded. Therefore their Lordships held that unless the requisite amount together with the statutory compensation of 5 per cent. is deposited within 30 days under O. 21, R. 89, or unless the sale is set aside on one or other of the narrow grounds given in O. 21, Rr. 90 and 91, the Court has no option but to confirm it, and once confirmed the title relates back to the date of the sale. For these reasons their Lordships decided that the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder are incompetent to effect an adjustment of the decree under O. 21, R. 2, so as to affect the title of a stranger auction purchaser under the sale. Their Lordships have also held in another case, 10 All 166[7] at p. 172 that a stranger auction-purchaser is not affected by the subsequent reversal of the decree. Therefore when a stranger purchases it is impossible to say that the proceedings subsequent to the sale are in respect of the debt for the satisfaction of which the sale was made.

6. Nanhelal v. Umrao Singh, (1931) 18 A I R P C 33 = 130 I C 686 = 58 I A 50=27 N L R 95 (P C).

But when the decree-holder purchases, the position is not quite as simple. There is nothing to prevent the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor from making an adjustment even at that stage, and of course a reversal of the decree would involve an automatic setting aside of the sale. But even then there is considerable difference of opinion among the various High Courts as to the exact position of the decree-holder purchaser. One view is that he has a dual capacity and that in so far as matters relating to the sale are concerned, such for example, as proceedings for the obtaining of possession, he is not even a party to the decree and that such proceedings cannot be said to relate to the "execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree" within the meaning of S. 47, Civil P. C. The other view is to the opposite effect. But we do not think it necessary to enter upon this vexed question here because we have now to construe S. 21, Debt Conciliation Act and not Section 47, Civil P. C. The one speaks of proceedings in respect of a debt, the other of proceedings relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree.

7. Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan, (1888) 10 All 166 = 15 I A 12 = 5 Sar 129 (P C.)

Once the debt has merged in the decree and matters have reached a stage in which it is no longer in the judgment-debtor's power to recall the sale, we are unable to regard proceedings from that point on as relating to the debt. They may or may not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, but they cease to have effective connexion with the debt. The tie between the two thereafter is only an historical one and so we do not think it would be right to construe these words in such a way as to enable the judgment-debtor to hold the purchaser at bay even when there is no hope of his being able to save his property. The disadvantage of this is obvious. In some cases instalments have been granted by these Boards stretching over 20 years to creditors who have settled. It can hardly have been the intention to withhold possession for 20 years and then at the end of it to relate title back to the date of the sale. But of course that would not be a relevant consideration if the Section was clear, nor do we place much weight upon it though it is one of the grounds which influenced Pollock J.

What we think more important is this: The Debt Conciliation Act is a coercive measure intended to affect vested interests and rights and to bring pressure upon creditors to effect a settlement with their debtors, therefore however beneficent it may be from the point of view of debtors, it operates to the detriment of another class of persons, namely, creditors, and consequently, the Act must, in accordance with the usual rules of construction, be construed strictly. Any ambiguity in its clauses must therefore be resolved along lines which interfere as little as possible with existing rights unless the contrary is unmistakably indicated in other parts of the Act. In the present case the contrary is not indicated, and consequently proceedings which cannot affect the debt one way or another cannot be construed as proceedings in respect of that debt even though there may be a certain historical connexion between them. This is the view which Pollock J. and one of us, Niyogi J., have already taken in 19 N L J 296[1] at p. 298, 1938 N L J 60[2] at p. 63 and 1938 N L J 229[3] at page 230 and it is the view which a Division Bench consisting of Pollock and Digby JJ. upheld in A I R 1938 Nag 108.[5] As regards the decision of Grille J. to the contrary in 1938 N L J 150[4] he proceeded upon the assumption that the earlier decision of Pollock J. was in respect of a certificate under S. 15 and that consequently the observations in it relating to S. 21 were obiter and did not bind him. He therefore dissented from those observations and reached the opposite conclusion, but unfortunately has not stated his reasons and that places us at a disadvantage.

So far as his criticism of Pollock J.'s observations is concerned, we are, with the utmost respect, unable to agree that they are obiter. The facts are given at pp. 296 and 297 of the report. The decree in that case was obtained on 23rd April 1933. On 19th July 1933, the execution proceedings commenced and the property attached was sold on 13th March 1934. After this, but before the confirmation of the sale, namely on 4th January 1935, the judgment-debtor obtained a certificate from the Debt Conciliation Board. This was produced in the executing Court on 19th January 1935 and the question arose whether the confirmation proceedings could be stayed. In our opinion S. 15 can have no possible application to a case of this kind, for not only had the suit been instituted before the grant of the certificate and a decree obtained, but the sale had actually taken place; and that is what Pollock J. held:

> Sub-section (3) of S. 15 which deals with the stay of execution of decrees does not apply because there has been no suing after the registration of an agreement nor was the debt in question incurred subsequent to such agreement.

He then proceeded to consider the effect of S. 21 and held that it could not apply either because, at that stage, the proceedings no longer related to the execution of the decree. We say nothing about this ratio decidendi here, because, as we have said, there is a wide divergence of opinion on this point and we prefer not to enter upon it in these proceedings. But the ultimate conclusion has our respectful concurrence, and with all due deference to Grille J. we are unable to regard the remarks as obiter.

It is true no mention is made in the judgment about the issue of a certificate under R. 11 and it may be accepted that no such certificate was ever issued, but R. 11 merely empowers a Board to issue a certificate in respect of proceedings "which should be suspended under S. 21." The object of the certificate is merely to bring to the notice of the Court officially that there are proceedings pending before the Board which must be stayed under S. 21. But if it turns out that S. 21 has no application, then clearly no question of stay under that Section can arise. The crux of the matter therefore turns upon the meaning of S. 21 and that is what Pollock J. considered.

Turning now to the actual decision in 1938 N L J 150[4] with the utmost respect, we dissent from it. In the first place, the sale there had not only taken place but had actually been confirmed on the date on which the certificate under S. 21 was produced in Court. It is true the certificate was issued before the date of confirmation, (though after the sale), but a Division Bench of this Court has held in A I R 1938 Nag 109[5] that the stay under S. 21 operates from the date on which the certificate is produced in Court and not from the date on which it is granted. This decision was not brought to the notice of Grille J. (we are not sure that it had been reported at that date), and it is possible that he would not have reached the same conclusion if he had been aware of it. In any case if the certificate under R. 11 is only a stay order, as Grille J. describes it, then it is a moot point whether it can operate till it has been communicated to the Court concerned. The High Courts in India have differed on this point and we feel that the question merits fuller consideration than it received especially as a Division Bench of this Court has decided that so far as S. 21 is concerned, the stay does not operate until the certificate is produced in the Civil Court. But we need not enter into this either. It is enough for us to state that, in our opinion, the proceedings for confirmation of the sale are not proceedings "in respect of the debt" within the meaning of S. 21. The problem which was before the Division Bench does not arise here because the application to the Board in this case was not made until after the sale had taken place, and of course the certificate under R. 11 was not obtained till after that date either. It is pertinent in this behalf to refer to two more Division Bench decisions. In I L R (1938) Nag 489[8] the following words in S. 16 were considered:

> 16. No Civil Court shall entertain—
> (a) any suit in respect of—
> (i) any matter pending before a Board and the learned Judges stated:

> We must confess to some difficulty in understanding what is meant by a suit in respect of any matter pending before a Board or a suit in respect of the validity of any procedure or the legality of any agreement made under this Act referred to in sub-cls. (i) and (ii) of cl. (a). The matter pending before a Board would appear to be an amicable settlement between the debtor and his creditors, and the only suit in respect of such a matter that we can think of would be a suit restraining the Board from making such settlement. Again, the only suit in respect of the validity of any procedure or the legality of any agreement made under this Act would appear to be a suit for a declaration that some procedure has been invalid or some agreement illegal.

8. Shivdin v. Ramratan, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 259 =170 I C 905=I L R (1938) Nag 489.

In 1939 N L J 173[9] at p. 182 another Division Bench stated:

We feel the same difficulty as the Judges felt in I L R (1938) Nag 489[8] in understanding what is meant by 'any matter pending before a Board.'

The position here is similar. The confirmation proceedings are in respect of a sale which has been held and which can no longer be challenged. We find it difficult to see how they can be said to be proceedings "in respect of any debt, etc." within the meaning of S. 21. On this ground therefore we agree with the decisions in 19 N L J 296[1] at p. 298, 1938 N L J 60[2] at p. 63, 1938 N L J 229[3] at p. 230 and A I R 1938 Nag 109[5] and respectfully dissent from the decision in 1938 N L J 150.[4] Our answer to the question referred is that neither S. 15 nor S. 21 affects the power of the Civil Court under O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. C., to confirm a sale held in execution proceedings when such sale has taken place before an application under S. 4, Debt Conciliation Act, has been made to the Debt Conciliation Board.

D.S./R.K. Answer in the negative

9. Balkrishna v. Pandit Baijnath, (1939) 26 A I R Nag 150=182 I C 662=I L R (1939) Nag 185 =1939 N L J 173.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 287

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Gangaprasad Nandasao Bani and another — Appellants.

v.

Itwarsingh Manoharsingh Maowar and others — Judgment-debtors — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 138 of 1935, Decided on 16th March 1939, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/. 8th November 1935.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 203—S. 203 has nothing to do with rights and liabilities of proprietors as between themselves.

Section 203 regulates the rights of the proprietor of the mahal vis-a-vis the persons specified in S. 203 and has nothing to do with the rights and liabilities of the proprietors, when there are more than one, as between themselves. [P 288 C 1, 2]

(b) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 203 (2)—Cosharer parting with agricultural land and retaining only proprietary share in village cannot be said to forfeit his right to house site in abadi.

It is wrong to say that a cosharer who parts with all his agricultural land and retains only a proprietary share in the village would forfeit his right to a house site in the abadi however long he may have been there and however palatial a residence he may have set up on it. [P 288 C 2]

(c) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 188 (2)—Lambardar is not landlord vis-a-vis his coproprietors.

In so far as the lambardar is deemed to be the landlord he is so vis-a-vis tenant only in so far as they hold land of him. This does not make the lambardar the landlord vis-a-vis his coproprietors, except in so far as one or more of them may happen to be a tenant of the whole proprietary body and hold land of them. [P 289 C 1]

(d) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920), Sec. 2 — Definition of land does not apply to sites in abadi — Same meaning is assigned to 'land' in C. P. Land Revenue Act.

The term 'land' in C. P Tenancy Act and the C. P. Land Revenue Act does not apply to sites in the abadi because such sites are let out for the purposes of constructing houses for the habitation of human beings and that cannot be regarded as a purpose subservient to agriculture within the meaning of that definition: 16 N L J 277, Rel. on. [P 289 C 1, 2; P 290 C 1]

(e) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 203 (6)—Exproprietor transferring site and building in abadi and keeping acre or two of occupancy land—Palatial residence erected by him in abadi is not preserved for him.

It is not the intention of the legislature to preserve to an ex-proprietor a palatial residence which he may have erected in the abadi in the past when subsequently he may have only an acre or two of occupancy land left to him, after he has himself transferred the site and the building on it and reaped the full benefit of the proceeds. The Court may however if it is just and convenient direct suspension of the operation of the decree for a short period to give him breathing space in which to make other arrangements: A I R 1918 P C 165, Expl. [P 291 C 1, 2]

(f) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 68 (5) — Full effect must be given to entry however much vested rights are affected— It is sufficient notice of entry to all concerned if wide publicity is given to all settlement operations.

Once the entry becomes final, full effect must be given to its implications however much vested rights are affected. Even though true notice of matters is not sent to the transferees it does not matter because giving wide publicity to all settlement operations is sufficient notice to all concerned: A I R 1933 Nag 378, Ref. [P 292 C 2]

(g) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 of 1920), S. 49 (1) — Mortgagor losing right to occupy sir land by foreclosure is entitled to benefit of Sec. 49 (1) even if land was declared sir after mortgage but before suit — Benefit can be claimed in execution.

Where a mortgagor loses his right to occupy his sir land as proprietor by means of foreclosure suit by mortgagee, he is entitled to the protection of Sec. 49 (1) even if the land was declared to be sir after the date of mortgage but before the date of the foreclosure suit : A I R 1933 Nag 104; A I R 1924 Nag 155 and A I R 1934 Nag 241, Rel. on. [P 293 C 1]

The benefit of S. 49 (1) can be claimed in execution when the decree itself does not confer it, because the right does not arise until the date of the loss, that is to say until the date of the foreclosure decree. All that will pass to the decree-holder will be possession of the proprietary rights in the land subject to the occupancy rights which have accrued in the mortgagor's favour : S. A. No. 517 of 1935, Expl. and Disting. [P 293 C 1, 2]

(h) Mortgage — Mortgage by conditional sale — Mortgagor's title and right of possession is not lost on date of mortgage.

A mortgagor does not lose either his title or his right to possess on the date of the mortgage even if the mortgage is by conditional sale. [P 294 C 2]

M. R. Bobde — for Appellant.

M. B. Kinkhede and A. R. Kulkarni — for Respondent 1.

Judgment. — This is a decree-holder's appeal in objection proceedings in execution. The objector is the judgment-debtor and is the respondent here. The appellant obtained a final decree for foreclosure against the respondent on 26th June 1935. Among the property foreclosed is the whole of the defendant's malguzari share in the village (twelve annas in extent), 24.65 acres of sir land, and a house in the abadi. The last two items form the subject-matter of the objection and of this appeal, the respondent's contention being that he having become the exproprietary occupancy tenant of the sir by reason of the foreclosure decree cannot be evicted; and in respect of the house, that he now being entitled to a house site in the abadi under S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act, cannot be turned out of that either.

We will take up the question of the house first. At the date of the mortgage, the respondent was a cosharer in the village; in fact he was the lambardar, but that makes no difference in the view we take. He was therefore owner of the house and of the site, and in the absence of a contract with the rest of his cosharers restricting his rights of alienation had as much right to dispose of both the house and the site as he had to dispose of the share itself, without consulting his cosharers. The restrictions on transfer contained in S. 203 do not apply to him. That Section regulates the rights of the proprietor of the mahal vis-a-vis the persons specified in S. 203 and has nothing to do with the rights and liabilities of the proprietors, when there are more than one as between themselves.

Sub-section 1, S. 203 states that every person holding land in a mahal for agricultural purposes is entitled to a house site in the abadi free of rent. Now that is curious language to use of a proprietor, for one does not usually speak of a proprietor holding his own land free of rent, but even if it be conceded that this sub-section is wide enough to cover such a person, the other clauses leave us in no doubt, and of course the Section, which is a special Section dealing with special customary rights, now made uniform and crystallized in a statute, must be read as a whole.

Sub-section (2) states that such person on ceasing to hold such land, etc., shall forfeit his right. That would mean, if the respondent's contention is sound, that a cosharer who parts with all his agricultural land and retains only a proprietary share in the village would forfeit his right to a house site in the abadi however long he may have been there and however palatial a residence he may have set up on it. Many malguzars who own no agricultural land have acquired, especially of recent years, a sort of country residence to which they like to repair at intervals. If this contention is sound, they would forfeit their rights to these sites, and also most of the money they have sunk in their buildings, for granting their right to take away the materials, though even that is doubtful once their right to occupy has ceased, the labour of erection and demolition would be a dead loss, as also the depreciation of the materials. We do not think that the Legislature intended that such a result should ensue.

We turn next to sub-s. 4 which we think is the crucial one so far as this point is concerned. It states that the proprietor of the mahal shall be entitled to allot sites in the abadi. Now who exactly is the proprietor? In the absence of any special definition, it would of course mean the owner of the mahal if there was only one, or the whole body of owners if more than one. But there are special definitions in the Act and so we have to see whether and how far they modify that fundamental conception. The Act has a number of definitions which deal, in one way or another, with the word "proprietor." But the only one relevant to the present purpose is the one given in S. 2 (6):

Lambardar means the proprietor of a mahal appointed to discharge the duties imposed upon a lambardar by this Act.

That is to say, when there are a number of proprietors, one of them is selected by the requisite authority to discharge certain specified duties on behalf of the entire proprietary body. What those duties are, are to be found in S. 188 (1). They include several things grouped under three heads but do not include the letting out of sites in the abadi. S. 188 deals with two things. The first sub-section deals with the duties of lambardars and the second with their powers. Since the letting out of house sites in the abadi has not been placed among the duties of lambardars, and since this clear cut distinction has been made between duties and powers, it is clear that the lambardar has no statutory authority to deal with house sites in the abadi so far as S. 188 (1) and the definition just given are concerned. We must look elsewhere for that. We turn next to sub-s. (2). Cl. (a) states that the lambardar "shall be deemed to be the landlord within the meaning of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898." When we turn to the definition of landlord given there, (it happens to be the same in the Act of 1920), we find him defined as follows:

Landlord means the person of whom a tenant holds land and to whom a tenant is, or but for a contract, would be liable to pay rent.

Therefore in so far as the lambardar is deemed to be the landlord, he is so vis-a-vis tenants only and only in so far as they hold land of him. This does not make the lambardar the landlord vis-a-vis his co-proprietors, except in so far as one or more of them may happen to be a tenant of the whole proprietary body and hold "land" of them. Now the words "tenant" and "land" have not been used in their ordinary sense in the C. P. Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts but have been given special meanings by a number of definitions and clauses which are peculiar to these Acts, one of them being that a tenant is a person who holds land of the landlord. Now what does the word "land" as used here mean? Does it include house sites in the abadi? We do not think it does. The word has not been defined in the Land Revenue Act but it is defined as follows in the present Tenancy Act, (the definition was the same in the old Act):

Land which is let or occupied for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient thereto and includes the sites of buildings appurtenant to such land.

The Revenue Courts held in 16 N L J 277[1] that this does not apply to sites in the abadi because such sites are let out for the purposes of constructing houses for the habitation of human beings and that that cannot be regarded as a purpose subservient to agriculture within the meaning of that definition. We think this is right though we have no doubt that had it not been for the special meanings assigned to these words in the Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts of this Province, that would probably not have been so. Agriculture was not defined in the old Tenancy Act but is now defined in the present Act as including

(a) the raising of annual or periodical crops and garden produce ; (b) horticulture ; (c) the planting and upkeep of orchards ; and (d) the reserving of land for fodder, grazing or thatching grass.

The only difference this has made to the law as then interpreted by the Courts in Nagpur is in respect of horticulture. Certain rulings of the Judicial Commissioner's Court had doubted whether agriculture included these purposes. The new Act makes it clear that it does. It is clear therefore that the building of a house in the abadi is not agriculture. Is it then a purpose subservient to agriculture? Now, we have no doubt that the building of a house may, in certain circumstances, amount to that and in fact the definition itself says so, but the question is whether the building of a house site in the abadi amounts to a purpose subservient to agriculture. None of these definitions helps us to solve that problem. We have therefore to look elsewhere. The Tenancy Act defines a tenant as a person who holds land of another person and is, or but for a contract would be, liable to pay rent for such land to such other person . . . . etc.

If house sites in the abadi are "land" within the meaning of these Acts, then the moment a proprietor lets a person into possession under a special contract he would at once make him an occupancy tenant and would thereafter be unable to get rid of him or even to enforce the terms of his contract against him whatever they might be. But S. 203 (6), Land Revenue Act, negatives this by enacting that "nothing in this Section shall affect the terms of any contract and the holder of a site in the abadi." And it is to be observed that the Section carefully avoids the use of the term "land" when referring to sites in the abadi. Whenever it uses the word "land," as it does in sub-ss. (1) and (2), it uses the term to mean land in the mahal which is outside the abadi. This matter will be found discussed in Barway's Tenancy Act, Edn. 2, pp. 31 and 32. Therefore, we think that the term "land" as used in these Acts does not include house sites in the abadi.

1. Ghanshiam Singh Gupta, (1933) 16 N L J 277.

Once that is accepted, then it becomes clear that the lambardar is not the "landlord" of the persons who hold these sites, within the meaning of S. 188 (2) (a), Land Revenue Act. It is to be observed that S. 203 does not speak of the landlord but of the proprietor, and we think advisedly for this reason. Tenants are not the only persons entitled to house sites in the abadi free of rent : there are also agricultural artisans and labourers and the village watchmen. These persons do not necessarily hold their sites free of rent because of a contract, but originally, because of custom, and now because of the statute. Therefore they do not fall within the definition of " tenant " given in the Tenancy Act and consequently the proprietor is not their 'landlord' within the special meaning given to this term in the two Acts. That leaves us then with S. 188 (2) (b). This says that the lambardar shall " exercise the powers of the proprietors in matters relating to the village abadi . . . ." The lambardar therefore derives his authority to act in the abadi from this part of the Section, but he acts there on behalf of the proprietary body as its agent, and not because of some peculiar status which places him above his cosharers and gives him the right to dispose of their own personal possessions. He is not acting there as " the landlord. " He is deemed to be that only vis-a-vis " tenants" in respect of "land" held of him, and for no other purpose.

Now it is impossible to say that an agent can farm out his principal's land to his principal, or to any one of them when there are more than one, unless he is specially invested with such powers by statute. But we have seen that so far as the abadi is concerned, the lambardar is not "the landlord" but only an agent empowered by statute to do certain acts on behalf of his principals, but not over their heads.

The moment that is accepted then it becomes clear that S. 203 is not dealing with the rights and limitations of the proprietors as between themselves, but with the rights of the persons specified in sub-s. (1) (which on this hypothesis is limited to persons who have obtained house sites from " the proprietor" and cannot include the proprietor himself) vis-a-vis the proprietors, and that being so, the restrictions in the Section on transfer do not apply to the proprietors. Historically also this is so. It must be remembered that S. 203 merely reproduces with modifications what originally were the village customs recorded in the wajibularz. Of course the new Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts have radically altered the old conceptions of certain terms, but for all that S. 203 substantially crystallizes in a statute and unifies a series of village customs originally recorded in the wajibularz. Now the history of the wajibularz is this. In the sixties proprietary rights were conferred upon malguzars but they were not the fee simple rights known to English lawyers; in fact the term is sometimes quite unknown to them. The following paragraph from our decision in F. A. No. 177 of 1933,[2] where this matter has been discussed at length, will explain the position :

> It is to be observed that the term proprietary right is not used by English lawyers and Baden Powell suggests in his Land Tenures of British India, Vol. 1, page 217 that it was used because Government rarely acknowledged anything like a complete unfettered right vested in any one person. But however that may be, this much is certain, that the 'proprietor' does not possess 'the entire bundle of interests which in the aggregate make up a complete or absolute estate but only some of them, the remainder being enjoyed by other persons such as 'tenants' 'inferior proprietors,' 'tenure holders' and the like'; also there is the obligation to pay land revenue to Government and the reservation by Government of its rights in mines and quarries and in large tracts of uncultivated forest. The tenure is therefore not the fee simple of English law.

These rights which were carved out of the fee simple were entered in the wajibularz or village administration paper which thus embodied not only the village customs but also the conditions on which the malguzars were to hold their villages in " proprietary rights." It regulated the rights as between the malguzars taken as a body on the one hand, and as between Government and the tenants and other inhabitants of the village on the other. Originally, all interested had to sign this document, but in some places the lambardar alone signed on behalf of the whole proprietary body. See Baden Powell's Short Account of the Land Revenue and its Administration in British India, 2nd Edn., p. 194, Note 1. This cumbrous method of requiring countless signatures (see S. 80 of the old Land Revenue

2. Thakur Laxmansingh v. Durgapershad, First Appeal No. 177 of 1933.

Act) was abolished by the present Act, and in its place was substituted the present system which presumes the correctness of these entries, the aggrieved parties being given rights of appeal in the Revenue Courts and also an opportunity of contest in the Civil Courts. But the point is this: lambardars frequently signed the wajibularz on behalf of the whole proprietary body. They could hardly have done this if the wajibularz was intended to regulate the rights and liabilities of the malguzars inter se. If that had been the case, the signatures of all would have been necessary. Therefore, whether the question is viewed in its historical perspective or as a pure matter of construction, the conclusion is, we think, the same. Now once it is established that the respondent, as one of the proprietors, owned his house and the site on which it stood, and that he had every right to transfer it, it is clear that having done so he cannot resist the implications of his act unless the Legislature or some special law protects him. S. 49, Tenancy Act, does not help him because it does not relate to abadi sites, nor does S. 203, Land Revenue Act, because it does not preserve to a proprietor entitled to transfer the fruits of the property transferred by reason of the transfer.

It was argued that it is the policy of the Legislature to give every agriculturist, whether a proprietor or not, a place to live in so as to enable him to carry on his agricultural operations and that until another suitable site is found for him he cannot be turned out of the one he already occupies. We can only gather the intention of the Legislature from the language it employs and when we find in S. 203 (6) that the holder of a site in the abadi can effect a transfer with the proprietor's permission by the simple expedient of entering into a contract with him, the argument loses much of its force. Moreover, when, as here, the respondent himself would be the one to give such permission, he can clearly not be heard to say that he did not consent to his own transfer. We can hardly think that the intention of the Legislature was to preserve to an ex-proprietor a palatial residence which he may have erected in the abadi in the past when now he may have only an acre or two of occupancy land left to him, after he has himself transferred the site and the building on it and reaped the full benefit of the proceeds.

We do not see how he can be in a better position than a tenant who transfers his site with the consent of the lambardar, a thing which the Act permits. He may be, and indeed is, entitled to a fresh site and it may be just and convenient in most cases to direct suspension of the operation of the decree for a short period to give him breathing space in which to make other arrangements, but we can find no justification for holding that that permits him to break a contract which the law has permitted him to make. If the intention was to give him special protection in this behalf it would have been given in express terms. In the absence of any such limitation full effect must, we feel, be given to the transfer. We have dealt with this at length because of a decision in 14 N L R 165[3] at p. 174 which is often cited as authoritative in these matters. That case went up to their Lordships of the Privy Council but only in respect of the ex-proprietary occupancy land and not in respect of the houses in the abadi. Therefore though the judgment of this Court was upheld by their Lordships, this question was not before the Board and the decision on this point remains a decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

We do not think it is of assistance here because the present Land Revenue Act was not then in force. The decision was given in the year 1910 in respect of a contract of February 1905 and rested upon provisions contained in the wajib-ul-arz, the provisions of which have not been placed before us. But even if they were generally similar to those of S. 203 the matter would not be carried much further because of the special technical significance of the terms "proprietor," "lambardar" and "landlord" and "land" in the present Acts. The old conception of these terms has been radically altered by the present Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts. One illustration will suffice. The definition of "lambardar" given in the Land Revenue Act of 1881 is that he is the person appointed to represent the proprietary body "in its relations with the Government." Beyond that no statutory recognition was afforded him and he was merely looked upon as a sort of customary agent of the proprietary body: see 11 N L R 164[4] at page 168.

3. Narayan Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram, (1918) 5 A I R P C 84=48 I C 141=45 I A 179=46 Cal 76=14 N L R 165 (P C).

4. Dina v. Bishambar Singh, (1915) 2 A I R Nag 125=31 I C 464=11 N L R 164.

One result of this was that his powers, except in his dealings with Government, could be withdrawn and the proprietors could, when they so chose, appoint another man, not the lambardar, and not even a proprietor, to represent them in all matters unconnected with Government: see 10 N L R 93.[5] Also, that when there were more lambardars than one, the consent of all had to be obtained to invest their action with validity unless the proprietors made some express or implied arrangement to the contrary: 12 N L R 24.[6] Now, he has to discharge the duties of the proprietors in some matters, is deemed to be "the landlord" in others, and is a statutory agent who cannot be removed except by the revenue authorities and whose powers cannot be abrogated in still others. Therefore, a ruling based upon conceptions so fundamentally different to the ones now prevalent cannot assist us in construing the meaning of expressions vested with the special technical significance given to them for the first time by the Act of 1917: 14 N L R 165[3] was distinguished by one of us along these lines in M. A. No. 204 of 1936[7] and by a Division Bench which upheld it in I L R (1939) Nag 59.[8] We think therefore that it can be accepted that the view taken in 14 N L R 165,[3] as regards house sites in the abadi, is now obsolete because of the change in the law effected by the Legislature.

The appeal consequently succeeds so far as the house and the house site are concerned. Possession of this will be given to the appellant. But since the respondent is entitled to a house site of reasonable dimensions consonant with his present status as an ex-proprietary occupancy tenant of 24·65 acres of land, we direct suspension of the operation of this decree for a period of three months to enable him to make other arrangements for himself. We make it clear however that this will not entitle him to remove any portion of the materials of the house. They became the property of the appellant along with the site and the building on the date of the foreclosure. We also make it plain that we are exercising here a purely discretionary power which cannot be claimed as of right: and in suitable cases it may be right to place the judgment-debtor upon terms such as payment of rent, or compensation for use and occupation, in the interval. We do not do so here because no terms have been suggested and we do not know what the rent is likely to be except that it cannot be much and so not worth while enquiring about further.

We turn now to the question of the land. The difficulty here is that it was not sir at the date of the mortgage. It was converted into sir after the mortgage but before the institution of the suit. A second difficulty is that this matter was not brought to the notice of the Court which passed the decree with the result that the decree was passed on the assumption that the land was khudkast and the respondent has been directed to deliver possession of it to the appellant. The first point taken on behalf of the appellant on this part of the case is that any rights conferred upon the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage must be subject to the mortgage and that the mortgagee cannot be prejudiced by subsequent events to which he was not a party. This is no doubt the normal rule but here a statute has intervened and so the rights of both sides are subject to its provisions. S. 68, C. P. Land Revenue Act, empowers the Settlement Officer (and S. 106 (c) the Deputy Commissioner when a settlement is not in progress) to record land as sir and, subject to S. 68 (5), makes the entry conclusive. Therefore once the entry becomes final, full effect must be given to its implications however much vested rights are affected. S. 68 (5) affords a locus penitentiae within which any person aggrieved can institute a civil suit for the cancellation of the entry, but if that is not done, no other remedy is available. It is true, notice of these matters is not sent to mortgagees but on the other hand wide publicity is given to all settlement operations and if the Legislature deems this sufficient notice to all concerned, it is not for the Courts to hold otherwise: see in this respect 30 N L R 109[9] at p. 110.

This question has been debated in the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 29 N L R 142,[10] A I R 1924 Nag 155[11] and 17 N L J

5. Haijnath v. Raghunath, (1914) 1 A I R Nag 84 =26 I C 608=10 N L R 93.
6. Ganpatsao v. Pandurang, (1915) 2 AIR Nag 41 =33 I C 758=12 N L R 24.
7. Ramadhin v. Seth Sheodutt Rai, Reported in (1938) 25 A I R Nag 544=180 I C 690.
8. Dukhuram v. Khanderao, (1939) 26 AIR Nag 83=181 I C 577=I L R (1939) Nag 59.
9. Bholu v. Chhajjulalsa, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 378=147 I C 561=30 N L R 109.
10. Rajeshwar v. Mt. Rukhma, (1933) 20 A I R Nag 104=142 I C 603=29 N L R 142.
11. Bhimraja v. Mukundilal, (1924) 11 A I R Nag 155=76 I C 637.

100,[12] and in each case the fact that the land was declared sir between the date of the mortgage and that of the suit was held not to matter, and so the protection afforded by Sec. 49, C. P. Tenancy Act, was given to the exproprietor. That Section, in our opinion, admits of no doubt. It is in these terms :

> Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary . . . a proprietor who . . . . loses . . . . his right to occupy any portion of his sir land as a proprietor shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land.

The mortgage cannot, we think, be placed higher than an express contract to the contrary, and there can be no doubt that the right to occupy as a proprietor is lost at the date of foreclosure. Consequently, following these decisions, we hold that the respondent is entitled to the benefits conferred upon him by S. 49 (1). We observe however that this position is not, in our opinion, satisfactory even from the point of view of the agricultural community. It permits a mortgagor here and there to gain and, as a consequence, a mortgagee to lose. But this sort of unfair result can be and is reflected in a general raising of interest rates. The very high rates of interest required by money-lenders in India are, bearing in mind the usual law of supply and demand, necessary. We speak of course of reasonable rates such as 10 per cent. Such a rate is more than double what is charged in England (4-4½ per cent.) The reason doubtless is that the risk is higher. It is higher because of the law to a large extent. The emergence of a minor, the peculiarities of the joint family system, the statutory intrusion of provisions such as we have been examining are all factors which make it necessary, if the money-lender is to make his business pay, to charge higher rates than would otherwise be necessary. We consider that this particular risk could and should be eliminated by giving notice to persons whose rights are affected before land is converted from khudkast to sir.

The next question is this : can these benefits be claimed in execution when the decree itself does not confer them? This was resolved in favour of the judgment-debtor in 17 N L J 100,[12] and we think rightly. The right does not arise until the date of the loss, that is to say, until the date of the foreclosure decree. Consequently, we cannot see how a person can be compelled to claim it (however much it may be desirable in his own interests to do so) in advance before it has accrued. It accrues automatically in the passing of the final decree and as a result of that decree. Consequently the earliest stage at which it ought logically to be put forward is as an objection in execution. In all these matters the rule of "might and ought" obtains. It is not only that which might have been claimed which has to be considered but that which ought to have been claimed and as we say we find it impossible to say that a right which has not accrued ought to be claimed until it actually comes into existence. That also answers the next objection, namely, that as the decree directs delivery of possession, the executing Court has no option but to obey. Under S. 74, and O. 21, Rr. 97 and 98, Civil P. C., the judgment-debtor is entitled to resist execution for any just and sufficient cause; and we cannot see what juster cause there can be than that a statute ordains that on the passing of the decree the rights which the judgment debtor claims are to spring into existence. The decree in such a case must be read subject to the statute. Therefore all that will pass to the decree-holder will be possession of the proprietary rights in the land subject to the occupancy rights which have now accrued in the respondent's favour. The appeal as regards this is dismissed.

After we had heard arguments, and after the above portion of the judgment had been partially written in draft, but before judgment was delivered, the learned counsel for the decree-holder appellant drew our attention to a decision of Pollock J. in S. A. No. 517 of 1935[13] and said that it might throw a new light on this difficult question. In these circumstances we thought it right to rehear counsel on this one point. Having done so we are of opinion that the decision of Pollock J. has no application to the facts of this case. The facts there, in so far as they are relevant here, can be stated as follows: A, the owner of a patti in a malguzari village which had sir and khudkast lands appertaining to it, agreed to sell the patti together with the lands comprised in it, to B excluding however the "cultivating rights in the sir." We will call these khudkast fields X and Y and the sir land Z. This agreement was made on 1st August 1928. After this, and in defeasance of the above 12. Vishwanath v. Jagannath, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 241=151 I C 1062=17 N L J 100.

13. Sk. Juman v. Durgaprasad, Second Appeal No. 517 of 1935.

agreement, A sold the same property to C on 6th December 1928. C took with notice of the prior agreement in favour of B. B thereupon sued A and C for specific performance and obtained a decree on 21st June 1930. Some time before this, namely on 15th March 1929, though whether before or after B's suit is not clear, (we will assume in the appellant's favour that it was before the suit), khudkasht field X was declared sir by the Settlement Officer. After the decree B was given formal possession of the property "excluding the cultivating rights in the sir" and according to the judgment of the lower Court in that case B was not placed in khas possession of X which by then had been declared sir. But in spite of that B took actual cultivating possession. C therefore sued B for the recovery of possession. Pollock J. decided (1) that in circumstances like these B's title takes effect from the date of his prior agreement (in that case 1st August 1928) and that therefore (2) A, the vendor, had no title left in him which he could transfer to C after that date; consequently, (3) C took without title and was a trustee for B and so could not withhold possession from him. With that we entirely agree. Not only is it clear from Illus. (g) to S. 3, Specific Relief Act, and from S. 91, Trusts Act, both of which have been referred to by the learned Judge, but it also follows from S. 27 (a), Specific Relief Act, read with the illustrations to it, particularly the second. Pollock and Mulla, in their learned commentary on the Specific Relief Act, Edn. 6, page 815 explain that :

> The rule is a consequence of the equitable doctrine which regards a purchaser as acquiring as soon as the contract is complete, the rights of an owner against the vendor and all persons not being purchasers for value without notice of the contract, and not claiming under an independent title adverse to the vendors.

This is also the decision of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in 49 Cal 495[14] and 40 Bom 498,[15] both of which have been cited by Pollock J. It is clear then that on this view B is deemed in the eye of the law to have obtained title as against C from the date of the agreement and that consequently C's title was entirely displaced as against B. If his title was displaced from the date of the prior agreement, then so also was his right to possess, and consequently, when the land was declared sir C had neither title nor a right to possession as against B. In the eye of the law he never had either right as against B, or if he did, then both must be deemed to have been lost from the date of the agreement. That being so C could clearly not claim the benefit of S. 49, Tenancy Act, and resist B's right to possess the land. That Section can only operate on sir land, and can only enure for the benefit of the person who was the proprietor of the land at the date when the loss occurred, and on this hypothesis C was never a proprietor so far as B was concerned, and in any event must be deemed to have lost his right to possess before the land became sir. It is to be observed that A does not come into the picture at all in Pollock J.'s case except incidentally, and we say nothing here about his rights in a case of that kind; all we decide here is that the decision of Pollock J. has no application to the facts of this case because a mortgagor does not lose either his title or his right to possess on the date of the mortgage. It is also to be noted that Pollock J. took the same view as we are taking in a mortgage case, namely 17 N L J 100[12] to which we have already referred.

It was argued that a mortgagor does lose his title, as also his right to possess, from the date of the mortgage when, as here, the mortgage is by conditional sale, and reference was made to S. 58 (c), T. P. Act. But the opening words of that clause furnish the answer: "when the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property." The stress is on the 'ostensibly.' It means clearly that when on the face of the deed he purports to sell but in reality has no intention of doing so, and the conditions are such that the law infers a transaction of mortgage from the words of ostensible sale. It is too late in the day to suggest that the full proprietary title passes on the date of the mortgage in such cases, and still less to urge that the right to possess is also lost unless the mortgage is possessory. We are of opinion therefore that S. 49 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act, applies, and that the judgment-debtor respondent became the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant by reason of the foreclosure decree, and that he is therefore entitled to resist the decree-holder's claim to khas possession of the land now in dispute. As regards costs, the trouble has arisen because of the respondent's omission to inform the trial Court about the fact that subsequent to the mortgage the lands in question here were converted into sir.

14. Jahar Lall v. Bhupendra Nath, (1922) 9 A I R Cal 412=67 I C 108=49 Cal 495=34 C L J 79.
15. Gangaram v. Laxman Ganoba, (1916) 3 A I R Bom 95=37 I C 360=40 Bom 498=18 Bom L R 455.

Therefore we direct that the appellant will obtain his full costs here and in the Courts below. The lower Court's decree will be modified accordingly.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 295

NIYOGI AND POLLOCK JJ.

Baliram Singh and others — Accused Appellants

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 66 of 1939, Decided on 23rd May 1939, from order of Sess. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 7th March 1939.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 164 (3) and 533 — Certificate recorded only partly complying with S. 164 (3) — Evidence that statement was voluntarily made is admissible under S. 533.

Where after the confession had been recorded the Magistrate certified that the examination of the accused was taken in his presence and hearing but the certificate only partly complies with sub-s. (3) of S. 164, S. 533 renders it admissible to give evidence that the statement was duly recorded, i. e. that the statement was voluntarily made and represents what was said : A I R 1937 Nag 220, Disting. [P 298 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 10 and 30 — Object of conspiracy carried out — Subsequent confession made by accused after arrest is not admissible under S. 10 though it may be taken into consideration against co-accused under Section 30.

Where the object of the conspiracy had been carried out and the conspiracy had come to an end, a subsequent confession made to the Magistrate by the accused after arrest cannot be said to have reference to the common intention of the conspirators. The confession may however be taken into consideration against co-accused under S. 30. It does not stand on the same level as substantive evidence but it may be used to supplement the substantive evidence : A I R 1920 Cal 300 ; A I R 1932 Bom 56 and A I R 1933 Oudh 86, Rel. on. [P 299 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial — Confession — Retracted confession cannot be used to contradict co-accused's confession.

Retracted confession though can be used to contradict the accused making it, it being not substantive evidence cannot be used to contradict co-accused's confession. [P 230 C 1]

T. J. Kedar, R. G. Rau, R. D. Saranjame, J. Sen and M. Adhikari — for Appellants.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellants Baliram Singh, Rajaram Bapu, Waman Singh, Hiralal Brahmin, Motilal, Mungilal and Chhote Khan have been convicted of conspiring to murder Narayan Singh. Hiralal Brahmin, Motilal, Mungilal and Chhote Khan have also been convicted of actually murdering him, and Baliram Singh, Rajaram Bapu and Waman Singh have been convicted of abetting that murder. Hiralal Brahmin and Motilal, who were alleged to have done the actual killing, were sentenced to death, and the other five accused were sentenced to transportation for life. Parashram Singh and Hiralal Kalar, who were tried jointly with these accused on charges of conspiring to murder and abetting the murder, were acquitted. Tulsia, who is alleged to have been a member of the conspiracy and to have taken part in the murder, was granted a pardon and turned approver. An unusual feature of the case is that the assessors were unanimously of opinion that all the appellants except Waman Singh were guilty of the offences with which they were charged. In the Sessions Court wholesale allegations of misconduct were made against the police, but these have been more or less abandoned.

On the morning of 1st August 1938 Narayan Singh was found lying seriously injured in the field of Lutturam (P. W. 5) just outside Chandur Bazar. Lutturam at once made a report at the Station-house and Narayan Singh was taken in a lorry to the Chandur Bazar hospital where he died shortly afterwards without regaining consciousness. Narayan Singh had three incised wounds on the left side on his head, varying in length from $5\frac{1}{2}''$ to $4\frac{3}{4}''$ bone deep, and the skull was very extensively fractured. A portion of the left ear had also been severed and there was an incised wound on the middle finger of the right hand. With such serious injuries it is surprising that he survived so long as he did. Suspicion fell on Hiralal Brahmin from the start because Narayan Singh's widow Mirabai (P. W. 42) at once stated that her husband had been called away in the night by Hiralal Brahmin. The Sub-Inspector Gazanfar Husain (P. W. 4), who was away at the time, returned to Chandur Bazar at 4 P. M. on 1st August and sealed Hiralal Brahmin's house that evening as there was no time then to search it; it was searched on the following day and a safa (Art. M) and satur (Art. N) were seized. The murder was obviously committed with some heavy cutting weapon and the satur is a heavy knife which, according to the Civil Surgeon, might easily have caused the wounds found on Narayan Singh. Blood stains were found on the safa, though it has not been shown that the stains were of human blood, and the satur gave the benzidine test for blood. On the same day Hiralal Brahmin told the Sub-Inspector that he would show the place where Narayan Singh had been murdered. There is some discrepancy whether Hiralal Brahmin stated that he would show the place where he murdered Narayan Singh or the place where Narayan Singh was murdered. As it is not clear which he said, it must be taken that he stated that he would show the place where Narayan Singh was murdered. He pointed out the spot marked A in the map, just outside Chandur Bazar, where the earth appeared to be blood stained and three rags stained with blood and fæces were found on the ground. This spot was just off the main road which leads from Chandur Bazar to Morsi. From the point B, 280 feet east of A, blood stains were found along the road up to the bridge which is 2207 feet east of B. Narayan Singh's body was found in a field 149 feet north of the road at C, which is 380 feet from the bridge. Mirabai's statement that it was Hiralal Brahmin who took Narayan Singh away with him on the night of 31st July-1st August was corroborated by Mt. Bedi (P. W. 45) and to some extent by Shaikh Kadar (P. W. 18) who stated that he saw two men going towards the Morsi Road that night and later three others following them. Both these witnesses came forward on 2nd August to inform the police of what they had seen and we agree with the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors that there is no reason why this evidence should be rejected. The witnesses differ to some extent as to the time when Hiralal Brahmin called Narayan Singh but such differences are to be expected and we do not think that they weaken the evidence in any way. The earth and the rags found at the spot indicated by Hiralal Brahmin gave the benzidine test for blood, and this together with the blood-stains found on the safa (Art. M) and the discovery of the satur which was found hidden in the roof, leave no doubt that Hiralal Brahmin was one of the murderers.

Though the record is extremely bulky and the arguments in the case have been extremely lengthy, the evidence of any real significance lies within a very small compass. As against the other accused, the most important evidence is that of Suleman (P. W. 7). He has stated that on 24th July Motilal came to his house at Rajna and told him that Baliram Singh wanted to see him. Baliram Singh is a resident of Shirasgaon Band which lies about two miles west of Chandur Bazar on the road to Ellichpur. Of the other accused Rajaram Bapu, Parasharam Singh, and Motilal and the approver Tulsia are residents of Shirasgaon Band, and Waman Singh, Chhote Khan, Mungilal and the two Hiralals are residents of Chandur Bazar. The deceased Narayan Singh was living in Chandur Bazar at the time of his death but had resided for a time in Shirasgaon Band. While Suleman reached Baliram Singh's house, Baliram Singh, according to Suleman, offered him Rs. 500 if he would kill a man and said that he would give one or two men to help him, pointing to the accused Motilal. Suleman however said that, though he was quite willing to beat anybody, he was not willing to kill anyone and asked who the man was. Baliram Singh said that he was a Kalar of Chandur Bazar. Suleman who had previously sworn that he would not reveal anything told to him, was then asked not to mention it to Baliram Singh's brother Raghubanshi, a pleader of Ellichpur who had defended Suleman on one or two occasions. Rajaram Bapu then came in and asked Baliram Singh whether it was all right and Baliram Singh replied that the man was frightened. After Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu had gone into the house, Suleman asked Motilal who was the man to be killed and Motilal said that it was Narayan Singh. After that Suleman left.

The murder was committed a week later. According to Suleman, he left Rajna on the Wednesday following the above talk and preceding the murder and went to Indla where his brother lives and stayed there for 13 or 14 days. He then returned to Rajna and four or five days later heard of the murder of Narayan Singh at Chandur Bazar. Two days later on the following Sunday he went to the Chandur Bazar weekly market where he saw constable Inayatali, who, like himself, is a Rohilla. He told the constable that he knew something about the murder and wanted to see the Station-house officer, but he and the C.I.D. Inspector had gone to Ellichpur. Suleman stayed in Chandur Bazar till their return and made a statement to them, apparently on 26th or 28th August.

Suleman's evidence was corroborated by Inayatali (P. W. 67), Ramrao (P. W. 9) and Baburao (P. W. 10). Ramarao, who lives at Dhanora which is between Rajna and Shirasgaon Band, said that he saw Suleman and Motilal as they were passing through his village on the morning of Sunday (that would be 24th July) and Suleman told him that he was going to see Baliram Singh Babarao (P. W. 10), who also lives in Rajna, merely stated that he saw the accused Motilal at his village on that Sunday morning going towards the Musalmanpura. Now Suleman is not a respectable person, but respectable persons are not asked to take part in murders: nor is Ramrao a particularly reliable witness for he admittedly gave false evidence on behalf of Suleman in a case under Sec. 145, Criminal P. C. There seems however no reason to suppose that these witnesses would come forward to give false evidence against the accused on a charge of murder. Suleman was cross-examined at very great length and the learned Sessions Judge was impressed by his demeanour and considered that he was worthy of belief. All the assessors apparently took the same view. His evidence appears to us to be true and we agree that it should be accepted.

That shows that on 24th July Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu were trying to find somebody to commit a murder and from the statement of Motilal who was in the conspiracy it appears that the man to be murdered was Narayan Singh. A week later, Narayan Singh was in fact murdered. It has been contended that Baliram Singh had no adequate motive for wishing to murder Narayan Singh and that Rajaram Bapu had no motive at all. Baliram Singh's motive, according to the prosecution, was enmity arising out of the intrigue discovered by Baliram Singh between his married daughter Kamla and Narayan Singh. There is evidence that Narayan Singh boasted of this intrigue, but, apart from that, there is not very much evidence of it, though it is quite likely that all the relations of the parties wished to keep quiet. It is obvious however that there was enmity between Baliram Singh and Narayan Singh, whatever its cause may have been. Narayan Singh was prosecuted in the previous August for the theft of cotton on the complaint of Baliram Singh and acquitted; shortly afterwards he was convicted of stealing money in a cinema theatre. His defence on each occasion was that the case had been concocted by Baliram Singh on account of enmity. Baliram Singh may well therefore have been apprehensive that Narayan Singh would seek to take revenge on him when he came out of jail after serving his sentence of nine months and may have come to the conclusion that it was desirable to do away with Narayan Singh. Rajaram Bapu had no personal motive but is a close friend of Baliram Singh.

Rajaram Bapu has led evidence to show that he was not in Shirasgaon Band on Sunday the 24th July. He admittedly had to give evidence in a criminal case at Ellichpur on the 25th and attended the Court for that purpose. The evidence given by him is that he left Shirasgaon Band on the afternoon of 24th July, spent the night at Amraoti, and proceeded to Ellichpur on the following day. There is a pacca road between Chandur Bazar and Amraoti and between Amraoti and Ellichpur; this distance is about 60 miles. There is also a direct road but not a pacca road between Chandur Bazar and Ellichpur, a distance of about 20 miles. As there are motors plying on the pacca road the most convenient way is via Amraoti. The registers showing the passengers carried in the motor buses that left Chandur Bazar for Amraoti on 24th July are not conclusive and the passenger's name shown as Rajaramji who left in the eighth car that day would not necessarily be Rajaram Bapu who is ordinarily described as such and not as Rajaramji Uttamrao (1 D. W. 4), who also gave evidence in the case at Ellichpur on 25th July, said that he left Chandur Bazar by lorry at 10 A. M. and reached Ellichpur at 1 P. M. and then met Rajaram Bapu in the tahsili. Deorao (3 D. W. 3), who officiated for a short time as Assistant Superintendent of Land Records at Amraoti, said that Rajaram Bapu spent a night with him in Amraoti in July or August and went on to attend a case at Ellichpur the next day, but Rajaram Bapu attended two or three hearings in this case, so that evidence is not conclusive. The evidence of Shankarrao (3 D. W. 4) who is related to Rajaram Bapu, appears to us to be of very doubtful value. Had Rajaram Bapu really left Chandur Bazar on 24th July, we think that he could probably have given better evidence than this, and we do not think that this evidence is sufficient to rebut the evidence given by Suleman.

Apart from the evidence considered above, there is the confession made by the accused Motilal. Motilal was produced before Mr. Lawale, Additional District Magistrate, at 3.20 P. M. on 5th September. When the Magistrate asked him whether he wished to make a confession Motilal said that he did not know anything about the case and did not wish to make a statement. He was accordingly taken away. At 3.35 P. M. Motilal was brought back and he said that he wished to make a confession. The Magistrate explained to him that it was his choice to make a confession or not and Motilal said that he wished to make a confession voluntarily. He was accordingly given time to reflect. On the following day at 3.45 P. M., Motilal was produced and the Magistrate put the prescribed questions to him. In addition to this the Magistrate asked the following question: "You are not making this statement under police threat or fear of beating or other inducement" and Motilal replied: "No Sir, I make it voluntarily." The Magistrate then recorded the opinion that "the answers to the questions put to the accused show that the confession is not involuntary and that it will not be irrelevant." After the confession had been recorded the Magistrate certified that the examination of the accused was taken in his presence and hearing, that the record contained a full and true account of the statement, and that it was read over to the accused and admitted by him to be correct. This is only part of the certificate prescribed by sub-s. (3) of S. 164, Criminal P. C. That Section requires the Magistrate first to satisfy himself from questions put to the accused that the accused is making the confession voluntarily, and finally to certify, after he has recorded the confession, that the confession was, in his opinion, made voluntarily. After the confession has been recorded the Magistrate is in a better position to say whether the confession was voluntary or not, for the manner in which it was made affords some indication whether it was made voluntarily. This is the second case within a day or two that we have had before us in which Magistrates have failed to follow the proper procedure in recording confessional statements, and as a result very lengthy arguments have been addressed to us in each case on the question whether the confession was admissible in evidence or not.

In I L R (1937) Nag 268,[1] where the certificate required by S. 164 was not given and the signature of the accused was not taken, it was held that the confession was inadmissible and reliance was placed on the decision of the Privy Council in 17 Lah 629.[2] S. 533, Criminal P. C., provides that if any of the provisions of S. 164 or S. 364 have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement the Court shall take evidence that the statement was duly made and such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. In I L R (1937) Nag 268[1] it was stated that the practice of allowing defects in the formalities in recording confessions to be cured by S. 533 had received a check by the recent ruling of the Privy Council in 17 Lah 629[2] where the practice had been emphatically condemned. In 17 Lah 629[2] the Magistrate made rough notes of what he was told and then dictated a memorandum from those rough notes which he afterwards destroyed. It was not contended that he had purported to act under S. 164 of the Code, but it was argued that evidence could be given of a confession made to a Magistrate just as much as of a confession made to any other person. Their Lordships stated:

> In this case no question of the operation or scope of Sec. 533 arises and their Lordships desire to express no opinion on that matter. It is here conceded that the Magistrate neither acted nor purported to act under S. 164 or S. 364 and nothing was tendered in evidence as recorded or purporting to be recorded under either of those Sections.

Their Lordships went on to hold that where a power is given to do a certain thing in a certain way the thing must be done in that way or not at all and that therefore it was not open to give evidence of the confession made to a Magistrate. In the present case however, the position is very different, and we think it impossible to construe S. 533 of the Code so as to render it inadmissible to give evidence that the statement was duly recorded, i. e. that the statement was voluntarily made and represents what was said. In I L R (1937) Nag 268[1] there was apparently no certificate at all, the signature of the accused was not taken, and the confession was described as less of a confession than an inquisition. In the present case the Magistrate has given evidence to show that the confession was made voluntarily and that appears to us to be correct. It would have been better if he had asked the accused why he had changed his mind about making a confession, but that point was covered by the additional question put by the Magistrate whether the confession was being made on account of threats or inducements offered by the police. We are therefore of opinion that the confession made by Motilal was made voluntarily and is therefore admissible. It has been contended by the learned Advocate-General that the confession is admissible as evidence under S. 10, Evidence Act. We do not think that what was said by Motilal was said in reference to the common intention of the conspirators. The object of the conspiracy had been carried out and the conspiracy had come to an end, and the confession appears to us to have no reference to the common intention of the conspirators. In support of this view, we may cite the decisions in 46 Cal 700,[3] 55 Bom 839[4] and 8 Luck 286.[5] The confession may however be taken into consideration against a co-accused under S. 30, Evidence Act. It does not stand on the same level as substantive evidence but it may be used to supplement the substantive evidence.

1. Neharu v. Emperor, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 220 =168 I C 962=38 Cr L J 642=I L R (1937) Nag 268.

2. Nazir Ahmad v. Emperor, (1936) 23 A I R P C 253=1936 Cr C 752=163 I C 881=37 Cr L J 897=63 I A 372=17 Lah 629 (P C).

The gist of Motilal's confession is as follows: About 2½ years before Baliram Singh had discovered an intrigue between his daughter Kamla and Narayan Singh. After that Narayan Singh was unsuccessfully prosecuted for a theft of Baliram Singh's cotton and later was successfully prosecuted on a charge of pick-pocketing at Ellichpur in a cinema theatre and sentenced to 9 months' imprisonment. About 2 or 2½ months before his release, Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu called Motilal and Tulsia Dhobi and said that Narayan Singh ought to be killed, as otherwise he would do something or other unpleasant. After Narayan Singh's return to Chandur Bazar Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu called Motilal and asked whether any arrangement had been made for killing Narayan Singh and who was going to be the accomplice. Motilal said that Tulsia and he would do it and that there was no need of any other accomplice. Five or seven days later Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu called Motilal and said that Dr. Waman Singh had told them that he had three accomplices and that Tulsia and Motilal were two more. Baliram Singh added, "one accomplice of ours is Suleman of Rajna. Go and call him." On Sunday Motilal went to Rajna and called Suleman. When they reached Shirasgaon Band Suleman went on ahead and later Motilal found him sitting in Baliram Singh's house having a meal. Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu, after making Suleman swear that he would not disclose what was going to be said, asked him whether he was willing to murder a Kalal and Suleman refused. After that Suleman went away. On the following Sunday, Nagpanchmi day, the 31st July, Baliram Singh and Rajaram Bapu, called Motilal and Tulsia and told Motilal to come to the house of Dr. Waman Singh between 12 and 2 that afternoon. There Motilal found Baliram Singh, Tulsia, Rajaram Bapu, and Waman Singh. Later Hiralal Brahmin and Mungilal arrived. It was then settled that they should murder Narayan Singh and that Baliram Singh should pay Rs. 300 for the murder. Baliram Singh accordingly paid Rs. 25 each to Hiralal Brahmin, Mungilal, Tulsia and Rs. 7-8-0 to Motilal; Rs. 25 was to be given to Chhote Khan also but as he was not present it was given to Hiralal Brahmin. That night Tulsia came to Motilal's house at 12 o'clock and they both went to Baliram Singh's house. Tulsia had brought an axe from his house and then the two went to Dr. Waman Singh's house where they found Dr. Waman Singh, Narayan Singh, Hiralal Brahmin, and Mungilal playing cards. The play was stopped and Hiralal Brahmin, Mungilal and Narayan Singh left. Hiralal Brahmin later returned there and told them that Narayan Singh had been told that they were going that night to discover buried treasure. At 3 or 4 in the night Hiralal Brahmin came to Dr. Waman Singh's house and called them. Narayan Singh was there and he and Hiralal Brahmin went ahead, followed by Chhote Khan, Tulsia, Mungilal and Motilal. At a place beside the road they started to dig for buried treasure and while Narayan Singh was bending down Hiralal Brahmin struck him on the head with the satur. Motilal struck him a second blow and Hiralal struck him a third blow with the satur. They then lifted him up and threw him on the left side of the road and returned to Dr. Waman Singh's house and afterwards to Baliram Singh's house. Baliram Singh took charge of the axe, kurta, and the satur.

3. Sital Singh v. Emperor, (1920) 7 A I R Cal 300 =54 I C 53=21 Cr L J 5=46 Cal 700=30 C L J 255.

4. Emperor v. G. V. Vaishampayan, (1932) 19 A I R Bom 56=1932 Cr C 40=134 I C 1238=33 Cr L J 76=55 Bom 839=33 Bom L R 1159.

5. Kunwar Sen v. Emperor, (1933) 20 A I R Oudh 86=1933 Cr C 168=141 I C 192=34 Cr L J 124=8 Luck 286=9 O W N 1136.

Tulsia also made a confession and was made an approver, but when he came to give evidence in Court he went back on his confession altogether and said he knew nothing about the case. That confession was used to contradict him, for he was treated as a hostile witness, but it is not substantive evidence and cannot be used to contradict Motilal's confession. The two confessions differ very considerably on important points, and there is some reason to believe that Tulsia's confession was probably untrue on several points. Motilal's confession corroborates the evidence given by the prosecution which has been summed up above except as regards the satur found at Hiralal Brahmin's house. It was the statement made by Suleman to the police that led to the questioning of Motilal, who a week later made his confession. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that it is in outline a substantially true account of what happened and sufficiently connects the murder of Narayan Singh with the conspiracy of the 24th July described by Suleman.

Baliram Singh has led evidence to show that he was not in Shirasgaon Band on the night of 31st July. The evidence is that he went to Ellichpur to see his nephew who had returned to Ellichpur after an operation in Nagpur, reached there at 7 P. M. and spent the night there. A letter written by his brother Kanhaiya Singh Raghubanshi (1 D. W. 16), a pleader of Ellichpur, from Nagpur on 30th July has been produced (Ex. D. 6), showing that the operation on his son had been performed, that they were returning to Ellichpur by mail on the following day, and that there was absolutely no reason for him to come. Baliram Singh says that he left for Ellichpur in a bullock cart driven by Vithal Singh (1 D. W. 15). They are said to have left Chandur Bazar at 3.30 or 4. P. M. and reached Ellichpur at 7.30 P. M. It seems to us somewhat unlikely that Baliram Singh would have gone to Ellichpur after receiving this letter and most unlikely that he would have gone by the direct road when he could have gone there more conveniently by motor via Amraoti. Like the Sessions Judge we are not at all impressed by this evidence and we consider that the story is an afterthought. There was no suggestion in the committing Magistrate's Court that Baliram Singh was absent from Shirasgaon Band on the night of the 31st July.

As against Baliram Singh, Rajaram Bapu, Hiralal Brahmin, and Motilal we consider that the charges have been proved. Motilal's confession was subsequently withdrawn, but we think that it may safely be accepted and that Motilal should be convicted on this confession, corroborated as it is by the evidence of Suleman. As against the other accused there is hardly any evidence at all. Blood-stains were found on two garments seized from Chhote Khan; he was away from the village for a few days after the murder contrary to his usual practice; and there is evidence that he associates with some of the other accused. There was also a message sent by Hiralal to Waman Singh asking him to pay Chhotekhan's mother and to try to persuade Chhote Khan not to implicate Hiralal; but it is doubtful whether this message behind his back can be taken into consideration against Chhote Khan. This evidence may raise a suspicion that Chhote Khan had something to do with the murder but it makes out no sort of a case against him; the confession made by Motilal is not substantive evidence but can only be taken into consideration where some sort of a case has already been made out. Against Waman Singh the case is even weaker. If the learned Sessions Judge had attempted to analyze the evidence against each accused he would have realized that there was no case against Waman Singh, Chhote Khan and Mungilal, just as there was no case against Parashram Singh and Hiralal Kalal.

The convictions of Baliram Singh, Rajaram Bapu, Hiralal Brahmin and Motilal are therefore upheld. There are no extenuating circumstances and the death sentences passed on Hiralal Brahmin and Motilal must therefore be maintained. We do not understand why the learned Sessions Judge thought that Baliram Singh who organized the murder should be treated more leniently than the men whom he hired to carry it out, but as there has been no application for enhancement of the sentence passed on Baliram Singh, we do not propose to enhance it now. The appeals of Waman Singh, Mungilal, and Chhote Khan are allowed and we direct that they be set at liberty. The appeals of Baliram Singh, Rajaram Bapu, Hiralal Brahmin, and Motilal are dismissed.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 301

GRUER J.

Jakiuddin Badruddin and others — Plaintiffs — Applicants.

v.

Vithoba Jagannath Gadali and another — Defendants — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 359 of 1938, Decided on 11th July 1939.

(a) Partnership — Contract of partnership may be implied.

The contract of partnership may be implied and need not be expressed. [P 301 C 2]

(b) Partnership — Guardian can enter into contract of partnership on behalf of minor.

Though the minors are themselves incapable of contracting there is nothing to prevent their guardian from contracting on their behalf. [P 301 C 2]

(c) Partnership Act (1932), S. 69—Suit disposed of before registration—Proceedings cannot be validated and decree cannot be passed by Appellate Court even if registration takes place during appeal.

If registration has been done during the pendency of the suit it may be legally proceeded from that date unless there is a bar of limitation. But where a suit has been disposed of before registration was carried out, the proceedings cannot be validated and the Appellate Court cannot look into the merits and pass a decree even if registration is effected during appeal: Case law ref. [P 302 C 1]

D. N. Chowdhury — for Applicants.

J. Sen — for Opposite Party.

Order. —It is unfortunate that this case was tried out on the merits before a finding on the issue about its maintainability was given. It would have been better had that issue been tried first. The findings on the merits are in favour of the plaintiffs-applicants, but the suit has been dismissed because the plaintiff's firm has not been registered under S. 69, Partnership Act. Plaintiffs are the sons of Badruddin, who died some years ago, and since then they are admittedly carrying on their father's business. Plaintiff 1 is now major and the others are minors represented through their mother as next friend. It is now submitted that S. 69 of the Act was inapplicable. The plaintiffs, it is said, got the business of their father by inheritance and should have been treated as co-owners and not as partners: partnership implies a contract and there was no such contract; in any case a certificate of registration has now been obtained and presented to this Court, which is asked to hold that the case is now validated, and to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs rely on 49 Cal 560[1] in which a minor was absolved from liability in a new business. That family was a Hindu one, so special considerations applied as will be seen from S. 5, Partnership Act, which says that the members of a Hindu undivided family carrying on a family business as such are not partners in such business. Here the parties are Mahomedans. They themselves in their reply, dated 5th March 1937, stated that they had become partners of the family business by reason of their being heirs to Badruddin and not by any contract among them. They did not say they were co-owners merely. The contract of partnership may be implied and need not be expressed.

It is to be noted that even during the lifetime of the father the firm was styled "Badruddin Mulla Shamsuddin and Sons." By not having the firm registered the plaintiffs are precluded under S. 68, Partnership Act, from denying that a firm exists. Under S. 58 they had to give details about the partners. A copy of their application is not forthcoming, but it cannot be doubted that all the present plaintiffs were registered as partners. They were in the same position when they carried on the business at their father's death. The minors are themselves incapable of contracting but there is nothing to prevent their guardian from contracting on their behalf. In this case a contract is implied. The institution of the suit was therefore invalid. Is it now validated because registration has since been effected ? Learned counsel relies on A I R 1937 Mad 767[2] in which a suit previously filed was allowed to go on after registration. The Judge in that case was careful to remark that the subsequent act of registration does not validate the plaint from the date of its being filed. In 41 CWN 534[3] a suit was dismissed although registration had previously taken place while the suit was pending. It was held that it should not have been dismissed but ought to have been deemed to have been instituted on the date when the firm was registered. In ILR (1937) Nag 430[4] it is pointed out that a second suit will lie if the previous suit was dismissed under S. 69 (2), provided that there was no determination of the subject-matter of the suit. That case is not helpful to the contention now put forward that a decree can be passed in

1. Sanyasi Charan v. Krishnadhan Banerji, (1922) 9 A I R P C 237=67 I C 124=49 I A 108=49 Cal 560 (P C).

2. Varadarajulu v. Rajamanika, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 767=176 I C 916=(1937) 2 M L J 273.

3. Radha Charan v. Matilal, (1937) 41 CWN 534.

4. Sonalal Hansraj v. Sadashiv, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 146=169 I C 818=ILR (1937) Nag 430.

plaintiff's favour in the present suit. About the possibility of bringing in fresh suit, I make no pronouncement. In A I R 1938 Mad 185[5] it was held that S. 69 must be strictly construed and a suit instituted contrary to its provisions is bad and cannot be subsequently validated by compliance with those provisions. To the same effect is the judgment in AIR 1939 Pat 239[6] and A I R 1938 Lah 767.[7]

The effect of all these authorities then is that as the present suit was disposed of before registration was carried out, these proceedings cannot be validated and this Court cannot look into the merits and pass a decree as requested by the applicants. If registration had been done during the pendency of the suit it might no doubt have legally proceeded from that date unless there was a bar of limitation. The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

5. Ibrahim Sahib & Brother v. Gurulinga Aiyer, (1938) 25 AIR Mad 185=175 I C 811=(1937) 2 M L J 717.
6. Firm Laduram v. Jamuna Prasad, (1939) 26 A I R Pat 239=182 I C 796=18 Pat 114=20 P L T 33.
7. Chhagan Lal v. Firm Mangal Sain Raj Narain, (1938) 25 AIR Lah 767=179 IC 363=40 PLR 667.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 302

STONE C. J. AND VIVIAN BOSE J.

Zalliram Battoolal—Appellant.

v.

Mangalsingh Nandlal Singh — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 387 of 1936, Decided on 12th April 1939, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Damoh, D/- 29-2-1936.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 of 1917), S. 157 (3)—Sadar lambardar paying land revenue due in respect of mortgagor's land has only priority over mortgagee to extent of land revenue — Sale by him does not free land from incumbrance.

Where the sadar lambardar has paid land revenue due in respect of mortgagor's land he has priority over the mortgagee standing in Government's shoes to the extent of the land revenue, due in respect of the mortgagor's land paid by him. He can accordingly sell the land giving to the purchaser a like priority unless the mortgagee redeems this charge by payment. But the sale is not free from incumbrance: Case law reviewed. [P 305 C 1]

R. S. Dabir and R. G. Pande — for Appellant.

M. Adhikari — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal raises an interesting point of law under the Land Revenue Act. The appellant is the mortgagee of a part of the village Nimarmonda which is divided up into a number of pattis. The sadar lambardar of the village was called upon to pay land revenue in respect of the village including the patti belonging to the mortgagor. At all material times the mortgagor had ceased to be interested in the land because he had been sued by his mortgagee and a preliminary and later a final decree had been passed against him. In that state of affairs the sadar lambardar paid the land revenue due in respect of the mortgagor's patti. Next the sadar lambardar sold the mortgagor's patti under the powers conferred upon him by S. 157, Land Revenue Act. Section 157 provides inter alia as follows :

(1) Any sadar lambardar . . . . . who has paid any land revenue due by any proprietor . . . . may within six months from the date of such payment, apply in writing to the Deputy Commissioner to recover the amount on his behalf . . . . . .

(3) The Deputy Commissioner . . . . . may . . . . proceed to recover, as if it were an arrear of land revenue, such amount, with costs and interest, from the person held by him to be liable for the same.

Thus it will be seen that a sadar lambardar can ask the Deputy Commissioner to proceed to recover the amount that he had paid on behalf of the patti in a particular mode. Where land revenue is unpaid to Government, Government may sell the defaulter's land in order to recover the land revenue due. If it do so sell the land, (there are many other ways indicated in S. 128 of realizing land revenue); the purchaser acquires that land free from incumbrances as a consequence of the provisions of S. 138 (1). Before we come to that Section we observe that under S. 122 the land revenue is made a first charge. The provision is as follows:

122 (1). The land revenue assessed on an estate mahal or land, and any sum payable under a subsettlement shall, notwithstanding any partition, be a first charge on the estate, mahal or land to which it relates, and on the rents or profits thereof.

Returning now to S. 138 it is provided that unless the Deputy Commissioner in ordering the sale otherwise directs the purchaser of any estate, mahal, share or land sold for arrears of land revenue due in respect thereof, shall acquire it free of all incumbrances imposed on it, and all grants and contracts made in respect of it, by any person other than the purchaser.

We now turn to S. 128 which details the various modes in which the arrears payable to Government may be recovered. The ones that have been referred to in the arguments are :

(f) by selling such estate, mahal or land, or the share or land of any co-sharer who has not paid the portion of the land revenue which as between him and the other co-sharers, is payable by him and

(g) by attaching and selling immovable property belonging to the defaulter other than the land in respect of which the arrear has accrued.

It will thus be seen that Government may sell the land for arrears of land revenue and if the arrears of land revenue are due in respect of the land that is sold, that land is sold free from incumbrances unless the Deputy Commissioner otherwise directs. The Act also provides that if the sadar lambardar pays the land revenue due in respect of land belonging to a co-sharer, he may, through the Deputy Commissioner recover the sum that he has paid on behalf of the cosharer as if it were an arrear of land revenue. The question is: Does that relate to a mode or does it also relate to incidents ? In other words: Does S. 157 (3) merely describe the machinery whereby the sadar lambardar can recover the amount of revenue that he has paid on behalf of another or does it also provide that if that machinery is put into operation and the sale of land takes place, the land sold (the land of the mortgagor in this case), that is to say, the land in respect of which the land revenue was paid, is sold free from incumbrances ? The effect of provisions of this kind in other Acts has been considered in a number of cases. In 30 N L R 240[1] the question turned on the wording of S. 225 (d), Land Revenue Act, which provides that any sum ordered by a liquidator appointed under sub-s. (1) of S. 42, Co-operative Socities Act, 1912, to be recovered as a contribution to the assets of a society or as the cost of liquidation . . . . may be recovered under this Act in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue.

It was held that this provision related to the mode in which the amount due could be recovered. The sale was not free from incumbrance. This kind of case is distinguishable from the present one because it may well be said that the expression "in the same manner" is not the same as the words "as if," the former phrase relating more clearly to the mode in which the money may be recovered. It was indicated in 25 Mad 572[2] at p. 575 however that such difference in phrase is not important. In 7 Mad 434[3] the question arose under the Abkari Act and it was held that where land is sold under the provisions of S. 10, Madras Abkari Act, 1864, for arrears due by an abkari renter, the purchaser at the sale does not take the land free from incumbrances as in the case of a sale for arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Revenue Recovery Act. Their Lordships observe at page 435, after having considered the provisions of the Revenue Recovery Act, as follows :

Taking these Sections together, the intention is clear that the purchase is free of prior encumbrances only when the arrear is of public revenue of which the land is the first security by statutory declaration. By Sec. 10, Abkari Act, it is enacted that Collectors may proceed against abkari renters or other persons licensed under that Act for the recovery of arrears due by them in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue. . . The expression 'In like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue' indicates only that the same procedure is to be followed. . . . Arrear of abkari revenue is not due upon any specific land owned by the abkari renter. . . .

It was accordingly held that the land when sold would not be free from incumbrances: 25 Mad 572[2] was a case under the Land Improvement Loans Act, S. 7 (1) (a). As will be seen below there has been made a distinction between cases under S. 7 (1) (a) and S. 7 (1) (c). It is desirable to set out these two clauses. They are as follows :

7. (1) Subject to such rules as may be made under S. 10, all loans granted under this Act, all interest (if any) chargeable thereon and costs (if any) incurred in making the same, shall, when they become due, be recoverable by the Collector in all or any of the following modes, namely :

(a) from the borrower — as if they were arrears of land-revenue due by him;

. . . . . .

(c) out of the land for the benefit of which the loan has been granted — as if they were arrears of land revenue due in respect of that land . . .

It will be seen that there is a broad distinction between (a) and (c) though both give power to recover (as if they were arrears of land revenue). But (a) is "as if they were arrears of land-revenue due by him," and (c) is "as if they were arrears of land-revenue due in respect of that land." In 25 Mad 572[2] it was held that when the land was sold under the provisions of cl. 1 (a) it was sold subject to incumbrances. In 41 Mad 491[4] on the other hand, it was held that when the land was sold under the provisions of S. 7, cl. 1 (c), it was sold free from incumbrances. Ayling J. observes at page 693 :

A comparison of the various clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) shows that the framers of the Land Im-

1. Yedha Society, Nimar v. Pragdas, (1934) 21 A I R Nag 201=148 I C 714 = 30 N L R 240.
2. Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai, (1902) 25 Mad 572.
3. Ramchandra v. Pitchaikanni, (1884) 7 Mad 434.
4. Sankaran Nambudiripad v. Ramaswami Ayyar, (1919) 6 A I R Mad 590=47 I C 301=41 Mad 691=34 M L J 446.

provement Loans Act considered that there was some substantial difference between a sale for arrears of land revenue of the land on which the arrears accrued and a sale for the same purpose of other lands whether belonging to the defaulter or some one else.

41 Mad 691[4] was followed in 26 N L R 340,[5] which was another case under the Land Improvement Loans Act, S. 7 (1) (c). In 26 Mad 230[6] the sale was under the powers conferred by the Income-tax Act 2 of 1886. By S. 30 of that Act the Collector is empowered, in default of payment of the tax, to recover the amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue. In that case the Collector proceeded to recover the amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue. It was held that S. 30, Income-tax Act, had not the effect of converting income-tax into an arrear of land revenue due in respect of the land which may be brought to sale for realization of the income-tax but that its effect was to extend the procedure prescribed by (Madras) Act 2 of 1864 and (India) Act 1 of 1890, to the recovery of arrears of income-tax. In other words, the land was sold subject to incumbrances. In 28 Mad 420[7] the case was one of sale for arrears of abkari revenue. The words were "as if they were arrears of land revenue" and it was held that they had the same meaning as the words "in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue" and accordingly only the mode and not the incidents was applied and the sale was subject to incumbrance. In 5 Rang 458[8] the Madras cases were reviewed. That case arose under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act where the relevant provision uses the words "as if they were arrears of land revenue." It was decided that the question whether the sale had the same consequence as a sale for arrears of land revenue due in respect of the land sold depended on the nature of the tax for which the sale was effected. At page 464 the learned Judge relying on 41 Mad 691[4] observes as follows:

> This ruling shows that the words 'as if they were arrears of land revenue' do not by itself (sic) show that the intention of the Legislature was merely to regulate the procedure to be followed in such cases and that whether it was intended to attract also the provision relating to the substantive right of a purchaser depends upon a consideration of the wording of the Act and the nature of the tax. This is made clear in the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar J. at p. 698 where, after referring to the passage in 7 Mad 734,[3] I have already cited, the learned Judge says that to his mind that passage is the key-note to the construction of similar provisions in other Acts, i. e. that the fact whether the tax is payable out of any particular or specified land must have a material bearing on the construction of the words.

It was held that the sale was free from incumbrances. The same conclusion was arrived at in 7 Rang 113[9] which was also a case under the same Act. It will be seen that in all the above cases one is concerned with sales by Government or some public body to recover taxes or public loans. They are cases of abkari tax (excise revenue), or income-tax, or municipal tax or a public loan. The present case is a case of recovery of a private debt by a private person, the sadar lambardar. Under the scheme of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act the Government looks primarily to the sadar lambardar for the payment of land revenue due in respect of the area for which the sadar lambardar is responsible (usually a village). If the sadar lambardar fails to get in and pay over such revenue, he is liable to have his land sold. But on such a sale the land is sold subject to incumbrances because, as will be seen from the above quotation from S. 138, it is only when land is sold for arrears of land revenue "due in respect thereof" that it is sold free from incumbrances.

The sadar lambardar having been made liable he is given a right over against the cosharer whose revenue is in arrear. To recoup himself, he may sell the cosharer's land, through the appropriate officer, or he may take any of the other steps available as if what was owed to him were land revenue owed to Government. We are of the opinion that, having paid Government, the first charge given by the statute to Government passes to him. We see no reason however to sweep away the mortgagee's rights in order to enable another private person, the sadar lambardar, to recoup himself. We conceive that were this so it would open wide the gates to fraud of a type that could hardly be proved. Sec. 138 contains provisions which in certain circumstances compel mortgagees to pay land revenue at the risk of losing their security if they do not. But the person who pays is the sadar lambardar. We take the case, of frequent occurrence, of due payment by the

5. Secretary of State v. Harinath, (1930) 17 A I R Nag 195=122 I C 376=26 N L R 340.
6. Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar, (1903) 26 Mad 230=12 M L J 368.
7. Ibrahim Khan v. Rangaswami Naicken, (1905) 28 Mad 420.
8. Chettiyar Firm v. Subramaniam, (1927) 14 A I R Rang 389=105 I C 258=5 Rang 458.
9. Abdur Rauf v. Chettiyar Firm, (1929) 16 A I R Rang 175=117 I C 575=7 Rang 113.

sadar lambardar. There is no delay. In such a case the mortgagee cannot possibly know that although the land revenue has been duly paid without any delay there is, in point of fact, a default on the part of his mortgagor because the mortgagor has not put the sadar lambardar in funds as regards the share of land revenue due in respect of the mortgagor's holding. Yet, were we to hold that the sadar lambardar can recoup himself as if he were Government selling the mortgagor's land in respect of an arrear of land revenue due in respect of that land, the mortgagee would find his security gone without any chance being given to him to pay. This is not, in our opinion, the intention of the Act. We are of the opinion that the sadar lambardar has priority over the mortgagee standing in Government's shoes to the extent of the land revenue, due in respect of the mortgagor's land, paid by him. He can accordingly sell the land giving to the purchaser a like priority unless the mortgagee redeems this charge by payment.

This case is a perfect example of the mischief that would arise if it were held that in such circumstances the sale was free from incumbrances. The plaintiff obtained a foreclosure decree on the basis of his mortgage of two annas share of mouza (village) Nimarmonda. When, the preliminary decree having been made final, the decree-holder came to take possession, the defendant took objection in execution on the ground that he (the defendant) had purchased the share when it was sold for arrears of land revenue. That sale was not at the instance of Government, for Government had been paid, but at the instance of the defendant who was sadar lambardar of mouza Nimarmonda. The defendant applied to the Tahsildar to sell the land. The land was put up for sale and bought by the defendant for Rs. 90. The value of the mortgage decree was something over Rs. 700. This was wiped away if the decisions of the lower Courts are sound and wiped away because a private person, the sadar lambardar is given the same powers to recover the money he has paid as if the debt due to him from the revenue defaulter were due to Government as an arrear of land revenue.

In addition to the Rs. 90 the sadar lambardar incurred costs amounting to Rs. 50 in the objection matter. The plaintiff has not paid anything into Court though in the alternative he prayed only for a conditional order for possession the condition being that he paid the defendant Rs. 90. In our opinion the true position is that until the defendant is paid what is due to him, i. e. until his charge has been cleared, he is entitled to resist. This affects the position so far as costs are concerned. The appeal will be allowed. There will be an order for possession conditional upon the plaintiff paying to the defendant Rs. 90 together with Rs. 50 together with the costs of these proceedings. The plaintiff would have been entitled to possession and to the costs of these proceedings had he tendered to the defendant the Rs. 90 but that he did not do at the time of the objection application which was accordingly properly allowed. As the defendant was in the right in resisting he is entitled to receive the Rs. 50 as well as the Rs. 90 before he can be compelled to deliver up possession.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 305

GRILLE J.

Seth Mishrilal Seth Lakhmichand Oswal — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Barik Tursi Kirar and others — Defendants 1 to 4 — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 215 of 1937, Decided on 20th March 1939, from appellate decree of Second Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 12th November 1936.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 63—Property attached declared to be subject to mortgage — Fact that property is subsequently released from attachment does not relieve decree-holder of his duty to bring suit within one year.

The order in objection proceedings that property attached is subject to mortgage of the objector is conclusive as against the decree-holder unless he brings a suit which would terminate in his favour, within the period of one year. The fact that the property is released from attachment afterwards in no way annuls the duty that lies on him if he wishes to bring the property to sale unencumbered. [P 307 C 2; P 308 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 62 and 66 —What is sold as result of order under R. 62 is equity of redemption—Distinction between cases where property is sold subject to mortgage and cases where notice of alleged mortgage is given in sale proclamation.

The phrase "subject to such mortgage" must mean that what is sold is the equity of redemption and a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale, and the price which the property would fetch would vary considerably according whether the property is definitely stated to be sold subject to an ascertained encumbrance or merely subject to the risk of encumbrances existing : 28 All 418 ; A I R 1920 Cal 354 and A I R 1935 Oudh 23, Rel. on. [P 308 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 62 — Property attached in execution of simple money decree—Mortgagee objecting that property is subject to his mortgage—Judgment-debtor supporting his objection—Property sold subject to mortgage — Auction purchaser having knowledge that mortgage was fictitious keeping silence cannot challenge validity of mortgage in mortgagee's suit.

In execution of a simple money decree property was attached. A mortgagee objected to the attachment on the ground that the property was subject to his mortgage. The judgment-debtor supported this objection and the property was sold subject to the mortgage. The auction-purchaser knowing that the mortgage was fictitious kept silence in the hope of purchasing the property cheaper :

Held that the auction-purchaser could not challenge the validity of the mortgage in a suit brought by the mortgagee. No equitable consideration could be brought into play in favour of such purchaser. [P 309 C 1, 2]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.

R. S. Dabir — for Respondent 4.

Judgment. — The plaintiff-appellant Mishrilal brought a suit for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage of which he was the transferee. The transfer was made by the mortgagee Tukaram, son of Tanu in the year 1934, and the mortgage was executed in his favour by Barik and his son Tukaram in 1929. In order to avoid confusion, Tukaram, son of Barik, whose interests were identical with those of his father, will not be referred to again. Defendant 4 was Umrao who was impleaded as an auction-purchaser of part of the mortgaged property at an auction sale in execution proceedings as the result of a simple money decree which had been obtained by one Bhabichand against Barik. In those execution proceedings the property was ordered to be sold subject to Tukaram's mortgage ; the actual sale took place in 1933. Barik and Tukaram did not resist the plaintiff's claim, but the auction-purchaser Umrao contended that the mortgage in question was bogus, fraudulent and without consideration and made with the intention to defeat the claims of Bhabichand, Barik's creditor, and that all these persons had entered into a conspiracy in order to defeat Bhabichand's claim against Barik.

The principal questions at the trial were whether the mortgage and the subsequent assignment of it to the plaintiff were bogus and fraudulent and whether the auction-purchaser had any right at all (the plaintiff denied that he had such a right) to challenge the mortgage inasmuch as he had in execution proceedings purchased the land subject to the mortgage existing and whether the decision that there was a mortgage was conclusive against him. Both the Courts below have agreed that the mortgage and the assignment were fictitious and they also concur, although for somewhat different reasons, in finding that the auction-purchaser was entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit entirely, holding that no suit can be based upon a deed of mortgage which is not genuine and which is fictitious and wholly without consideration. The lower Appellate Court however modified this decision by decreeing the plaintiff's claim as against Barik and Tukaram, holding that the transaction was not void but only voidable and that, since Barik and Tukaram had admitted the mortgage, there was no reason why a decree should not be passed against them. The plaintiff's claim however was rejected so far as that portion of the mortgaged property which had passed to the auction-purchaser Umrao in Bhabichand's execution proceedings, was concerned, and a date for redemption by them was fixed. In this second appeal by the plaintiff no appearance has been entered on behalf of Barik and Tukaram, and the only contesting respondent is Umrao. I would also note that there has been no cross-appeal against the lower Appellate Court's decision by Barik and Tukaram. For the proposition that the auction-purchaser Umrao was entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage in a suit brought by the mortgagee or his representative, the auction-purchaser not being the decree-holder himself, reliance was placed by the trial Court on 1 N L R 150.[1] This view was not accepted by the lower Appellate Court in the following words :

> It is held by the learned Subordinate Judge that respondent 4 is entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage on the ground that he is a stranger and not a decree-holder himself. This view seems incorrect and I believe the case in 1 N L R 150,[1] relied upon by the lower Court does not lay down that proposition.

The learned counsel for the appellant states that he is in agreement with that view and that proposition is not challenged by the learned counsel for the respondent. The trial Court, considering that it was bound to follow what it considered to be the ruling in 1 N L R 150,[1] felt itself unable to follow the contentions which had been advanced on behalf of the plaintiff, supported by 28 All 418[2] and 47 Cal 446,[3] that a purchaser who is not the decree-holder is conclusively bound by an order under O. 21, R. 62, as the result of which the auction-purchaser is bound by an entry in the sale proclamation declaring that the sale is definitely subject to a mortgage, as opposed to an auction-purchaser's right subsequently to challenge an entry in a sale proclamation under O. 21, R. 66, which is merely a statement that an encumbrance may exist the correctness of which has not been determined by the executing Court. The trial Court found some support for its view that the proposition just stated was incorrect in the observations made in 52 All 1032[4] at p. 1035 where 28 All 418[2] was distinguished.

1. Mt. Dhoka v. R. B. Beharilal, (1905) 1 NLR 150.

The lower Appellate Court however accepted the proposition of law that there was a clear distinction between an order passed under R. 62 of O. 21 and a mere notification of an encumbrance in a sale proclamation under R. 66 of O. 21, and that when the Court had held an inquiry and found that a mortgage subsisted and the property was put up to sale subject to a mortgage, the auction-purchaser could not challenge the validity of the mortgage, whether he was a stranger or the decree-holder himself. The lower Appellate Court referred to the ruling in A I R 1935 Oudh 23,[5] where the judgment in 28 All 418[2] was quoted with approval and that in 52 All 1032[4] was distinguished. Nevertheless, although holding that the auction-purchaser would ordinarily be bound by a specific declaration in a sale proclamation that the property was to be sold subject to the mortgage, the Court considered that there were cases in which an auction-purchaser would be entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage subject to which he had purchased the property; and its justification for holding so in the present case was stated to be that there was nothing to show that in the objection proceedings the judgment-debtor Barik was a party, and that he did not become a party by the mere fact that he was a judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court cites as its authority for this view a comment of the author in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code under the heading "Parties to suits under this Rule" in the comments on O. 21, R. 63. Apart from the fact that the learned Judge has not connected the auction-purchaser with the judgment-debtor as having a common interest, the point of the argument which appears to be drawn from the Full Bench decision in 30 Mad 335[6] is that the judgment-debtor who was not a party to the proceedings would not be precluded from instituting a suit on the ground that the order was not binding on him, more than one year after the date of the order, so long as he was within the period of limitation otherwise prescribed. Now, in the case before me, it is quite clear that Barik had at no time any intention of filing any suit, and inasmuch as he admittedly appeared on behalf of the object or Tukaram in the execution proceedings in order to support Tukaram's claim that his property was subject to Tukaram's mortgage, it is difficult to sustain the position that Barik was not a party to the proceedings. Bhabichand attempted to execute his decree and attached the fields. Tukaram intervened as an objector and pleaded his mortgage. The judgment-debtor, who would normally be expected to resist a claim that the property had been mortgaged, as in a sale on a simple money decree he would hope to receive a balance if the property was unencumbered, agreed that his property was encumbered and that the claim was justified.

Thereupon the executing Court came to the conclusion that there was a subsisting mortgage and disposed of the objection in the applicant's favour on 21st March 1931. The decree-holder was not present on that date, and on 27th March, as the decree-holder was absent, the case was struck off and the property was ordered to be released. It may here be pointed out that the other ground on which the lower Appellate Court considered that the auction-purchaser was entitled to question the validity of the mortgage was that as the result of the order of 27th March, the order of six days before was a nullity and that the very foundation of the order which would have become conclusive under R. 63 of O. 21

2. Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh, (1906) 28 All 418=3 A L J 200=1906 A W N 68.
3. Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das, (1920) 7 A I R Cal 854=55 I C 189=47 Cal 446=30 C L J 496=24 C W N 269.
4. Kesho Ram v. Chunni, (1931) 18 A I R All 139 =131 I C 674=52 All 1032=1931 A L J 1.
5. Gallu v. Lekha Singh, (1935) 22 A I R Oudh 23=153 IC 57=10 Luck 343=11 OWN 1475.
6. Krishnasami Naidu v. Sundaram Chettiar (1907) 30 Mad 335=17 M L J 95 (F B).

was gone. In this I am of opinion that the Court is wrong. The order which was passed on 21st March 1931 was conclusive as against the decree-holder unless he brought a suit which would terminate in his favour, within the period of one year. The fact that the property was released from attachment afterwards in no way annulled the duty that lay on him if he wished to bring the property to sale unencumbered; and indeed when he attached the property again more than a year later and Tukaram renewed his objection, the decree-holder at once conceded that he was unable to resist the application inasmuch as he had failed to bring a suit and he consequently agreed that the property should be sold in execution of his decree subject to the mortgage which had been held two years before to be subsisting.

The orders of the Court and the proclamation leave it in no doubt that the Court had found that there was a subsisting mortgage and that the property could only be sold subject to it. The order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 7th January 1933 runs:

As the decree-holder did not file any declaratory suit to get the order, dated 21st March 1931 set aside it is conclusive against the decree-holder and the attached property will be sold subject to the objector's mortgage, dated 18th October 1929. The attached property will therefore be sold subject to the objector's mortgage, dated 18th October 1929 and the Collector will be informed accordingly.

In Collector's proceedings the following order was passed:

Decree-holder in person. Judgment-debtor absent. The attached land be sold subject to objector's mortgage as directed by the Civil Court after proclamation at Multai. Sale on 20th April 1933.

In the sale proclamation against the schedule of property and under the heading "Details of any encumbrances to which the property is liable" the following entry is made: "This property will be sold subject to the mortgage of Tukaram." Now, in this Court the plaintiff-appellant relies on the cases which have already been cited for the proposition that even when the purchaser is the decree-holder, there can be no doubt that he can have no right to challenge: vide 19 N L R 15,[7] that is to say, 47 Cal 446,[3] 28 All 418[2] and A I R 1935 Oudh 23.[5] These decisions the learned counsel for the respondent challenges as incorrect law. The learned counsel for the appellant states that 52 All 1032[4] is distinguishable, and I am of opinion that his contention is correct. There the learned Judges were considering a case of a decree-holder auction-purchaser, and the ratio decidendi on which it was held that he was allowed to challenge the validity of the mortgage was that he had in fact brought a suit within one year of the order of the executing Court allowing the mortgagee's claim, and in that case 28 All 418[2] was queried mainly as the ruling did not consider the case of a decree-holder auction-purchaser who desired to bring a suit contesting the validity of the order in the execution department. I am, with great respect, unable to follow the comment that 28 All 418[2] is incorrect in holding that all that is sold as the result of an order under O. 21, R. 62, is the equity of redemption and that what is actually sold is the property itself subject to the mortgage and not merely the right of redemption. I am in respectful agreement with the Bench of the Oudh Chief Court in holding that the phrase "subject to such mortgage" must mean that what is sold is the equity of redemption and that a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale, and the price which the property would fetch would vary considerably according whether the property is definitely stated to be sold subject to an ascertained encumbrance or merely subject to the risk of encumbrances existing. This judgment on the material points repeats the judgment in 28 All 418[2] almost verbatim. Again the distinction has been noted in 47 Cal 446[3] where it is stated:

If a person purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum or undertakes to discharge it, he cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase. Where however the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage, but does not take it subject to the encumbrance or undertakes to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. The distinction between the two classes of cases depends upon the question, whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the alleged mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale. The former contingency is provided for by O. 21, R. 62, the latter is contemplated by O. 21, Rule 66.

7. Govind v. Dheklu, (1929) 10 A I R Nag 282 = 82 I C 771 = 19 N L R 15.

As will be shown later, Umrao was well aware what he was purchasing, and it must be held that he has no right to challenge the mortgage. On this finding it is not really necessary to advert to the contention that the respondent Umrao has not been able to prove that the mortgage was fictitious and that the burden has been wrongly cast. It appears that both the Courts below have been influenced in their consideration of law by the fact that they have held that the transaction was fictitious from beginning to end and was made for the purpose of defeating the claims of Bhabichand, who, as the result of the order under O. 21, R. 62, which he did not challenge, has been able to satisfy his claim only in part, and that Umrao is an innocent purchaser who was unable to challenge the finding in execution proceedings, as naturally he did not appear on the scene until after the sale had been concluded. But Umrao from his own deposition as a witness is deserving of no such sympathy which would justify the Court in seeking equitable considerations on his behalf. He has stated in the witness-box that he had ascertained beforehand that the transaction embodied in the mortgage was a fraudulent and fictitious one and that he also obtained an assurance from Tukaram that, if he purchased the property, he would not be called on to pay any part of the mortgage money as in fact there was nothing owing to Tukaram. He was aware that the objection had been made by Tukaram and that the objection had been found valid and that the Court had come to the conclusion that there was a mortgage and declared that the sale was to be held subject to the mortgage. He has also admitted that as the result of this order he was able to obtain the property much cheaper than he would have done otherwise, that it was a good stroke of business to keep silence about his knowledge that the mortage was fictitious, and that in fact he had saved a considerable sum of money thereby. Equitable considerations cannot be called into play on behalf of such a person. It may be unfortunate from his point of view, assuming that his statements are true, that the executing Court was persuaded into coming to a definite decision that there was a subsisting mortgage and directing the property to be sold subject to that mortgage. That declaration having once been made is final, and an auction-purchaser can in no circumstances be allowed to challenge that finding because of his knowledge that the finding is incorrect and his hopes of obtaining a surreptitious profit by utilizing that knowledge. He may have a cause of action against Tukaram, but he cannot be entitled to resist Mishrilal's claim based on the mortgage.

The appeal accordingly succeeds. The respondents Barik and Tukaram have apparently failed to redeem the mortgage as directed in the Courts below. A decree will be passed for the full claim with costs against all the respondents with interest at the rate given in the Court below. I fix the date of redemption at three months from the date of the delivery of this judgment, failing which the whole property will be foreclosed.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

 A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 309

POLLOCK AND GRUER JJ.

Tikaram Ratiram Kurmi — Appellant

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 62 of 1939, Decided on 5th April 1939, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Raipur, D/- 3.3.1939.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Blood stains on clothes of accused—Evidentiary value.

Finding of small distintegrated blood stains on the dhoti and saluka of accused is not of much importance but it strengthens the case against him as a whole. [P 311 C 1]

 (b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 30—Confession must be confession of offence for which accused are tried and not of some other offence.

The principle on which the confession of one accused is used against another is that self-implication is supposed to prove some guarantee of the truth of the accusation made against the other. Where the statement is exculpatory so far as possible, there is no such guarantee. The confession must therefore be a confession of the offence for which the accused persons have been tried and not of some other offence. [P 311 C 2]

Where accused have been tried for murder and one of them confessed only to an offence under S. 201, Penal Code his confession cannot be taken into consideration against the other accused : 2 All 444; A I R 1931 Mad 177; A I R 1939 P C 47; A I R 1926 Nag 117 and A I R 1926 Nag 119, Approved; A I R 1926 Bom 513, Dissent. [P 311 C 2]

K. K. Gandhe — for Appellant.

W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Tikaram has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., of the murder of one Khedu and sentenced to death in the Court of the Sessions Judge, Raipur. Khedu was a boy of about 9 or 10 and the nephew of Tikaram. Khedu's father Nathuram and Tikaram are brothers. They made a partition about 10 or 12 years ago but continued to live afterwards in the same house, though in separate portions of it, until Tikaram recently went to live in a separate house of his own. On Saturday, 3rd December 1938, when Nathuram was away in the village, Awadhram induced Khedu to accompany him to the threshing floor of the malguzar Mahasirbai, for whom Tikaram worked as a mukhtyar. In a room in that threshing floor Khedu was undoubtedly murdered. Awadhram, Rambakas, and Tikaram are alleged to have done it, but Rambakas was granted a pardon and turned approver. Awadhram, who was acquitted of the charge of murder but was convicted under S. 201, I. P. C., and sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment, has not appealed. Blood stains were found in the room in the threshing floor, and it is not denied that Khedu was murdered there. The only ornaments that Khedu was wearing at the time — a pair of silver karas — were found intact on the body which was discovered in a well into which it was thrown, so the motive for Khedu's murder was not robbery. The medical evidence shows that death was probably due to throttling, but there were also three lacerated wounds on the head, a fracture of the jaw, and a contusion on the neck.

There is ample evidence to show that Khedu accompanied Awadhram to the threshing floor of Mahasirbai in the afternoon and Awadhram has admitted this both in the committing Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court. The story told by him and the approver Rambakas is that while Khedu was in the threshing floor near the room, Tikaram caught hold of him and murdered him and that Tikaram persuaded them to throw the body into a well that night. In short, both of them throw the entire blame on Tikaram, although they admit that they disposed of the body. Tikaram's defence, as put forward in this Court, is that the murder was committed by Awadhram and Rambakas and that he never went to the threshing floor at all that afternoon. It appears that it was at about 2 P. M. when Khedu and Awadhram went to the threshing floor. Both Awadhram and Rambakas were the field servants of Mahasirbai and as such were working under Tikaram. The question is whether the approver's story has been substantially corroborated as against Tikaram. Daswa (P. W. 4) another field servant of Mahasirbai, stated that when he left the threshing floor in the afternoon Rambakas, Awadhram and Khedu were there and no one else, and that when he went there that night Tikaram called him to put the buffaloes in the kotha and told him that if anybody asked him about it he should say that Khedu had not come to the threshing floor that day. Tikaram had probably heard that Daswa was at the threshing floor when Khedu came in the afternoon, and probably thought that Daswa, as a field servant under him, could be induced to keep silence about it. Jagmohan (P. W. 6) stated that he saw Tikaram standing near the door of the threshing floor compound at about 3 P. M. that day. Lulua (P. W. 7), another field servant of Mahasirbai, said that that night Tikaram told him that Rambakas and Awadhram had murdered Khedu and asked him to throw the body away; Lulua then asked Rambakas why he killed the boy and Rambakas replied that it was Tikaram who killed the boy; Tikaram then told all of them to keep quiet. This witness also corroborate's Daswa's statement that Tikaram told him (Daswa) not to say that he had seen Khedu coming to the threshing floor. Nathuram (P. W. 13), Khedu's father, has said that he had no enemy except Tikaram. Some sort of enmity seems to be the only possible explanation of murder, and neither Awadhram and Rambakas had enmity with Nathuram or Khedu. There is ample evidence to show that ill-feeling had long existed between Nathuram and Tikaram, and comparatively recently there was a quarrel in which Nathuram was said to have caught hold of Tikaram's wife. On this point there is the evidence of Lulua (P. W. 7), Kuar Singh (P. W. 11), and Nathuram (P. W. 13). Khedu was in a way responsible for the starting of that quarrel, and possibly for this reason Tikaram took a dislike to the boy. There is the evidence of Dhansai (P. W. 10) and Dhur Singh (P. W. 21) to show that Khedu was really frightened of meeting Tikaram and that Tikaram had made threats against Nathuram's family.

According to the evidence of Rambakas (P. W. 27), he and Awadhram did not know, when they came to the threshing floor that afternoon, that Tikaram was there and it was only when Tikaram actually dragged Khedu into the room that they realized that he was there. It is probable that Awadhram was deputed by Tikaram to bring the boy, as Awadhram has stated, and that Tikaram was concealing himself in the room, as otherwise Khedu would probably have run away at once on seeing him. This explains why Daswa (P. W. 4) stated that only Awadhram, Rambakas, and Khedu were in the threshing floor when he left. Further corroboration against Tikaram is the fact that he produced the key of the room in which the murder was committed. He has offered no explanation of how he came to be in possession of the key; he has merely denied that he produced it. Small disintegrated blood stains on his dhoti and saluka, one on one garment and two on the other, were also found. These by themselves may not be of much importance, but they strengthen the case against him as a whole. Further, a pen-knife, which has shown to have been in Tikaram's possession, was subsequently found in the well in the threshing floor compound, a weapon that may have caused the incised wounds on Khedu. The approver Rambakas and the accused Awadhram have probably not told the whole story in order to conceal the part that they played, and Rambakas's statement that a log of wood found in the hut was used by Tikaram to press on Khedu is possibly an invention or it may have been that Tikaram tried it and gave it up at once as he found it an unsuitable weapon. However that may be, we think that the story told by Rambakas is substantially true and that it has been substantially corroborated as against Tikaram by the evidence of Daswa, Jagmohan and Lulua. Tikaram alone had a motive for the crime and he no doubt played the leading part in it. We therefore uphold the conviction under S. 302, I. P. C.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge took into consideration under S. 30, Evidence Act, a statement made by Awadhram that he took Khedu to the threshing floor, that Khedu was there murdered by Tikaram, and that then he and Rambakas, by Tikaram's order, took away the dead body and threw it into a well. S. 30, Evidence Act, provides that when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person. Here Awadhram made no confession of murder, but he did confess to an offence under Section 201, I. P. C. In 2 All 444[1] it was held that a confession by one accused should not be taken into consideration against another accused unless the confessing prisoner tars himself and the other accused with one and the same brush. We are of opinion that the confession must be a confession of the offence for which the accused persons have been tried and not of some other offence. Here they have been tried for murder, but Awadhram confessed only to an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. In 50 Bom 683[2] it was held that a statement by one accused which would justify his conviction under S. 201, I. P. C., though not a confession of complete guilt so far as the charge of murder was concerned, was an indirect admission of constructive guilt and therefore could be taken into consideration against a co-accused. That view has been dissented from in 54 Mad 75[3] and is not in accordance with the recent decision of the Privy Council in A I R 1939 P C 47[4] where it was held that an admission of an incriminating fact is not of itself a confession. The view expressed by Straight J. in 2 All 444[1] was adopted in 21 N L R 88[5] and 23 N L R 62,[6] and we consider that this is the correct view, for the principle on which the confession of one accused is used against another is that self-implication is supposed to provide some guarantee of the truth of the accusation made against the other. Where the statement is exculpatory so far as possible, there is no such guarantee. Therefore we are of opinion that the statement made by Awadhram should not be taken into consideration against Tikaram, but we think that the case against Tikaram has been proved beyond all doubt without that statement. For the brutal and deliberate murder of a small boy it is obviously impossible to reduce the sentence. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

1. Empress of India v. Ganraj, (1878-80) 2 All 444.

2. Shivabhai v. Emperor, (1926) 13 A I R Bom 513=97 I C 660 = 27 Cr L J 1140=50 Bom 683=28 Bom L R 1013.

3. In re Periyaswami Moopan, (1931) 18 A I R Mad 177 = 129 I C 645 = 32 Cr L J 448=54 Mad 75=59 M L J 471.

4. Narayana Swami v. Emperor, (1939) 26 A I R P C 47=180 I C 1=18 Pat 234=I L R (1939) Kar 123=66 I A 66 (P C).

5. Sheocharan v. Emperor, (1926) 13 AIR Nag 117 =90 I C 385=26 Cr L J 1537=21 N L R 88.

6. Raghunath v. Emperor, (1926) 13 AIR Nag 119 =89 I C 516=26 Cr L J 1380=23 N L R 62.

A. I. R. 1939 Nagpur 312

GRUER J.

Janba Dayaram Pardeshi — Judgment-debtor — Applicant.

v.

Manno Kashiram Kirad — Decree-holder — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 436 of 1938, Decided on 4th August 1939.

C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (2 of 1933), Ss. 16 (b), 15 — Allegation of fraud by decree-holder — In spite of it, the Debt Conciliation Board issuing certificate — Question of fraud cannot be reagitated in Civil Court.

The intention of the Legislature in Sec. 16 is to preclude the Civil Courts from examining the reasons whether right or wrong, which induce the Debt Conciliation Board to issue a certificate under Sec. 15. It may be that if fraud was practised on the Board without the knowledge of the Board, the Civil Courts could set the matters right; but where the decree-holder did allege to the Board that the other debt was bogus, but in spite of that the Board accepted it as a genuine one, he is not entitled to have the question of fraud re-agitated in the Civil Court: A I R 1937 Nag 259, Rel. on; A I R 1939 Nag 136, Discussed and doubted. [P 312 C 2]

G. R. Pradhan — for Applicant.

N. B. Chandurkar—for Opposite Party.

Order.—The applicant-judgment-debtor obtained from the Debt Conciliation Board a certificate under S. 15, Debt Conciliation Act, but the lower Court has refused to give effect to it and has ordered execution to proceed. Only two creditors were named before the Board, the present decree-holder and one Imratlal. In the Civil Court the non-applicant-decree-holder Manno took the plea that Imratlal's debt was fictitious and so there is no debt for the settlement of which this decree-holder can be postponed under S. 15 (3). After recording evidence the Subordinate Judge found that the debt of Imratlal is fictitious. The point now to be decided in revision is whether the Judge had jurisdiction to go into this question at all.

The applicant relies on S. 16 (b) of the Act which says that no Civil Court shall entertain any application to execute the decree the execution of which is suspended under sub-s. 3 of S. 15. On the other hand, it is argued that Civil Courts have full power to inquire into the facts necessary for the issue of a certificate especially where fraud was alleged. Reference was made to 1939 N L J 142[1] in which it was held that where there was a miscalculation by the Board about the 40 per cent. of the debts due to the creditors the Civil Courts could find that the Board had acted without jurisdiction in issuing a certificate under S. 15 against a creditor who did not agree to conciliation. That involved not a question of initial jurisdiction to effect a settlement to which S. 7-A is applicable but a question of jurisdiction to issue a certificate. Interference may have been justified as the error of the Board was apparent on the face of the record. But with all due respect I find it a little difficult to reconcile that decision with the remarks of their Lordships in the published case in I L R (1938) Nag 489[2] at page 495:

> If the Board had jurisdiction to attempt to effect a settlement, then the Civil Courts would not have jurisdiction to inquire whether that jurisdiction was properly exercised, and the legality or validity of any orders passed in the exercise of the Board's jurisdiction could not be questioned in any Civil Courts on any ground except perhaps fraud.

These remarks have my respectful concurrence as I think that the intention of the Legislature in S. 16 was to preclude the Civil Courts from examining the reasons, whether right or wrong, which induced the Debt Conciliation Board to issue a certificate under S. 15. It may be that if fraud was practised on the Board without the knowledge of the Board, the Civil Courts could set the matters right; but that was not the case here. The decree-holder did allege to the Board that the other debt was bogus, but in spite of that the Board accepted it as a genuine one. Neither side has filed copies of the proceedings to show how the Board arrived at that conclusion, but that is immaterial. The point was decided by them. The decree-holder could have applied promptly for a review of the decision but he did not. I am of opinion that he was not entitled to have the question of fraud re-agitated in the Civil Court. To hold otherwise would open the way to frivolous applications and lead to Courts being called upon to decide about the existence or validity of debts of persons who are not parties to the suits before them. I hold that the Civil Court acted without jurisdiction in making this inquiry. Its order is set aside, and effect must be given to the certificate issued against the non-applicant-decree-holder. Costs of this application on the non-applicant. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

N.K./R.K. Order set aside.

1. Sadasheo Rao v. Roopchand, (1939) 26 A I R Nag 136=1939 N L J 142.

2. Shivdin v. Ramratan, (1937) 24 A I R Nag 259 =170 I C 905=I L R (1938) Nag 489.

END

THE

ALL INDIA REPORTER

1939

OUDH SECTION

WITH PARALLEL REFERENCES TO

(1) I. L. R. 14 LUCKNOW
(2) 1939 OUDH LAW REPORTS
(3) 1939 OUDH WEEKLY NOTES
(4) 1939 REVENUE DECISIONS
(5) 40 CRIMINAL LAW JOURNAL
(6) 179 TO 184 INDIAN CASES

CITATION : A. I. R. 1939 OUDH

PUBLISHED BY

D. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., VAKIL

NAGPUR, C. P.

1939

(All Rights Reserved)

TO

THE LEGAL PROFESSION

IN GRATEFUL RECOGNITION OF

THEIR WARM APPRECIATION AND SUPPORT

PRINTED BY D. G. RANADE

AT THE ALL INDIA REPORTER PRESS

NAGPUR

OUDH CHIEF COURT

1939

Chief Justice :

The Hon'ble Mr. George Hector Thomas, Bar-at-law.

Puisne Judges :

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Zia-ul-Hasan, B.A., LL.B.

" Mr. Archbald Henry De Burgh Hamilton, I.C.S.

" " Robert Langdon Yorke, J.P., I.C.S.

" " Radha Krishna Srivastava, B.A., LL.B.

" " J. R. W. Bennett, I.C.S. (Offg.).

Advocate General :

Dr. Narain Prasad Asthana, M.A., LL.D.

Government Advocates :

Rai Bahadur H. S. Gupta, Bar-at-law.

Mr. Hemanta Kumar Ghose, Bar-at-law (Asst. Govt. Advocate.)

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

DR. SUDISH CHANDRA ROY, M.A., LL.B., PH.D., BAR-AT-LAW, Calcutta.
SIR M. V. JOSHI, Kt., K.C.I.E., Ex-Law Member, C. P. Government, Nagpur.
MR. E. VINAYAKA RAO, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
MR. V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B., Senior Advocate, Federal Court of India, Nagpur.

EDITORIAL STAFF

MR. R. K. MANOHAR, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay (O.S.) and Nagpur.
MR. S. G. GADGIL, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay and Nagpur.
MR. D. D. DATAR, B.Sc., LL.B., Advocate, Nagpur.
MR. R. D. DATAR, High Court Vakil (Bom.), Nagpur.

REPORTERS

Privy Council

DR. A. Majid, M.A., LL.D., BAR-AT-LAW, London.

Federal Court of India

Mr. Rang Behari Lall, B.A., LL.B., Senior Advocate, Federal Court of India, Delhi.

Allahabad

Mr. Shri Rama, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Allahabad.

Bombay

Mr. S. C. Joshi, M.A., LL.B., M.L.C., Advocate (O.S.), Bombay.

Calcutta

Mr. Praphulla Chandra Ghose, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Monindra Nath Mukerji, B. L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Surajit Chandra Lahiri, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. Baidyanath Banerji, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta.
Mr. A. K. Bhattacharjee, BAR-AT-LAW, Calcutta.

Lahore

Mr. Amolak Ram Kapur, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.
Mr. Anant Ram Khosla, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.
Mr. Kedar Nath Chopra, B.Sc., LL.B., Advocate, Lahore.

Madras

Mr. P. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
Mr. N. Srinivasa Iyengar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.
Mr. C. R. Krishna Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras.

Nagpur

Mr. E. M. Joshi, M.A., BAR-AT-LAW, Junior Advocate, Federal Court, Nagpur.
Mr. R. K. Manohar, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Bombay (O.S.) and Nagpur.

Oudh

Mr. Surendra Nath Roy, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, Lucknow.
Mr. G. C. Roy, B.A. (HONS.) LL.B., Vakil, Lucknow.

Patna

Mr. Subal Chandra Muzumdar, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Patna.
Mr. Laxmidhar Mahanty, B.A., B.L., M.L.C., Vakil, Circuit Court, Cuttack.
Mr. Jagat Bandhu Kar, B.A., B.L., Pleader, Circuit Court, Cuttack.

Peshawar

Pandit Raghunath, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, Peshawar.

Rangoon

Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee, BAR-AT-LAW, M.H.R., Rangoon.
Mr. K. C. Sanyal, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Rangoon.

Sind

Mr. Hakumatrai M. Eidnani, B.A., LL.B., Advocate, Karachi.
Mr. P. K. Vaswani, M.A., LL.B., BAR-AT-LAW, Karachi.

NOMINAL INDEX

Abdul Hafiz v. Manohar Lal 233
Ainul Haq Khan v. Mt. Nawaban 281
Ali Raza Khan v. Newazish Ali Khan 229
*Amar Krishna v. Nazir Hasan 257
Ambica Dutt Ram v. Shams Ara Begam 63
*Anandei, Mt. v. Lala Ram 178
*Badri Nath v. Ram Chandra 129
Badri Nath v. Sheophal 143
Baij Nath Singh v. Sri Nath Kuar 125
Baijnath Singh v. Tulshi Ram 184
Baijoo v. Emperor 37
Balraj Kishore v. Maharaj Kishore 104
Bans Gopal v. Emperor 45
Barsati Sheikh v. Sarju Prasad 10
Bhagwan Prasad v. Mt. Abhairaji 108
Bhagwati v. Emperor 254
Bidurramji v. Kesho Ramji 61
Bisheshar Singh v. Jadunath Singh 94
Brahma Din v. Sangam Lal 57
Brij Kishore v. Emperor 156
Brij Manohar v. Ramanand 102
Brij Mohan Singh v. Rameshar Singh 273
Chandra Bhan Singh v. Hubba 48
Chandra Dhar v. Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow 65
Chhab Nath Kuar v. Setraj Kuar 60
Commissioner, Lucknow Division, v. Mt. Bitana 189
Daljit Singh v. Tej Singh 284
Debi Dayal v. Sri Radha Krishna 145
Emperor v. Babu Ram 36
——— v. Behari 16
——— v. Chhedi Singh 160
——— v. Som Nath 54
——— v. Subhan 15
Gajadhar v. Emperor 101
Ganga Bakhsh Singh v. Mt. Pohoop Kuer 83
Haji Ewaz Mohammad v. Nageshwari Prasad 279
Har Govind Prasad v. Mt. Mahraj Kunwar 64
Hari Saran v. Har Kishen 224
Har Kishan Das v. Satgur Prasad 2
Hinga Lal v. Raja Syed Ahmad Ali Khan 241
Jadunath Singh v. Bisheshar Singh 17
Jageshar Prasad v. Lal Narsingh Pratap 278
Jai Dayal v. Jagdeo Narain 116
Jai Dayal v. Jagdeo Narain 128
Jai Narain Misra v. Shiam Lal 40
Jokhan Singh v. Emperor 14
Jumman Khan v. Jagannath 85
Kazim Husain v. Mt. Mubarak Jahan Begam 227
*Kazim Husain Syed v. Seth Pearey Lal 277
Khaliquzzaman v. Miss A. H. Parakh 186
Kundan Lal v. Secretary of State 249
Lallu Ram v. Emperor 35
Lal Ram Partap v. Ganga Prasad 287
Lincoln, C. D. v. R. W. Anderson 86
Mahabir Prasad v. C. B. Gupta 180
Mahomed Ejaz Rasool v. Mata Din 44
Mahomed Nasir v. Dwarka Singh 31
Mahomed Saadat Ali Khan v. Mohammad Amir Ahmad Khan 158
Mahomed Umar v. Mt. Nasira 239
Mahomed Yusuf v. Imtiaz Ahmad Khan (FB) 131
Mahomed Yusuf v. Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan 225
Mahomed Zia Ullah v. Rafiq Mohammad 213
Mathura Prasad v. Uma Datt 106
Matinuzzaman Khan v. H. Hunter 161
Muneshwar Bux v. Emperor 81
Nabi Mohammad Khan v. Mohd. Ahsan 238
Natha v. Thakur 122
*Nazir Hasan Khan v. Ganga Din 245
Nemi Chand v. Santosh Chand 113
Parma Sah v. United Provinces 196
Parmeshur Din v. Hargobind Prasad 90
Pashpat Pratap v. Udai Bhan Pratap 269
Pearey Lal v. Sheo Saran 118
Pratap Narain v. Bhagwati Singh 111
Pudai Sheikh v. Mt. Bilasi 107
Radhey Lal v. Kunj Behari Lal 275
Rafi Uddin Ahmad v. Rani Kaniz Abid 1
Raghubar v. Emperor 91
Raghubir Singh v. Thakurain Sukhraj Kuar 96
Raghunath Singh v. Subedar Singh 155
Raja Mohan Manucha v. Manzur Ahmad 42
Ram Bharosey v. Mt. Sheo Dei 68
Ram Charan v. Nanhey 120
Ram Damodar v. Emperor 33
Ram Din v. Balbhaddar Singh 210
Ram Harakh v. Radhika Dutt 99
Ram Lakhan v. Suraj Prasad 232
Ram Prasad v. Ram Bharose 193
Ram Ratan Lal v. Mt. Akhtari Begum 230
Ram Roop v. Emperor 38
Ramsagar Prasad v. Mt. Shayama 75
Ram Shankar v. V. N. Shukla 182
Riasat Ram Nagar v. Soember Singh 177
Sarsuit Prasad v. Baijnath Singh 223
Shiv Narain v. Emperor 222
Shyam Sundar v. Mt. Chandan Devi 126
Sita Ram v. Chheda 73
Sripal Singh v. Mata Badal 243
Sukkhu v. Nand Bahadur Singh 43
Sunder Lal v. Mt. Kaniz Zohra Begam 110
Sunder Singh v. Emperor 207
Suraj Narain v. Mt. Ram Devi 78
Suraj Narain v. Muncipal Board, Lucknow 105
Tek Chand v. Becha 247
Umrai, Mt. v. Rahim Bux 157
Wazirey v. Mathura Prasad 55
Zahid Khan v. Emperor 49
Zaman Khan v. Ganga 142
*Zaman Khan v. Ram Asre 141

*Call No.*_____ *Date*_____

*Acc. No.*_____

K. UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

This book should be returned on or before the last date stamped above. An over-due charge of .06 P. will be levied for each day if the book is kept beyond that day.

SUBJECT INDEX

Adverse Possession—Widow — Where a female comes into possession of property as widow, there is no adverse possession 17*g*

Agra Tenancy Act (3 of 1926), S. 197 — Groves in Aichaka village are not transferable 210*a*

Alluvion and Diluvion—Custom of dhardhura explained — Custom of dhardhura obtains between villages of Dewaraganj and Naipura 269*a*

Appeal—Abatement—Plots jointly assessed to land revenue purchased by A and B —Suit by them jointly to recover amount of revenue paid by them — Joint decree in their favour—During appeal by defendant B dying but his representatives not brought on record—Appeal held abated in toto : 241

—— Appellate Court—Powers of — Appellate Court should not interfere with discretion of trial Court unless it has been exercised illegally or improperly 61*b*

Attestation — No presumption of due attestation can be made from registration endorsement 213*e*

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (11 of 1825), Ss. 2, 3 and 4—Custom referred to in S. 2 existing—Ss. 3 and 4 do not operate 269*c*

Cattle Trespass Act (1 of 1871), S. 22—Compensation cannot be awarded unless specifically claimed—Sentence of imprisonment in default of compensation is not competent 37*b*

Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), S. 51, O. 21, Rr. 11 and 30, O. 40, R. 1 —Provisions of O. 21, R. 30 are not exclusive and do not override provisions of S. 51 or O. 21, R. 11 in connexion with execution of decree for payment of money by means of appointment of receiver under O. 40, R. 1 which gives very wide powers to Court which can do so when just and convenient 116

——S. 80 — Notice by transferor, one of co-plaintiffs is enough for continuance of suit by other transferee co-plaintiff after former's death — Decree passed is not a nullity 196*c*

——S. 100—Second appeal — Question of law — Judge drawing wrong conclusions which in law could not be drawn— Second appeal lies 210*c*

——S. 100 — Question of law — Whether character of grove land has changed is question of law 48

Civil P. C.

——Ss. 104 (1) (f), 104 (1) (b), O. 41, Rr 23, 25, Sch. 2, Para. 20—Application by plaintiff to have award filed dismissed—Appeal against order of dismissal allowed by Appellate Court and case remanded to trial Court — No appeal lies against order of Appellate Court according to S. 104 (1) (b)—Order of remand is not one made under O. 41, R. 23 but one under inherent powers of Court and is not appealable 104

——S. 109 (a)—Appeal does not lie from order under O. 41, R. 23 reversing decree dismissing suit on preliminary point and remanding suit for trial 224*a*

——S. 109 (c)—Question depending upon interpretation to be put on previous judgment of High Court said to be bar in res judicata is not question affecting large body of public—Appeal under S. 109 (c) does not lie 224*b*

——S. 110 — Question whether party has succeeded in proving family custom is not a substantial question of law 60

——S. 110—Multiples prescribed by U. P. Encumbered Estates Act cannot be made basis of calculating values of property 1

——S. 115 — Order during pendency of suit setting aside award under para. 15 of Sch. 2—Revision does not lie 238*a*

——S. 115—Word "case"—Scope—Word "case" is of larger amplitude than the word "suit" and would include proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act, Provincial Insolvency Act, Religious Endowments Act and Succession Act, etc. 238*b*

——S. 115—Powers of High Court — Collector executing decree for under-proprietary rent is not subordinate to High Court and latter Court cannot act in revision : 177

——S. 144—S. 144 contemplates a case in which the decree or order of a trial Court has been put in execution and the decree or order has afterwards been varied or reversed in appeal—The restitution sought under S. 144 must be in respect of a decree which has been varied or reversed 273*a*

——Ss. 144 and 151 — Restitution application and order thereon not strictly coming under S. 144 but under S. 151—No appeal lies from such order 273*b*

——O. 1, R. 9, S. 99 —Suit against idol—Sarbarahkar managing property belonging to idol impleaded as defendant — It is not necessary to join trustees, if any, as parties

Civil P. C.
—Case is covered by O. 1, R. 9 — Plaintiff is entitled to protection of S. 99 145*f*
——O. 1, R. 10, O. 43, R. 1 and S. 115 — Order adding person as party to suit is not appealable nor one open to revision 102*a* ——O. 9, R. 13 — Final decree passed in absence of defendant is ex parte decree : 111
*——O. 21, Rr. 58 and 63 and S. 64 — Order for release from attachment—Subsequent suit by decree-holder under O. 21, R. 63 to establish his right to attach property decreed in his favour — Private transfer by claimant made after order of release is void against rights of decree-holder under attachment, even if transferees are not made parties to suit under O. 21, R. 63 178*a*
——O. 21, R. 104 (Oudh) — R. 104 does not involve any question of attachment 86*a*
——O. 21, R. 104 (Oudh) — "Debt" — Meaning explained 86*b*
* —— O. 22, Rr. 1 to 11 and S. 115 — There is no rule of limitation governing application for substitution of parties in revision application 277
——O. 22, R. 1—One of plaintiffs transferring all his rights to his co-plaintiff — Death of former during pendency of suit— Suit does not abate and decree is not nullity 196*b*
——O. 22, R. 4 — Suit for partition — Of two respondents, father and son, if father dies, appeal does not abate as son is already on record though no application for substitution is made 155*a*
——O. 31, R. 1 — Whether O. 31 applies to suit against idol, which is not suit by or against trustees, executors or administrators (Quære) 145*e*
*—— O. 33 — Official Receiver appointed under Insolvency Act—Whether can be allowed to sue as pauper (Quære) 129*b*
——O. 34, R. 14 — Word 'mortgagee' explained—In suit upon mortgage of ancestral property sons challenging validity of mortgage — Mortgagee giving up security and obtaining money decree against mortgagor—In execution mortgagee held entitled to bring mortgage property to sale — O. 34, R. 14 held did not apply as mortgage no longer subsisted 126
——O. 40, R. 1 — Suit by A against B in respect of certain property — A's share declared to be 2/15th and that of B 1/3rd —Appeal by A — Application for appointment of receiver on ground of waste during pendency of appeal — Receiver held could not be appointed 229
——O. 40, R. 1 — Power conferred by O. 40, R. 1 should be exercised with great care — Power of Court to appoint receiver is limited to cases where it appears just and convenient 61*a*
——O. 41, R. 23 — For remand to be under R. 23 there must have been decree and something left undecided by original Court 157
——O. 43, R. 1, O. 41, Rr. 23 25, and S. 151—Order of remand made in exercise of inherent powers of Court is not appealable — Court merely sending back case for retrial without revising any order of trial Court — Order of remand does not fall under O. 41, R. 23 or R. 25 — It is one passed under inherent powers of Court: 102*b*

Contempt — Contempt of Subordinate Courts—Courts receiving letters amounting to contempt must bring this to notice of High Court 180*b*

Contempt of Court — In criminal case against complainant accused as witness making defamatory statements—Complainant filing complaint for defamation after examination of all prosecution witnesses — Accused starting contempt of Court proceedings against complainant — Real question is the intention of the complainant — If it is in good faith to protect his good name there is not even a technical offence of contempt of Court against complainant who is not bound to wait till termination of case against him 225
—— Private letter to officer — Letter to Magistrate containing request to take steps in executive capacity for ensuring peaceful celebration of certain ceremonies likely to be obstructed by certain people—No prayer that such persons should be bound down under S. 107, Criminal P. C. — No judicial proceeding pending against those persons when letter received by Magistrate—Writer of letter held not guilty of contempt of Court 182
—— Private letter to Magistrate—Ill-feelings between villagers and ziledar — Proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., instituted by S. D. M. against villagers — During pendency of proceedings, pleader for villagers writing letter to S. D. M. requesting him to take immediate steps against ziledar and not to proceed with cases against villagers—Letter held amounted to contempt of Court 180*a*

Contempt of Court —— Inherent power of High Court to punish contempt of Courts can be taken away or curtailed by legislation (FB) 131*f*
Contempt of Courts Act (12 of 1926), — Act creates no fresh powers at all but merely recognizes fact that such powers already exist (FB) 131*b* —— Act is not described as codifying and consolidating Act (FB) 131*d*
——S. 2—Operative portion of Act is S. 2 and not heading and Preamble of Act (FB) 131*c*
——S. 2 (1) — S. 2 (1) does not define powers of High Courts in respect of contempts of themselves at all (FB) 131*e* ——S. 2 (2)—Chief Court of Oudh has jurisdiction in respect of contempt of Courts subordinate to it (FB) 131*g*
Contract Act (9 of 1872), Ss. 2 and 7 (1) — Advertisement by railway company in newspaper inviting tenders for certain contract — Firm making proposal to railway company to give them contract on terms mentioned in draft agreement — Railway company accepting it conditionally —Counter proposals made by it not accepted by firm—Advertisement in newspaper held did not constitute proposal and there was no complete contract 249
Cosharers—One cosharer erecting building on land in his exclusive possession as his sahan darwaza — Other cosharers can object to such construction even in absence of proof of direct injury to them 275
——One cosharer in exclusive possession of plot of land without let or hindrance by other cosharers can transfer it to third person — Transferee is entitled to continue in possession subject to suit for partition by other cosharers 243
Court-fees — Suit for partition of joint family property dismissed—Appeal—Court-fee of Rs. 15 is sufficient 90
Court-fees Act (7 of 1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) —Suit for declaration that plaintiff is entitled to property and defendant 2 a beneficiary under will had no right to property — Declaration virtually asking for consequential relief of cancellation of will —Plaintiff held liable to pay ad valorem court-fee under Sec. 7 (iv) (c) 125
——Sch. 2, Art. 11 — Order of special Judge dismissing claim under provisions of S. 13, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act — On appeal from such order court-fee payable is under Art. 11 43
Criminal Procedure Code (5 of 1898), Ss. 4 (h), 250 — Applicant making application to the Hon'ble Premier that certain police officers had committed offences under I. P. C. — Application forwarded to District Magistrate—District Magistrate directing Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take statement of applicant on oath—Applicant making statement on oath repeating allegations —Police officers tried and acquitted of offences with which they were charged—Complaint found to be false and applicant directed to pay compensation under S. 250—Order held proper—Statement made by applicant on oath held amounted to complaint 101
——S. 106 — Scope — In order to proceed under S. 106 there must be finding that breach of peace has occurred 45*b*
——S. 106 — Security cannot be taken from person convicted under S. 426, Penal Code 38*b*
——S. 128 — Section 128 though authorizes arrest under certain circumstances has nothing to do with the general powers of arrest possessed by a Magistrate—It only lays down circumstances in which an assembly may be legally dispersed by force 81*d*
——Ss. 145 and 561-A — Magistrate has jurisdiction to cancel preliminary order issued under S. 145 (1) — But he cannot order delivery of attached property in favour of either party—Proper order for High Court in such case is to continue attachment until determination of question of title 284
——S. 145 — Only case in which Magistrate can refuse to take action under S. 145 is when he is not satisfied that there is danger of breach of peace—If he is so satisfied, he must issue notice to parties and receive evidence produced by them — It is not open to him to make use of evidence in another case pending in his Court as Revenue Court — Such procedure is illegal and unauthorized 15
——S. 145 (4) and Proviso — Magistrate acting under sub-s. 4 need not see whether any party was dispossessed within two months before date of order under sub-section (1) 31
——S. 195 (1) (a) — Object of S. 195 (1) (a) explained—"Public servant concerned" means officer holding post when complaint is to be made 160
——S. 367 — Case referred to superior Magistrate under S. 349—Form of judgment which he should conform to, stated 35

Criminal Trial—Appreciation of evidence —Case for prosecution appearing ab initio impossible and enmity existing between parties—There being strong element of doubt, conviction must be set aside even in revision in spite of concurrent findings of fact 156

——Evidence — After giving evidence in support of charge, witness in examination-in-chief making statement to prejudice Court against accused by showing that accused was attempting to force withdrawal of case — Statement held should be disallowed (Per Ziaul Hasan and Yorke JJ., in the Order of Reference) (FB) 131*a* ——Revision—Enhancement of sentence—High Court will not entertain applications for enhancement of sentences on behalf of private parties 54

——Procedure—Summary trial — Magistrate should record in brief reasons for conviction — But brevity should not tend to obscurity 37*a*

——Evidence — Dying declaration not implicating three of the accused — First information-report and eyewitnesses mentioning names of all as having assaulted deceased, but not assigning leading part to the three—Dying declaration held should be relied on 33*a*

Criminal Tribes Act (6 of 1924), S. 23 (1) — Words "any other such offence" mean one of those offences mentioned in Schedule I 16

Crown Grants Act (15 of 1895), S. 3—Conditions in grant ordinary legal conditions—Interpretation and application to be according to ordinary provisions of law 196*f*

Custom—Proof—Judicial decisions—Judicial decisions recognizing a custom constitute the most satisfactory evidence that can be produced about the custom 113*b*

Decree—Yearly maintenance decree made payable at end of certain month each year —In case of default decree providing recovery of amount from person or other property of judgment-debtor — Decree held capable of execution 281*c*

Deed — Construction — Precedents can hardly be useful 281*b*

——Construction—It is always dangerous to interpret a document with reference to the interpretation placed upon another document made in different circumstances 257*e*

——Construction—Application to Deputy Commissioner by a person containing expressions to the effect that his wife shall be heir to his properties after his death — Held on construction of the document that it was not a will but merely an application to protect widow of applicant against production of forged will 145*d*

——Execution — Mortgage executed in Oudh in such old time as year 1822 bearing expression "Sahi' instead of signature of executant can be held to be valid 96*b*

Easements Act (5 of 1882), S. 52—Licence—Transaction held amounted only to license and not transfer of land 196*d*

——S. 60 (a)—License and transfer of property must have reference to same property and be coupled together 196*e*

——S. 64—Licensee—Rights of, on revocation—Licensor revoking a licence and installing a fresh licensee—Original licensee has no cause of action against any one except his licensor who evicts him whether for damages for breach of contract or for compensation under the provisions of S. 64 196*g*

Election—Applicability of doctrine—Doctrine does not apply to case where person has consented to deed of gift and has merely given undertaking without any consideration that he will not contest it 145*c*

Evidence — Age — Statement made by deceased as to his age in previous case as witness—Exhibits of these statements produced in subsequent case to prove age of deceased held admissible 17*a*

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), S. 90 — Court can make presumption of fact about genuineness of original document if such presumption is justified by proved facts and circumstances of case — Appellate Court ought not to interfere with discretion of trial Court with regard to genuineness of document when reasons given by it are prima facie sound 96*a*

——Ss. 91 and 92 — Plaintiff suing for balance of principal and interest—Plaintiff alleging payment of interest — Payment endorsed on the back of bond — Defendant denying payment and pleading limitation—Plaintiff applying for permission to examine witnesses to prove fact of payment towards interest — Oral evidence held not admissible and payment held did not save limitation 142

——S. 115 — Estoppel by acquiescence—Requirements of, mentioned 196*h*

——S. 124—Object of — Meaning of word 'disclose' explained—Section does not apply

Evidence Act
when once disclosure has been made to member of public 65*a* ——S. 124 — Official confidence — Demi-official letters addressed by one officer by name to another officer by name are written in official confidence 65*b*
——S. 124—Public officer is to decide whether public interest would suffer by disclosure—But Court has to decide if communication is made in official confidence 65*c*
——S. 124—Public officer—Meaning of—Officer of Court of Wards is public officer 65*d*
——S. 124 — Privilege should be claimed after considering particular document 65*e*

Expert evidence—Value of—Handwriting experts produced by both parties — Each supporting case of party calling him—Value of their evidence stated 213*a*
Handwriting — Importance of writing characteristics stated 17*c*

Hindu Law—Alienation—Widow — Consent of reversioners — Validity — Widow alienating property inherited from her husband—No legal necessity for transfer or legal necessity to a degree out of all proportion to transfer—Consent by presumptive reversioners, which amounts to nothing more than promise without consideration to treat alienation valid at some future date, does not validate transfer otherwise bad—Reversioners concerned or persons claiming through them are not bound by consent and they are not precluded from subsequently impugning transaction—Nature of such consent pointed 145*a* ——Alienation—Widow—Extent to which widow can alienate property inherited from her husband for pious and charitable purposes conducing to spiritual benefit of her husband is limited to small portion only 145*b*
——Custom superseding Hindu law must be ancient, certain and reasonable — Such custom is not proved by showing that family property was held by eldest son without partition 17*d*
——Joint family property — Agricultural holding acquired by member of joint family may become joint family property if it was so treated by members 232
——Widow—Waste—Reversioners cannot interfere unless there is danger to property —Specific acts of waste must be alleged and proved — Realization of money or

Hindu Law
failure to keep accounts by widow does not raise presumption of waste 78

Insolvency—Annulment of adjudication—Object and effect of—Insolvent's property sold by receiver with Court's sanction before annulment—Receiver has power to execute sale deed after annulment 55*a* Jains—Adoption—Sonless widow of Jain of any sect can adopt without authority from husband or consent of kinsmen: 113*a* ——Adoption—Effect of — Adopted son acquires rights of natural born son in matters of succession to property of adoptive father 113*c*
Landlord and Tenant—Under-proprietor is absolute owner of trees in grove and cannot be restricted in his use of those trees 279 ——Simple assertion of proprietary right in judicial proceeding connected with land in dispute cannot by lapse of six or twelve years convert tenancy title into that of under-proprietor 257*j*
——Under-proprietary right — Shankalap —Rent consisting of revenue and some percentage—Decree granting heritable but non-transferable right, amount payable by tenant being revenue and 20 per cent. as haq taluqdari—Taluqdar referring to decree as having given "haq matahat"—On considering entries in remarks column of settlement, wajib-ul-arz and other circumstances decree held did not grant under-proprietary right 189
——Groves—Proprietor is entitled to possession if grove holder abandons grove — Abandonment may be by voluntary transfer or by auction-sale and relinquishing possession subsequent to such sale—In places where custom does not exist, if document by grove-holder contains terms on which groves are held under custom, owner of grove has same rights as he would have under custom 158
Lease—In absence of specific law on question of lease Court can refer to provisions of Transfer of Property Act 257*c*
—— Construction — Attendant circumstances can be referred to 257*d*
——Construction—Lease executed by one claimant in favour of another claimant in settlement of dispute relating to proprietary title and in consideration of latter withdrawing his claim—Lease perpetual and for ever—Lease held transferred heritable and transferable interest in favour of lessee 257*f*

Legal Practitioner — Powers of counsel appearing in case stated — Counsel has implied authority to admit or deny document 257*a*

Limitation Act (9 of 1908), S. 5 — Mistaken advice of counsel is not sufficient to extend time under S. 5 unless it is in good faith 245*b*

*——S. 20—Words "paid as such" are not superfluous, but provide that payment must be of interest paid "as interest" and distinctly stated to be so at the time of payment to save limitation 141*b*

——Art. 64—Accounts stated—Essence of account stated is that parties must agree on taking accounts that balance only is payable —There must be mutual consideration to support promises so as to constitute new cause of action—Defendant who had dealings with plaintiff going through accounts and signing acknowledgment of his liability for certain sum in plaintiff's account books—Entry held amounted to accounts stated 120

——Art. 132—Under-proprietary rent is not malikana—Suit to recover such rent does not fall under Art. 132 but is governed by S. 132, Oudh Rent Act 57

——Art. 182—Step-in-aid — Compromise decree providing for final decree—Decree-holder applying for final decree—Court dismissing application on ground that decree being under O. 23, R. 4, Civil P. C., could be executed—Decree-holders applying for execution—Applications for final decree held steps-in-aid of execution 155*b* ——Art. 182 — Decree in April 1927—Execution in July 1929—Application consigned to record room in September 1930—On 7th May 1932 application made under S. 39, Civil P. C., for transfer of decree to another Court—Application returned by Court on 9th May 1932, to file list of accounts and copy of decree within three days—Order not complied with—Another application under S. 39, for transfer of decree, on 5th July 1934—Application of 1932 made under S. 39, Civil P. C., held valid application and even if it was rejected by final order, application of 1934 under S. 39, Civil P. C., was in time 118

——Art. 182 (7)—Decree for maintenance directing payment at certain date—Application to enforce payment — Time runs from date of default of any of the instalments 281*a*

Mahomedan Law—Will—Taluqdari property cannot be taken into consideration in determi[illegible] share of assets of testator: 213*b*

Minor—Limitation — Guardian alienating minor's property — Minor on attaining majority assigning same property to third person—Suit by assignee in respect of that property after 3 years from assignor becoming major is barred, right to sue having extinguished 122*a*

Mortgage—Equity of redemption—Proper representation—Mortgagor creating trust for paying debts including that on mortgages—Trustees subsequently discharged, debtor having taken possession of properties—Debtor declared insolvent—Suit by mortgagee on mortgages against debtor, his son and receiver—Equity of redemption held not represented in mortgage suit: 161*b*

Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869), S. 5—Sanad and settlement by Government on one member of family of property belonging to joint family—Rights of other members of family are not affected—Even if this is regarded as trust by that member on behalf of family such trust is discharged by acceptance of guzara by other members 17*e*

Oudh Laws Act (18 of 1876), Ss. 6, 7 and 9—Plaintiff, sole under-proprietor in village, suing talukdar and proprietor of village for pre-emption of under-proprietary rights alleged to have been created by him and transferred to certain persons—Village having only single proprietor in 1876—No under-proprietor in village till twelve years prior to suit, when under-proprietary rights were obtained by plaintiff — There being no under-proprietary village community and hence no right on custom of pre-emption plaintiff held not entitled to pre-emption—Plaintiff held not entitled to fall back upon presumption provided by S. 7. 193

——S. 7—Past mesne profits are not pre-emptible 233*d*

Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), S. 3 (8)—"Under-proprietor" covers perpetual lessee holding heritable and transferable rights 257*b*

——S. 3 (9)—Birt rights are under-proprietary rights 99*a* ——S. 5—Word "proprietor" includes a subordinate proprietor 99*b*

——S. 5—Once occupancy rights are created under S. 5 they are such under S. 5 and no decree of a Settlement Court can confer them 99*c*

——S. 30-A—Finding under S. 30-A of Deputy Commissioner is not res judicata and suit in Civil Court to set aside same is maintainable 73

Oudh Rent Act
——Ss. 32.B (1) and 108 (2)—Suit under S. 32.B (1) may be joined with suit under S. 108 (2) — Suits when so joined, whole appeal lies to Appellate Revenue Court and not to District Judge 278*b*
——S. 48—Sister is collateral 247*a* ——S. 48 — Cultivation done by husband on behalf of wife — This does not make wife sharer in cultivation 247*b*
——S. 108 (8), Proviso — Under-proprietor or proprietor can litigate to establish his right as such in Civil Court, after he is ejected by a Revenue Court 10*b*
——Ss. 119 and 108—Suit asking for two reliefs, one under S. 108 (7) and other under S. 108 (9) — Appeal lies to Commissioner 239
——S. 119.B — Appeal against appellate decision of District Judge if lies to High Court would be under S. 119.B and not under O. 43, R. 1, Civil P. C. 278*a*
——S. 127—Liability to pay rent—Person entered as tenant bila tasfiva cannot claim title by adverse possession—But person in possession under bona fide claim of title and proved not to be trespasser is not liable to rent under S. 127 106
Pedigree — Absence of numbers does not necessarily show that pedigree does not give relative seniority of brothers 17*b*
Penal Code (45 of 1860), S. 34 — Knowledge—S. 34 is restricted to common intention and does not embrace any knowledge 207*b*
——Ss. 47 and 349 — Word 'animal' in S. 47 does not include human being — Causing change in position of another human being is not criminal force 81*b*
——Ss. 149, 147 and 324—S. 149 does not create an offence by itself but enlarges area of guilt in cases falling under S. 147 —Accused convicted under S. 147 and S. 324 read with S. 149 — Separate sentences passed in respect of both offences held legal 91
——S. 224—Essentials of S. 224 stated—Magistrate without power to arrest accused ordering arrest — Sub-Inspector of Police putting his hand on shoulder of accused to effect arrest without explaining the reason of arrest—Accused escaping—Accused held not guilty under S. 224 81*c* ——Ss. 299 and 300—Mere beating of person after he has fallen down is not enough to prove intention to cause death unless other factors are also considered 207*c*
——Ss.302, 325 and 34— Several accused attacking deceased with lathis and beating

Penal Code
him—Death caused by two serious injuries on vital part while other bodily injuries simple — Which of accused struck fatal blows not known— They are guilty of offence under S. 325 read with S. 34 and not under S. 302 254
——Ss. 302, 304 and 325— Death caused by single blow on head with lathi— Other injuries on body not indicating determination to beat deceased to death — Case does not come under S. 302 but would come under second part of S. 304—But where it is not known which of several persons actually struck fatal blow, case would properly come under S. 325 49
——S. 325 — Several persons beating another — Several blows inflicted out of which some proving fatal—Lines on which to proceed in deciding case stated — If neither knowledge nor common intention of causing death are proved and person who inflicted fatal blow is not known, all persons are guilty under S. 325 207*a* ——Ss. 325 and 109—Person attacked by many but dying from blow given by one of them—Others are guilty of abetting offence under S. 325 read with S. 109 33*b*
——S. 351—Apprehension of use of criminal force must be from person making gestures and not from others 81*a* ——S. 379—Accused charged under S. 379 for having caught fish in tank belonging to complainant— Land in which tank is situated, admittedly in tenancy and possession of accused — Tank connected with a river and fish and water coming from river into tank and vice versa—Held that accused could not be held guilty of theft of fish under S. 379 14
——S. 380—Punishment of whipping can be awarded in lieu of and not in addition to imprisonment 222
——S. 425 — Accused filling up ditch dug by complainant held not guilty of mischief 38*a* ——S. 425— "Property" does not include right of easement 38*c*
——S. 447 — Person ejected from land retaining possession illegally — Person rightfully entitled to possession entering on land when empty — Ejected person enforcing supposed right of possession by entering upon land held guilty of offence under S. 447 45*a*
Pre-emption — Suit by plaintiff for pre-emption on ground that he is recorded in khewat as cosharer in mohal or village —

Pre-emption
Bare denial by defendant that plaintiff was entered as cosharer — It is not plaintiff's duty to bring evidence beyond contents of khewat 233*a* ——Sale whether of doubtful rights depends on facts of each case— Sale held not of doubtful rights 233*b*
——Suit for pre-emption fails if pre-emptor cannot pre-empt all that was sold — This objection can be raised for the first time in second appeal 233*c*
Privy Council Rules, R. 9—Privy Council appeal—High Court can under R. 9 extend time for filing security or to make good the deficiency 42
Promissory Note—Form and contents — Attested document containing promise to pay on demand — Document held intended to be treated as pro-note 107*a* ——Liability—A executing note to B who sold it to C for consideration — Suit by C against A and B — Note proved to be executed by A without consideration—C held entitled to recover amount from A and B 107*b*
Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920), S. 41 (2)— Discretion under—If insolvent cannot be granted absolute discharge, Court should consider whether conditional order of discharge should be passed 129*a* Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (9 of 1887), S. 25 — Powers of High Court are discretionary and are to be exercised simply and solely to prevent miscarriage of justice or gross illegalities and are not intended in effect to give a right of appeal 141*a*
Receiver — Appointment—Principle upon which Court to exercise discretion in appointing receiver — When property is "in medio" Court may appoint receiver—When rights of parties with regard to property are decided, property cannot be said to be "in medio" 94
Registration Act (16 of 1908), S. 17 (2) (vi) as amended in 1929 — Words added to para. (vi) of Sec. 17 (2) by amendment of 1929 cannot have retrospective effect 269*d*
Res Judicata—Consent decree may operate as res judicata in subsequent suit 269*b* ——Decision of Revenue Court of Oudh before 1865 regarding rights to land operates as res judicata 17*f*
——Decision of trial Court on certain issue —Appellate Court disposing of suit on different ground without deciding issue decided by trial Court—Issue decided by trial Court is not res judicata in subsequent suit 2
Restitution of Conjugal Rights—Suit by Hindu husband — Court should consider entire conduct of parties — Husband guilty of continued neglect and desertion — Suit should be dismissed — Conduct on part of husband in making charges of theft and immorality against his wife constitutes matrimonial offence of objectionable kind — It can be raised as defence to suit, especially when there have been physical acts of violence — It also throws grave doubts on bona fides of plaintiff 68
Revision—Application of Official Receiver for permission to sue as pauper — Court following ruling of other High Court and disallowing application in its jurisdiction—No ruling of its own High Court on the point — Revision does not lie from such order though Court may have taken wrong view of law 129*c*
Sale of Goods Act (3 of 1930), S. 59 (1) —Breach of warranty—Measure of damages stated 186
Second Appeal — Question of fact — The question whether or not a certain transferee is a bona fide transferee for consideration is a question of fact 230*a* Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), S. 31 — Purchaser's rights not affected even if suit under Sec. 31 not filed 10*a* ——S. 31—Mutual mistake between vendor and vendee as to description of property—Subsequent purchaser purchasing it with knowledge of mistake cannot plead having acquired rights in good faith 10*c*
Stamp Act (2 of 1899), S. 36—Document once admitted in evidence cannot be rejected for insufficiency of stamp 85*b*
Succession Act (39 of 1925), Ss. 72 and 71 — Case of unprivileged will is governed by Sec. 71 and not by Section 72 213*c*
Sugar-Cane Act (15 of 1934), S. 7—Rules under — U. P. Sugar-Cane Rules (1936), Rr. 9 and 13—Two persons charged under Rr. 9 and 13 — One tried and convicted—Other tried afterwards—Conviction of first held no ground for acquittal of other if both acted jointly as agents 36
Transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882) S. 2 (d) — Sale by Official Receiver falls under Sec. 2 (d)—If the sale is sanctioned by Court, sale deed is not necessary 55*b*
——S. 3 — 'Actionable claim' does not include right in immovable property 122*b*
——S. 6 — Applicability — Sec. 6 is not applicable to cases where property in respect of which right to damages is claimd is itself transferred 196*a*

Transfer of Property Act
——Ss. 6 (e) and 131 — Alienation of minor's property during minority not challenged by him within 3 years of his attaining majority—Ex-minor transferring same property to stranger after 3 years of his becoming major—Transfer is not of immovable property or of actionable claim but merely of right to sue 122*c*
——S. 52—Order releasing property from attachment in claim proceeding under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C.— Transfer made after it and before disposal of suit under O. 21, R. 63 to set aside that order is affected by lis pendens 178*b*
——S. 52 — Trust — Property vesting in trustees — Trustees discharged author of trust taking back property—During mortgage suit new trustees appointed — By appointing trustees author held did not "transfer or otherwise deal with" trust property 161*c*
——S. 53—Scope — Transfer with intention of defeating anticipated suit or execution is not voidable even if its object is to prefer one creditor to another — Husband executing sale deed of properties in favour of wife for dowry debt actually due — No suit by creditor of husband then instituted nor any benefit reserved by husband in properties sold—Wife held transferee in good faith for consideration — Fact that wife could not obtain decree for full amount of dower held did not affect sale 230*b*
——Ss. 53-A, 107 — Doctrine of part performance is applicable even to lease 85*a* ——S. 111 (f) — Implied surrender when takes place stated 257*g*
——Ss. 111 (g) and 112—Forfeiture is waived by acceptance of rent which became due since forfeiture even if acceptance is under protest 257*i* *——S. 111 (g) (2)—Lessee setting up higher rights under lease than admitted by landlord—This is not disclaimer of landlord's title and does not fall under S. 111 (g) 257*h*
——S. 128 — Trust of whole property created by debtor for payment of debts—Trustees are not personally liable for debts of author of trust 161*f*
Trust — Trustee — Trust does not fail for want of trustee 161*a* Trusts Act (2 of 1882), S. 9—Scope—S. 9 is enabling Section 161*d*
——S. 11—Discretion of trustees—Creditors not specified in trust deed are not entitled to be paid by the trustees—What is proper course for such creditors stated 161*e*
——S. 11, Explanation—Scope of—Trust making no provision for payment of interest on debts specified therein — Creditors are not entitled to claim interest 161*g*
United Provinces Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), Ss. 3 and 7 (1) (b)—Jurisdiction of special Judge to decide validity or otherwise of transfer—Effect of, stated 40*b*
——Ss. 4 and 6—Special Judge cannot question entertainment of application by Collector under S. 4. 83
——Ss. 4, 6 and 7 (1) (b) — A executing simple mortgage of his share in village in favour of P — P obtaining decree on mortgage—After A's death his sons and daughter putting in application under S. 4—Order under S. 6 passed by Collector—Subsequently one of A's sons granting lease in favour of defendants in respect of some plots on the land, enabling them to dig earth from them — P suing defendants for perpetual injunction restraining them from digging the earth — Suits by P held not to be in respect of any debt and held not barred by S. 7 (1) (b) 40*a* ——Ss. 4 and 11 (2) — S. 11 (2) does not contemplate claim derived from applicant under S. 4 subsequent to his application 40*c*
——Ss. 8, 9, 10 and 13—Omission of existing debt from written statement of debtor under S. 8 not explained satisfactorily—Presumption is that such omission is deliberate with intention to reap advantage of S. 13 — Creditor is entitled to benefit of S. 18, Limitation Act 227
——S. 9 (3) — Amendment of written statement cannot be allowed under O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., if under garb of amendment creditor is putting new claims which he is precluded from doing under S. 9 (3) 245*a* ——S. 11—Claim under Sec. 11 analogous to suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C.—Order passed on such claim held declaratory decree—Appeal from decree—Court-fee must be paid as on appeal from declaratory decree 64
——S. 11 (4)—Order referred to in S. 11 (4) means special Judge's decision on claim to property mentioned in notice under S. 11 40*d*
——Ss. 14 (a) and 15 — Under S. 15 Special Judge has to see whether Civil Court that passed decree could have passed it if

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act that Court had to comply with provisions of S. 14 — Fact that interest on loan plus pendente lite and future interest exceeds unpaid principal is no ground for reducing it 75

——Ss. 14 (4), 15 — Nature of power of Special Judge under S. 15 explained — Power is not affected by Proviso (ii) to S. 3 (a) of Usurious Loans Act 184

——S. 14 (5)—Word 'course' explained—Contract made in course of transaction does not mean contract made at the time of transaction 110

United Provinces Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), S. 101—Jurisdiction in matter of reduction of rent is upon Collector only —That jurisdiction cannot be exercised by every Court of revenue 44

——S. 111 (1), Cl. (c) — When appeal to Civil Court lies stated — In partition proceedings opponent filing objection — Revenue Officer relying upon former judgment between parties and dismissing objection without going into merits—Appeal from order lies to Revenue Court and not to Civil Court 108

——Ss. 143 and 184—Assignee of land revenue can claim interest on arrears of land revenue due to him 63

United Provinces Prevention of Adulteration Act (6 of 1912), S. 4—Second part of S. 4 does not require purchaser to be prejudiced — Mere fact that the substance offered for sale is not purely the same for which license is given is sufficient to hold accused guilty 105

United Provinces Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 of 1937), S. 6—S. 6 does not apply to decrees for damages for malicious prosecution 128

United Provinces Village Panchayat Act (6 of 1920), S. 71 — Panchayat is not Court — Proceedings of Panchayat or Collector under S. 71 are not subject to revisional jurisdiction of High Court 143

Usurious Loans Act (10 of 1918), S. 3—Suit can be brought on series of transactions 287

——S. 3 (2) (b) (as amended by U. P. Act 23 of 1934) — Powers of Court to reduce rate of interest explained 223

Wajib-ul-arz — Evidentiary value of — Custom—Wajib-ul-arz dated 1862 providing that groves were not transferable—No transfer taking place for 70 years—Two recent transfers held attempt to end existing custom that groves are not transferable and not the proof of non-existence of the custom 210*b*

Will—Attestation — Evidence of attesting witnesses doubtful — Court may consider circumstances of case and may disregard testimony of attesting witnesses—Presumption of due execution and attestation will be made in case of will which on face of it is duly executed 213*d*

COMPARATIVE TABLES

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh = Other Journals

AIR	Other Journals
1	1938 O W N 1101
	1938 O L R 478
	178 I C 250
	1938 A W R 112
2	1938 O W N 962
	1938 O L R 446
	177 I C 785
	14 Luck 277
10	1938 R D 855
	1938 O W N 1074
	1938 O L R 486
	1938 A W R 104
	178 I C 609
	14 Luck 308
14	1938 O W N 1096
	1938 O L R 477
	178 I C 256
	1938 A W R 100
	40 Cr L J 22
	14 Luck 322
15	1938 O W N 1099
	1938 O L R 475
	178 I C 252
	1938 A W R 99
	40 Cr L J 33
16	1938 O W N 1053
	178 I C 95
	39 Cr L J 1002
	1938 O L R 464
	1938 A W R 88
	14 Luck 306
17	1938 O W N 1267
	178 I C 950
	1938 O L R 527
31	1938 O W N 1018
	1938 O L R 459
	177 I C 974
	39 Cr L J 963
	14 Luck 240
33	1938 A W R 108
	1938 O W N 1103
	1938 O L R 483
	178 I C 348
	40 Cr L J 38
35	1938 O W N 1051
	1938 A W R 87
	1938 O L R 468
	178 I C 173
	39 Cr L J 1005
36	1938 O W N 1134
	1938 A W R 125
	1938 O L R 489
	178 I C 632
	40 Cr L J 161
	14 Luck 342
37	1938 O W N 1130
	1938 A W R 123
	1938 O L R 512
	178 I C 722
	40 Cr L J 141
	14 Luck 325
38	1938 O W N 1127
	1938 A W R 126
	1938 O L R 509
	178 I C 665
	40 Cr L J 138
40	1938 A W R 102
	1938 O W N 1109
	1938 R D 873

AIR	Other Journals
40	1938 O L R 494
	178 I C 621
	14 Luck 316
42	1938 A W R 113
	1938 O W N 1121
	1938 O L R 485
	178 I C 389
	14 Luck 335
43	1938 A W R 136
	1938 O W N 1221
	1938 O L R 552
	179 I C 45
	1938 R D 927
	14 Luck 344
44	1938 O W N 1124
	1938 A W R 137
	1939 O L R 17
	179 I C 293
	1938 R D 891
	14 Luck 338
45	1938 O W N 1361
	1939 A W R 11
	1939 O L R 19
	40 Cr L J 183
	179 I C 269
	14 Luck 360
48	1938 O W N 1211
	1938 A W R 133
	1938 O L R 520
	178 I C 882
	1938 R D 922
	14 Luck 269
49	1939 O L R 22
	1939 O W N 7
	1939 A W R 27
	179 I C 338
	40 Cr L J 187
	14 Luck 378
54	1938 A W R 144
	1938 O W N 1366
	1939 O L R 9
	179 I C 250
	40 Cr L J 181
	14 Luck 401
55	1939 O W N 32
	1939 A W R 17
	1939 O L R 78
	179 I C 764
	14 Luck 404
57	1938 A W R 145
	1938 O W N 1368
	179 I C 1
	1939 O L R 33
	1939 R D 50
	14 Luck 467
60	1938 O W N 1132
	1938 A W R 129
	1938 O L R 504
	178 I C 658
61	1938 A W R 127
	1938 O W N 1153
	1938 O L R 513
	178 I C 725
63	1939 O W N 108
	1939 A W R 47
	1939 O L R 70
	20 U D 37
	179 I C 640

AIR	Other Journals
63	1939 R D 112
	14 Luck 532
64	1938 O W N 1018
	1938 O L R 458
	177 I C 976
	1938 A W R 122
65	1938 A W R 140
	1938 O L R 548
	1938 O W N 1354
	178 I C 982
	14 Luck 351
68	1939 O W N 18
	1939 A W R 1
	1939 O L R 28
	179 I C 436
	14 Luck 366
73	1939 O W N 89
	1939 R D 54
	1939 O L R 55
	179 I C 580
	14 Luck 416
75	1939 O W N 118
	1939 A W R 35
	1939 O L R 67
	1939 R D 67
	179 I C 630
	14 Luck 524
78	1939 O W N 38
	1939 A W R 24
	1939 O L R 37
	179 I C 447
81	1939 O W N 63
	1939 A W R 39
	1939 O L R 52
	179 I C 498
	40 Cr L J 221
	14 Luck 409
83	1939 O W N 106
	1939 A W R 34
	1939 O L R 71
	1939 R D 78
	179 I C 644
	14 Luck 475
85	1939 O W N 102
	1939 O L R 65
	179 I C 635
86	1939 O W N 82
	1939 O L R 61
	179 I C 601
90	1938 A W R 139
	1938 O W N 1265
	1938 O L R 552
	179 I C 59
	14 Luck 346
91	1939 O W N 27
	1939 A W R 14
	1939 O L R 40
	179 I C 461
	40 Cr L J 217
94	1939 O L R 6
	1939 O W N 59
	1939 A W R 21
	179 I C 245
96	1939 O W N 1
	1939 A W R 7
	1939 O L R 57
	179 I C 596
	14 Luck 993
99	1939 O W N 186

AIR	Other Journals
99	1939 R D 97
	1939 O L R 107
	179 I C 997
101	1939 A W R 43
	1939 O W N 125
	1939 O L R 73
	179 I C 758
102	1939 O W N 181
	1939 O L R 105
	179 I C 1004
	14 Luck 447
104	1939 O W N 128
	1939 O L R 88
	179 I C 799
105	1939 A W R 49
	1939 O W N 179
	1939 O L R 106
	179 I C 993
	40 Cr L J 301
106	1939 O W N 171
	1939 O L R 99
	1939 R D 99
	179 I C 958
107	1939 O W N 168
	1939 O L R 98
	179 I C 942
	14 Luck 438
108	1939 A W R 51
	1939 O W N 173
	1939 O L R 95
	1939 R D 113
	179 I C 801
	20 U D 39
110	1939 A W R 45
	1939 O W N 146
	1939 R D 91
	1939 O L R 101
	179 I C 925
	14 Luck 430
111	1939 O W N 155
	1939 O L R 96
	179 I C 928
	14 Luck 435
113	1939 O W N 234
	1939 O L R 124
	180 I C 129
	14 Luck 483
116	1939 O W N 206
	1939 O L R 118
	180 I C 29
	14 Luck 538
118	1939 O W N 267
	1939 O L R 141
	180 I C 471
120	1939 O W N 176
	1939 O L R 103
	179 I C 931
	14 Luck 478
122	1939 O W N 241
	1939 O L R 131
	180 I C 329
125	1939 O W N 184
	1939 O L R 109
	180 I C 61
	14 Luck 536
126	1939 O W N 227
	1939 O L R 121
	180 I C 136
128	1939 O W N 225

AIR	Other Journals
128	1939 O L R	116
	1939 R D	160
	180 I C	117
	1939 A W R	53
	14 Luck	450
129	1939 O W N	193
	1939 O L R	110
	179 I C	1001
	14 Luck	442
131	1939 O W N	296
FB	1939 A W R	59
	1939 O L R	194
	180 I C	745
	40 Cr L J	421
	14 Luck	492
141	1939 O W N	203
	1939 O L R	112
	180 I C	15
	14 Luck	588
142	1939 O W N	201
	1939 O L R	117
	180 I C	121
	14 Luck	456
143	1939 O W N	231
	1939 O L R	120
	180 I C	142
	1939 A W R	54
	40 Cr L J	338
	14 Luck	592
145	1939 O L R	214
	1939 O W N	346
	180 I C	888
	14 Luck	595
155	1939 O W N	219
	1939 O L R	114
	180 I C	113
	14 Luck	453
156	1939 O W N	265
	1939 O L R	140
	180 I C	467
	1939 A W R	57
	40 Cr L J	463
157	1939 O W N	246
	1939 O L R	128
	180 I C	321
158	1939 O L R	204
	180 I C	765
	1939 O W N	333
	14 Luck	459
160	1939 O L R	206
	180 I C	769
	1939 A W R	71
	1939 O W N	337
	40 Cr L J	508
161	1939 O W N	420
	181 I C	155
	1939 O L R	274
	14 Luck	548
177	1939 O W N	412
	1939 O L R	239
	181 I C	58
	1939 R D	258
	1939 A W R	77

AIR	Other Journals
178	1939 O W N	408
	1939 O L R	268
	181 I C	362
	14 Luck	543
180	1939 O W N	525
	1939 O L R	363
	181 I C	714
	14 Luck	653
	1939 A W R	84
182	1939 O W N	522
	1939 O L R	314
	181 I C	466
	14 Luck	649
	40 Cr L J	566
	1939 A W R	82
184	1939 O W N	385
	1939 A W R	73
	1939 O L R	233
	181 I C	61
	1939 R D	255
186	1939 O L R	207
	180 I C	879
	1939 O W N	339
189	1939 O W N	391
	181 I C	186
	1939 O L R	242
	14 Luck	624
	1939 R D	259
193	1939 O W N	140
	1939 O L R	80
	179 I C	787
	14 Luck	422
196	1939 O W N	500
	1939 O L R	345
	181 I C	662
207	1939 O L R	389
	182 I C	345
	1939 O W N	576
	40 Cr L J	722
	14 Luck	660
210	1939 O W N	372
	1939 O L R	235
	181 I C	70
	1939 R D	250
	14 Luck	515
213	182 I C	190
	1939 O L R	416
	1939 O W N	581
222	1939 O W N	414
	1939 O L R	238
	181 I C	79
	1939 A W R	76
	40 Cr L J	521
	14 Luck	634
223	1939 O W N	370
	1939 O L R	232
	180 I C	1007
	1939 R D	249
	14 Luck	464
	1939 A W R	72
224	1939 O W N	659
	1939 O L R	490
	182 I C	1007

AIR	Other Journals
224	1939 A W R	92
	14 Luck	675
225	1939 O W N	467
	1939 A W R	79
	1939 O L R	336
	181 I C	575
	40 Cr L J	569
227	1939 O W N	719
	1939 O L R	507
	1939 R D	453
	1939 A W R	109
	20 U D	17
	14 Luck	694
	183 I C	382
229	1939 O L R	464
	1939 O W N	615
	183 I C	16
	1939 A W R	88
	14 Luek	666
230	1939 O W N	398
	181 I C	181
	1939 O L R	241
	14 Luck	621
232	1939 O W N	656
	1939 R D	420
	1939 O L R	484
	183 I C	254
	1939 A W R	90
	14 Luck	671
233	1939 O W N	736
	1939 R D	455
	1939 O L R	537
	183 I C	604
	1939 A W R	111
	14 Luck	678
238	1939 O W N	716
	1939 O L R	503
	183 I C	378
	1939 A W R	101
239	1939 O W N	749
	1939 O L R	517
	1939 R D	463
	183 I C	463
	1939 A W R	119
	20 U D	22
	14 Luck	698
241	1939 O W N	711
	1939 R D	430
	1939 O L R	519
	183 I C	479
	1939 A W R	105
243	1939 O W N	773
	1939 O L R	530
	183 I C	593
	1939 R D	477
	1939 A W R	132
245	1939 O W N	755
	1939 O L R	523
	1939 R D	467
	1939 A W R	123
	20 U D	26
	14 Luck	701
	183 I C	436
247	1939 O W N	745

AIR	Other Journals
247	1939 O L R	509
	1939 R D	461
	1939 A W R	117
	20 U D	19
	14 Luck	690
	183 I C	392
249	1939 O W N	777
	1939 O L R	532
	183 I C	597
	1939 A W R	134
	14 Luck	710
254	1939 O W N	662
	1939 O L R	486
	183 I C	265
	40 Cr L J	754
	1939 A W R	96
257	1939 O W N	825
	1939 O L R	563
	183 I C	821
	1939 R D	542
	1939 A W R	160
	14 Luck	723
269	1939 O W N	809
	1939 O L R	558
	183 I C	808
	1939 A W R	153
	14 Luck	763
273	1939 O W N	765
	1939 O L R	544
	183 I C	709
	1939 A W R	127
275	1939 O L R	590
	1939 O W N	863
	184 I C	136
	1939 A W R	185
	1939 R D	576
277	1939 O W N	819
	1939 O L R	582
	184 I C	81
	1939 A W R	149
278	1939 O W N	823
	1939 O L R	576
	1939 R D	515
	184 I C	14
	1939 A W R	152
279	1939 O W N	916
	1939 O L R	600
	184 I C	272
	1939 A W R	217
	1939 R D	593
281	1939 O W N	768
	1939 O L R	546
	183 I C	706
	1939 A W R	129
284	1939 O W N	891
	1939 O L R	602
	184 I C	290
	1939 A W R	203
	40 Cr L J	930
287	1339 O W N	977
	1939 O L R	646
	1939 R D	607
	1939 A W R	282
	184 I C	565

Other Journals = All India Reporter

I. L. R. 14 Lucknow = All India Reporter

ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR
1	1938	O	87	13	1938	O	107	49	1938	O	156	78	1938	O	171	112	1938	O	184
4	"	"	100	22	"	"	175	65	"	"	125	89	"	"	140	116	"	"	146
9	"	"	97	40	"	"	122	71	"	"	127	106	"	"	169	130	"	"	192

ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR			ILR	AIR
138	1938	O	186	247	1938	O	251	366	1939	O	68	467	1939	O	57	649	1939	O	182
144	"	"	260	252	1939	PC	122	378	"	"	49	475	"	"	83	653	"	"	180
147	"	"	199	269	"	O	48	393	"	"	96	478	"	"	120	660	"	"	207
151	"	"	208	272	1938	"	217	401	"	"	54	483	"	"	113	666	"	"	229
156	"	"	218	277	1939	"	2	404	"	"	55	492	"	"	131	671	"	"	232
164	"	"	206	306	"	"	16	409	"	"	81	515	"	"	210	675	"	"	224
172	"	"	212	308	"	"	10	416	"	"	73	524	"	"	75	678	"	"	233
176	"	"	201	316	"	"	40	422	"	"	193	532	"	"	63	690	"	"	247
186	"	"	221	322	"	"	14	430	"	"	110	536	"	"	125	694	"	"	227
192	1939	PC	80	325	"	"	37	435	"	"	111	538	"	"	116	698	"	"	239
211	1938	O	225	328	1938	"	256	438	"	"	107	543	"	"	178	701	"	"	245
213	"	"	188	335	1939	"	42	442	"	"	129	548	"	"	161	707	1940	"	20
218	"	"	224	338	"	"	44	447	"	"	102	588	"	"	141	710	1939	"	249
223	"	"	229	342	"	"	36	450	"	"	128	592	"	"	143	723	"	"	257
227	"	"	226	344	"	"	43	453	"	"	155	595	"	"	145	751	1940	"	55
230	"	"	234	346	"	"	90	456	"	"	142	621	"	"	230	763	1939	"	269
240	1939	"	31	351	"	"	65	459	"	"	158	624	"	"	189
243	1938	"	250	360	"	"	45	464	"	"	223	634	"	"	222

1939 Oudh Law Reports = All India Reporter

OLR	AIR			OLR	AIR			OLR	AIR			OLR	AIR			OLR	AIR
1	1939	PC	1	114	1939	O	155	303	1939	PC	98	517	1939	O	239	646	1939	O	287
6	"	O	94	116	"	"	128	314	"	O	182	519	"	"	241	647	1940	"	77
9	"	"	54	117	"	"	142	316	"	PC	150	521	"	A	399	651	"	"	22
10	"	A	37	118	"	"	116	318	"	"	152	523	"	O	245	653	"	"	75
17	"	O	44	120	"	"	143	323	"	A	291	526a	1940	"	20	655	"	"	33
19	"	"	45	121	"	"	126	331	"	PC	159	528	1939	PC	242	657	"	"	45
22	"	"	49	124	"	"	113	336	"	O	225	530	"	O	243	659	"	"	43
28	"	"	68	128	"	"	157	338	"	PC	157	532	"	"	249	660	"	"	55
33	"	"	57	129	"	PC	6	340	"	"	86	537	"	"	233	666	"	"	52
37	"	"	78	131	"	O	122	345	"	O	196	541	"	PC	235	669b	"	"	26
40	"	"	91	134	"	PC	47	358b	"	PC	128	544	"	O	273	671	"	"	27
42	"	PC	11	140	"	O	156	363	"	O	180	546	"	"	281	677	"	"	111
46	"	"	14	141	"	"	118	366	"	FC	43	548	1940	"	8	681	"	"	96
52	"	O	81	144	"	FC	1	381	"	PC	174	553	1939	PC	249	683	"	"	92
55	"	"	73	187	"	PC	80	385	"	"	167	558	"	O	269	684	"	"	102
57	"	"	96	194	"	O	131	389	"	O	207	563	"	"	257	685	"	"	81
61	"	"	86	204	"	"	158	392	"	PC	170	576	"	"	278	688	"	"	87
65	"	"	85	206	"	"	160	396	"	"	163	577	"	PC	244	689	"	"	88
67	"	"	75	207	"	"	186	399	"	FC	74	582	"	O	277	692	"	"	93
70	"	"	63	210	"	FC	42	411	"	PC	190	584	1940	"	18	695	"	"	63
71	"	"	83	211	1938	"	1	416b	"	O	213	586	1939	PC	238	699	"	"	97
73	"	"	101	213	1939	A	225	427	"	A	433	590	"	O	275	704	"	"	67
74	"	A	97	214	"	O	145	429	"	PC	178	592	1940	"	44	713a	"	"	117
78	"	O	55	225	"	PC	95	433	"	"	213	596	"	"	15	713b	"	"	116
80	"	"	193	229	"	"	114	439	"	"	201	597	"	"	24	715	"	"	84
83	"	PC	27	232	"	O	223	445	"	A	466	600	1939	"	279	718	"	"	132
88	"	O	104	233	"	"	184	461	"	PC	219	602	"	"	284	721	"	FC	1
90	"	PC	22	235	"	"	210	464	"	O	229	605	1940	"	34	723b	"	O	107
95	"	O	108	238	"	"	222	466	"	PC	208	607	"	"	47	727	"	"	80
96	"	"	111	239	"	"	177	472	"	A	403	614	"	"	1	728	"	"	119
98	"	"	107	241	"	"	230	484	"	O	232	621	"	"	21	729	"	PC	7
99	"	"	106	242	"	"	189	486	"	"	254	622	"	"	12	734	"	O	137
101	"	"	110	246	"	FC	58	490	"	"	224	624	"	"	13	735a	"	"	83
103	"	"	120	262	"	PC	122	491	"	PC	228	626	"	"	59	735b	"	"	129
105	"	"	102	268	"	O	178	503	"	O	238	630	"	"	35	739	"	PC	1
106	"	"	105	270	"	PC	110	505	"	PC	200	637	"	"	16	741	"	"	3
107	"	"	99	274	"	O	161	507	"	O	227	639	"	"	90	746	"	O	104
109	"	"	125	291	"	A	299	509	"	"	247	642	1939	A	689	749	"	"	118
110	"	"	129	293	"	PC	133	510	"	PC	225					750	"	"	113
112	"	"	141	298	"	"	117	513	"	"	222

1939 Oudh Weekly Notes = All India Reporter

OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR
1	1939	O	96	59	1939	O	94	108	1939	O	63	168	1939	O	107	193	1939	O	129
7	"	"	49	63	"	"	81	118	"	"	75	171	"	"	106	196	"	PC	6
18	"	"	68	68	"	PC	1	125	"	"	101	173	"	"	108	201	"	O	142
27	"	"	91	82	"	O	86	128	"	"	104	176	"	"	120	203	"	"	141
32	"	"	55	89	"	"	73	140	"	"	193	179	"	"	105	206	"	"	116
38	"	"	78	94	"	A	97	146	"	"	110	181	"	"	102	210	"	PC	27
43	"	PC	14	102	"	O	85	155	"	"	111	184	"	"	125	219	"	O	155
53	"	"	11	106	"	"	83	157	"	PC	22	186	"	"	99	225	"	"	128

OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR			OWN	AIR
227	1939	O	126	408	1939	O	178	659	1939	O	224	848	1940	O	55	990	1940	O	43
231	"	"	143	412	"	"	177	662	"	"	254	858	"	"	18	992	"	"	111
234	"	"	113	414	"	"	222	669	"	PC	190	863	1939	"	275	997	"	"	63
241	"	"	122	420	"	"	161	678	"	"	208	866	1940	"	44	1005	"	"	134
246	"	"	157	450	"	PC	117	688	"	"	178	868	"	"	15	1010	"	"	104
249	1938	PC	284	461	"	"	114	694	"	"	219	876	"	"	1	1017	"	"	52
265	1939	O	156	467	"	O	225	711	"	O	241	891	1939	"	284	1023	"	"	102
267	"	"	118	471	"	PC	122	716	"	"	238	899	1940	"	34	1028	"	"	93
272	1938	PC	292	480	"	"	98	719	"	"	227	901	"	"	21	1034	"	"	87
282	1939	"	47	500	"	O	196	722	"	PC	222	905	"	"	13	1036	"	"	88
293	"	A	225	522	"	"	182	730	"	"	225	908	"	"	12	1045	"	"	97
296	"	O	131	525	"	"	180	736	"	O	233	911	"	"	24	1055	"	"	47
313	"	PC	80	543	"	PC	133	745	"	"	247	916	1939	"	279	1075	"	PC	1
333	"	O	158	553	"	"	157	749	"	"	239	920	1940	"	59	1078	"	"	7
337	"	"	160	557	"	"	150	754	1940	"	20	927	"	"	90	1086	"	"	3
339	"	"	186	562	"	"	152	755	1939	"	245	932	"	"	16	1087	"	O	67
346	"	"	145	570	"	"	167	760	"	PC	235	936	"	"	27	1107	"	"	80
366	"	A	299	576	"	O	207	765	"	O	273	947	"	"	26	1109	"	"	83
370	"	O	223	581	"	"	213	768	"	"	281	950	"	"	81	1111	"	"	117
372	"	"	210	602	"	PC	213	773	"	"	243	955	"	"	45	1112	"	"	119
378	"	PC	95	615	"	O	229	777	"	"	249	960	"	"	77	1114	"	"	35
385	"	O	184	619	"	PC	163	791	1940	"	8	966	"	"	75	1129	"	"	116
391	"	"	189	626	"	"	170	800	1939	PC	128	970	"	"	33	1132	"	"	137
398	"	"	230	634	"	"	201	809	"	O	269	974	"	"	22	1134	"	"	84
401	"	PC	110	645	"	"	174	819	"	"	277	977	1939	"	287	1141	"	"	132
				656	"	O	232	823	"	"	278	980	1940	"	92	1145	"	"	107
								825	"	"	257	986	"	"	96

1939 Revenue Decisions = All India Reporter

RD	AIR			RD	AIR			RD	AIR			RD	AIR			RD	AIR
50	1939	O	57	140	1939	A	331	280	1939	A	385	420	1939	O	232	515	1939	O	278
54	"	"	73	141	"	"	301	282	"	"	502	422	"	A	584	516	"	A	717
61	"	A	197	144	"	PC	14	283	"	"	444	425	"	"	542	542	"	O	257
67	"	O	75	151	"	"	11	285	"	PC	133	428	"	"	533	557	1940	"	55
71	"	A	233	155	"	A	263	292	"	A	529	430	"	O	241	564	"	A	44
73	"	"	209	157	"	"	257	332	"	"	552	440	"	A	619	574	1939	"	732
74	"	"	236	160	"	O	128	335	"	"	507	444	"	"	679	576	"	O	275
78	"	O	83	169	"	A	332	339	"	PC	114	446	"	"	607	578	1940	"	44
85	"	A	251	171	"	"	391	342	"	A	415	449	"	PC	178	579	1939	A	751
86	"	"	206	172	"	"	398	363	"	"	446	453	"	O	227	583	1940	O	34
89	"	"	215	184	"	"	448	365	"	"	518	455	"	"	233	585	"	"	21
91	"	O	110	185	"	"	369	367	"	"	433	461	"	"	247	587	"	"	12
97	"	"	99	189	"	"	291	370	"	"	641	463	"	"	239	590	"	"	24
99	"	"	106	208	"	PC	80	371	"	"	648	466	1940	"	20	593	1939	"	279
101	"	A	210	229	"	A	190	372	"	"	668	467	1939	"	245	607	"	"	287
107b	"	"	226	234	"	"	500	382	"	"	442	477	"	"	243	609	1940	A	22
110	"	"	224	236	"	"	449	386	"	"	677	479	"	A	721	612	"	"	79
112	"	O	63	249	"	O	223	389	"	"	614	481	"	"	611	614	"	O	33
113	"	"	108	250	"	"	210	390	"	"	586	485	"	"	672	616	"	"	67
115	"	A	303	255	"	"	184	400	"	"	646	491	"	"	725	628	"	"	84
117	"	"	336	258	"	"	177	402	"	"	670	493	"	"	626	632	"	"	132
119	"	"	328	259	"	"	189	405	"	"	617	513	"	"	694	635	"	"	107
138	"	"	392

THE

ALL INDIA REPORTER

1939

Oudh Chief Court

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 1

THOMAS C. J. AND ZIAUL HASAN J.

Moulvi Rafi Uddin Ahmad and others — Applicants.

v.

Rani Kaniz Abid and others — Opposite Party.

Privy Council Appeal No. 2 of 1937, Decided on 19th October 1938, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Civil P. C. (1908), Sec. 110—Multiples prescribed by U. P. Encumbered Estates Act cannot be made basis of calculating values of property.

The multiples prescribed by the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act were fixed for the purposes of the Act and they cannot be made the basis of calculating values of properties generally. The market value of immovable property is usually determined by instances of sales. [P 1 C 2]

Naziruddin — for Applicants.

Ali Zaheer — for Opposite Party No. 1.

Order.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a judgment and decree of this Court dated 22nd September 1936. A question arose as to whether or not the value of the subject-matter of the appeal was Rs. 10,000 or more. The plaintiff-opposite party valued her suit at Rs. 5990 and this valuation was never objected to by the present defendants-applicants. It was however urged in the application that the decree of this Court involves directly a claim respecting property of the value of Rs. 14,000. We therefore acting under O. 45, R. 5 referred the matter for report to the Court of first instance and the learned Civil Judge of Bara Banki has made a report to the effect that the value of the property in suit at the time when the suit was filed was Rs. 10,370 and at the time of this Court's decree, Rs. 11,720.

This report is objected to on behalf of the plaintiff-opposite party on the ground that the learned Civil Judge was wrong in basing his calculations on the multiples prescribed under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, namely at thirty times the profits. We are of opinion that this objection is well founded. The multiples prescribed by the Encumbered Estates Act were fixed for the purposes of the Act and they cannot to our minds be made the basis of calculating values of properties generally. Moreover, the report of the learned Civil Judge shows that he arrived at the figures mentioned above by adding Rs. 500, the amount of mesne profits, to the actual value found out by him by multiplying the profits by 30 ; but no question of mesne profits would arise in the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council as this Court distinctly dismissed the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits. The market value of immovable property is usually determined by instances of sales, but the applicants did not produce a single sale deed before the Court below to prove the market value of the property in suit. We are not therefore satisfied that the value of the subject-matter in dispute in the present case is Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

It now remains to be seen whether apart from the value of the property in dispute the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. After carefully going through the judgment of this Court, we are of opinion that it is not. The judgment shows that the plaintiff-opposite party's title to the property in dispute was protected by the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the appeal in Raushan Ali Khan's suit as the following passage in 1936 O W N 1069[1] at page 1074 will show:

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in their judgment, Ex. 3, in reciting the history of the case, distinctly stated that the Subordinate Judge 'gave the plaintiff a decree for the properties which fell to the junior widow, with the exception of certain properties in the possession of the Court of Wards, as to which the suit failed for want of the statutory notice', and in the end restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. It seems obvious that the defendants' rights are subject to the limitations contained in the decree in their favour, and they cannot claim anything more than what has been granted under the decree. Thus there can be no doubt that the plaintiff's title as mortgagee under Ex. B-21, and as owner of the equity of redemption in respect of the mortgage, Ex. B-8, under the purchase made by the Deputy Commissioner not only remained unaffected, but was expressly protected by the terms of the decree passed in Raushan Ali Khan's suit.

How far the prior mortgage in favour of Ratan Lal and Kundan Lal, affected the plaintiff's right to possession of the property was also decided on the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 36 I A 203.[2]

In view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to in the judgment no substantial question of law in our opinion remains to be decided. We therefore dismiss this application with costs.

D.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

1. Kaniz Abid Talukdaria v. Murtaza Husain Khan, (1937) 24 A I R Oudh 159=165 I C 373=12 Luck 540=1936 O W N 1069.
2. Mt. Izzatunnissa Begam v. Kunwar Pertab Singh, (1909) 31 All 583=3 I C 793=36 I A 203=6 A L J 817 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 2

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Har Kishan Das — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Satgur Prasad — Defendant — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 113 of 1935, Decided on 9th September 1938, against order of Thomas J., D/- 17th September 1935.

Res Judicata—Decision of trial Court on certain issue—Appellate Court disposing of suit on different ground without deciding issue decided by trial Court—Issue decided by trial Court is not res judicata in subsequent suit.

Where a trial Court has given a finding on an issue but the Appellate Court without deciding that issue or treating it as material disposes of the suit on a totally different ground, the issue decided by the trial Court cannot be said to have been heard and finally decided and hence cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit: A I R 1924 P C 144; A I R 1929 P C 289 and A I R 1932 Mad 519, Disting.; 24 Cal 616 (P C), Rel. on. [P 8 C 1; P 10 C 1, 2]

Niamatullah, Bhagwati Nath, Radha Krishna, Ganga Dayal and Karta Krishna — for Appellant.

M. Wasim, Ghulam Hasan and B. P. Misra — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal against a decree of a learned Judge of this Court sitting on the Original Side. The suit of the plaintiff-appellant was dismissed on a preliminary point, namely that it is barred by res judicata owing to the decision in a previous suit (No. 1 of 1927) brought in this Court by Mahant Har Narain Das, the immediate predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff, against the present defendant respondent, and the only question argued before us was whether or not the decision in Suit No. 1 of 1927 was a bar to the present suit. The present suit was brought by the appellant for possession of properties specified in annexures A to F attached to the plaint and for some other reliefs and he claimed to be the spiritual successor of Baba Hazara and Mahant Gur Narain Das according to the following pedigree:

(For pedigree see next page.)

Annexure A of the plaint relates to villages and shares in villages, one hundred and eighty-one in number, situate in the districts of Lucknow, Unao, Hardoi, Bahraich, Gonda and Kheri which formed what is known as the Maswasi Estate and is entered in lists I and II of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869. Annexure B comprises four villages said to have been acquired by Mahant Gur Narain Das as accretions to the estate. Annexure C contains the names of forty-two villages and shares in villages said to have been acquired by Mahant Har Charan Das. Annexure D is a list of twenty-five villages out of annexures A, B and C which are said to have been made a waqf of for certain purposes by Mahant Har Charan Das on 13th February 1879. Annexure E is the list of moveable property and cash and annexure F of decretal debts standing in the name of Mahant Har Narain Das.

The plaintiff's case is that the properties in suit belong to a religious institution of Udasi Nanakshahi Faqirs founded by Baba Hazara, the headquarters of which is in a compound known as Bagh Baba Hazara, situate in mohalla Ahata Surat Singh, Lucknow City. The institution is known as Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara. Baba Hazara is said to have flourished in the beginning of the 19th century and to have come to this province from the Punjab. He settled in a grove under a withered nim tree which in course of time revived and the proprietor of the grove influenced by the spiritual powers of the Baba made a gift of the grove to him. Gifts of money and landed property were made by the public and the ex-kings of Oudh to Baba Hazara and his successors, Baba Amriti Das and Mahant Gur Narain Das, so that at the time of the annexation of Oudh and of the proclamation of Lord Canning dated 15th March 1858, confiscating all lands in Oudh, Mahant Gur Narain Das was in possession of the property mentioned in annexure A. Subsequently when the land was released in favour of the previous owners by the letter of the Chief Commissioner dated 10th October 1859, the first and second summary settlements of the aforesaid property were made with Mahant Gur Narain Das. He died in 1862, but when the Oudh Estates Act was passed in 1869, Mahant Gur Narain Das's name was entered as a taluqdar at No. 20 in list I and at No. 4 in list II of the lists prepared under Sec. 8, Oudh Estates Act. A sanad was also granted to him in 1860 and it contains a primogeniture clause.

Mahant Gur Narain Das was admittedly succeeded by his junior chela Mahant Har Charan Das, who is said to have made a waqf of property entered in annexure D in favour of the samadhis of Baba Hazara and Mahant Gur Narain Das situate in the premises known as Bagh Baba Hazara and for expenses of Sadabart, Bhandara and of Ram Lila. Har Charan Das died in 1910 leaving a will dated 1st December 1908 by which he nominated his illegitimate son Sant Rain Das as his successor. By this will he enjoined his successor to observe celibacy and to adhere to the other tenets of the Udasi Nihang cult. Mahant Sant Rain Das accordingly succeeded Har Charan Das to the estate and was in possession of it up to his death which occurred in 1922. As he left no will and, according to the plaintiff-appellant, left no chela, three claimants to the estate appeared on his death. They were Har Narain Das, who claimed to be the chela of Har Charan Das and gurbhai of Sant Rain Das, Mt. Sheoraj Kuar, mother of Sant Rain Das, and the present defendant-respondent Satgur Prasad alias Har Charan Das, who claimed to be the son of Bibi Rup Kuar, daughter of Mahant Har Charan Das and sister of Mahant Sant Rain Das. This tripartite dispute was settled on 20th January 1922 by a compromise (Ex. A-3) brought about by some friends. Under this compromise, Har Narain Das was to remain in possession of the estate during his life and was to be succeeded by the present defendant-respondent and the latter was to nominate only a chela of the Udasi sect as his successor. On 25th November 1924, Har Narain Das executed a deed of release (Ex. A-4) by which he surrendered his life-interest to the present defendant-respondent who was to pay to him Rs. 1000 a month for his life. It was provided in this deed that if the monthly payments were delayed, the present defendant-respondent would lose his rights not only under this deed but also under the compromise of 1922 (Ex. A-3).

The plaintiff's case is that the property in suit belongs to the Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara, that neither confiscation nor granting of the sanad to Mahant Gur Narain Das nor the passing of Act I of 1869 could in law change the nature of the property which continued to belong and appertain to the Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara. He alleges that Mahant Har Narain Das remained in possession of the estate till 25th November 1924, on which date the defendant obtained a release from him by means of fraud and undue influence, that in pursuance of this deed of release the defendant came into possession of the properties except Bagh Baba Hazara which remained in the possession of Mahant Har Narain Das till his death in December 1933, that Mahant Har Narain Das in 1927 brought a suit against the present defendant for cancellation of the deed dated 25th November 1924, on the ground, amongst others, of fraud and undue influence and for possession of the properties, except Bagh Baba Hazara, which was in his possession, and for mesne profits, that in pursuance of the final decree in this suit passed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1932, Mahant Har Narain Das obtained delivery of possession of immovable properties and remained in possession thereof till his death. He further alleges that on 11th January 1934, he was installed as Mahant of Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara in place of the deceased Mahant Har Narain Das by Sri Mahants, Mahants and Faqirs of the various Udasi Nihang Nanakshahi Sangats and is entitled to possession of all the properties in suit as such Mahant. It is further stated that after the death of Mahant Har Narain Das the defendant tried to oust the plaintiff from the Sangat where the plaintiff was residing and to take forcible possession thereof, but the said Bagh Baba Hazara with some of the moveable properties mentioned in annexure E was attached by the Criminal Court under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and is still under attachment, that the defendant who claims title under the deed of 20th January 1922, (Ex. A-3) is in unlawful possession of the properties in suit and has no title to them as he is neither an Udasi Nihang Nanakshahi Faqir nor the chela of any preceding Mahant of the Sangat. The plaintiff further says that the properties in suit being at any rate attached to the office of the Mahant of Bagh Baba Hazara he who holds the said office is entitled to them and the defendant who is not the Mahant has no title to them. With regard to the agreement of 20th January 1922 (Ex. A-3) he says that if it was executed by Mahant Har Narain Das, it is void and ineffectual for several reasons, namely, that Mahant Har Narain Das had no right to alter the line of succession and to come to an agreement with regard to succession with the defendant who is neither a chela of any Mahant nor an Udasi Nihang Nanakshahi Faqir and therefore not a spiritual descendant of Baba Hazara, that the defendant retains his natural ties and caste, eats meat, drinks wine and has Mahomedan prostitutes in his keeping so that even if ever he was an Udasi Nihang Nanakshahi Faqir, he has ceased to be such, that Mahant Har Narain Das had no interest to convey to the defendant after his death and could not bind the subsequent Mahants, that the alleged agreement being in disregard of the interests of the Sangat is not binding on the Sangat or the plaintiff and that the agreement being neither a family settlement nor a deed of amicable settlement of doubtful claims, does not affect the rights of the plaintiff with regard to the property in dispute or the Sangat or its Mahantship. The plaintiff further contends that in any case the agreement of 20th January 1922 does not and cannot affect the title of the plaintiff to the Mahantship of the Sangat, the Sangat itself and the properties mentioned in annexures D, E and F. On these allegations the plaintiff claims the following reliefs :

(a) A decree for possession be passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the properties mentioned in annexures A, B, C and D and items 23 to 42 in annexure E. (b) That mesne profits amounting to Rs. 2,00,000 or such amount as the plaintiff might be held entitled to be decreed against the defendant. (c) That it be declared that the plaintiff is the lawful Mahant of Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara and is entitled to the possession of the said Sangat and all the properties mentioned in annexure E, items 1 to 22 and F. (d) That if relief (a) is not granted to the plaintiff then it be declared that the properties mentioned in annexures A, B and C are charged with the expenses of the Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara and other religious and charitable objects connected therewith to the extent of Rs. 10,000 per month. (e) That costs of the suit be awarded to the plaintiff. (f) That such other relief or reliefs which the nature of the case may require be granted to the plaintiff.

The suit was contested by the defendant-respondent on various grounds which gave rise to the following issues :

1 (a) Was Baba Hazara an Udasi Nihang (celibate) of the Nanakshahi Faqir sect and did he found a Sangat in Mohalla Ahata Surat Singh, Lucknow City, known as Bagh Baba Hazara ? (b) Is Bagh Baba Hazara an ancient religious institution and public place of worship of the Nanakshahi sect and does it constitute a religious trust ? 2 (a) Is the plaintiff the sole surviving chela of Mahant Har Narain Das ? (b) Is the defendant a duly constituted chela of Mahant Sant Rain Das as alleged by him ? 3. Was Mahant Gur Narain Das in possession of the immovable properties mentioned in annexure A of the plaint, or any of them, as and in the capacity of the Mahant of the alleged Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara, did those properties belong and appertain to the said Sangat, both before and after the annexation of Oudh by the British Government ? 4. Are the properties mentioned in annexure B accretions to the alleged Sangat made by Mahant Gur Narain Das after the confiscation ? 5. In respect of what property was the sanad granted to Mahant Gur Narain Das ? Was it granted to him in his capacity as the Mahant of the alleged Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara ? 6. Was Mahant Gur Narain Das the owner in his own right, of the properties mentioned in annexure A (excepting items 178 to 181), annexure B and items 14 to 33 of annexure C, before or after the annexation ? 7 (a). Did Mahant Gur Narain Das by his acts and declarations constitute the properties in annexures A and B trust properties and himself a trustee thereof and hold the same as Mahant of the Sangat ? (b) Were the properties mentioned in annexure C acquired by Mahant Har Charan Das with income of the alleged Sangat property in his hands and do they constitute Sangat properties ? (c) If the properties in annexure A excepting items 178 to 181 and B are held to be Sangat properties was Mahant Har Charan Das the owner of properties in annexure C, excepting items 14 to 33, in his own right ? (d) If the properties mentioned in annexures E and F are held to be the personal properties of Mahant Har Narain Das, is the plaintiff entitled to them ? (e) Did Mahant Har Narain Das die possessed of properties mentioned in annexure E excepting items 23, 24, 25 and 42 of annexure E (b) and properties entered in annexure F ? (f) What is the value of the properties mentioned in annexures E and F and of those proved or admitted to be in possession of the defendant ? 8. Is Bagh Baba Hazara a Sangat of Udasi Nihang Nanakshahi Faqirs and do the properties in suit belong and appertain to the said Sangat and are the trust properties for religious and charitable purposes relating to the said Sangat ? 9. If the properties in suit are not Sangat properties are they attached to the office of the Mahant of Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara and is the plaintiff entitled to them as such ? 10. Are the properties mentioned in annexures A, B and C burdened with the obligation of a trust in favour of the alleged Sangat and are they charged with expenses of the alleged Sangat and other religious and charitable objects connected therewith to the extent of Rs. 10,000 per mensem or of any other amount ? If so, is the plaintiff entitled to a declaration to that effect ? 11. Does there exist a custom among the Udasi Nanakshahi Faqir sect or in the Sangat in question regulating the rule of succession, (i) to Mahantship, and (ii) to the properties in suit ? If so what is the custom ?

12. Were Sant Rain Das and his predecessors-in-interest Jats and Sudras and if so how does it affect succession to the properties in suit ? 13. Was the plaintiff nominated as the successor under the will dated 28th December 1931, by Mahant Har Narain Das ? Is the said will valid and operative ? Was the plaintiff installed as the Mahant of the alleged Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara ? If so, what is its effect ? 14 (a). Did the deed dated 13th February 1879, create a valid waqf in favour of samadhis of Bagh Baba Hazara and Mahant Gur Narain Das, as alleged by the plaintiff, or was it void in law ? (b) Was the said deed cancelled as alleged by the defendant and if so, is such cancellation valid and effective ? Is the plaintiff entitled to claim any relief on the basis of the said deed of waqf ? 15 (a). Did Mahant Har Narain Das enter into an agreement with the defendant in 1922 as alleged by him (defendant) ? (b) Is the said agreement void, ineffectual and not binding on the alleged Sangat or the plaintiff, as alleged by the plaintiff in para. 29 of the plaint ? (c) If the said agreement be held to be binding on the plaintiff, then to what properties in suit does it apply ? 16. Is the present suit or any of the issues in the present suit barred by res judicata as alleged in paras. 48 and 49 of the written statement ? 17. Is the plaintiff estopped from contesting the right and title of the defendant to the properties in suit ? 18. Is the suit barred by limitation? 19. To what mesne profits, if any, is the plaintiff entitled ? 20. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled ?

The learned Judge of this Court who heard the case recorded some evidence and proceeded to decide Issue 16 and held as follows :

(1) That Mahant Har Narain Das, plaintiff, brought the suit (No. 1 of 1927) as representative of the Sangat and for possession of properties of that Sangat and that the present plaintiff is bound by that finding; (2) that reliefs (a) and a (1) were two independent reliefs and that Issue 5 was a direct and substantial issue and it was heard and finally decided with reference to relief a (1) by both the Courts, and the compromise of 20th January 1922, is binding on the plaintiff. Therefore the decision that the property is governed by Act 1 of 1869 and that the property is the personal property of Mahant Gur Narain Das and is not burdened with any trust is res judicata.

While deciding Issue 16 the learned Judge considered the other issues in the case also. With regard to Issues 2, 11, 12, 13, 17, 18 and 19, he held that they became unnecessary for decision in view of the finding upon the main question. With regard to the rest he was of opinion that their trial was also barred by the decision in the previous suit (No. 1 of 1927).

The question before us is whether or not the decision in Mahant Har Narain Das's suit (No. 1 of 1927) operates as res judicata in the present suit. In order to decide this question, we must refer in detail to the pleadings and the decision in the previous suit. The plaint (Ex. A-695) of the previous suit will be found commencing from p. 40, part 3 of the paper-book. It begins with the pedigree of the spiritual family as given in the present plaint and prays for the following reliefs :

(a) That the deed dated 25th November 1924, be set aside as void. (a1) That a declaration be made to the effect that defendant 1 is not entitled to any benefit under the agreement dated 20th January 1922, and the deed dated 25th November 1924. (b) A decree for possession be passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of properties mentioned in Schs. A, B and C. (c) That mesne profits amounting to Rs. 5 lacs be decreed against defendant 1. (d) Costs of the suit be awarded to the plaintiff. (e) Such other relief or reliefs as the nature of the case may admit of be granted to the plaintiff.

With regard to relief (a), above, para. 23 of the plaint runs as follows :

That the deed dated 25th November 1924, referred to above, is not binding on the plaintiff 'inter alia' on the following grounds and the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property in suit. (a) That the said deed dated 25th November 1924, is without consideration. (b) That the said deed dated 25th November 1924 does not effect any conveyance of the rights of the plaintiff. (c) That the said deed was obtained by the exercise of fraud and undue influence as alleged in the preceding paragraphs practised on the plaintiff who signed it without understanding the nature and effect of the deed on his interests at a time when he had no independent adviser and yielding to the importunity of those on whom he relied and who had their selfish interest in view.

With regard to relief (b) for possession, Mahant Har Narain Das's allegations as contained in para. 24 of the plaint were as follows :

That even if the deed dated 25th November 1924 be held to be valid and binding the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the property in suit 'inter alia' on the following grounds :

(a) That under the deed dated 25th November 1924, the defendant was bound to pay every month to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1000 secured by the said deed and in case of default or delay the plaintiff is entitled to enter into the possession of the entire property covered thereby and to avoid both the deeds dated 25th November 1924 and 20th January 1922 the defendant has all along been delaying the payment of the said sum and the payment for the months of November and December 1926 and January 1927 is still in arrears in spite of repeated demands.

(b) That defendant 1 has by his actions and professions renounced his adherence to Udasi sect as contemplated by the will of Mahant Har Charan Dass and the agreements dated 20th January 1922 and 25th November 1924 each have been thereby contravened by defendant 1 and which in so far as they confer benefits on defendant 1 do so only in his capacity of a Nihang Udasi to which particular cult Mahant Gur Narain Das belonged.

(c) That defendant 1 retains his natural ties and caste and professes to be a married man, facts which disqualify him from occupying the position of a Mahant of the Gaddi of Baba Hazara and to be in possession of the property in suit.

It may be noted here that the defendants of Mahant Har Narain Das's suit were not only the present defendant-respondents but also two others, namely Mt. Raj Kumari, defendant 2, who was said to be in the keeping of the present defendant-appellant, and Nand Kumar, defendant 3, who was manager of the estate and who was said to have secured for himself a benefit of Rs. 100 a month as a charge on the property in suit. The suit appears however to have been contested mainly by the present defendant. His pleas will appear from the issues framed in the case. They were as follows :

(1) Was Har Charan Das the senior chela of Mahant Gur Narain Das ? (2) Is the plaintiff the chela of Mahant Har Charan Das and if so, is he the senior chela ? (3) Is Mt. Rup Kuar mother of defendant 1 the illegitimate daughter of Mahant Har Charan Das ? (4) Is defendant 1 the chela of Mahant Sant Rain Das ? (5) Is the property in suit appurtenant to the sangat of Baba Hazara and not the absolute property of the Mahant for the time being ? (6) Was the deed executed by the plaintiff and defendant 1 on 25th November 1924 not a genuine agreement but intended by the parties themselves to remain inoperative ? (7) Does the above deed if genuine amount to a valid conveyance of all the property ? (8) Is the said deed invalid as being (a) without consideration, or (b) obtained by undue influence and fraud as alleged by plaintiff ? (9) Are the holders of this gaddi members of the sect of Nihang Udasi and if so, are they bound to celibacy ? (10) Is defendant 1 married to defendant 2 ? (11) Has defendant 1 forfeited his rights to this property by non-observance of the rules of the Udasi sect in the manner alleged in the plaint and in particular by contravening the terms of the will of Mahant Har Charan Das and the agreement of 20th January 1922 ? (12) Has defendant 1 made default or delay in paying the allowance due to the plaintiff under the agreement of 25th November 1924 and, if so, has he forfeited his rights under that agreement ? (13) Is the plaintiff estopped by accepting benefits under the deed of 25th November 1924 from challenging the validity of that deed ? (14) Is defendant 1 liable to render accounts of the receipts of the property since it came into his possession under the deed of 25th November 1924 ? (15) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled ? (16) Are the plaintiff's rights extinguished by the doctrine of merger and surrender ?

The suit was tried by Pullan J. whose findings on the above issues were as follows:

On Issue 1 he held that Har Charan Das was the junior chela of Gur Narain Das. On Issue 2, it was held that the plaintiff was the senior chela of Mahant Har Charan Das. On Issue 3, Mt. Rup Kuar was found to be the illegitimate daughter of Mahant Har Charan Das. Issue 4 was found in the negative. On Issue 5, which is most important from the point of view of the present suit, the learned Judge held that the property was not appurtenant to the Sangat of Bagh Baba Hazara but the absolute property of the Mahant for the time being as a taluqdar under Act 1 of 1869. Issue 6 was found against the plaintiff and it was held that it was a genuine agreement and was intended to be operative. Issue 7 was also decided against the plaintiff subject to the findings on Issue 8. On Issue 8 it was held that the agreement of 25th November 1924 was not without consideration but was obtained by undue influence and fraud. On the question involved in Issue 9 it was held that the holders of the gaddi while abstaining from marrying were in the habit of keeping mistresses. On Issue 10, it was held that no marriage took place between defendants 1 and 2. Issue 11 was decided in the negative, that is to say against the plaintiff. On Issue 12 the decision was that defendant 1 made default in paying the allowance due to the plaintiff and that he had forfeited his rights under the agreement of 1924. Issues 13, 14 and 16 were decided in favour of the plaintiff. As a result of the findings referred to above, the suit of Har Narain Das, plaintiff, was decreed as follows :

(a) The deed of 25th November 1924 is set aside as void, (b) a declaration is made to the effect that defendant 1 is not entitled to any benefit under the agreement dated 20th January 1922, (c) a decree for possession is passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the properties mentioned in Sch. A, B and C, (d) the plaintiff will receive such mesne profits as may be subsequently determined from defendant 1, (e) the plaintiff will receive his whole costs from defendant 1. Defendants 2 and 3 will bear their own costs.

Against the decree of the learned Judge the present respondent filed an appeal which was heard by Stuart, C. J. and Wazir Hasan, J.* who varied the decree of the trial Judge in the following terms :

We affirm the decree of the trial Court in so far as the relief of cancellation of the document of 25th November 1924 is concerned, and also to the relief for possession in consequence thereof. As to the relief granted by that Court in respect of the forfeiture of the defendant-appellant's rights under the settlement of 20th January 1922 we accept the appeal and reject that relief. As to mesne profits the plaintiff is only entitled to them from the date of the suit till the recovery of possession by him, the reason being that the document of 25th November 1924 was only voidable at the option of the plaintiff and the plaintiff did not exercise that option earlier than the date of this suit. The amount of the mesne profits will be determined hereafter.

As to costs we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to his costs in full because he obviously asked for more reliefs than he was entitled to and it was only before us that the claim to relief in respect of a declaration that defendant 1 is not entitled to any benefit under the earlier document of 20th January 1922, that is to say he has lost his remainderman's estate also, was admitted by the plaintiff-respondent's learned counsel as a relief to which the plaintiff is not entitled if the relief as to the cancellation of the deed of 25th November 1924 is granted in his favour. We therefore direct that the plaintiff will be entitled to half his costs from defendant 1, Satgur Prasad, in both the Courts and that the said defendant and the other two defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

It will thus be seen that the Appellate Bench of this Court disallowed relief (a1) of the plaint and varied the decree of the trial Court. With regard to mesne profits by restricting the period of those profits and holding that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the suit only. Against this decree both the parties appealed to His Majesty in Council and the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council (Ex. A-1025) shows that the decree of the Appellate Bench of this Court was varied only in so far as to substitute for the words "date of the suit" the words "25th November 1924" and to add after the words "possession by him" the words :

The defendant-appellant being entitled to credit in the account so to be taken for all sums paid by him after that date to respondent 1 and interest being allowed at the usual rate on both sides thereof.

Thus the decree of the Appellate Bench was amended only in respect of the mesne profits. In other respects the decree was allowed to stand.

There can be no doubt that Issue 5 of the previous suit, namely whether the property in suit appertained to the sangat of Baba Hazara or was the absolute property of the mahant was decided by the trial Court against the then plaintiff and it was held that the property was not appurtenant to the sangat but was the absolute property of the mahant for the time being as a taluqdar. As however, the decree of the trial Judge was appealed from it merged into the Appellate Court's decree and the question is whether or not the Appellate Court decided this question and whether it affirmed or reversed or varied the finding of the trial Court on this point. While the learned counsel for the respondent contends that the finding of the trial Court on Issue 5 was affirmed by the Appellate Bench, it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the Appellate Court did not decide the question at all but confined its decision to a finding on Issue 8 (b), namely whether or not the deed of 1924 was void on account of undue influence and fraud. It is conceded on behalf of the respondent that if the learned Judges who heard the appeal in this Court did not decide Issue 5 the question whether or not the property in suit belonged to the sangat cannot be regarded as res judicata.

* See (1929) 16 A I R Oudh 44.

After hearing the learned counsel for parties at length and giving our best consideration to the question, we regret we cannot agree with the finding of the learned trial Judge on this point. After reading the judgment of the Appellate Court with care more than once, we have come to the conclusion that the question involved in Issue 5 of the previous suit was left undecided by that Court.

Before quoting some passages from the judgment of the Appellate Bench which bear on the point, we consider it necessary to refer to some proceedings in the trial Court. It appears that during the course of the trial before Pullan J., Mr. Niamatullah, counsel for the plaintiff, made the following among other statements, on 16th July 1927 (page 69 part 3 of the paper-book) :

His client claims the property as successor of Mahant Sant Rain Das but not independently of the agreement of 20th January 1922.

After this statement the counsel for the defendant put in an application on 15th August 1927, saying that in view of the statement of the counsel for the plaintiff, Issues 1 to 5 and 9 in the case had become unnecessary and praying that these issues be deleted : vide page 71, part 3 of the paper-book. In reply to this application an application was put in on 22nd August 1927 on behalf of the plaintiff in which it was said that the statement of the plaintiff's counsel referred to in the defendant's application only meant that the plaintiff claimed to be the successor of Mahant Sant Rain Das as alleged by him in the plaint but subject to the covenants binding on him under the agreement of 20th January 1922, and that that statement did not obviate the necessity of Issues 1 to 5 and 9 being tried. On this the learned Judge passed an order in which he said :

In my opinion the issues as already framed should remain intact except for the verbal alteration effected in Issue 3 and I order accordingly.

It will thus be seen that all the issues originally framed in the case were allowed to remain as they were. Indeed the learned Judge recorded findings on each and every one of them. When the case came up in appeal before the Bench however it appears that the learned counsel for the plaintiff agreed that if Issue 8 (b), namely whether or not the release Ex. A-4 was obtained by undue influence and fraud be decided in his favour, other questions raised by him in his memorandum of appeal need not be decided.

We may now refer to the following passages occurring in the judgment of their Lordships of the Appellate Bench :

Before proceeding further, it is necessary to clear one important matter. The plaintiff founded his title to immediate possession exclusively on the settlement of 20th January 1922. This was clearly stated by the learned counsel for the plaintiff on the day of the opening of the trial of this case before Pullan J. This statement will be found at page 32 of part 1 of the record. The statement is as follows :

'Mr. Niamatullah (counsel for the plaintiff) states that his client claims the property as the successor of Mahant Sant Rain Das, but not independently of the agreement of 20th January 1922.'

The question of the plaintiff's title having thus been confined to rest on the settlement of 20th January 1922 the counsel for the defendant-appellant stated in reply that 'in view of the statement just made by Mr. Niamatullah for the plaintiff he does not now consider it necessary to set up the title of defendant 1 prior to the agreement of 20th January 1922.' In this state of pleadings, it is clear that all questions relating to the titles of plaintiff and the defendant to the property in suit under a claim of succession to the estate of Mahant Sant Rain Das outside the terms of the settlement of 20th January 1922 are beyond the scope of the present suit. It follows and this was agreed to by the learned counsel on both sides before us, that in the event of the later agreement of 25th November 1924 being set aside as vitiated by undue influence and fraud, the parties in respect of their rights, are relegated to the position which they occupy under the earlier agreement of 20th January 1922, and in the same event it is further agreed that the decree of the trial Court must be modified by deleting the relief in respect of the deed of 20th January 1922, It will appear from what has just now been stated that the primary question for decision in the appeal is the one which is covered by Issue 8 (b) (see p. 31, part 1 of the printed record) of the issues framed in the trial Court and if we uphold the finding of that Court on this issue no other question need be decided. We may however mention that on behalf of the appellant the findings of the trial Court on Issues 12 and 13 and on behalf the plaintiff-respondent on Issue 10 were also challenged. After hearing prolonged arguments on both sides and after having taken time for considering our judgment we have come to the conclusion that the finding of the trial Court on Issue 8 (b) must be affirmed. In consequence of this conclusion we would refrain from deciding any other issue in the appeal.

The underlined (italicized here) portions of the above passages appear to us to show clearly that the Appellate Bench considered it unnecessary to decide any of the issues arising in the case except Issue 8 (b) and that they did not decide any other issue.

The learned counsel for the respondent relies on the following passage occurring at page 119.

Mahant Gur Narain Das was therefore a taluqdar within the meaning of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 and the immovable property held by him and now in suit is an estate within the meaning of the same Act. This conclusion was agreed to by both sides during the course of the arguments before us. In the trial Court however, the plaintiff set up the case that the estate in suit was burdened with a religious trust and the succession to it was regulated by the custom of the foundation to which it was attached. This foundation according to him is the Nanakshahi sangat situated in the City of Lucknow. According to the custom the plaintiff said the title to succession is with him and according to the same custom it is not with the defendant-appellant. The trial Court rejected this case of the plaintiff and found that the estate in suit was held by Mahant Gur Narain Das in his own right without any obligations of a religious trust and that the incidents of an estate as defined in Act 1 of 1869 are applicable to it. This finding of the learned Judge was not questioned before us by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent and is therefore agreed to by both sides.

It is argued that this amounts to an affirmation of the trial Court's finding that the property in suit is not appurtenant to the sangat and that in fact that finding of the trial Court was accepted in appeal by the learned counsel for the then plaintiff-respondent. We cannot however accede to this argument. Though the last sentence of the passage quoted above is not very clear, there can be no doubt that the passage occurs in the narration of the facts of the case and cannot in our opinion be taken as a finding recorded by the Appellate Bench. The narration of facts continued to about three pages after the passage quoted from p. 119 and the consideration of the questions involved in the case commenced with para. 1 at page 123 quoted above, and after referring to the points agreed to by the learned counsel on both sides the learned Judges said :

After hearing prolonged arguments on both sides and after having taken time for considering our judgment, we have come to the conclusion that the finding of the trial Court on Issue 8 (b) must be affirmed. In consequence of this conclusion, we would refrain from deciding any other issue in the appeal.

We are of opinion that the words "any other issue" mean any issue other than Issue 8 (b). The learned counsel for the respondent contends that they mean any issue other than Issue 8 (b) and the other issue referred to at p. 119, but this contention is rebutted and the view taken by us fully supported by what follows at p. 139, namely :

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent the finding of the trial Court on Issue 10 was challenged but as we have already said every other issue in the case becomes immaterial after we have affirmed the finding of the trial Court on the issue of undue influence and fraud.

This leaves no room for doubt that the learned Judge did not consider it necessary to decide any issue other than that of undue influence and fraud and that they did not decide any such issue. The conclusion that we have arrived at is further strengthened by the fact that the whole of the judgment of the Appellate Bench after the narration of the facts of the case is devoted solely to a consideration of Issue 8 (b), namely whether or not the release of 1924 was obtained by undue influence and fraud. We may also point out that the sole or at least the main object of Mahant Har Narain Das in the previous suit was to obtain immediate possession of the property, and, but for the release of 25th November 1924, he was entitled to possession for life even under the agreement of 20th January 1922, so that it was perfectly reasonable on the part of the counsel for Mahant Har Narain Das to say that if Issue 8 (b) relating to the invalidity of the deed of release on the ground of undue influence and fraud be decided in his favour he did not insist on any other question in the case being decided. Accordingly, the appellate Bench proceeded to decide Issue 8 (b) and having concurred with the trial Court's finding on that issue and having declared the release of 1924 void, decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession "in consequence of" their cancelling the deed of 25th November 1924.

So far as the decree of their Lordships of the Privy Council is concerned, it only confirmed the decree of the Bench of this Court except with regard to the period for which the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits, and though the plaintiff in his appeal before their Lordships raised various questions in his memorandum of appeal, their Lordships referring to the plaintiff's cross-appeal and to the Appellate Court's finding that the plaintiff was not entitled to mesne profits for a period earlier than the date of the suit, say :

It is against this finding only that the cross-appeal of the plaintiff has been pressed and it is contended on his behalf that, having regard to the conclusion, now established, that the deed under which the defendants got possession was procured by undue influence and fraud the plaintiff is entitled to the account which he has claimed.

It is thus clear that their Lordships also did not decide any question other than that of mesne profits. We are therefore decidedly of opinion that the decision in Mahant Har Narain Das's suit (No. 1 of 1927) does not operate as res judicata on any issue raised in the present suit. In view of this conclusion, it is not necessary to refer to the various cases relied on by the learned counsel for parties except one or two. The learned counsel for the respondent laid great stress on the case in 51 I A 293[1] in which it was held that an issue is res judicata where the judgment of an Appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided although the decree made merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue, but in Mahant Har Narain Das's case the Appellate Court neither decided Issue 5 nor treated it as material.

The case in A I R 1929 P C 289[2] was also relied on which lays down that an order by consent, not discharged by mutual agreement and remaining unreduced, is as effective as an order of the Court made otherwise than by consent and not discharged on appeal, but this case too has manifestly no application to the facts of the case as found by us. In 139 I C 761,[3] relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent, it was held that where in a prior suit there was no issue or decision of a certain point as it was admitted by both parties and a decree was passed on the basis of the facts admitted, res judicata on account of the prior decision extends not to the actual decision only but to the common basis or facts accepted by both parties and incorporated and made the foundation of the judgment and decree in the case; but as we have seen, the decision of the Appellate Court in Mahant Har Narain Das's case did not proceed on any facts agreed to by the parties.

1. Midnapur Zamindarl Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy, (1924) 11 A I R P C 144=80 I C 827=51 Cal 631=51 I A 293 (P C).
2. Charles Hubert Kinch v. Edward Keith Walcott, (1929) 16 A I R P C 289=118 I C 7 (P C).
3. Sundararajamma v. Ramulu Chetty, (1932) 19 A I R Mad 519=139 I C 761.

The present case appears to us to be governed by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 24 I A 50.[4] In that case a suit was brought to have it declared that the defendant was not the son of Anar Koer. In a previous suit between the same parties, the issue whether the defendant was or was not the son of Anar Koer had been raised and decided against the plaintiffs by the first Court but the High Court dismissed the suit as not properly constituted without giving any decision of the issue whether the defendant was or was not the son of Anar Koer. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the issue had not been "heard and finally decided" and was not res judicata. Similarly, in Har Narain Das's case though the trial Court have a finding on Issue 5 the Appellate Court disposed of the suit on a totally different ground. Therefore the finding of the trial Court in the previous suit is not a bar to the trial of the issue in the present suit whether the property in suit appertains to the Sangat Bagh Baba Hazara.

We may also note that it was conceded by the learned counsel for the respondent that even if Issue 5 of Mahant Har Narain Das's suit be deemed to have been decided in that suit, some of the issues in the present suit, namely 2 (a), 2 (b), 11 (i), 12, 13, 14 (b), 15 (c), 17 and 18, will have to be tried. We allow the appeal with costs and having come to a conclusion contrary to the decision of the learned trial Judge on the question of res judicata, remand the case for trial under O. 41, Rule 23, Civil P. C. The costs of the trial Court will abide the result.

D.S./R.K. Case remanded.

4. Sheosagar Singh v. Sitaram Singh, (1897) 24 Cal 616=24 I A 50=7 Sar 124=1 C W N 297 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 10

YORKE J.

Sheikh Barsati — Appellant.

v.

Sarju Prasad and others—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 351 of 1936, Decided on 15th October 1938, against order of Addl. Civil Judge, Gonda, D/- 30th July 1936.

(a) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 31—Purchaser's rights not affected even if suit under S. 31 not filed.

Section 31 is an enabling Section and the fact of its not being made use of cannot deprive a purchaser of the rights conveyed to him by his sale deed : A I R 1932 Oudh 123 and A I R 1927 All 355, Rel. on. [P 11 C 2]

(b) Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1888), S. 108 (8), Proviso — Under-proprietor or proprietor can litigate to establish his right as such in Civil Court, after he is ejected by a Revenue Court.

Although a Revenue Court in Oudh is competent to decide a question between a tenant and a sub-tenant exclusively, an under-proprietor can litigate under S. 108 (10) to establish his rights as such in a Civil Court after he has been ejected by a Revenue Court, a fortiori a proprietor cannot be deprived of a similar right. [P 12 C 2]

Plaintiff purchased certain plots of land in Oudh. One of the plots was wrongly entered in the sale deed. Plaintiff was in occupation of all the plots for many years but was subsequently ejected for arrears of rent, as he was treated only as a tenant under Sec. 127 on account of the clerical mistake. Plaintiff brought a suit for possession in a Civil Court :

Held that the Civil Court could not set aside the decree of the Revenue Court, but the suit was maintainable under S. 108 (10), Proviso : A I R 1916 P C 150, foll.; 1937 O W N 886 and A I R 1926 Oudh 348, Ref. [P 13 C 1]

(c) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 31—Mutual mistake between vendor and vendee as to description of property—Subsequent purchaser purchasing it with knowledge of mistake cannot plead having acquired rights in good faith.

Where there is a mutual mistake between the vendee and vendor as to the description of the property in the sale deed, a third person, who being aware of such mutual mistake and intending to take advantage of it subsequently purchases that property from the original vendor, cannot plead that he acquired his rights in good faith : 34 Mad 51, Rel. on. [P 13 C 2]

Naim Ullah — for Appellant.

G. D. Khare — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's second appeal by one Sheikh Barsati in a suit for possession of a cultivatory plot No. 691 in village Ekdanga, District Gonda. The plaintiffs came into Court with a statement that on 28th February 1906 they obtained a registered sale deed, Ex. 2, from defendants 2 and 3 in respect of 13 plots, Nos. 681 to 693, measuring 8·53 acres. This sale deed therefore included or was intended to include plot No. 691 with an area of ·90 acre, but by a clerical mistake the number was written in the sale deed as 651 instead of 691. It was said that the plaintiffs entered into possession of all the plots and remained in possession up to 1935, when they were ejected by the defendant treating them as tenants under Section 127, Oudh Rent Act. It appears from the evidence that the plaintiffs applied for mutation on 20th December 1906, when in spite of the statement of one of the vendors, Ex. 3, in which he admitted that plot No. 691 had been sold and that No. 651 had been written in the sale deed by mistake, the mutation Court by its order of 28th January 1907 refused mutation of plot No. 691 telling the vendees-plaintiffs that they should get another sale deed in respect of that plot. The mutation Court did not and could not give mutation in respect of plot No. 651 because that plot was in a different mahal and had an entirely different area from that entered in the sale deed for plot, No. 651. This order of the Mutation Court was made despite the fact that the mutation application was not opposed. It is clear that the vendees could at that stage have instituted a suit under S. 31, Specific Relief Act, but they did not do so, and as has been held in several rulings they were not bound to do so, as that Section is an enabling Section and the fact of its not being made use of cannot deprive a purchaser of the rights conveyed to him. The only result of this failure on the part of the plaintiffs to institute a suit under S. 31 was that they were not recorded in the khewat as proprietors of this plot, and in the village khasra they were recorded as tenants "bila tasfia lagan", that being the only entry which it was possible for the revenue authorities to make.

On 12th December 1932 defendants 2 and 3, that is the plaintiffs' vendors, executed a sale deed, Ex. A-1, in respect of the whole of their 2 annas 8 pies share whose area is 16.03 acres with the exception of the area mentioned in the prior sale deed, Ex. 2, in favour of Noor Mohammad, the predecessor of defendant 1, the present appellant. The recital in the sale deed is that in the share of 2 annas 8 pies transferred, the plots in accordance with the khewat and the sale deed in favour of Sarju Prasad and others are exempted, the whole of the rest of the rights and share of 2 annas 8 pies are sold to the vendees, and it is further on stated that the area of the whole 2 annas 8 pies share is 16.03 acres. In November 1934 defendant 1 issued a notice of ejectment for arrears of rent against the plaintiffs as recorded tenants of plot No. 691. He apparently took steps to eject the plaintiffs, treating them as tenants "bila tasfia lagan" under the provisions of Ss. 53 (2), 54 and 55, Oudh Rent Act. It appears that the plaintiffs did contest this notice by instituting on 28th April 1935 a suit under S. 59 to contest the notice, but this they withdrew on 24th November 1935 probably in view of the fact that there was little point in proceeding with it as they had previously on 25th April 1935 instituted a declaratory suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were in possession of plot No. 691 as proprietors. This suit had been subsequently changed into a suit for possession by an application of 11th June 1935 after defendant 1 had obtained formal possession of the plot.

In answer to the plaintiffs' suit to recover proprietary possession of this plot, the defendant denied the plaintiffs' title under the sale deed of 1906, and claimed that he was owner of the plot under the sale deed of 1932. He further claimed protection under S. 31, Specific Relief Act, and pleaded that the suit was barred by Art. 96, Limitation Act, and that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The trial Court decided that plot No. 691 had been sold to the plaintiffs as alleged by them. It held that no question of adverse possession arose and gave no finding on the issue which dealt with that question. It held that the suit was not barred by limitation and that it was cognizable by the Civil Court, but it held in favour of the defendant on the view that his predecessor-in-title was a purchaser of the property in good faith and for value, and therefore defendant 1's right could not be interfered with. The learned Civil Judge agreed with the finding of the trial Court that plot No. 691 was sold to the plaintiffs under their sale deed of 1906. It went on to hold that that plot was not sold to the defendant under his sale deed Ex. A-1 of 1932, and it further held that even if it were to be held that that plot which had already been transferred to the plaintiffs and defendants 4 and 5, was also transferred to defendant 1's predecessor, Noor Mohammad, under the subsequent sale deed, it was impossible on the evidence on the record to hold that Noor Mohammad had no notice of the prior sale. It followed that he could not be said to be a purchaser of the property in good faith. The question of limitation was not apparently argued before the lower Appellate Court and has not been argued before me, and from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it does not appear that the question of the cognizability of the suit by the Civil Court was argued before it.

The first point which I propose to deal with is the question whether this suit was cognizable by the Civil Court. Learned counsel contended that the suit for ejectment of the present plaintiffs was a suit under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, read with S. 108 (2) of the same Act, which was cognizable only by the Revenue Court. He said that in that suit the defendants could plead that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the plaintiffs of that suit, and that they were in possession as landlords, but he has omitted to notice that the rent Court under the Oudh Rent Act has no power to decide that question, and is bound by its own records. It is no doubt a fact, as held in 1937 O W N 886,[1] that when a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of a Court of Revenue has been tried and decided by the Court as between the parties, no subsequent suit would lie in the Civil Court having for its sole object the annulment of the decree passed by the Court of Revenue, but it is quite plain that although a Revenue Court in Oudh is competent to decide a question between a tenant and a sub-tenant exclusively as was done in the case reported in 6 O W N 1214,[2] a case in which there was a dispute between a tenant and a sub-tenant who himself claimed to be the tenant in chief, Sec. 108, Cl. 10 directly provides that :

> Nothing in this Section shall operate to debar any person claiming to be an under-proprietor who has been ejected under the provisions of S. 60 from bringing a suit for possession in a Civil Court.

If an under-proprietor can litigate to establish his rights as such in a Civil Court after he has been ejected by a Revenue Court, a fortiori a proprietor cannot possibly be deprived of that right, and that appears quite clearly from the notes at page 463 of Mata Prasad's Rent Law in Oudh (Edn. 7), and the decision of the Privy Council reported in 20 O C 8,[3] where it was held that in Oudh the Court of Revenue has the exclusive jurisdiction to determine what is the status of a tenant of lands, and what are the special or other terms upon which such tenant holds, and that the Civil Courts have the exclusive jurisdiction to decide whether or not a person in possession of lands holds a proprietary or an under-proprietary right in the lands. To my mind therefore there is no room for doubt on this point. No doubt the Civil Court cannot set aside the decree of the Revenue Court but it can, as indicated by the very frame of the Proviso to Sec. 108, Cl. (8), give a decree to the present plaintiffs for possession.

1. Rustam Singh v. Mt. Ahmadunnisa, (1937) O W N 886=170 I C 639.
2. Har Nath Singh v. Sri Ram, (1926) 13 A I R Oudh 348=93 I C 374=6 O W N 1214.
3. Mohammad Abul Hasan Khan v. Prag, (1916) 3 A I R P C 150=38 I C 814=20 O C 8 (P C).

The second point, which has been urged, is set out in ground No. 3 of the grounds of appeal where it is stated that the learned Civil Judge has misconstrued the sale deed, Ex. A-1, in holding that the defendant-appellant is not the owner of the plot in dispute. There is really nothing to discuss in this point as it has been thrashed out already at great length by the learned Civil Judge. It is quite clear that what was sold to the plaintiffs and defendants 4 and 5 under their sale deed, Ex. 2, was a series of plots from 681 to 693 with an area of 8·53 acres. It is equally clear that there was a slip of the pen by the writer of this sale deed whereby No. 691 was incorrectly written as No. 651. In the light of the admission of the vendor, Ex. 3, and the fact that the plaintiffs were in possession of this plot without payment of rent from 1906 to 1932, there can be no room for doubt that the plot had been transferred to the plaintiffs. It remains then to consider the sale deed of the defendant. By this sale deed, the defendant has sold a share (not plots) having an area of 16.03 acres less the property consisting of plots transferred to Sarju Prasad and others, plaintiffs. A reference to the plaintiffs' sale deed was obviously enjoined upon the purchaser Noor Mohammad, defendant 1's predecessor, by the very wording of his own sale deed and that sale deed Ex. 2 showed an area of 8.53 acres already transferred to the plaintiffs. It further appears from the evidence of the defendant's own witness, D. W. 1, that at the time of the execution of the defendant's sale deed what was considered was only the area sold, and that inquiry was made from the plaintiffs also. The defendant was therefore perfectly well aware that the only area which he could get and was getting by his sale deed was 7·50 acres. It seems to me that the learned Civil Judge was fully justified in coming to the conclusion that the defendant was not a transferee of plot No. 691 at all by virtue of his sale deed, Ex. A-1.

The third point raised is the question whether the last clause of S. 31, Specific Relief Act, has any application to the present case. In view of what has been said already, it seems to me to be clear that the vendee under the sale deed of 1932 could not but be aware of the whole situation in regard to plot No. 691. He must have looked up the khewat and the mutation proceedings and he could not but be aware that the plaintiffs were in possession of plot No. 691 ever since the date of their sale deed. It seems therefore that the vendee of the 1932 sale deed did nothing more than gamble on the existence of this known mistake in the plaintiffs' sale deed, hoping to be able to make a profit out of it. It has been held in 34 Mad 51[4] that > a second mortgagee who has advanced money with the knowledge of a mutual mistake of fact between the mortgagor and the first mortgagee as to the subject-matter of the first mortgage has notice of that mistake of fact and cannot plead that he acquired his rights in good faith under Sec. 31, Specific Relief Act.

It was also held that > where a plaint alleges a mutual mistake of fact extrinsic evidence of such mistake is admissible although no rectification thereof is prayed for.

The fact that the plaintiffs did not seek rectification of their sale deed within three years of their knowledge of the mistake cannot be of any assistance to the appellant because, as held in A I R 1932 Oudh 123[5] at p. 131, S. 31 is an enabling Section and therefore the fact that the plaintiffs did not choose to avail themselves of that Section at the time cannot deprive them of the rights which they obtained under their sale deed. The same view was taken in A I R 1927 All 355.[6] In my view, the learned Civil Judge rightly held that even if this plot were to be held to have been transferred to Noor Mohammad under the sale deed of 1932, he was not protected by the last clause of S. 31, Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as he was not a purchaser of this property without notice. In my opinion therefore the lower Appellate Court rightly allowed the appeal before it and decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. There is no force in the present appeal which fails and is dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

4. Mahadeva Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar, (1911) 34 Mad 51=8 I C 390=(1911) 1 M W N 36.
5. Lakshmi Narain v. Mt. Mohamdi Begam, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 123=137 I C 102 = 7 Luck 454=9 O W N 60.
6. Kesho Singh v. Roopan Singh, (1927) 14 A I R All 355=100 I C 568.

Magistrate ought to have proceeded with the case according to the provisions of S. 145. The only case in which a Magistrate can refuse to take action under S. 145 is when he is not satisfied that there is a danger of a breach of the peace, but he never said that there was no danger of a breach of the peace in this case. In fact, the report of the police, as noted above, was to the contrary. In case he was satisfied by the police report, his duty was to proceed under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and to issue notices to the parties. If notices had been issued to the parties and written statements filed by them, it was again his duty under sub-s. 4 of S. 145 to receive all such evidence as might have been produced by the parties. The procedure of the learned Magistrate in considering the evidence given in another case as evidence in this case, even though the other case was pending in his own Court as a Revenue Court, was entirely unauthorized and illegal. I therefore accept this reference and setting aside the order of the learned Magistrate send back the case to him to be disposed of according to law.

R.M./R.K. Reference accepted.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 16

THOMAS C. J.

Emperor

v.

Behari — Accused — Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 50 of 1938, Decided on 12th October 1938, reference made by Sess. Judge, Sitapur, D/- 3rd September 1938.

Criminal Tribes Act (1924), Section 23 (1)—Words "any other such offence" mean one of those offences mentioned in Schedule 1.

Section 23, Criminal Tribes Act, refers only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. 1 and has no application to a conviction for an offence which is not contained in Sch. 1. The words "any other such offence" used in the Section mean one of those offences mentioned in the Schedule. S. 23(1) of the Act has in mind not only the previous convictions of the accused but also the offence for which he is being tried. [P 16 C 2]

Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., by the learned Sessions Judge of Sitapur recommending that the order of commitment passed by Mr. D. P. Hardy be quashed. One Bihari, a member of a registered criminal tribe, was sent up before the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate, First Class, of Misrikh on the charge of being found under suspicious circumstances. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the offence under Section 24 (a), Criminal Tribes Act, was established against the accused, but as the accused had several previous convictions, he thought he was unable to pass an adequate sentence. The learned Magistrate has given the following explanation :

> In committing these cases I had regard rather to the previous records of the accused and the limitation of my powers than to the strict interpretation of the words 'such offence' in Sec. 23 (1), Act 6 of 1924.

What the learned Magistrate really thought was that if he was to convict the accused under Sec. 24, Criminal Tribes Act, the accused was liable to enhanced punishment on account of his previous convictions. Therefore the Magistrate was not able to inflict an adequate sentence. This is a wrong view of the law. Sec. 23, Criminal Tribes Act, refers only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. 1 and has no application to a conviction for an offence which is not contained in Sch. 1. The words "any other such offence" used in the Section mean one of those offences mentioned in the Schedule. As far as I have been able to find there is only one conviction against the accused under S. 457, Penal Code, which offence is specified in Schedule 1. There is therefore no question of a second or third conviction under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of Sec. 23, Criminal Tribes Act. The learned Sessions Judge is right in remarking that S. 23 (1), Criminal Tribes Act, has "in mind not only the previous convictions of the accused but also the offence for which he is being tried." I accordingly accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge, quash the commitment and send back the case for trial. As Mr. Hardy, on the evidence, has formed an opinion adverse to the accused, the case will be laid before the learned District Magistrate who will either try it himself or transfer it to the file of some other Magistrate of the First Class.

D.S./R.K. Commitment quashed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 17

HAMILTON J.

Ch. Jadunath Singh and others — Plaintiffs.

v.

Th. Bisheshar Singh and others — Defendants.

Original Suit No. 1 of 1936, Decided on 17th November 1938.

(a) Evidence — Age — Statements made by deceased as to his age in previous case as witness—Exhibits of these statements produced in subsequent case to prove age of deceased held admissible.

In a case, the age of a deceased was at issue and in order to prove his age exhibits of statements made by the deceased previously as to his age were produced. Some of these exhibits were the statements made by the deceased in certain criminal case as a witness. The paper on which these statements were taken down by the Magistrate was a plain paper and not paper with any printed words such as son of, caste, age, etc. Other exhibits were bonds signed by the deceased with endorsement signed by the Sub-Registrar giving the age of the executant :

Held that in both the cases the presumption was that the presiding officer and the Sub-Registrar followed the usual course of asking the witness and the executant respectively their age instead of guessing it. Hence all these documents proved the statements made by a person who was dead as to his age and they were admissible in evidence : 26 All 108 (P C), Expl. [P 22 C 1]

(b) Pedigree — Absence of numbers does not necessarily show that pedigree does not give relative seniority of brothers.

It is an exception and not a general rule that where numbers are not given in a pedigree, it cannot be held that the pedigree intended to give the relative seniority of brothers : A I R 1931 Oudh 246 and A I R 1932 Oudh 172, Expl. [P 22 C 1, 2]

(c) Handwriting—Importance of writing characteristics stated.

The importance of writing characteristics is recognized by all handwriting experts and it is sound because two different persons have not got the same movements naturally, and in fact there are some advanced movements that a writer of a poor class cannot attain. It is also correct not to pay undue attention to the mere shape of letters because it can be imitated and on the other hand persons do not always make a letter in the same shape, for instance, most people have more than one way of making—say a "t". On the other hand, even the shape of letters cannot be disregarded for obvious reasons. There are many ways of making one particular letter, but the same writer does not use all of them and if therefore it is found that in different writings the forms of the letters differ, it is most unlikely that the writer was the same unless for some special reason he altered his natural writing. [P 23 C 1]

(d) Hindu Law — Custom superseding Hindu law must be ancient, certain and reasonable—Such custom is not proved by showing that family property was held by eldest son without partition.

Where a family had been joint before the annexation of Oudh, the presumption is that the family estate is subject to ordinary Hindu law. The burden of proving that there was a custom superseding Hindu law lies on the person saying so. Such custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rule must be strictly construed. The fact that in certain family after the death of the holder of the property the property was maintained as a whole without partition in the family in the name of the eldest son is not sufficient to prove such custom because even a Hindu joint family may hold an impartible estate: A I R 1932 P C 216 and 3 I A 259 (P C), Rel. on. [P 26 C 2]

(e) Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869), Sec. 5 — Sanad and Settlement by Government on one member of family of property belonging to joint family—Rights of other members of family are not affected — Even if this is regarded as trust by that member on behalf of family such trust is discharged by acceptance of guzara by other members.

If a settlement is made by the Government upon a member of a family who was in fact holding the estate for himself and other members, which other members had a right in that property, their right continues even if a sanad is granted to this estate and even if subsequently it was entered in one of the lists of the Oudh Estates Act. The sanad and survey settlements are a mere grant by the Government to one member of the family of property which belongs to the family and are not intended to enure to the sole benefit of the grantee and do not affect the rights of the family. But even if this be regarded as a trust by that member on behalf of other members, the trust is discharged by the acceptance by the members of guzara : A I R 1924 Oudh 273, Rel. on; Case law referred. [P 26 C 2]

(f) Res Judicata—Decision of Revenue Court of Oudh before 1865 regarding rights to land operates as res judicata.

As is shown by the Preamble of Act 16 of 1865, before January 1862, the date of the introduction of the Code of Civil Procedure into Oudh, jurisdiction about the rights to land was of the Courts of Revenue and S. 2 of that Act shows that during settlement all land suits came to the Revenue Court, that is to say to the Court of the Settlement Officer. Hence the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer regarding rights to land operates as res judicata. [P 27 C 2]

(g) Adverse Possession—Widow.

Where a female comes into possession of property as widow, there is no adverse possession. [P 28 C 2]

R. B. Lal, R. N. Shukla, Suraj Sahai, Murli Manohar and Uma Shankar — for Plaintiffs.

B. P. Misra — for Plaintiff 2.

K. P. Misra and S. P. Avasthi — for Defendant 2.

D. K. Seth — for Defendant 3.

Sheo Govind Tripathi — for Defendants 4 to 6.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in this suit ask for a declaration that they are entitled to the property moveable and immovable which was in the possession of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar up to her death in July 1936. The principal claimant is plaintiff 1, Chaudhri Jadunath Singh, who belongs to the family of the husband of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar whose name was Balbhaddar Singh and who predeceased her. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 are transferees of part of the interest of plaintiff 1 to the extent of five annas in properties in lists A and B excepting items 1, 2 and 3 of list B. Their names are Raj Kumar Lal Baldeo Bakhsh Singh and Thakurain Bachi Kunwar. Plaintiff 4, by name Thakurain Bilas Kunwar, is similarly a transferee of two annas in properties in lists A and B excepting items 1, 2 and 3 of list B and also of a two annas share in the properties contained in list C. The property consists of 22 villages in list A which are said by the plaintiffs to constitute a taluqdari estate, of three houses alleged by the plaintiffs to be houses that go with the estate and of proprietary and under-proprietary land and also of some Rs. 58,000 in cash and various moveables which are specified in list D and are of the value of about Rs. 15,000.

Of the defendants, No. 1, Thakur Bisheshar Singh, No. 2, Thakur Chandrapal Singh, and No. 3, Thakur Himmat Bahadur Singh, are also members of the family to which plaintiff 1 and the husband of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar belong. Defendants 4 and 5, Thakur Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh and Thakur Iqbal Bahadur Singh, who claim under a will of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar belong to her family as does defendant 6, Mt. Rukmin Kunwar, who however admittedly has no interest in this litigation and may be disregarded in the body of the judgment. Defendants 7 and 8 are Shri Thakurji Birajman Mandir Khiron and Shri Balbhadreshwar Mahadeva Birajman Shiwala Khiron, beneficiaries under two deeds of waqf executed by Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar, and their case has been argued by counsel for defendants 4 and 5 who are mutawallis under these waqfs. Defendants 4, 5, 7 and 8 are interested as regards only a very small part of the property in suit and I shall not refer to them until I consider the issues which affect them. The pedigree given by the plaintiffs is as follows :

(See next page.)

It has not been accepted in toto by the defendants who in fact allege it to be incorrect in three important particulars. It will be seen that admittedly there was a common ancestor Udaut Singh who had three sons Mardan Singh, Sheo Bakhsh Singh and Guman Singh, and plaintiff 1 belongs to the branch of Sheo Bakhsh Singh while defendants 1, 2 and 3, Bisheshar Singh, Chandrapal Singh and Himmat Bahadur Singh, belong to the branch of Guman Singh. The variations to the pedigree which the defendants bring forward are : (1) Guman Singh was the second son of Udaut Singh and not the third as alleged by the plaintiffs, (by defendants 1, 2 and 3). (2) Defendants 2 and 3 allege that Kali Din Singh was the eldest son of Guman Singh and Sultan Singh was the second son, instead of the contrary as is alleged by the plaintiffs and defendant 1, and (3) Beni Madho Singh, elder son of Dhaunkal Singh, had two legitimate sons, Mahabir who is dead and Shambhu who is alive, so that Shambhu comes before Jadunath Singh in any case (by all defendants).

Defendants 1 and 2 admit the existence of a taluqdari estate to which succession is governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture and therefore they say that Guman Singh being elder than Sheo Bakhsh Singh they come before plaintiff 1. Defendant 2 as he also says that his grandfather Kalidin was the elder son of Guman Singh puts himself before Bisheshar Singh by the rule of lineal primogeniture. Under this rule defendant 3 would be cut out by Chandrapal Singh and he therefore alleges that the talukdari estate was really a joint and ancestral property belonging to the ancestors of the parties and Chaudhri Raghunath Singh, father of Chaudhri Balbhaddar Singh, husband of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar, and his successor held the said taluka in trust for the entire joint family and consequently he is also entitled to one-third of the alleged talukdari estate under Hindu law. As regards the property which the plaintiffs admit to be not a talukdari estate, it is their case that in this family there is a custom which supersedes Hindu law so that the non-talukdari estate goes by the rule of lineal primogeniture just as much as the talukdari estate. The plaintiffs at first alleged that this result was brought about not merely by family but also by tribal custom, but that has been abandoned and this alleged custom is said to exist in the family only as regards property held by the holder of the talukdari estate—property held by other members of the family devolving in accordance with Hindu law.

Note. — At the death of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar, the only persons then alive were Chaudhri Jadunath Singh, plaintiff 1, Bisheshar Singh, defendant 1, Chandrapal Singh, defendant 2, and Himmat Bahadur Singh, defendant 3. All other persons of the above pedigree had died before.

Defendants 1, 2 and 3, on the other hand, allege that non-talukdari estate devolves according to Hindu law although defendant 2 in his written statement claimed the whole of the property in suit as the nearest male agnate under S. 22 of Act 1 of 1869. This claim to the whole property originally put forward in the written statement must be held to be superseded by the fact that when the counsel for defendant 2 exposed his client's case he stated that property outside the talukdari estate was governed by Hindu law. The issues which were framed by a learned Judge of this Court who was then trying suits within the original jurisdiction of this Court have not subsequently been altered and are as follows :

1. (a) Are properties of list A and items 1 and 2 of list B, and item 2 (a) of list C, attached to the plaint an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1869 ?

(b) Were items 3 and 4 of list B properties owned by Raghunath Singh ?

(c) Were properties of list C, items 1 and 2 (a) acquired by Chaudhri Balbhadra Singh ?

(d) Were items 3 to 11 of list C acquired by Thakurain Mithan Kunwar as accretions to her husband's estate ?

(e) Were properties of list B owned by Chaudhrain Mithan Kuar her absolute property ?

2. (a) Whether plaintiff 1 is the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture and did he become entitled to succeed to all or any of the properties in suit on the death of Thakurain Mithan Kunwar, under Cl. 10 of Act 1 of 1869 ?

(b) Has plaintiff 1 succeeded to any of the properties in suit ?

(i) Under the Hindu law. If so what properties ?

(ii) Under the custom of Gaddi-nashini as alleged in para. 12 of the plaint and oral pleadings, dated 10th March 1937 ?

(iii) Under the primogeniture sanad if one be held to have been granted to Chaudhri Raghunath Singh in respect of properties covered by it ?

3. What is the order of seniority ?

(a) Among the sons of Chaudhri Udaut Singh ?

(b) Did Beni Madho Singh have two sons Mahabir and Shambhu of whom Shambhu is alive ?

(c) Is Shambhu Singh a legitimate son of Beni Madho Singh ?

4. Whether Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar came into possession of the properties in suit, without any right and did she perfect her title to them by adverse possession ?

5. Whether Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar executed a will in favour of defendants 4 and 5 ? If so, in respect of what properties, and whether she was competent to execute it ?

6. Were all or any of the properties in suit held by Chaudhri Raghunath Singh in trust for the joint family as alleged by defendant 3 ? If so, to what effect ?

7. Whether the deeds of wakf, dated 13th October 1920, and 14th October 1920, are valid and binding on the plaintiffs and was Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar competent to execute them ?

8. Whether plaintiffs 2 to 4 are purchasers of certain shares in the properties in suit, as stated in para. 13 of the plaint ? If so, to what effect ?

9. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled ?

10. Whether the decisions, dated 21st February 1863, 22nd August 1864 and 11th December 1865, operate as res judicata against defendant 3 as alleged by the plaintiff ?

(This last issue was added on 17th March 1937).

As I have already stated, I shall explain the case of defendants 4, 5, 7 and 8 when I take up the particular issues that concern them. The first issue that I am taking up is Issue 3, and the three points for decision are: (1) Whether Kali Din Singh, as alleged by defendants 2 and 3 and not Sultan Singh, was the elder son of Guman Singh. (2) Whether Sheo Bakhsh Singh was the elder brother of Guman Singh as alleged by the plaintiffs and not a younger brother as alleged by defendants; and (3) whether Shambhu Singh is a son of Beni Madho Singh and if so whether he is a legitimate son.

(1) It is of course immaterial to the plaintiffs whether Kalidin Singh was elder brother of Sultan Singh or not, for if Guman Singh was younger than Sheo Bakhsh Singh, plaintiff 1 comes before the defendant members of the family, and if he was not, then all the defendant members of the family come before plaintiff 1 and the order in which they come before him is immaterial to the plaintiffs. For this reason, at the request of the defendants no separate issue was framed on this point, but a decision of this point is nevertheless necessary because the evidence oral and documentary adduced to prove that Kali Din was older than Sultan is also to the effect that Guman Singh was older than Sheo Bakhsh Singh. If this evidence is false or unbelievable on such a material point, it is equally unworthy of credit on the point whether Guman Singh was older than Sheo Bakhsh Singh or not. I think it therefore most convenient to start by considering whether on the evidence adduced in the case Kali Din Singh is shown to be younger or older than his brother Sultan Singh. There are certain documents which give the age of Kali Din in various years and others which similarly give the age of Sultan Singh. All the documents about the age of Sultan Singh have been filed by the plaintiffs and none by the defendants and it may, therefore, be stated that if these documents are admissible there is no disagreement between the parties as to the age of Sultan Singh. There are a number of documents filed by the plaintiffs and two filed by defendant 3—one of these also being filed by defendant 2—which contain the age of Kali Din Singh. Those filed by the plaintiffs are the following: (The numbers which I give as numbers of these exhibits refer to the copies of originals, but the originals have also been produced and are exhibits with different numbers, but as the copies were produced first and those numbers appear in the printed record, I shall refer to these documents under the numbers given to the copies and not the numbers of the originals, but what I state about them refers to the originals and not to the copies unless otherwise stated.)

Ex. 160. Statement by Kali Din, dated 16th February 1859, in vernacular signed by Kali Din and by Sohan Lal, Tahsildar, and also by two witnesses, Akbar Ali and Sital Prasad. It begins with the words "ordinary question" and the answer to it is 'my name is Kali Din, my father's name is Chaudhri Guman Singh, resident of Khiron, occupation zamindari, age 33 years'.

Ex. 161. This is a similar statement, dated 18th March 1859, signed by Kali Din and by two Qanungos as witnesses and by the Tahsildar who was the presiding officer of that Court. Here again the answer about age which is given as 33 years is in the same form as in Ex. 160.

Ex. 197. This is a copy of proceedings of the Court of Sheikh Najaf Ali, Extra Assistant Commissioner, and includes the names of the parties, the abstract of the claim, the issues and the decision. The date is 17th January 1870, and the age of Kali Din is given as 44 years.

Ex. 200. This is dated 12th March 1870, and is signed by some officer in the vernacular. It has 'Dhaunkal Singh, son of Sheo Bakhsh Singh, aged 48 years, and Kali Din, son of Guman Singh, aged 45 years, stated on oath: Our statements are the same as that of Sultan Singh'.

Ex. 51. This is a bond, dated 8th June 1871, the original being Ex. 253. The bond starts 'I am Kali Din Singh . . . . aged 45 years.' It bears the signature of Kali Din Singh, that of the other party, those of two witnesses and the seal of the Sub-Registrar. The endorsement signed by the Sub-Registrar also gives the age of Chaudhri Kali Din as 45 years.

Ex. 50 is a security bond, dated 11th June 1874, executed by Sultan Singh and Kali Din Singh whose signatures appear to it as well as those of witnesses. The ages are not given in the bond but are to be found in the endorsement which is signed by Sultan Singh, Kali Din Singh and by the Sub-Registrar who states that 'I know the aforesaid Chaudhri Sultan Singh and Chaudhri Kali Din Singh'. The age of Sultan Singh is given as 56 and that of Kali Din Singh as 49 years.

Ex. 73. This is a plaint in the Court of an Extra Assistant Commissioner of Rae Bareli and it is dated 25th June 1878. At the end of the plaint appear the words "we the plaintiffs know and believe that this is true" and there are the signatures Sultan Singh, Kali Din, Dhaunkal Singh and Baijnath Singh written with the pen of Kali Din. There is a note by a clerk of the Court: 'Names of presenters: All four plaintiffs have verified. The ages of the plaintiffs are given as follows: Sultan Singh 60; Kali Din Singh 53; Dhaunkal Singh 58 and Baijnath Bakhsh 53'.

Ex. 77. This is a bond, dated 3rd September 1883, executed by Baijnath Singh, Beni Madho Singh and Kali Din Singh. The certificate of the Sub-Registrar gives the age of Baijnath Singh as 58, Beni Madho Singh 32 and Kali Din Singh 59. The executants' identification marks such as warts, boils, etc. are marked which show the care taken by the Sub-Registrar.

Objection has been made to the admissibility of these documents and my attention has been called to the case in 31 I A 38,[1] where as regards the description of a witness in the heading of the deposition to the effect that the witness was the wife of so and so, their Lordships of the Privy Council stated that it was no part of the deposition proper, that is, no part of the evidence given by the witness on solemn affirmation; that it might have been elicited by questions put by the Magistrate but that it was just as likely that it was filled in by a subordinate official and on the paper when put into the hands of the Magistrate for him to take down the evidence of the witness. Their Lordships therefore held that assuming that this was admissible as evidence against the claim of Makboolan it was not entitled to any weight. (The deposition was of one Ghafooran and not of Maqboolan who was defendant in that suit.)

The plaintiffs, on the other hand, rely on 61 I A 286[2] at p. 306-ff, where it was held that a statement in a decree that certain pedigrees were filed by the parties was admissible to prove that such pedigrees were filed and these pedigrees were admissible evidence against those that filed them. The statements in the decree were evidence either under Sec. 35 or Sec. 13, Evidence Act. It is not contended here that statements by Kali Din and Sultan Singh as to their age are not admissible and indeed defendants 2 and 3 have filed what purport to be statements by Kali Din, but what is asserted is that those statements cannot be proved by the documents produced by the plaintiffs. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 31 I A 38[1] did not state that an entry at the head of the deposition is inadmissible but only that they could not attach weight to it. The age in Exs. 160 and 161 is not in the heading but is actually in the answer to a question by the Court just as is the rest of the statement. The age given in Ex. 200 is not part of the statement and it was not stated on oath. In none of these cases however is there any reason to suppose that the age could have been filled in by a subordinate official

1. Mt. Maqboolan v. Ahmad Husain, (1904) 26 All 108=31 I A 38=8 Sar 583 (P C).
2. Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sunder Mal, (1934) 21 A I R P C 157=150 I C 545=56 All 468=61 I A 286 (P C).

and be on the paper when put into the hands of the Magistrate for him to take down the evidence of the witness. I have examined these originals and find that they were on plain paper and not on paper with any printed words such as son of, caste, age, etc. and the writing throughout appears to be that of the presiding officer himself. I see no reason either to presume that the presiding officer instead of taking the obvious and usual course of asking the witness age should have put down the age merely by guess-work. Similarly, those entries in the registration endorsements were made by the Sub-Registrar himself, and the presumption is that he too would follow the obvious and correct course of asking persons their age instead of guessing it. A similar presumption, I think, arises in the case of Ex. 197. In Ex. 51 the age appears in the body of the bond which is signed by Kali Din himself; while in Ex. 73, the plaint, where the age is given, was verified in writing by Kali Din himself and in addition to that there is that note that all four plaintiffs had verified the plaint.

In my opinion therefore all these documents prove statements by Kali Din, a person who is dead as to his age and they are admissible in evidence. It will be found that the ages agree except that when Kali Din was 45 on 12th March 1870, he could not be 45 on 8th June 1871 and similarly on 3rd September 1883 when his age is given as 59 it appears to have been over stated by a few months: nevertheless taking all these documents together the agreement as to age is, if anything, remarkable in a country where people are not infrequently uncertain as to their real age. (After examining certain documents the judgment proceeded further.) It is clear therefore that the pedigree which the plaintiffs now set up is the same as that set up a number of times in a number of years by Sultan Singh, father of defendant 1, and by Kali Din Singh, grandfather of defendant 2 and father of defendant 3. It is objected that where numbers are not given, it cannot be held that the pedigree intended to give the relative seniority of brothers and counsel for defendants have quoted 8 O W N 306[3] and 9 O W N 304.[4] The fact that they could only refer to two cases when there have been countless cases involving pedigrees itself indicates that these formed the exception rather than the rule, and a reference to those cases will show that this was so. I agree that a pedigree cannot always be accepted as correct even when it is not a forgery. In cases, for instance, when different pedigrees are put in, they cannot all be correct and when but a single pedigree has been put in it may be unsafe to rely upon it. Here however we have a number of pedigrees put in by the direct ancestors of parties to this case and they are always the same, a fact which cannot be due to chance. There was design in the way those pedigrees were written and that design can only have been to give the correct order. I have further shown that though this absence of numbers is a feature of most of these exhibits, there are exceptions and it is also worthy of consideration that where these pedigrees without numbers include persons as to whose seniority there is no dispute, they agree with the order which is admitted by the parties. (After this the judgment considered some documentary evidence and proceeded further.) As regards the documents with which I will now deal two handwriting experts have been produced, one Mr. Gregory Afzal for the plaintiffs and another Mr. Charles Hardless, Senior, for defendant 2.

It will not be necessary for me to depend much on the evidence of Mr. Gregory Afzal because independently of it, it is clear that these documents, Exs. B-5, B-11, C-19, C-24, C-26 and C-27 are forgeries and clumsy forgeries at that. As regards Mr. Charles Hardless, Senior, I must say in the plainest terms that he is an expert who has clearly proved himself to be a dishonest expert, in fact one who without any regard for the truth is ready to give any evidence which would support the case of the person who has engaged him. When an expert does what he had done in this case, in view of the fact that much of what experts say cannot easily be checked by a Court, he becomes a menace to justice. Although I shall have to refer to his evidence when dealing with various documents there are certain points which I can set out at once. Mr. Hardless helped in the cross-examination of the expert and he admits that before he received the disputed documents for him to examine he was aware of the case of his client, namely that they were genuine. Mr. Hardless has explained his modus operandi which is as follows: He takes documents which are given to him as standard documents, examines them all and finds out what are the writing characteristics. He then examines the disputed documents and if he finds that the same characteristics also occur there he comes to the conclusion that all have been written by one and the same person. He says that he takes little or no notice of similarity of form, that is to say of shape of letters and the words that they compose. The importance of writing characteristics is recognised by all handwriting experts and it is sound because two different persons have not got the same movements naturally, and in fact there are some advanced movements that a writer of a poor class cannot attain. It is also correct not to pay undue attention to the mere shape of letters because it can be imitated and, on the other hand, persons do not always make a letter in the same shape. For instance, most people have more than one way of making, say a "t". On the other hand, even the shape of letters cannot be disregarded for obvious reasons. There are many ways of making one particular letter, but the same writer does not use all of them and if therefore, we find that in different writings the forms of the letters differ, it is most unlikely that the writer was the same unless for some special reason he altered his natural writing. (The judgment further dealt with evidence of the handwriting expert and after discussing certain evidence proceeded). I therefore decide Issue 3 as follows:

3. Abdul Karim v. Rashiduddin, (1931) 18 A I R Oudh 246=131 I C 903=8 O W N 306.

4. Ganesh Bakhsh Singh v. Ajudhiya Bakhsh Singh, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 172 = 137 I C 349=7 Luck 564=9 O W N 304.

(a) Sheo Bakhsh Singh was the second son of Udaut Singh and Guman Singh was the third, and (b) and (c) Shambhu Singh is not a legitimate son of Beni Madho Singh but may have been his illegitimate son. I have also decided that I find Sultan Singh to be the elder brother of Kali Din Singh, but this is only material as destroying on other points the evidence of witnesses who say that Kali Din Singh was elder son of Guman Singh and Sultan Singh was the younger son.

Issue 6. The facts which will have to be referred to for the decision of this issue will have a considerable bearing on issues 2, 4 and 10 also. The case of defendant 3 is that Chaudhari Raghunath Singh was, with his cousins, Sultan Singh, Kali Din and Dhaunkal Singh, a member of a joint Hindu family which had held, before the annexation of Oudh, the estate for which settlement was made by the British Government with Raghunath Singh, and so it must be deemed that he held it in trust for the benefit of the joint family. Therefore, it is argued for defendant 3 that the estate must be treated as non-taluqdari property. The plaintiffs allege that the taluqdari estate is governed by the Oudh Estates Act 1 of 1869 and what is non-taluqdari is governed by family custom of Gaddinashini and therefore the plaintiffs are also entitled to it. Defendants 1 and 2 are in agreement with them as regards the alleged taluqdari estate, but they say that the nontaluqdari property is subject to Hindu law.

The heirs of Chaudharain Mithan Kunwar are the heirs of her husband, but, if she perfected her title to the property in suit by adverse possession, then she was entitled to dispose of any part of it by will or by wakf in favour of defendants 4, 5, 7 and 8. The case of the members of this family, other than the taluqdar, has throughout been that the family was a joint Hindu family and the taluqdari estate should be considered as the property of the joint family and not of the taluqdar. This has been asserted even by the plaintiff Jadunath Singh in Ex. 43, the plaint in the suit, against the Chaudharain in 1880 when she was believed to have adopted Anrudh Singh. In para. 2 of the plaint it is stated that the taluqa Pahrauli remained as ancestral property in the joint possession of the descendants of Udaut Singh till 1266-F, but a summary settlement had been made with Ragunath Singh, a sanad was granted by the Government to him and his name was entered in list 3 prepared under Act 1 of 1869 and the plaintiffs got maintenance. The plaintiffs now however rely on certain other documents which are the following.

Exhibit 170, dated 14th December 1859, a reply by Raghunath Singh to an enquiry as to the custom in the family. He stated that from nine generations the family had been holding the post of Chaudhrani of Pargana Khiron and the eldest son always entered into possession and occupation of it and it was not divided with the younger or youngest brothers. From the time the estate was formed, the applicant had been in possession thereof according to the old custom regarding the holding of the post by the eldest son.

By Ex. 52, dated 1st February 1860, Raghunath Singh again stated that after his death the ilaqa should be maintained as a whole and without partition in the family in the name of the eldest son, Chaudhari Balbhaddar Singh, according to the custom of the Raj and Gaddi. In reply to yet another letter enquiring about the succession to taluqdar Raghunath Singh answered by Ex. 157, dated 19th December 1860, that the custom of his family was that after the death of the father the eldest son becomes owner of the estate. In 1869 Sultan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh put in a claim for 2/3rds of Taluqa Khiron and this is contained in Settlement File No. 33 of 1870 in which is Ex. 184, a decision of the British Indian Association to whom it was sent. It will be instructive to read it to see what claim was then made and what answer was made to it by the taluqdar in whose favour was the decision of the British Indian Association and there is an order of Colonel Barrow on that file. The result was that the applicants failed and merely got maintenance which, however, they had already been in fact enjoying. Defendant 3 refers to a number of documents showing that Sultan Singh, etc. claimed a share in the taluqa from the very beginning.

The earliest in date is Ex. 27 a decision of Mr. Capper, dated 18th August 1860, which is referred to in the other later documents. That decision is itself a revision of some prior decision by him. Other similar documents are Ex. 213 probably of 4th May 1869; Ex. 214 of 22nd September 1867, Ex. 34 of 19th February, 1871, which refers to Ex. 184; Ex. 151 of 18th February 1863; Ex. 152 of 10th March 1863; Ex. 172 of 19th October 1865, which refers to Ex. 27; Ex. 189, a judgment of 7th June 1876, and Ex. 215, proceedings of the Court of the Settlement Officer, dated 21st September 1867. Allegations made in these various documents are that the family had been joint till the year 1266-F, and Raghunath Singh had obtained the settlement without objection by other members of the family, but when he had got the sanad he refused to give his cousins anything and in 1266-F by the order of Mr. Gillan who was apparently Deputy Commissioner, Sultan Singh, etc. gave up possession and then Mr. Capper gave them some land for maintenance as is shown in Ex. 27. There is certainly evidence to show that the family was working together and even that they were regarded as a joint Hindu family with joint Hindu property.

Ex. 66, dated 17th December 1856, is a bond possibly amounting to a mortgage executed in favour of Kali Din by Wali Mohammad Mirdaha. It is to the effect that if certain money was not paid the executant would put the said Chaudhri Kali Din in possession of his taraf in village Haripur. Now this Haripur Mirdaha is one of the villages in list A of the plaint forming the taluqdari estate. We find that on 25th November 1858, when the first summary settlement was about to take place, some enquiry had been made from a Qanungo and he made a report, Ex. 8, in reply giving the prior history of this taluqa Pahrauli. It is to the effect that it was included once in the taluqa of Simri and in 1826 Raghunath Singh, as it was his ancestral village, got it excluded and held it as tahsil mahal. Various things happened and eventually as the revenue was not paid in 1259-F a kabuliat was obtained from Beni Madho Bakhsh and it was hypothecated to him. In 1263-F, that is to say in 1855 or 1856, Raghunath Singh paid up the mortgage money and executed a kabuliat. In 1264 during the British Rule, settlement was made separately in the name of the revenue payers and in 1265, that is to say in 1857-58, Beni Madho Bakhsh again entered into possession which continued up to the time that this report was written, that is to say till 29th November 1858. With this report is a list of various villages now forming part of the property in suit and there are some important entries. Against Khiron it is stated : this is ancestral village, but it is the hissadari of other brothers (really cousins) also. The same remark is made about Kamalpur, although unlike Khiron which is entered as ancestral, it is entered as held under mortgage and the same is the entry about Lalpur. About Mirzapur which is entered as an ancestral village, there is a note that it is hissadari also of other brothers. Mohanpur which is entered as a village held under mortgage is also mentioned as one where the brothers have also shares and this applies also to Narindpur which is held under a mustajri lease. Haripur Mirdaha is also mentioned as a village where other brothers have a share and this is that village that was mortgaged to Kali Din some years previously. On the other hand, about certain villages Raghunath Singh alone appears to have been entered as owner, the entry being that the village was purchased by Raghunath Singh and at the end of 1264 settlement was made in his name. As regards two villages Kishan Khera and Khajowa, it is not clear whether the remark is that this village is of Beni and his brothers or whether it is meant to read merely "of his brothers also".

On 14th December 1858, Raghunath Singh alone asked for settlement as is shown by Exs. 9 and 10. He gives also the prior history but does not mention his cousins as having any right in the various villages. Exs. 11 and 12 show that it was proposed to settle the 22 villages which formed the taluqdari estate with Raghunath Singh and he executed a kabuliat Exs. 15 and 16. In the month of December 1858, when Raghunath Singh also agreed to deposit arms as is shown by Ex. 162, he agreed to certain terms to obtain the ilaqa as is shown by Ex. 163. The matter was sent up to the Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner and on 1st May 1859 settlement with him was sanctioned.

During this period, other members of the family were working with him or for him. Ex. 158, dated 31st January 1859, shows that there was some question of profits between Raghunath Singh and one Ram Bakhsh and the tahsildar recorded the statement of Raghunath Singh. In Ex. 167 dated 7th August 1859, Dhaunkal Singh, signing as cousin of Raghunath Singh, taluqdar, agreed to pay the money due by Raghunath Singh to Ram Bakhsh. On 12th February 1859, certain persons filed a suit against Raghunath Singh about the zamindari of mouza Dukhanha, one of the taluqdari villages in suit, and the parties agreed to arbitrate. On 16th February 1859, there was a similar dispute about village Khajowa, the opposite party being one Darshan Singh. Kali Din Singh made a statement which he signed as the cousin of Chaudhri Raghunath Singh in which he stated that Khajowa stood mortgaged with them and in Ex. 168, dated 19th February 1859, the tahsildar reported to a superior officer that as regards the claim of Darshan Singh against Chaudhri Raghunath Singh, Kali Din had stated that Raghunath Singh was suffering from paralysis and was not in his proper senses and Darshan Singh should be asked to wait till Raghunath Singh had recovered. This was about Khajowa village, also one of these taluqdari villages, and Ex. 161 is a statement by Kali Din in similar proceedings about Baraula, Kishen Khera, another of these taluqdari villages, and Khajowa where he stated that the zamindars of the aforesaid villages might pay them, that if the zamindars paid them profits, rateable money could be paid. Ex. 164, dated 17th May 1859, shows that Kali Din verified a kabuliat of one of the villages and so is Ex. 165 about another, while Ex. 166 is a receipt for a settlement patta signed by Raghunath Singh by the pen of Kali Din Singh. Ex. 167 shows that Dhaunkal Singh, signing as cousin of Chaudhri Raghunath Singh, that he agreed to pay in two instalments the rateable money claimed in the suit against Raghunath Singh.

On 29th October 1859, Raghunath Singh got a sanad and soon after that troubles started in the family, for, we find in Exhibit C-17 that Raghunath Singh, Sultan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh agreed to appoint certain arbitrators and to accept their arbitration for the decision in settlement of the case of shares of themselves and of Kali Din who apparently was not present on that day and therefore did not sign the application. It seems then that after this Raghunath Singh went back on the agreement and then started a series of applications which went on for years by which Sultan Singh, Kali Din and Dhaunkal tried to get what they considered to be their rights in this talukdari estate. It was held in those days by the Courts in India that when a sanad had been given to one person, other members of the family had no rights in the estate except to get something as maintenance. Hence we get Ex. 27 giving Sultan Singh, etc. certain groves. There are various documents showing that these claimants got inferior rights in lands which would constitute an income of Rs. 1200 a year. There is one more document on which defendant 3 relies and this Ex. C-1 which purports to be an agreement between Sultan Singh, Kali Dīn and Dhaunkal Singh and Raghunath Singh to the effect that the summary settlement was pending and all of them claimed a division of the ilaka. There was a danger of Government depriving them of the ilaka so they all agreed to remain in possession and occupation and to be in profit and loss as before and no claim for settlement against Raghunath Singh would be made from the others.

This document I am not prepared to find to have been proved to be executed by Raghunath Singh. As I have shown already on 18th August 1860, Mr. Capper had revised some prior order giving maintenance to Sultan Singh and even after that there were renewed applications for a share in the estate. It was not however till 5th August 1864, that any reference is made to this agreement. On that date, it was filed in Court as is shown by Ex. 198. Raghunath Singh, I should say, had already died but the Karinda for his successor says that he knew nothing about it and it must be forged. This Karinda was Sheo Sahai who, as I have already stated, was fully in the confidence of Raghunath Singh and ought to know of it. It bears no signature of Raghunath Singh but only a seal, and the impression of this seal is not shown to be similar to other impressions of a seal of Raghunath Singh. Even if it was the impression of a seal of Raghunath Singh, it would not have been impossible to have obtained the seal which belonged to Raghunath Singh. As for 6 years no mention was made about this agreement in spite of claims being made for which it would have been excellent evidence, I am not satisfied that this agreement was executed by Raghunath Singh.

A number of decisions have been quoted to me: 14 M I A 112,[5] 60 I A 103,[6] 3 I A 259,[7] 4 I A 198,[8] 4 I A 178,[9] 6 I A 161,[10] 16 I A 71,[11] 3 Cal 645,[12] 8 I A 215,[13] 9 I A 41,[14] 14 I A 37,[15] 26 I A 229[16] and 37 I A 161.[17] The facts in these various cases are different, but the general principle appears to me to be that if settlement was made by Government with a certain person and he was in fact holding the estate for himself and others, which others had a right in that property, their right continued even if a sanad was granted to this estate and even if subsequently it was entered in one of the lists of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869. It would appear from Ex. 8 that at the time this settlement was being made the family had for the time being lost possession of the estate. In 1264 settlement was made separately in the name of the revenue payers, whoever they were, and in 1265F, Beni Madho Bakhsh had taken possession and had continued up to 29th November 1859.

Considering all this evidence, I am of opinion that the family was joint before the annexation of Oudh and the presumption would then be that the family estate was subject to ordinary Hindu law. Even a Hindu joint family may hold an impartible estate as was the case in 59 I A 331,[18] but the burden of proving that there was a custom superseding Hindu law lay on the plaintiffs. As has been stated in 3 I A 259[7] such custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rules of law must be construed strictly. The only evidence that there was such a custom appears in those declarations Exs. 170, 52 and 157 and I do not consider these to be sufficient proof. It has been held in 3 I A 259[7] that:

> The sanad and summary settlements were a mere grant by the Government to one member of the family of property which belonged to the family and were not intended to enure to the sole benefit of the grantee, and did not affect the rights of the family. As regards such property which was not previously part of the family estate, it was granted for services presumably rendered with the use of the joint family funds, and could not therefore be separate self-acquired property within the meaning of Hindu law.

Although in the present case the family had temporarily lost its estate when the summary settlement was being made, I

5. Mt. Thakurain Sookraj Koowar v. The Government, (1870-72) 14 M I A 112=2 Sar 705 = 3 Suther 1 (P C).
6. Raja Mohan v. Nisar Ahmad Khan, (1933) 20 A I R P C 95=143 I C 395=8 Luck 65 = 60 I A 103 (P C).
7. Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dayal, (1875-76) 3 I A 259 =26 W R 55=3 Sar 611 (P C).
8. Widow of Shunker Sahai v. Kashi Prasad, (1876-77) 4 I A 198=I L R Sup 220=3 Suther 4=3 Sar 289 (P C).
9. Hardeo Bakhsh Singh v. Jawahir Singh, (1877-78) 3 Cal 522=4 I A 178 (P C).
10. Thakur Hurdeo Bakhsh v. Thakoor Jowahir Singh, (1878-79) 6 I A 161=3 Suther 608 = 4 Sar 10 (P C).
11. Shankar Buksh v. Hardeo Buksh, (1859) 16 Cal 397=16 I A 71=5 Sar 299 (P C).
12. Thakur Shere Bahadur Singh v. Thakurain Dariao Kuar, (1877-78) 3 Cal 645 (P C).
13. Jaidiyal v. Sita Ram, (1882) 8 I A 215 (P C).
14. Ramanund Kuar v. Raghunath Kuar, (1882) 8 Cal 769=9 I A 41=11 C L R 149 (P C).
15. Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh, (1887) 14 Cal 493 =14 I A 37=4 Sar 758 (P C).
16. Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari, (1899) 26 Cal 879=26 I A 229=4 C W N 65 (P C).
17. Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh, (1910) 32 All 415 =37 I A 161=7 I C 648=13 O C 332 (P C).
18. Shiba Prasad Singh v. Prayag Kumari Debi, (1932) 19 A I R P C 216=138 I C 861=59 Cal 1399=59 I A 331 (P C).

think it must still be held that the grant was made to Raghunath Singh because that property had originally been held by him and as it was then held by him on behalf of the joint family so after the grant he held it on behalf of the family. If this constitutes a trust nevertheless defendant 3 fails in his case because the acceptance of the guzara amounts to a discharge of the trust. It was held in 10 O L J 657[19] that when a trust was established but the beneficiary claimed partition of his estate and in lieu of the said claim he accepted an annuity that trust was discharged. In this case there was a guzara even while Sultan Singh, Kali Din Singh and Dhaunkal Singh were pursuing their claims for a share in the property, but I do not think that makes any difference. In addition to this the case of defendant 3 also fails for other reasons. When the talukdar refused his cousins any rights in the estate they took steps to assert their rights.

On 18th February 1863, in Ex. 151, Sultan Singh, Kali Din and Dhaunkal Singh applied for settlement with them on the ground that when the family had not been dispossessed of the estate the family was joint and had remained joint till 1266F and the property was going to be partitioned (which is a reference to Ex. C-17) but the talukdar then heard that the person in whose favour settlement had been made was safe till the next settlement. Reference is also made in this exhibit to the applicants having been given land for their maintenance but that, they stated, was not enough and every one knew that they had been joint with their brother. What apparently the applicants wanted was a partition of the estate but what, at any rate, is clear is that they alleged that the talukdar had been holding on behalf of the family and they were entitled to a share in the estate accordingly. Their claim was dismissed by the Settlement Officer as is shown by the last part of Ex. 151 which is also Ex. 49. Almost at the same time, that is to say on 10th March 1863, as is shown by Ex. 152, there was a claim by Sultan Singh, Kali Din Singh and Dhaunkal Singh against Chaudhri Balbhaddar Singh that their possession and occupation as joint owners in the past, as they had always remained, be restored in the ilaka. Reference is made to a condition in the sanad that those persons who have a share in the ownership under the subordination of the talukdar shall have their rights of possession maintained, but it is clear that this application went further than that and actually claimed a share in full proprietary rights based on previous joint possession, that is to say on the doctrine of trust.

This claim was rejected by the Assistant Settlement Officer as is shown by Ex. 150 and although there was a first and a second appeal, both were rejected as is shown by Ex. 235, the decision of the Financial Commissioner of Oudh. The proper remedy for the claimants then was to apply for permission to appeal to the Privy Council as was done in those cases which have been quoted to me but it was not done. As is shown by the Preamble of Act 16 of 1865, before January 1862, the date of the introduction of the Civil Procedure Code into Oudh, jurisdiction about the rights to land was of the Courts of Revenue and S. 2 of that Act shows that during settlement all land suits came to the Revenue Courts, that is to say to the Court of the Settlement Officer. Rae Bareli Settlement Report at p. 103 states that the Assistant Settlement Officer after a time was invested with full powers and the fact that in this case the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer was never questioned on the ground of lack of jurisdiction and there was, on the other hand, an appeal to the Commissioner followed by a second appeal to the Financial Commissioner shows that Mr. Lang had full powers.

I am therefore of opinion that his decision operates as res judicata and the question of defendant 3 having a right in the estate because the taluqdar was holding the estate for the family, be that regarded as a trust or not, cannot now be re-opened. It has been urged that the decision, Ex. 49, also operates as res judicata because it was an application to Government for settlement and as Raghunath Singh derived such rights as he had from the British Government as grantee, that decision too operates as res judicata. I need not consider this question as I think that while there may be doubt about this, there can be no doubt as regards the proceedings which were decided by Exs. 150 and 235 for there was a regular plaint against Balbhaddar Singh which was decided by the Settlement Officer who had the power to decide it and there was a final decision of the Financial Commissioner. Even, however if these decisions do not operate as res judicata, and even if the acceptance of that guzara was not a discharge of the trust, I do not think that the defence of defendant 3 can be accepted now. Whatever may have been his rights in the year 1858 or 1859, at any rate from the moment that he got a sanad, if not before, Raghunath Singh held the estate adversely to the predecessor of defendant 3. Any suit brought by defendant 3 on the basis of such rights as his father had in 1858 would now be barred by limitation. He has in fact no subsisting title now and cannot therefore defeat the right of the plaintiffs. The property in list A of the plaint is entered in List 1 and in List 3 prepared under the Oudh Estates Act and therefore the rule of lineal primogeniture applies and by that rule plaintiff 1 is entitled to so much of the property as forms part of the original taluqdari estate.

19. Mt. Indar Kuar v. Mt. Nand Rani Kuar, (1924) 11 A I R Oudh 273 = 80 I C 333 = 10 O L J 657.

As regards non-taluqdari, the plaintiff has to prove custom. He has admitted that there is no tribal custom. He has also admitted that the family custom, if any, does not apply in the case of property belonging to members of the family other than the taluqdar. He bases his claim on those statements of Raghunath Singh, Exs. 170, 157 and 52. On the other hand, Ex. A-20 shows that there was a suit about a market in which the plaintiffs were Sultan Singh and Dhaunkal Singh, and the defendant was Balbhaddar Singh, the taluqdar. It was held there that the Gunj was made by Guman Singh, when the family was undivided and the income was enjoyed by all. The plaintiffs were therefore given a decree as to their rights in this Gunj. C-7 is a report of the Qanungo, dated 30th November 1859, that though the Parauli estate was entered in the name of the eldest son the shares were equally divided among all the brothers. This report precedes in time, Ex. 170, the first of the declarations of Raghunath Singh, and is itself preceded in time by Ex. 8, dated 29th November 1858, to which I have already referred. There is nothing to show that his father or he had alone inherited property from his own father to the exclusion of other members of the family. It is true that in Ex. 10 Raghunath Singh referred to certain villages being ancestral, and the Qanungo who made a report, Ex. 8, also referred to some villages being ancestral, but the Qanungo also stated that other members of the family had a share in these ancestral villages. It would appear from that report that Raghunath Singh recovered the villages from another taluqa and added others to it, but we know that one was a village which had been mortgaged to Kalidin Singh himself. There must be very strong evidence to prove custom that superseded ordinary Hindu law. I am unable to hold that the evidence in this case is sufficient to establish that custom. It is admitted that if Hindu law applies plaintiff 1 is entitled to one third, Bisheshar Singh to another third and Himmat Bahadur to the remaining third. I therefore decide Issue 6 as follows : The trust if any was discharged by the acceptance of guzara and further defendant 3 cannot, as some 80 years have elapsed, allege that the trust still subsists.

I decide Issue 10 as follows : The claim of defendant 3 is barred by res judicata as stated above. I decide Issue 4 as follows: Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar came into possession of the estate as widow of Balbhaddar Singh, excepting what she bought from profits, and not without any right and so there was no adverse possession. I decide Issue 2 as follows: Plaintiff 1 is the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture and he is therefore entitled to so much of the property in suit as is taluqdari property. Under Issue 2 (b), I find that plaintiff 1 is entitled under Hindu law to one third of the property which is not taluqdari property subject to the decision which I shall shortly give about the validity of the waqfs and the will. I find that there is no custom of Gaddinashini and I finally find that the primogeniture sanad has been superseded by the Oudh Estates Act and it is under the latter that plaintiff 1 is entitled to the taluqdari estate.

Issue 1. The defence of trust having failed all the property in list A is a taluqdari estate. As regards list C, the only one as to which there is a difference of opinion is item 2 (a), namely Mohal Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar. It is admitted that there was land called patti Gharib in Merui which was part of the taluqdari estate on which the revenue was Rs. 188. No evidence has been brought to show that this Mohal Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar corresponds to patti Gharib except the revenue of Rs. 220 which now would more or less correspond to the Rs. 188 revenue of patti Gharib. There is on the other hand no evidence that mohal patti Gharib was ever sold to anyone else, and the fact that no other part of the taluqdari estate has been sold from 1858 to the present time, I think, establishes the probability that Merui patti Gharib was also not sold. In the circumstances, I come to the conclusion that Merui patti Gharib is now identifiable as Mohal Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar and this also forms part of the taluqdari estate. List B is composed of houses. No. 1 is a taluqdari house which originally went with the estate but which Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar to an unknown extent reconstructed and bequeathed by a will. I shall anticipate my decision as regards this house which I shall give in dealing with the will by stating now that the reconstructed house must be held to be the taluqdar's house which goes with the estate.

The second house is said to be a taluqdari house with appurtenances at Jamkoriapur. The only evidence is that of defendants and it shows that it was built in the life-time of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar by Jang Bahadur Singh and his two brothers Ran Bijai Bahadur and Iqbal Bahadur. Where they got the money from is uncertain, but presuming even it was from Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar with whom they were living, she could dispose of the profits of the property of her husband and give money to Jang Bahadur and his brothers as a gift. The evidence shows that their mother lived in this house and since then implements belonging to her sons are being kept there. It is not shown that Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar had ever possession over it and therefore the plaintiffs are in no way entitled to it. Item 3 is the house in mohalla South Jahanabad, Rae Bareli City, and no evidence has been given about it: not even whether now it is in existence. It is not shown to be taluqdari property and therefore if it is in existence plaintiff 1 is only entitled to one third of it. It is immaterial whether other property was acquired by Balbhaddar Singh or Thakurain Mithan Kunwar except in so far as it has been disposed of by the will or the two waqfs and that will be considered then. In all property, not taluqdari property of which Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar could not validly dispose by the will or the deeds of waqfs, plaintiff 1 is entitled to a one third share.

Issue 5. The case of the plaintiff as to the will which is Ex. D-1 is that the will is invalid because it is improperly attested, that is to say, because the witnesses of defendants that prove attestation are not to be believed and secondly on the ground that the property bequeathed by Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar was not property that she could bequeath. Thirdly, I am asked to construe the will as bequeathing Rs. 5000 only out of the cash left at the death of the Chaudhrain. Suraj Bali Lal, D 4. W. 8, alleges that the Chaudhrain signed the will and then called the attesting witnesses. D 4. W. 9, Cheda Prasad, says that she showed him and Sheo Darshan the will which already bore her signature and asked them to affix their signatures ; after that she had herself showed to them the signatures that she had affixed. I see no reason to disbelieve this witness or the preceding one and I hold therefore that there was valid attestation.

There remains to be considered whether Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar could bequeath (1) the residential house in Khiron and (2) the Kothi of Jamnabagh. The house which she calls her residential house is a house which was reconstructed and according to witnesses of the plaintiffs is the taluqdar's house. Against this evidence there is the evidence of one defence witness who alleges that Balbhaddar Singh in his life-time lived in a house jointly with Beni Madho Singh and Jadunath Singh and this house was constructed by the Chaudhrain where previously there had been no house. This is contrary to what the will says that the Chaudhrain had reconstructed this house and I cannot believe this witness. How far the Chaudhrain has reconstructed this house is not known, as evidence has not been produced whether the reconstruction was great or small. If she destroyed any building which previously existed, it was a house which went with the estate and which she had no right to dismantle without replacing it. It was in fact not open to her to deprive the taluqdari estate of this house which was its appurtenance and to dispose of the house which replaced it. In my opinion, whatever was the amount of reconstruction this house must be held to be in law the original house which admittedly goes with the talukdari estate and the plaintiffs are therefore entitled to it.

The plaintiffs only claim such houses as may be called talukdari houses. The Jamunabagh house and garden is no such house for it was constructed by the Chaudhrain herself with money which was hers to dispose of as she liked and there is no evidence that she intended to make this house an accretion to her husband's estate—in fact she disposed of it by will which shows that she had no such intention. It is not for me in this suit to decide what are the rights of plaintiff 1 as owner of the site, for this house and garden are on talukdari land, against the person to whom the house and garden have been bequeathed. That is a matter which if the parties do not come to an agreement, will have to be decided later. As successors to the estate, talukdari or non-talukdari, of Balbhaddar Singh or as heirs of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar, plaintiff 1 is not entitled to this house and garden. The third point is the cash item. In the will the words are :

> Whereas I have now Rs. 5000 only which is lying for occasions of emergency so I . . . . . make this will that this amount, subject to increase or decrease till my death . . . . . shall be owned after my death by my nephews Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh and Thakur Iqbal Bahadur Singh.

A sum of about Rs. 58,000 was found at the death of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar and the defendants who claim on the will claim all on the ground that this corresponds to those Rs. 5000 subject to increase till her death, as stated in the will. The plaintiffs on the other hand, allege that in any case what she intended to leave was the sum set aside for emergency, whatever this sum was at her death, and further that she only meant to leave Rs. 5000 because this sum without any mention of increase or decrease appears in the certificate of the Sub-Registrar. It has been proved that the will was read before registration and also at registration that the lady fully understood its contents which are in simple language. D. 4 W. 1, Dr. Kedar Nath Sinha, says that the will was read out to him in the presence of the Chaudhrain and that he even asked her a number of questions about the will and she answered that she was leaving the house where she was living, the cash that she possessed, the garden and the kothi and the contents of the residential house. I am satisfied therefore that the contents of the will were known to her and correctly represent her intentions and the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar was what he understood and may even be an incomplete statement of what the lady actually said. I am satisfied therefore that she meant to leave Rs. 5000 subject to increase or to decrease. On the other hand, I am not able to hold that she meant to leave every anna of the money that would be found at her death because she distinctly said in the will that she left a sum put aside for emergencies and certainly when she executed the will she must have had more money available than Rs. 5000 for she had to meet daily expenditure. I therefore hold that she meant to leave whatever was set aside for the purpose of emergency.

It has not been shown how much nor how little was so set aside when she died. As when she had probably less she set aside Rs. 5000 it is impossible to believe that when she had Rs. 58,000 no part of this was set aside. I know, having had to deal with reports of the receivers, that they had to pay a sum of Rs. 10,000 revenue that was due and over Rs. 3000 was still due to servants which were paid subsequently and the Chaudhrain had to live till the next instalment of revenue became due, which would be some three months after her death. One has as far as possible to carry out the intentions expressed in a will and I am therefore, I think, entitled on this material to arrive at a decision as to what part of this Rs. 58,000 could be held to correspond to the sum set aside for emergency. Deducting Rs. 14,000 for revenue and servants there remain Rupees 44,000. The revenue of the estate was about Rs. 25,000 so the profits might be Rs. 25,000 or Rs. 30,000 so that we may deduct about Rs. 10,000 for what she would normally spend till the next amount of revenue came in. This would leave Rupees 34,000. Allowing for other possible expenditure I think one may safely hold that at least Rupees 25,000 constituted a reserve. It might have been more—it could hardly have been less—if it was more the defendant beneficiaries are at fault for not giving proof of it. I find therefore that the will is valid as to Rupees 25,000 and the balance must be held to be part of the non-talukdari estate after payments of what was due by the Chaudhrain such as land revenue and servants' wages. I therefore decide Issue 5 as follows: Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar did execute a will in favour of defendants 4 and 5 and the will is valid as to the house and garden of Jamunabagh other than the land itself and as to Rupees 25,000 of the money found in existence at the death of the Chaudhrain, but it is invalid as to the balance of the money and as to the residential house. There being no mention of any contents of any of the houses in the will itself the will is not valid as to any contents of any of the said houses.

Issue 7.—The wakfs Ex. D-2 and D-3 are only disputed by the plaintiffs on the ground that the property could not be made the subject of a wakf. Ex. D-2 makes a wakf of two bighas of rent free abadi in Khiron proper, on which land is the Thakurdwara built by the Chaudhrain, an orchard and a pucca well and in addition the entire village of Mirazpur. Both Khiron proper and Mirazpur are villages forming part of the taluqdari estate and therefore it was not within the power of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar to dispose of them. Consequently this wakf is not valid.

The second wakf, Ex. D-3, refers to certain numbers in Khiron of an area of 7 bighas 18 biswas and 6 biswansis where there is a temple of Sri Mahadeva Balbhadreshwar Swami and further to village Bhitargaon thok Domi mohal Khas. The Chaudhrain could not execute a waqf of this area in Khiron as it formed part of the taluqdari estate and the wakf is invalid to this extent. Bhitargaon is admitted in the plaint to have been property purchased by Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar herself. The fact that she executed this wakf shows that she did not mean this village to be an accretion to the husband's estate and as it was bought out of the profits with which she was competent to deal, the waqf of this Bhitargaon land must be held valid. As regards buildings the position is as stated above about the Jamnabagh house. I therefore hold that the wakfs are valid only as to village Bhitargaon thok Domi mohal khas.

Issue 8.—The deed by which plaintiff 1 transferred shares as stated in para. 13 of the plaint has been proved and it is therefore valid. I therefore decide Issue 9 as follows : Plaintiff 1, subject to the transfer made by him in favour of the other plaintiffs, is granted a declaration of exclusive right to property in list A, together with Item 2 (a) of list C, namely mohal Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar in village Marui and to Item 1 in list B, namely the talukdar's house with appurtenances at Khiron. He is not entitled to the house in Jamkoriapur nor to the garden and house in Jamnabagh nor to village Bhitargaon nor to Rs. 25,000 out of the sum found in existence at the death of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar. As regards the remaining non-taluqdari property he is entitled to one-third after deducting such amounts as land revenue and servants' wages due in the lifetime of Chaudhrain Mithan Kunwar. This decree is against all the defendants other than Mt. Rukmin Kunwar who has no interest in this property but as she has taken no part in the case there is no reason to grant her any costs.

As regards defendants 4 to 8 they have succeeded in part and failed in part and this applies also to defendants 1 and 3, but the costs incurred by the plaintiffs are mainly due to the defences set up by defendants 1, 2 and 3. The plaintiffs have failed as regards their claim of exclusive title to non-talukdari property but this has not prolonged much the hearing of this case. Taking these facts into consideration defendants 4 to 8 shall bear their own costs. Plaintiffs are entitled to proportionate costs against defendants 1, 2 and 3. Defendants 2 and 3 are responsible for by far the greater amount of the costs, after the suit was filed, which the plaintiffs have had to incur. They shall pay jointly and severally three-fourths of the costs to which plaintiffs are entitled and defendant 1 shall be liable for one-fourth. The plaintiffs are allowed proportionate costs in that they failed to prove exclusive right to non-talukdari property and the proportion is the value of talukdari as compared with non-talukdari property in suit. Counsel fees as to which certificates have not been filed within due time are not to form part of the costs.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 31

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Syed Mohammad Nasir and another — Appellants.

v.

Dwarka Singh and another — Respondents.

Criminal Ref. No. 45 of 1938, Decided on 28th September 1938, made by District Magistrate, Fyzabad.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 145 (4) and Proviso —Magistrate acting under sub-s. 4 need not see whether any party was dispossessed within 2 months before date of order under sub-s. (1).

The procedure prescribed in the first Proviso to S. 145 (4) is not mandatory and if a Magistrate chooses to act under sub-sec. (4), that is to say, decides the question which of the parties was in possession at the date of the order made under sub-sec. (1), it is not necessary to see whether or-not any of the parties has been dispossessed within two months next before the date of the order.

[P 32 C 2]

I. A. Abbasi — for Appellants.

H. Husain and H. H. Zaidi — for Respondents.

Order. — This is a reference by the learned District Magistrate of Fyzabad recommending that an order made by a learned Magistrate of that district under S. 145, Criminal P. C., be set aside and an order under Sec. 146 be substituted for it. The facts of the case are that on 20th September 1937, certain Chhutkau Singh and Dwarka Singh who claimed to be in possession of the entire patti Ram Kishun of village Paikuliakalan, partly as proprietor and partly as mortgagees, made a report to the police against Ram Sumer, Ram Sahai and others stating that they had ejected the accused from certain specific plots of land and had cultivated the plots themselves but that the accused were forcibly cutting away the crops raised by them (the complainants). The police made an investigation, attached the disputed crops (it is said the attachment was made under Sec. 149, Criminal P. C.,) and made a report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for action being taken under S. 145, Criminal P. C. as there was a danger of breach of the peace. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to an Honorary Magistrate on 6th October 1937. The learned Honorary Magistrate called for a fresh report from the police and directed the police to attach the crops if necessary. The police again attached the crops and on 11th November 1937 made another report recommending action under Sec. 145, Criminal P. C. On this report the learned Honorary Magistrate by his order dated 19th November 1937 ordered the parties to file their written statements by 29th November 1937. As some of the parties were not served with this order, another date was fixed on 29th November 1937 for filing of written statements. On 7th December however, the learned Honorary Magistrate returned the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and on 10th December 1937, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate fixed a date for the parties filing their written statements. The case continued for several months and finally on 16th June 1938, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed the final order declaring that the complainants, that is, Chhutkau Singh and Dwarka Singh, were in possession and ordering the attached crops to be delivered to them.

Against this order Mohammad Nasir and Ram Sumer filed an application in revision in the Court of the District Magistrate and the latter officer has made this reference with the recommendation mentioned above. The learned District Magistrate seems to think that because more than two months had elapsed in the case since the date of the preliminary order, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not competent to declare any of the parties to have been in possession and that in the circumstances the only course open to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was to make an order of attachment under S. 146, Criminal P. C. I am of opinion that this is not a correct view of the law. The learned District Magistrate probably had in view the first Proviso to Section 145 (4) which runs as follows:

> Provided that, if it appears to the Magistrate that any party has within two months next before the date of such order been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed, he may treat the party so dispossessed as if he had been in possession at such date.

Sub-s. (4) to S. 145 to which the above is a Proviso is as follows:

> The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, receive all such evidence as may be produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary and if possible decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order before mentioned in such possession of the said subject.

A perusal of the Proviso quoted above together with sub-s. (4) leaves no room for doubt that the procedure prescribed in the Proviso is not mandatory and that if a Magistrate chooses to act under sub-s. (4), that is to say decides the question which of the parties was in possession at the date of the order made under sub-sec. 1, it is not necessary to see whether or not any of the parties has been dispossessed within two months next before the date of the order. As in the present case the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate had decided on the evidence before him that the complainants were in possession, no question arises as to who was in possession two months before the passing of the preliminary order. There is in my opinion no ground for interference with the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and I therefore reject the reference.

N.S./R.K. Reference rejected.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 33

THOMAS C. J. AND ZIAUL HASAN J.

Ram Damodar and others — Appellants.

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 286 of 1938, Decided on 26th October 1938, against order of Sess. Judge, Hardoi, D/- 15th September 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Dying declaration not implicating three of the accused—First information report and eye-witnesses mentioning names of all as having assaulted deceased, but not assigning leading part to the three—Dying declaration held should be relied on.

A great deal of sanctity is attached to the dying declaration because it is expected that the person who is on the verge of death will tell the truth. [P 34 C 2; P 35 C 1]

Deceased in his dying declaration did not implicate three of the accused persons but mentioned names of other accused persons as having assaulted him. In the first information report the names of all accused persons were mentioned and some of the eyewitnesses deposed that all accused persons had taken part in the assault but no leading part was assigned to the three accused persons :

Held it was safer to rely on dying declaration rather than on the first information report or on the eyewitnesses. [P 35 C 1]

(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 325 and 109—Person attacked by many but dying from blow given by one of them—Others are guilty of abetting offence under S. 325 read with S. 109.

Where a person is attacked by several persons armed with weapons but death is caused by a blow inflicted by one of them, other persons who must have known that grievous hurt would, in all probability, be caused, are guilty of having abetted the offence under S. 325 read with S. 109 : A I R 1919 Lah 375 and A I R 1938 Oudh 256, Foll. [P 35 C 2]

Dr. J. N. Misra — for Appellants.

Asst. Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment.—Nabbu Singh, Sobha Singh, Chhuttu Singh, Bala Din, Jai Jai Ram and Ram Damodar have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi under S. 302, I. P. C., read with S. 149, I. P. C. Nabbu Singh has been sentenced to death and the learned Sessions Judge has submitted the record to this Court for confirmation of the death sentence. The remaining five appellants have been sentenced to transportation for life. All the six appellants have also been convicted under Secs. 147/148, I. P. C. Nabbu Singh has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment and the remaining appellants to one year's rigorous imprisonment each. Nabbu Singh, Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh are brothers and Thakurs by caste. Bala Din, Jai Jai Ram and Damodar are Brahmans. Jai Jai Ram is Bala Din's cousin and Ram Damodar is Jai Jai Ram's sister's son. The date and hour of the murder is 19th April 1938 at about 3 P. M.

The case for the prosecution as given by Hirde Narain, P. W. 2, is that the six appellants went to the threshing floor of Bharat Singh deceased in the afternoon. Bala Din accused said to Bhart Singh that "you abused at Holi, abuse now". Bharat Singh who was sitting on a cot got up. Sobha Singh accused struck a lathi at Bharat Singh who fled towards his house. The six appellants pursued him and surrounded him and Nabbu Singh struck a spear at Bharat Singh and all the accused then ran away. Hirde Narain's statement is corroborated by Kaptan Singh, P. W. 4, and Gaya Bakhsh Singh, P. W. 1. Gaya Bakhsh Singh, P. W. 1, who is the brother of Bharat Singh, deceased, took Bharat Singh to the police station Pali which is at a distance of six miles from the scene of the occurrence. The first information report was made at 6 P. M. by Bharat Singh himself and it is in accordance with the prosecution version excepting that it does not mention that the six accused pursued Bharat Singh and surrounded him. The names of all the appellants are mentioned in it. The motive for the assault is also mentioned in it which is to the effect that abuses were exchanged between Bharat Singh and Bala Din accused. Bharat Singh was sent to the hospital at Shahabad where Dr. Sundar Lal examined his injuries on 20th April 1938 at 7 A. M. He found :

(1) Irregular penetrating wound ¾″ x ¾″ into abdominal cavity (gaping) with protrusion of some fatty tissue through the opening on the upper part of abdomen 2½″ above the navel, (2) contusion 2″ x ¾″ on the middle lumbar region.

In the opinion of the doctor injury No. 1 was grievous and dangerous and was probably caused by a pointed instrument such as a spear. Bharat Singh died about 6 P. M. on the same date. His dead body was sent to the Civil Surgeon at Hardoi for post mortem examination and the following injuries were found on him :

(1) A penetrating wound 1″ x ¾″ and down into the abdominal cavity.

(2) A contusion 10″ x 4″ over upper part of back.

(3) A contusion 8″ x 3″ over middle of back on the left side.

(4) A contusion 6″ x 4″ over right side of head and face. The scalp was congested below the injuries. The pleurae was congested. Both the lungs were deeply congested. Ventricles of the heart contained clotted blood.

The injury report Ex. 3 prepared by Dr. Sunder Lal shows only two injuries while the post mortem report shows four injuries. It is difficult to understand how Dr. Sunder Lal could have missed injury No. 4 which was a contusion 6″ x 4″ over right side of head and face unless this was a post mortem injury, that is caused by some one after deceased's death. Bharat Singh's dying declaration was recorded by Syed Jafar Mirza Saheb, Naib Tahsildar, P. W. 6, on 20th April 1938, at about 2-30 A.M. and it differs from the first information report. It is as follows :

I was sitting in the threshing floor near my house when Nabbu Singh, Chhuttu Singh, Sobha Singh all the three persons rushed and fell upon me. First Sobha struck a lathi on my waist. I stood up. Then Nabbu Singh struck a spear on my belly. There existed no particular enmity between me (and them); only an exchange of abusive language had taken place in connexion with the nautch party of a natni on the occasion of Holi festival at the door of Ram Singh and from that day onwards he and his companions Jai Jai Ram, Bala Din and Ram Damodar Brahmans armed with lathis and spears used to threaten me. Yesterday in the noon at 2 P.M. they assaulted me with spear. . . . .

He has not named the three Brahman accused, namely Bala Din, Jai Jai Ram and Ram Damodar as his assailants, nor has he stated that they were with Nabbu Singh and others though he has distinctly said that Jai Jai Ram, Bala Din and Ram Damodar Brahmans used to threaten him. The accused have denied the charge and have alleged enmity with the prosecution witnesses. Nabbu Singh examined one witness in his defence, namely Niranjan Lal Patwari, who has stated that Hirde Narain's father has tenancy in a patti of many co-sharers including Sobha Singh and Nabbu Singh accused and Gaya Bakhsh Singh. The evidence of this witness does not help the accused at all on the main incident. He was produced to falsify the statement of Hirde Narain about the tenancy land. The case against the accused depends on the statements of Gaya Bakhsh Singh, Hirde Narain, Deep Singh, Kaptan Singh and Sultan Singh P. Ws. 1 to 5, and Fatte P. W. 7 also to some extent supports the prosecution case. The eye-witnesses are Hirde Narain, Deep Singh, Kaptan Singh and Sultan Singh P. Ws. 2 to 5. Their names are mentioned in the first information report, and they saw the incident from a distance of about 25 paces from the threshing floor.

Hirde Narain has stated that he was sitting under a pakaria tree to the east of Bharat's northern chaupal after his meal and that Deep Singh and Sultan Singh were also there. That the six appellants came to the threshing floor where Bharat was from the west side; that Bala Din said to Bharat Singh "you abused at Holi, abuse now;" that Bharat got up from the cot and Sobha struck a lathi at Bharat; that the six appellants pursued him and surrounded him and Nabbu Singh struck a spear at Bharat; that Bharat Singh fell down and the accused ran away; that Gaya Bakhsh, his brother, came from the house and took Bharat away, that Nabbu had a spear and the other accused had lathis and that they were wielding their lathis but he could not say whether they hit Bharat or not. Deep Singh, Kaptan Singh and Sultan Singh corroborate Hirde Narain. Deep Singh has stated that Nabbu had a spear and the other accused had lathis but he did not see them wield their lathis. P. W. 1, Gaya Bakhsh Singh, is the brother of the deceased. He says that when he got to the scene he saw the appellants whom he recognised running away. Patte P. W. 7 who has a tailoring shop on the west of Bharat's house states that he saw the six appellants with three others consulting together near a ruined house and shortly after the accused went eastwards. He then heard a noise and he ran and saw Bharat Singh lying on the ground. He had a spear injury on the abdomen and on inquiry Bharat Singh told him that Nabbu had struck a spear at him and the remaining accused had lathis.

The learned Sessions Judge has believed the evidence of these prosecution witnesses. We have also carefully considered their statements and, in our opinion, they are true and there are no grounds to reject them so far as they relate against the Thakur accused, namely Nabbu Singh, Sobha Singh and Chuttu Singh. We have already stated that Bharat Singh deceased did not implicate the three Brahman accused in his dying declaration. It might be that he was in expectation of death and he named only those accused persons who actually took part in the assault, that is to say the three Thakur accused. A great deal of sanctity is attached to the dying declaration because it is expected that the person who is on the verge of death will tell the truth. It is true that the names of all the appellants are mentioned in the first information report, but when Bharat Singh made the report his brother, Gaya Bakhsh Singh, P. W. 1, was with him and he may have suggested their names. In any case we consider it safer to rely on the dying declaration rather than on the first information report or on the eyewitnesses, who do not assign any leading part to the three Brahman accused. There is no special reason why they should have associated themselves with the Thakur accused in this murderous assault. The contention of the learned Assistant Government Advocate is that when Bharat Singh made the dying declaration he was in agony and therefore he might have forgotten or could not state the names of the three Brahmans. It is true that he must have been in great pain, but it is clear from the evidence of Syed Jafar Mirza, Tahsildar, who recorded the statement, that Bharat Singh was in his senses at the time when he made the statement. The deceased mentioned the names of the three Brahman accused as the persons who had been abusing and threatening him on previous occasions, and if they joined Nabbu Singh in the assault he would surely have mentioned their names. In our opinion, the case against the three Brahman accused is very doubtful and we give them the benefit of the doubt.

The case against Nabbu Singh, Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh is very clear. We uphold the conviction and sentence passed on Nabbu Singh. The assault on the deceased by Nabbu Singh was premeditated, cowardly and without any justification and the learned Sessions Judge was justified in passing the extreme penalty under the law. With regard to Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh, in our opinion, the offence committed by them is under Sec. 325, I. P. C., read with S. 109, I. P. C., and not S. 302, I. P. C. or Ss. 147/148, I. P. C. We believe the evidence of the prosecution witnesses that Sobha Singh assaulted the deceased with a lathi and that Chhuttu Singh pursued the deceased and surrounded him. In 20 Cr L J 711[1] two persons armed with deadly weapons made an attack upon another and it was proved that death was caused by a blow inflicted by only one of them. The Hon'ble Judges who decided that case held that the one who struck the blow was guilty of murder and the other who must have known that grievous hurt would in all probability be caused was guilty of having abetted the offence under S. 325 read with S. 109, I. P. C. The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court in Cri. Appeal No. 233 of 1938[2] of which one of us was a member.

We therefore dismiss the appeal of Nabbu Singh and confirm the sentence of death passed upon him and direct that he be hanged till he is dead. It seems to us that the intention of Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh was to give the deceased a beating with lathis. In our opinion, they abetted the offence under Sec. 325, I. P. C. and though the act of murder committed by Nabbu Singh was done with the aid of Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh, it cannot, in our opinion, be said that it was the probable consequence of the abetment on their part. We therefore alter the conviction of Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh from S. 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C., to one under S. 325 read with S. 109, I. P. C., and sentence them to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment each. We set aside the convictions of Nabbu Singh, Sobha Singh and Chhuttu Singh under Ss. 147/148, I. P. C. We allow the appeals of Bala Din, Jai Jai Ram and Ram Damodar and direct that they be released.

N.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

1. Bahal Singh v. Emperor, (1919) 6 AIR Lah 375 =52 I C 791=20 Cr LJ 711=24 PR 1919 Cr.

2. Raja Ram v. Emperor, Reported in (1938) 25 A I R Oudh 256=178 I C 162=1938 O W N 1057.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 35

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Lallu Ram and others — Applicants.

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 32 of 1938, Decided on 10th October 1938, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Kheri, D/- 23rd February 1938.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367—Case referred to superior Magistrate under S. 349—Form of judgment which he should conform to, stated.

It is not sufficient for a superior Magistrate, to whom a case has been referred under S. 349, to accept the findings of the inferior Magistrate making the reference; he should form his own independent judgment and write a judgment according to the provisions of S. 367 : 19 All 506 (F B), Disting.; A I R 1919 Pat 290, Foll. [P 36 C 1, 2]

Dr. J. N. Misra — for Applicants.

Order.—This is an application in revision against an order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri who dismissed the applicants' appeal against their conviction and sentences under S. 147, I. P. C. It appears that the applicants were tried by a Tahsildar Magistrate of the Second Class under Ss. 147 and 323, I. P. C. The Tahsildar recorded evidence and came to the conclusion that the applicants were guilty under both the Sections but was of opinion that they deserved severer punishment than he could inflict. He therefore referred the case to the Subdivisional Magistrate under Sec. 349, Criminal P. C. The latter in his judgment after referring to the history of the case but without stating the facts passed the following order in the case:

I have gone through the finding of the Tahsildar Magistrate and the evidence adduced by the complainant in that Court. I am fully convinced that the accused have committed the offence under which they have been charged. I hold them guilty under S. 147, I. P. C., and convict and sentence each of them to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. I also hold them guilty under Sec. 323, I. P. C., and convict and sentence each of them to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment, both sentences to run concurrently.

Against this order the applicants appealed to the Sessions Judge and contended that the judgment of the learned Subdivisional Magistrate was no judgment in law. The learned Judge agreed with this contention but refused to send back the case to the learned Magistrate for writing a proper judgment on the grounds that it would involve a waste of public time and that the accused have by their own dilatory tactics disentitled themselves to any indulgence. The learned Judge was probably also influenced by the fact that the offence under S. 323 was compounded by the parties after the accused filed their appeal. So far as the applicants' conviction under Sec. 147 was concerned, their appeal was dismissed.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has relied on the case in 19 All 506,[1] but that case relates to the judgment of an Appellate Court while in the present case the judgment in question is the judgment of the trial Court. It has been held by various High Courts in India that it is not sufficient for a superior Magistrate, to whom a case has been referred under Sec. 349, Criminal P. C., to accept the findings of the inferior Magistrate making the reference and that he should form his own independent judgment and write a judgment according to the provisions of Sec. 367, Criminal P. C. In 20 Cr L J 444[2] the facts were very similar to those of the present case and the Subdivisional Magistrate's order was also quite similar to the order passed by the Subdivisional Magistrate in this case. A learned Judge of the Patna High Court holding that upon the test laid down by S. 367, Criminal P. C., the Subdivisional Magistrate's judgment was not a judgment at all, sent the case back to the Magistrate's Court for writing out a proper judgment. I would have adopted the same course in the present case, but for the fact that in view of the special circumstances of the case, this is no longer necessary. As said above, the parties have compounded the offence under S. 323. The accused have already undergone some imprisonment under S. 147 also. The complainant does not appear to oppose this application. In view of these circumstances I accept this revision and reduce the sentence of the applicants under S. 147, I. P. C., to that already undergone by them. The order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., does not also seem to be necessary and is hereby set aside.

D.S./R.K. Sentence reduced.

1. Queen-Empress v. Pandeh Bhat, (1897) 19 All 506=1897 A W N 142 (F B).

2. Thakur Singh v. Emperor, (1919) 6 A I R Pat 290=51 I C 268=20 Cr L J 444.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 36

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Emperor

v.

Babu Ram — Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 41 of 1938, Decided on 2nd November 1938, made by Sess. Judge, Sitapur.

Sugar-Cane Act (15 of 1934), Sec. 7—Rules under—U. P. Sugar-Cane Rules (1936), Rules 9 and 13—Two persons charged under Rr. 9 and 13 — One tried and convicted — Other tried afterwards—Conviction of first held no ground for acquittal of other if both acted jointly as agents.

Where two persons who had not paid the price of the sugar-cane purchased by them, were charged under Rr. 9 and 13, U. P. Sugar-Cane Rules, and ordered to be prosecuted, but as one of them could not be found for the time, the case proceeded against the other and ended in his conviction and subsequently the first turned up and was tried :

Held that the conviction of the second could not be a good ground for acquittal of the first if both of them were acting jointly as agents of persons mentioned in R. 13. [P 37 C 1]

H. K. Ghosh, Assistant Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

Mathura, Umrao, Kanhai and Jaiabhant in person.

Order.—This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Sitapur recommending to this Court that the conviction of Babu Ram who was sentenced by a Magistrate of the First Class to pay a fine of Rs. 20 under Rr. 9 and 13, U. P. Sugar-Cane Rules 1936 be set aside. It appears that certain tenants of the Sitapur District put in an application before the Deputy Commissioner of that district saying that the H. R. Sugar Factory Ltd. of Bareilly purchased cane from them on 4th May 1936 but that the price of the cane had not been paid to them. This application which was put in, on 26th June 1936, was sent to the Naib Tahsildar for report after inquiry. The Naib Tahsildar made a report on 14th July 1936 that Raghubar Singh and Babu Ram appeared from inquiry to have purchased cane from the applicants on behalf of the H. R. Sugar Factory, Bareilly, and that his inquiries further disclosed that the price of cane had not been paid by these persons to the tenants. It was on this report that both Raghubar Singh and Babu Ram were ordered by the learned District Magistrate to be prosecuted under the Sugar-Cane Rules. As Babu Ram could not be found for the time being the case proceeded against Raghubar Singh and ended in his conviction. Subsequently, Babu Ram turned up and was tried summarily and fined Rupees 20.

The learned Sessions Judge has made this reference mainly on the ground that as the two cases against Raghubar Singh and Babu Ram respectively related to the price of the same cane purchased on the same day and as Raghubar Singh has already been convicted, Babu Ram should not have been convicted. I doubt if the ground taken by the learned Sessions Judge could be urged as a good ground for the acquittal of Babu Ram if both he and Raghubar Singh were acting jointly as agents of persons mentioned in R. 13; on going through the evidence, as it is on the record, I agree with the learned Judge that the accused should have been given the benefit of doubt as the evidence did not prove anything against him beyond the fact that he sometimes used to pay the price of cane sold to the H. R. Sugar Factory Ltd., Bareilly. On the other hand the accused led evidence to prove that he was only a weighman in the factory and had no responsibility about the payment of the price of cane. The trial having been summary, the evidence is not on the record but this is what appears from the judgment of the learned Magistrate. I may also observe that the learned Magistrate was wrong in relying upon the result of the Naib Tahsildar's inquiry as the report of the Naib Tahsildar was based on hearsay and was therefore inadmissible. I accept this reference and set aside Babu Ram's conviction and sentence under Rules 9 and 13 of the Sugar-Cane Rules. The fine if paid shall be refunded.

N.S./R.K. Conviction set aside.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 37

THOMAS C. J.

Baijoo and others—Accused — Applicants.

v.

Emperor.

Abdul Ahmad Khan — Complainant.

Criminal Ref. No. 52 of 1938, Decided on 2nd November 1938, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Sitapur.

(a) Criminal Trial — Procedure — Summary trial—Magistrate should record in brief reasons for conviction — But brevity should not tend to obscurity.

Where a Magistrate, invested with powers under S. 260, Criminal P. C., is trying a case summarily, it is desirable that he should set out in the column reserved for that purpose so much of the reasons that have influenced him as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded, and that while this should be recorded with brevity, the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity. [P 38 C 1]

(b) Cattle Trespass Act (1871), S. 22—Compensation cannot be awarded unless specifically claimed—Sentence of imprisonment in default of compensation is not competent.

No compensation can be awarded under S. 22 for loss caused by the seizure of cattle unless the complainant makes the specific claim for it; and the Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment under S. 22 in default of payment of the compensation. [P 38 C 1, 2]

P. N. Chaudhri — for Accused.

Complainant in person.

Order. — This is a criminal reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., by the Additional Sessions Judge of Sitapur recommending that the conviction be set aside. Abdul Ahmad Khan filed a complaint under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, against Baijoo, Peer Khan and Jafar Khan. The case was tried by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Misrikh, who convicted the accused under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act (1 of 1871) and fined each of them Rs. 50, in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month. The case was tried summarily. The learned Subdivisional Magistrate has admitted in his explanation that the offence committed was under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, but under pressure of work S. 24 was written. I am inclined to think that this was a clerical error. The offence undoubtedly was triable summarily, but in my opinion the learned Subdivisional Magistrate has not followed the correct procedure laid down for summary trials. S. 263 (h), Criminal P. C., lays down that where no appeal lies, the Magistrate need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge; but he shall enter the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor. The Magistrate's judgment is as follows:

Five witnesses testified on behalf of the prosecution in this case and four for the accused. Upon consideration I find the evidence of the former worthy and of the latter unworthy of belief.

Where a Magistrate, invested with powers under S. 260, Criminal P. C., is trying a case summarily, it is desirable that he should set out in the column reserved for that purpose so much of the reasons that have influenced him as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded, and that while this should be recorded with brevity, the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity. These safeguards are essential so that in case of revision the High Court may have sufficient materials on the record before it for arriving at the conclusion as to whether the order of the Magistrate is right or wrong. The language of the Legislature is sufficiently clear and no authority is needed for this elementary rule of procedure.

The learned Magistrate has committed another error. Under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, compensation is to be awarded but no compensation can be awarded for loss caused by the seizure of cattle unless the complainant makes the specific claim for it. The Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, in default of payment of the compensation. Here, as I have pointed out, the learned Magistrate has fined each of the accused Rs. 50 or in default of payment of fine to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The complainant was allowed Rs. 20 as compensation but there is no proof on the record of the damage the complainant actually suffered. The judgment does not show what the complainant actually paid in getting the cattle released. The order of the learned Magistrate is against the law and procedure and therefore it must be set aside. I therefore accept the recommendation of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and set aside the conviction of the accused persons, but I do not agree with the learned Judge that in view of the fact that the accused have already undergone inconvenience and expense therefore no retrial should be ordered. I am of opinion that this is a fit case in which the retrial should be ordered. I therefore direct that the file of the case will be laid before the learned District Magistrate, who will send it to some Magistrate other than Mr. Hardy, who has already expressed his opinion, for retrial.

N.S./R.K. Retrial ordered.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 38

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Ram Roop and another — Accused.

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Ref. No. 48 of 1938, Decided on 2nd November 1938, made by Sess. Judge, Fyzabad.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Sec. 425 — Accused filling up ditch dug by complainant held not guilty of mischief.

Complainant had a vegetable garden attached to his house to the east. The accused closed the old door of their house and opened a new door towards the complainant's garden and when the complainant dug a ditch around his garden, the accused filled it up and erected a chabutra:

Held that accused was not guilty of the offence of mischief. [P 39 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 106 — Security cannot be taken from person convicted under Sec. 426, Penal Code.

Security under S. 106, Criminal P. C., cannot legally be taken from a person who has been convicted under Sec. 426, I. P. C., as the offence of mischief does not involve breach of the peace: 26 Mad 469, Rel. on. [P 39 C 1, 2]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 425— "Property" does not include right of easement.

"Property" in S. 425 means tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed and does not include a right like an easement, etc.: A I R 1930 Mad 973, Foll. [P 39 C 2]

Bhagwati Nath — for Accused.

Order. — This is a criminal reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad. Ram Roop and Ram Chandra were prosecuted under Secs. 447 and 426, I. P. C., on a complaint made by one Ram Dulare. The complaint was to the effect that the complainant had a vegetable garden attached to his house to the east, that the accused closed the old door of their house and opened a new door towards the complainant's garden and that when the complainant dug a ditch around his garden, the accused filled it up and erected a chabutra on which they put up the Congress flag. A Magistrate of the third class who tried the accused convicted them under both the Sections and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 10 under Sec. 447 and of Rs. 5 each under S. 426, I. P. C. The convicted persons appealed to the District Magistrate who set aside their conviction under S. 447 but maintained that under S. 426. He further ordered the accused under Sec. 106, Criminal P. C., to give security for one year. Against the appellate order of the learned District Magistrate the accused filed a revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge. The learned Judge did not accept the accused's plea that their conviction under Sec. 426 was bad in law, but coming to the conclusion that security under Sec. 106, Criminal P. C., could not legally be taken from a person who has been convicted under S. 426, I. P. C., as the offence of mischief does not involve breach of the peace, has sent the case to this Court with the recommendation that the order under Sec. 106, Criminal P. C., be set aside.

Notice of this application was given to the complainant but he has not appeared. The accused persons are represented by a counsel. The learned counsel has not only supported the order of reference but has also contended that on the facts of the case his clients could not be convicted under Sec. 426, I. P. C. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that an order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., could not legally be passed in this case as the offence of mischief of which the accused were convicted does not involve a breach of the peace. This view is supported by the decision of the Madras High Court in 26 Mad 469.[1]

I am however of opinion that the facts as stated do not even make out a case of mischief against the accused. Under S. 425, I. P. C., a person is said to commit mischief (which is punishable under Sec. 426) when he, with intent to cause or knowing that he is likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, causes the destruction of any property or any such change in any property or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. To constitute mischief it is necessary not only that wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person be intended or be likely but also that any property should either be destroyed or any such change should occur in any property or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. Now, in the first place it is doubtful if it can be said that any wrongful loss was caused to the complainant by the accused filling up the ditch, as wrongful loss is defined as "loss by unlawful means of property to which the person using it is legally entitled." In the second place the filling up of the ditch by the accused does not affect any property injuriously so as to diminish its value or utility. The learned Judge thinks that the accused were guilty under S. 426 as they destroyed the fruits of the complainant's labour in making a ditch, but property in S. 425 means tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed and does not include a right like an easement, etc. as was held in 1930 M W N 909.[2] It appears to me therefore that not only is the order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., bad but that the conviction of the accused under S. 426, I. P. C., cannot also be maintained. I therefore accept this reference and set aside the conviction and sentences of the accused and cancel the order passed against them under Sec. 106, Criminal P. C.

N.S./R.K. Conviction set aside and Order cancelled.

1. Kannookaran Kunhamad v. Emperor, (1903) 26 Mad 469=2 Weir 48.
2. Rudraraju Ramaraja v. Emperor, (1930) 17 A I R Mad 973=1930 Cr C 1189=129 I C 77=32 Cr L J 225=1930 M W N 909.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 40

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Pt. Jai Narain Misra — Appellant.

v.

Shiam Lal and another — Respondents.

Second Appeals Nos. 446 to 448 of 1937, Decided on 17th October 1938, against order of Civil Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, D/- 22nd November 1937.

(a) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), Secs. 4, 6 and 7 (1) (b) — A executing simple mortgage of his share in village in favour of P — P obtaining decree on mortgage — After A's death his sons and daughter putting in application under Sec. 4—Order under S. 6 passed by Collector —Subsequently one of A's son granting lease in favour of defendants in respect of some plots on the land, enabling them to dig earth from them — P suing defendants for perpetual injunction restraining them from digging the earth — Suits by P held not to be in respect of any debt and held not barred by S. 7 (1) (b).

The expression "in respect of any debts" in S. 7 (1) (b) does not mean "having any connexion with any debts," the latter expression being too wide. [P 41 C 1]

A who owned a share in a village executed a simple mortgage in respect of it in favour of P. P obtained a decree on the mortgage. After A's death his sons and daughter put in an application under Sec. 4 and the Collector passed an order under Sec. 6. Subsequently M, one of the sons of A, gave four leases to the defendants on behalf of himself and his brother and sister in respect of certain specified plots of land. The leases were executed subsequent to the application under S. 4 and were given for the purpose of enabling the lessees to dig earth from the plots. P thereupon filed suits against the defendants for a perpetual injunction restraining them from digging the earth from the plots alleging that the leases infringed his rights and were void :

Held that the suits could not be said to be in respect of any debts and were not barred under S. 7 (1) (b). The special Judge appointed under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act had no jurisdiction to give a decree for perpetual injunction sought for by P : A I R 1938 Oudh 192, Ref. [P 41 C 1, 2]

(b) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), Secs. 3 and 7 (1) (b) — Jurisdiction of special Judge to decide validity or otherwise of transfer — Effect of.

The jurisdiction of the special Judge to decide the validity or otherwise of a transfer does not bar the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts to entertain other suits relating to that transfer. [P 42 C 1]

(c) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), Ss. 4 and 11 (2) — Sec. 11 (2) does not contemplate claim derived from applicant under S. 4 subsequent to his application.

Sub-section (2) of Sec. 11 does not contemplate any claim derived from the applicant under S. 4, subsequent to his making his application, the reason being that all such transfers are void under Sec. 7 (3). [P 42 C 1]

(d) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), S. 11 (4)—Order referred to in S. 11 (4) means special Judge's decision on claim to property mentioned in notice under S. 11.

The order referred to in sub-s. (4) of S. 11 means the special Judge's decision on any claim to the property mentioned in the notice under Sec. 11 brought before him. [P 42 C 1]

Niamat Ullah and Kashi Prasad Srivastava — for Appellant.

G. D. Khare — for Respondents.

Judgment.— These are three connected second appeals against appellate orders of the learned Civil Judge of Mohanlalganj in three suits brought by the plaintiff-appellant in the following circumstances :

Mohal Ali Mehdi of village Kharka comprising a five annas ten pies share was owned by two brothers, Abul Hasan and Ali Mehdi in the proportion of two annas nine pies and three annas one pie respectively. Abul Hasan died leaving several children and two of his sons, namely Ali Naqi, and Mohammad Askari, made a usufructuary mortgage of a ten pies three krants share in favour of the plaintiff-appellant on 1st January 1932. The term of this mortgage was ten years. On 23rd July 1932 the plaintiff-appellant took a simple mortgage of the three annas one pie share from Ali Mehdi and a decree on foot of this mortgage has already been passed in favour of the appellant on the basis of a compromise. Ali Mehdi is also dead and has left two sons and a daughter. On 29th October 1936 the sons and daughter of Ali Mehdi put in an application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act, and the Collector passed an order under Sec. 6 of the Act on the same date. Subsequently one of the sons of Ali Mehdi named Mohammad Ali who had been appointed lambardar of the mohal gave four leases to various persons, the defendants in the present three suits, on behalf of himself and his brother and sister in respect of certain specified plots of land. The lease in favour of Shiam Lal and Ram Lal, respondents to Appeal No. 446 of 1937, was executed on 2nd November 1936. That in favour of Babu Kedar Nath, defendant-respondent in Appeal No. 447, was executed on 25th January 1937 and that in favour of Sardar Sahib Sardar Singar Singh, respondent in Appeal No. 448, was executed on 4th November 1936. It will thus be seen that all the three leases were executed subsequently to the application under Sec. 4, Encumbered Estates Act. All the leases were for 12 years and were given for the purpose of enabling the lessees to dig earth from the leased plots to the depth of twelve feet for the purpose of making bricks. The suits which have given rise to these appeals were brought by the plaintiff-appellant for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from digging earth from the plots in suit on the allegation that the leases given by Mohammad Ali to the different defendants infringed his rights and were void.

The trial Court, the learned Munsif of Havali, Lucknow, decreed the suits except in respect of plots Nos. 37, 41/1 and 50 in Suit No. 91. The reason for dismissal of the suit in respect of these plots was that they were found to have been leased out prior to the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. The learned Munsif also dismissed the claim for damages. The defendants to the three suits filed appeals against the trial Court's decrees and the plaintiff filed a cross-objection in respect of the plots about which his suit had been dismissed. The learned Civil Judge who heard the appeals came to the conclusion that the suits were barred by the provisions of S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act, and accordingly decreed the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suits and cross-objections. The plaintiff has therefore brought these appeals against the order of the learned Civil Judge. The question in all the three cases is whether or not the suits were barred by Sec. 7 (1) (b), U. P. Encumbered Estates Act. That Section runs as follows:

> No fresh suit or other proceedings other than an appeal or revision against a decree or order, or a process for ejectment for arrears of rent shall, except as hereinafter provided be instituted in any civil or revenue Court in the United Provinces in respect of any debts incurred before the passing of the said order, and the order referred to is the order under Sec. 6 passed by the Collector. The question turns on the interpretation to be put on the expression "in respect of any debts" and after giving careful consideration to the points raised by the learned counsel for the parties in their arguments, we have come to the conclusion that the present suits cannot be said to be in respect of any debts. The learned counsel for the respondents wants us to interpret this expression as meaning "having any connexion with any debts;" but we cannot accept this interpretation which appears to us to be too wide. The expression "having connexion with any debt" will embrace a number of suits of various descriptions and would either leave many wrongs without a remedy or would confer on the Special Judge, appointed under the Act, jurisdiction which it was not intended by the Act to confer on him. Sec. 3 of the Act lays down that the Special Judge appointed by the Local Government shall, subject to the orders of Government as regards the area and extent of his jurisdiction, exercise the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed, on him by the Act; but the Act nowhere gives the special Judge jurisdiction to pass a decree for a perpetual injunction under S. 54, Specific Relief Act. If the plaintiff-appellant be entitled to a perpetual injunction, the interpretation of S. 7 (1) (b), Encumbered Estates Act, contended for by the respondents would deprive him of that right. No doubt the plaintiff's right to the injunction sought for by him arises on account of the fact that he holds mortgages of the land in his favour but the suits brought by him cannot in our opinion be said to be in respect of his debts. A representative suit under S. 53, T. P. Act, also arises on account of a debt but in (1938) Oudh Appeals 548[1] a Bench of this Court held that such a suit is not a suit in respect of any public or private debt and cannot be stayed under S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act. Exception was taken to this decision by the learned counsel for the respondents on various grounds but after considering the points urged by him, we are of opinion that the point was rightly decided in the case referred to.

It was argued that every matter which the special Judge called upon to decide must be deemed to be in respect of a debt and that as the special Judge in the present case will have to decide whether or not the plots of land which are subject to the leases in question will be liable to be attached and sold for recovery of debts due from the applicants under Sec. 4, the substance of the plaintiff's suits will be decided by the special Judge and therefore no other Court has jurisdiction to decide it, but in the first place, as we have said above, the special Judge has no jurisdiction to give a decree for a perpetual injunction sought by the plaintiff in these suits, and in the second, we do not think that the jurisdiction of the Special Judge to decide the validity or otherwise of a transfer bars the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts to entertain other suits relating to that transfer. Reliance was placed on sub-s. (4) to S. 11 which reads :

1. Nisar Khan v. Abdul Hameed Khan, (1938) 25 A I R Oudh 192=176 I C 903=1938 O W N 683=(1938) Oudh Appeals 548.

> Any order passed by the Special Judge under this Section shall be deemed to be a decree of Civil Court of competent jurisdiction; and it was argued that the lessees in the present case will have to put forward their claims before the Special Judge under sub-s. (2) of S. 11; but, in the first place, we do not think that sub-s. (2) contemplates any claim, derived from the applicant under S. 4 subsequent to his making his application, the reason being that all such transfers are void under Sec. 7 (3) of the Act which provides that after the passing of the order under S. 6, the landlord shall not be competent without the sanction of the Collector to make any exchange or gift of, or to sell, mortgage or lease proprietary rights, or any portion of them; and in the second place, the order referred to in sub-s. (4) of S. 11 obviously means the Special Judge's decision on any claim to the property mentioned in the notice under S. 11 brought before him. If no such claim is actually brought, there is nothing for the Special Judge to determine. As in the present case the respondents-lessees have not put forward any claim before the Special Judge (nor could they bring such a claim as said above) no order has been or could be passed by the Special Judge to constitute a decree of Civil Court and to bar the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Court. It was also argued that no injunction as prayed for by the plaintiff-appellant should be granted to him as his rights under the mortgages in his favour can be extinguished under S. 18 of the Act which provides :

> Subject to the right of appeal or revision conferred in Chap. 6, the effect of a decree of the Special Judge under sub-s. (7) of Sec. 14 shall be to extinguish the previously existing rights, if any, of the claimant, together with all rights, if any, of mortgage or lien by which the same are secured and, where any decree is given by the Special Judge to substitute for those rights a right to recover the amount of the decree in the manner and to the extent hereinafter prescribed.

But this is an argument on the merits of the case and has no connexion with the question whether the present suits are barred under Sec. 7, Encumbered Estates Act. We are definitely of opinion that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was wrong in thinking that the present suits were barred under S. 7. We therefore allow these appeals with costs and send back the appeal to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the merits. The cross-objection of the plaintiff will also be re-heard.

R.M./R.K. Appeals allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 42

THOMAS C. J. AND ZIAUL HASAN J.

Raja Mohan Manucha and others — Applicants.

v.

Manzur Ahmad Khan and others — Opposite Party.

Privy Council Appeal No. 16 of 1937, Decided on 27th October 1938 for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Privy Council Rules, R. 9 — Privy Council appeal — High Court can under R. 9 extend time for filing security or to make good the deficiency.

The High Court has, under R. 9 of the Privy Council Rules, full discretion to extend the time for filing the security in a Privy Council Appeal or to extend the time for making good the deficiency in the security : A I R 1927 Bom 217, Ref. [P 43 C 1]

M. H. Qidwai — for Applicants.

Abrar Husain — for Opposite Party Nos. 2 to 5.

Order.—The applicants were ordered to deposit security in the Privy Council Appeal No. 16 of 1937. They deposited 3 per cent. Government Promissory Bonds on 16th September 1938. The limitation for depositing this amount expired on 19th September 1938. The office on inquiry from the Imperial Bank of India Ltd., Lucknow, as to the market rate of the bonds discovered that there was a deficiency of Rs. 90 in the security money. A sum of Rs. 60 was due as interest on these bonds, so strictly speaking there was only a deficiency of Rs. 30. The learned counsel for the applicants was informed on 19th September 1938 of this deficiency, and on 20th September 1938 he deposited the deficit amount. The office now wants directions whether under the provisions of O. 45, R. 7 the deficit deposit may be treated within time for the purposes of the appeal.

The learned counsel for the opposite party has no objection to this Court extending the time for depositing the deficit amount.

The contention of the learned counsel for the applicants is that under O. 45, R. 7 this Court has discretion to extend the time for accepting the deficit amount, and in support of his contention he relies on the case in 51 Bom 430.[1] It was held in that case that there was no express penalty provided by O. 45, R. 7 for failure to furnish security and to deposit the amount for expenses within the time therein mentioned. It was therefore in contrast with O. 45, Rr. 10 and 11 which provide in R. 11 that if the further security required by R. 10 was not given then the proceedings would be stayed and the appeal was not to proceed without an order of His Majesty in Council. R. 9 of the Privy Council Rules is as follows :

Where an appellant having obtained a certificate for the admission of an appeal, fails to furnish the security or make the deposit required (or apply with due diligence to the Court for an order admitting appeal) the Court may, on its own motion or on an application in that behalf made by the respondent, cancel the certificate for the admission of the appeal, and may give such directions as to the costs of the appeal and the security entered into by the appellant as the Court shall think fit, or make such further or other order in the premises, as in the opinion of the Court the justice of the case requires.

It was held in the Bombay case that the Privy Council Rules were passed as the preamble shows in pursuance of the English Act of Parliament, 4 William IV. It was therefore held that R. 9 should be given preference over O. 45, Rule 7. This case undoubtedly supports the contention of the learned counsel for the applicants. In our opinion under Rule 9 of the Privy Council Rules we have full discretion to extend the time for filing the security or extend the time for ordering the applicants to make the deficiency good. The deficiency has already been made good by the applicants. We accordingly order the office to accept it.

R.M./R.K. Order accordingly.

1. Nilkanth Balwant v. Sachidanand Vidya Narsinha Bharati, (1927) 14 A I R Bom 217= 101 I C 555=51 Bom 430 = 29 Bom L R 352 (F B).

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 43

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Sukkhu — Appellant.

v.

Nand Bahadur Singh and another— Respondents.

First Appeal No. 9 of 1938, Decided on 16th November 1938, from order on office report D/- 26th August 1938.

Court-fees Act (1870), Sch. 2, Article 11 — Order of special Judge dismissing claim under provisions of S. 13, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act — On appeal from such order court-fee payable is under Art. 11.

The order of special Judge dismissing claim under the provisions of S. 13, Encumbered Estates Act, on the ground that the claim not having been made within the time required by the Act the debt was to be deemed for all purposes and all occasions to be duly discharged is an order only and not an order having the force of a decree. Hence on appeal from the order the proper court-fee payable is under Article 11 of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, namely Rs. 2. [P 44 C 1]

Radha Krishna and S. N. Srivastava — for Appellant.

Order. — This is a reference in regard to the court-fee payable on an appeal against an order of the special Judge, First Grade, described by the office as dismissing the claim of the appellant under the provisions of Sec. 13, Encumbered Estates Act. What actually happened was that the application was made beyond the period of three months prescribed in the notice issued under Sec. 9 (2) of the Encumbered Estates Act, and the further period of two months allowed by Cl. 3 of the same Section. The learned special Judge heard some arguments in regard to the interpretation of these two clauses but held that the application was made beyond time and he therefore declined to admit it. He also noted in his order that by reason of the provisions of Sec. 13, Encumbered Estates Act, the claim not having been made within the time required by the Act the debt was to be deemed for all purposes and all occasions to be duly discharged. The office report is to the effect that this dismissal of the claim amounts to a decree and therefore ad valorem court-fee of Rupees 205 is payable on Rs. 3600, the amount at which the appeal has been valued.

Learned counsel has gone so far as to argue that even if this had been an adjudication under S. 14, Eucumbered Estates Act, ad valorem court-fee would not have been payble in a case in which the Court declined to pass a simple money decree under Cl. 7 of that Section. That is a question into which we need not go on the present reference. Cases in which a money decree is granted or refused under the provisions of S. 14 are cases in which there has been an adjudication. In the present case we are of opinion that there has not been any adjudication at all and that the nature of the decision of the learned special Judge is that it is an order only and not an order having the force of a decree. In these circumstances we do not accept the office report but are of opinion that the proper court-fee payable is under Art. 11 of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, namely Rupees 2. That amount having been paid there is no deficiency to be made good.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 44

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Mohammad Ejaz Rasool Khan — Appellant.

v.

Mata Din and others — Respondents.

Second Rent Appeal No. 40 of 1936, Decided on 31st October 1938, against order of District Judge, Sitapur, D/- 19th February 1936.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), S. 101 —Jurisdiction in matter of reduction of rent is upon Collector only — That jurisdiction cannot be exercised by every Court of revenue.

Section 101 clearly provides a specific procedure for claims to reductions in under-proprietary rent based on a reduction in revenue and confers jurisdiction in the matter upon the Collector only. That jurisdiction cannot be exercised by each and every Court of revenue while dealing with a suit for arrears of under-proprietary rent. [P 44 C 2]

M. Wasim and Ali Hasan — for Appellant.

Radha Krishna — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This second rent appeal against a decree of the learned District Judge of Sitapur who modified a decree of an Assistant Collector, First Class, arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendants-respondents for recovery of arrears of under-proprietary rent for 1339 and 1342F. The claim was for Rs. 2330-4-0 in respect of the three years in question. It was decreed by the trial Court for Rs. 2316-6-0 which amount included rent (that is land revenue and malikana), local rates, etc. The defendants appealed and contended that as there was admittedly a remission of land revenue to the extent of Rs. 140 the malikana due by them should also be correspondingly reduced and that the local rates payable by them amounted to Rs. 21-4-0 a year and not Rs. 84 a year as held by the trial Court.

On the first point the learned District Judge held that the defendants were entitled to a reduction in their rent as the amount of malikana payable by them had been fixed at a certain proportion as compared with the land revenue and on the second point he held that the defendants were liable to pay local rates under Cl. (a) of S. 8 as well as under the main Section of the U. P. Local Rates Act (1 of 1914). Against these findings, the plaintiff-proprietor has brought this second appeal and the defendants have filed a cross-objection with regard to the amount of the local rates fixed by the learned Judge. So far as the point arising from the appeal of the plaintiff-appellant is concerned, I am of opinion that the learned District Judge was not right in reducing the rent payable by the defendants-respondents. It is no doubt true that the malikana in the present case appears to have been fixed at about 49 per cent. of the land revenue and it cannot also be denied that land revenue was partly remitted during the years in question; but if the defendants-under-proprietors wanted to get their rent reduced on account of a reduction in the land revenue, they ought to have proceeded under S. 101, Land Revenue Act, which lays down:

> When the revenue assessed on land held in the Agra Province by an inferior proprietor, or in Oudh by a person to whom the provisions of S. 79 apply has been reduced or in part suspended or remitted the Collector may, subject to rules made under S. 234, make a proportionate reduction, suspension or remission in the amount payable by such inferior proprietor or such person for such land.

This Section clearly provides a specific procedure for claims to reductions in under-proprietary rent based on a reduction in revenue and confers jurisdiction in the matter upon the Collector only. That jurisdiction cannot to my mind be exercised by each and every Court of revenue while dealing with a suit for arrears of under-proprietary rent. Therefore the defendants not having proceeded under Section 101, Land Revenue Act, cannot in my opinion be allowed to put up as a defence to a suit for arrears of rent the plea that they are entitled to remission of rent proportionate to the remission made in revenue. Further, the written statement of the defendants-respondents shows that they did not base their claim for reduction in their rent on a remission of revenue but said in para. 8 of their written statement :

> Since 1339-F there has continuously been a remission of three annas in the rupee in rent and the contesting defendants are also entitled to a reduction of three annas in the rupee in their rent.

This plea of theirs cannot however be accepted as there is nothing to show that any reduction was made by the Local Government or any other competent authority in the rent payable by under-proprietors. On the other hand, G. O. No. 2457 dated 8th December 1933, a certified copy of which has been filed, dealing with a particular case, clearly says :

> The Governor-in-Council thinks that the malikana fixed at settlement at Rs. 595 should not be altered on account of the remission in revenue for slump in prices.

The learned counsel for the respondents relies on Section 2, U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act (14 of 1938) but all that that Section lays down is that an order of the Local Government or of any authority empowered by the Local Government remitting rent on account of any fall in the price of agricultural produce whether passed before or after the commencement of the Act shall not be called in question in any Civil or Revenue Court. In the present case the legality or otherwise of any such order is not challenged by any party. S. 2 therefore has no application to the present case. It was argued that according to the definitions of 'rent' and 'under-proprietor' contained in the Oudh Rent Act the amount payable by the under-proprietor to the superior proprietor is rent and that therefore under-proprietors should have remissions in rent like any other tenant. The reply to this is that though rent includes under-proprietary rent yet the Local Government do not appear to have contemplated by their executive orders a reduction of under-proprietary rent on account of a fall in prices as the G. O. referred to above clearly shows, and this being so S. 2, U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act, cannot help the respondents, who have not been able to show that they were entitled to a reduction in their rent under any order that could be covered by Sec. 2 of the Act. I am therefore of opinion that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was not right in making a reduction in the malikana payable by the defendants.

The defendants in their cross-objections contend that they are liable to pay local rates only under Cl. 1 of S. 8, Local Rates Act (1 of 1914). It is however admitted that according to the revenue papers on the record, the rural police rate payable under the U. P. Local and Rural Police Rates Act of 1906 in respect of the land in question was wholly recoverable from the defendants. If that is so, the defendants are clearly liable to pay the rate not only at the rate mentioned in Part 1 of S. 8 but also according to that mentioned in Cl. (a) of that Section. The finding of the learned District Judge on this point is perfectly correct. The result is that the appeal of the plaintiff is decreed with costs and the cross-objection of the defendants dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.
Cross-objection dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 45

YORKE J.

Bans Gopal and others — Applicants.
v.
Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 125 of 1938, Decided on 30th November 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 30th August 1938.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Sec. 447 — Person ejected from land retaining possession illegally —Person rightfully entitled to possession entering on land when empty — Ejected person enforcing supposed right of possession by entering upon land held guilty of offence under S. 447.

If a person is ejected from certain lands and formal possession is given to the rightful owner, the maintenance or the attempted maintenance of physical possession of the land by the ejected person is wholly illegal until such time as such person may get himself restored by process of law : A I R 1924 All 762, Foll. [P 47 C 1]

If, while the ejected person is so illegally retaining possession, the rightful owner enters upon the land when it is empty and if in such circumstances the ejected person enforces his supposed right of possession by entering upon the land, he commits an offence under S. 447. The primary intention in such case is to intimidate and the secondary object is to enforce possession and so the ejected person cannot defend his act by reliance on his ultimate intention : A I R 1933 Oudh 179, Disting. [P 47 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 106 — Scope— In order to proceed under S. 106 there must be finding that breach of peace has occurred.

In order to justify the passing of an order under S. 106 against any person it is not sufficient that he should have committed the offence of criminal intimidation, but it is necessary, as is clear from the Section itself, that he should have been convicted of that offence. The words 'involving a breach of peace' in the Section require that a breach of the peace should be an ingredient of the offence proved, and before the Section can be put in force, there must be a finding that a breach of the peace has occurred : A I R 1932 Oudh 33, Foll.; 29 Mad 190, Ref. [P 47 C 2]

Hakimuddin — for Applicants.

Krishna Nath Kaul — for the Crown.

Order. — This is an application in revision by Bansgopal Singh and three other persons who were convicted by a Second Class Magistrate of Fyzabad of an offence under S. 447, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay various amounts of fine, out of which it was directed that Rs. 30 should be paid to the complainant Ambika Prasad by way of compensation. This case related to a plot formerly in the possession of the applicant Bansgopal. Bansgopal was ejected and formal possession or dakhaldehani was given on 13th April 1937. The document in question is Ex. 6. The prosecution case was that even after this ejectment Bansgopal, whether by force or otherwise, retained possession of this plot and cultivated therein a kharif crop. On 7th April and 15th April he made payments in respect of the arrears of rent which were the foundation of the ejectment decree. It may be that he had made these payments in the hope of avoiding actual ejectment, but nonetheless it is clear that ejectment and formal delivery of possession had taken place, and that thereafter the maintenance of physical possession over the land by Bansgopal was illegal unless he was actually restored to possession by the Manager of the Deara estate in which the plot was situated. So far from this being the case, on 4th June 1937, as appears from the judgment of the trial Court, (the date is apparently wrongly stated as 28th June 1937 in para. 5 of the revision application in this Court) the Special Manager gave a lease of the plot in dispute to Bhagwati Prasad, brother of Ambika Prasad, complainant. Bhagwati Prasad is said to have sought to take possession but to have had no success. He filed a complaint under Sec. 107, Criminal P. C., which I am told was dismissed on 7th July 1937. Subsequently his brother Ambika Prasad in September 1937 filed an application under S. 145, Criminal P. C., but this was also dismissed. On 23rd September Ambika Prasad filed a complaint against Bansgopal in connexion with the paddy crop, which had been grown on the plot in question, alleging an offence under S. 379, I. P. C. That case was pending at the date of the occurrence with which we are concerned in the present case. It ultimately on 23rd January 1938 resulted in an acquittal, the Court taking the view that as Bansgopal had actually sown that crop, he could not be held guilty of theft in respect of it.

On 22nd October 1937 Ambika Prasad filed the present complaint alleging that on 18th October he had gone to this plot, which was lying fallow, with the intention of sowing gram and that offences under Secs. 323, 447 and 379, I. P. C., had been committed against him. The learned Second Class Magistrate found the evidence insufficient to justify the framing of a charge under Sec. 323, I. P. C. He framed charges under Sec. 20, Cattle Trespass Act, under S. 379, I. P. C., and under S. 447, I. P. C. He held that the evidence was not sufficient to prove the offences of theft and cattle trespass, but he was satisfied that the charge under Sec. 447, I. P. C., was clearly made out and he convicted the applicant accordingly. The case went in appeal to the District Magistrate of Fyzabad who discussed the matter in this form. He said:

On the day of occurrence the complainant came on to the land which (by virtue of his lease) he had a right to possess and was ousted therefrom by the accused. Does this constitute an offence under S. 447, assuming the necessary ingredients ? In my mind it clearly does. The possession of the land during the kharif season can give no possible right to possession thereafter. An argument (was put forward) that possession was retained while the land was empty. If the accused, as I hold, were ejected in law and in fact and subsequently regained possession without any claim of right, and if while the land was empty, the complainant, having a proper title to the land through the Court of Wards, entered upon the land when it was empty and the accused were absent, and if in these circumstances the accused were to enter upon the land with a purpose given in Sec. 441, I. P. C., then in my view an offence under S. 447, I. P. C., is committed.

The matter was then taken in revision to the Sessions Judge who remarks on this point :

I understand that Ambika Prasad's story was accepted by the trying Magistrate and by the District Magistrate, who heard the appeal to the extent of finding that the applicants had come and forcibly ousted Ambika Prasad from the land.

He went on to accept the view that Ambika Prasad was in possession of the land on 18th October and that he was forcibly ousted and an offence was thereby committed under Sec. 447, I. P. C., and he further remarked that the lower Appellate Court had found that the applicants came with the intention of intimidating and annoying the complainant, and on the facts stated he thought that there could be no doubt that this finding was justified. Learned counsel for the applicants has contended that by disregarding the formal delivery of possession and continuing cultivatory possession during the kharif season the applicant Bansgopal obtained a fresh possessory title and was entitled to resist the attempt of Bhagwati Prasad to take possession of the plot on the basis of his lease or rather had the right to oust Bhagwati Prasad or his brother, Ambika Prasad, after they had taken possession of the plot under that lease.

To my mind the suggestion that Bansgopal acquired any fresh rights by forcibly cultivating the plot during the kharif season is completely without force. As a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court said in 83 I C 719[1] :

> After the formal possession the maintenance or attempted maintenance of physical possession of the land is wholly illegal until such time, if any, as the person ejected may get himself restored by process of law.

(I am not, of course, quoting the words exactly as they are found in the ruling.) It follows that I am in full agreement with the Courts below that on 18th October Ambika Prasad was in rightful possession of the plot when he went to it with the object of sowing a crop thereon. Learned counsel puts forward as a secondary contention the plea that no offence was committed under S. 447, I. P. C., bearing in mind the wording of S. 441. He argues that the primary intent in the present case was to enforce the possession which Bansgopal had been exercising previously and that this enforcement was based on a bona fide belief in Bansgopal's own rights. He argues in fact that the primary intent was not to intimidate but to enforce a supposed right of possession. In my opinion there is no force in this argument at all. The primary intent in such case is to intimidate and the secondary object is to enforce possession, and anyone who enters on property in the possession of another with intent to intimidate cannot defend his act by reliance on his ultimate intention. An attempt has been made to support this argument by reliance on a ruling of a single Judge of this Court reported in 10 O W N 266,[2] but the learned counsel has omitted to note that the important point in that case was that there was no finding of the first Appellate Court that the accused did trespass with intent to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession and the finding of the trial Court was to the effect that the intention of the accused primarily was to take possession of the field in dispute. That statement in itself puts that case upon a different footing.

In my opinion the applicants were rightly convicted of an offence under Sec. 447, I. P. C., and it cannot possibly be said that the sentences inflicted were at all severe. I accordingly reject this application.

In disposing of the appeal the learned District Magistrate remarked that :

> These struggles over the possession of land constitute a menace to law and order, and it is clear that bitter feeling exists. I therefore, under S. 106, Criminal P. C., order the accused to execute personal bonds of Rs. 200 each to keep the peace for a period of one year.

The learned Sessions Judge has made a reference recommending that this order should be set aside on the view that an offence under S. 447, I. P. C., is not one involving a breach of the peace within the meaning of S. 106. He has relied on the case in 8 O W N 1286[3] in which it was held that :

> In order to justify the passing of an order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., against any person it is not sufficient that he should have committed the offence of criminal intimidation, but it is necessary, as is clear from the Section itself that he should have been convicted of that offence. An offence punishable under S. 504, I. P. C., cannot be said to be one involving a breach of the peace and if a conviction takes place under Sec. 504, I. P. C., and no other Section, an order under S. 106, Criminal P. C., cannot properly be made. The words 'involving a breach of the peace' in the Section require that a breach of the peace should be an ingredient of the offence proved, and before the Section can be put in force, there must be a finding that a breach of the peace has occurred.

This view was partly based on a ruling of the Madras High Court in 29 Mad 190.[4]

1. Govind Ram v. Naubat, (1924) 11 A I R All 762=83 I C 719=26 Cr L J 159.
2. Bishan Dayal v. Brij Behari, (1933) 20 A I R Oudh 179=1933 Cr C 390=145 I C 625 = 34 Cr L J 1014=10 O W N 266.
3. Sadho Ram v. Emperor, (1932) 19 A I R Oudh 33=1932 Cr C 65 = 135 I C 691 = 33 Cr L J 193=7 Luck 573=8 O W N 1286.
4. Muthia Chetty v. Emperor, (1906) 29 Mad 190 =3 Cr L J 461.

In the present case it is quite clear that there might easily have been a breach of the peace, but there is no finding that there actually was a breach of the peace, and in these circumstances it seems to me that I am clearly bound by this Bench decision and must therefore accept the reference and set aside the order under S. 106, Criminal P. C. I order accordingly.

N.S./.R.K. Application dismissed; Reference accepted.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 48

THOMAS C. J.

Chandra Bhan Singh — Appellant.

v.

Hubba — Respondent.

Second Rent Appeal No. 60 of 1936, Decided on 4th February 1938, against order of District Judge, Rae Bareli, D/-4th July 1936.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100—Question of law—Whether character of grove land has changed is question of law.

The nature and quantum of evidence required to prove that what was once grove land has ceased to retain that character is a question of law. Where a Court has misdirected itself on this point, it is impossible to maintain its finding as a finding of fact. [P 48 C 2]

P. N. Chaudhri — for Appellant.

Ganesh Prasad — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a plaintiff's appeal under S. 119 (B), Oudh Rent Act, against a judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated 4th July 1936, upholding the decree passed by the learned Assistant Collector, First Class, of the same place dated 29th November 1935, dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff admittedly is the proprietor of Mahal Beni Bahadur Singh in which the disputed plot No. 180 is situated. The area of the said plot is 6 bighas and one biswa. The plaintiff brought the suit for possession by ejectment from a part of plot No. 180 only measuring three bighas. The defence was that the land in suit was the grove of the defendant.

The sole question for decision in the appeal is whether the plot in dispute is or is not a grove land. Both the lower Courts have held that the land in dispute had not lost its character as such. The proceedings of 27th August 1935 show that the defendant admitted that there were eight mango and two babul trees on the plot in dispute. The defendant further admitted that three biswas was under cultivation while according to the plaintiff three bighas was under cultivation. The number in dispute in the first, second and third settlements is entered as a talab. It is further clear from the statement of the defendant that the area of the talab which is under water is 2½ or 3 bighas.

The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that where there are only ten trees on an area of six bighas and one biswa, it should be considered that the grove in question has lost its character as such. On the other hand, it has been contended by the learned counsel for the respondent that whether or not the grove in question has lost its character as such is a question of fact. I do not agree with this contention. The nature and quantum of evidence required to prove that what was once grove land has ceased to retain that character is a question of law. Where a Court has misdirected itself on this point, it is impossible to maintain its finding as a finding of fact. The case therefore stands thus: That we have eight mango and two babul trees standing on an area of six bighas and one biswa. I have not the slightest doubt that the babul trees must be self grown. The question is whether the grove has lost its character as such. The evidence of the defendant is vague. In his cross-examination he clearly stated that he could not say how many trees stood on the three bighas for which the suit was brought. He further admitted that he had brought three biswas of land under cultivation. This fact by itself is not sufficient to hold that a grove has lost its character as such; but in view of the area and the number of trees it seems to me impossible to hold that the grove has not lost its character as such. I accordingly hold that the grove has lost its character as such and that the mere fact that the defendant has planted some new trees does not help him. The plaintiff being the proprietor of the mahal in which the disputed land is situated is entitled to the relief which he has claimed. I accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Courts with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 49

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Zahid Khan and others — Appellants.

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 339 of 1938, Decided on 12th December 1938, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Kheri, D/- 31st October 1938.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 302, 304 and 325—Death caused by single blow on head with lathi—Other injuries on body not indicating determination to beat deceased to death—Case does not come under S. 302 but would come under second part of S. 304 — But where it is not known which of several persons actually struck fatal blow, case would properly come under S. 325.

Where death has been caused by a single blow with a lathi on the head and the other injuries found on the body of the deceased do not indicate a determination to beat the deceased to death it is not possible to hold that death was caused by doing an act with the intention of causing death or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but it may be held that death was caused by the doing of an act with the knowledge that by such act the person who did it was likely to cause death and the case would thus come under S. 304, part 2. Where however the injury has been caused by one of several persons and it is not known which of the persons concerned actually struck the fatal blow, it is not possible by the application of S. 34 to convict any of the persons taking part of an offence under the second part of S. 304, I. P. C., and the appropriate Section in view of the wording of S. 34 is S. 325, I. P. C. [P 53 C 1, 2 ; P 54 C 1]

Dr. J. N. Misra and Rauf Ahmad — for Appellants.

Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Pathans, aged 22 and 25 years, and Ram Dayal Brahman, aged 50 years, all residents of Piparia Kaptan, police station, Mohamdi, District Kheri, who have been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri of an offence under Sec. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death. The case is also before us on a reference by the learned Additional Sessions Judge for confirmation of the sentence.

The prosecution story in this case is to the effect that one Ram Sarup, who was the victim and who died as a result of the injuries received in the incident in question in this case, was on his way back from Majhgawan to Raghunathpur at some time not long before midday on 21st May 1938, in the company of Hemraj Barhai (P. W. 1) of Raghunathpur. The distance between Majhgawan and Raghunathpur is about two miles. On the way back to Piparia Kaptan they were joined by Jagannath (P. W. 2), who is said to have been going to Raghunathpur to realize rents from his debtors. Between Piparia Kaptan and Raghunathpur there is a grove called Banyon-ka-Bagh and at this grove, according to the prosecution story, four men, Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Paragi and Ram Dayal jumped down from a tree and warned Ram Sarup that they were going to attack him; the meaning perhaps was that they had got him and they meant to beat him. Ram Sarup took to his heels and was pursued by these four men, who knocked him down and beat him after he had fallen. It was said that while this beating was going on a light bullock-cart or addha was seen approaching at a distance of 250 or 300 paces with four men sitting in it. When this bullock-cart came within ten or fifteen paces, three of the occupants jumped down (these are Pullu, P. W. 4, Chhutkunnu or Chhutkai, P. W. 3, and another man Babu Ram, who has disappeared and was not produced as a witness) and ran up to the scene of the beating whereupon the assailants ran off towards the east. After this Hemraj and Jagannath started to take Ram Sarup to his house at Raghunathpur but Hemraj, who was carrying him, found him too heavy and had to put him down, and Jagannath then went and brought a bed from Raghunathpur on which Ram Sarup was carried to his house which was less than half a mile away. Thereafter, for reasons which we will explain later, Ram Sarup was taken to police station Khutar in the Shahjahanpur District and a first information report was made there by Hemraj, who was accompanied by Sheodayal, brother of Ram Sarup and Nokhey, chaukidar of Raghunathpur.

Khutar police station is eight or nine miles away from Raghunathpur but as Raghunathpur is situated in the Mohamdi circle the first information report should have been made at police station Mohamdi, which is about 12 miles away. It is said that the reason why the report was made by Hemraj at police station Khutar was that Ram Sarup was not on good terms with the police of police station Mohamdi. The police of that station were prosecuting a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C., against what is called Bhabhuti Lal and Gopal Ram's gang and among the accused in that case was the prosecution witness Jagannath. Ram Sarup had been called as a prosecution witness having of course previously agreed to give evidence in support of the police case. When however he was called, he declined to give evidence and presumably was taking sides with Bhabhuti Lal and Gopal Ram and their associates. On the other hand, Zahid Khan's uncle, Zafar Ali Khan, had been called as a prosecution witness in the 110 case as also had Sadho Ram, father of the appellant Ram Dayal. Sadho Ram had given evidence as a prosecution witness on 17th May and Zafar Ali Khan had given evidence on 18th May, while as noted above the occurrence took place on 21st May 1938. Thus on the date of this occurrence we may take it that as Ram Sarup was siding with Bhabhuti Lal's gang, there was a direct cause of enmity between the members of that gang on the one side and the prosecution witnesses of that case on the other, and that fact is further evidenced by the fact that as far back as 26th July 1937, a year before this case under S. 110 was actually proceeding in Court, Zafar Ali Khan, mukhia of Piparia Kaptan, Zahid Khan and several others made an application to the Deputy Commissioner to the effect that they had gone to attend a local enquiry evidently directed to ascertaining whether there was evidence against the members of this gang, that on arrival at the place of the enquiry they had found Gopal Ram and Bhabhuti Lal present and that they had been threatened in case they should say anything against the members of the gang.

These facts would evidence hostility on the part of the members of the gang against the family of Zahid Khan and Ram Dayal. On the other hand, there is an allegation in the evidence of Sheo Dayal, brother of the deceased Ram Sarup, that in Sawan of 1937 there was a fight between Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Paragi and others on the one side and Ram Sarup and Sheo Dayal and a number of others on the other side on the west side of Raghunathpur in which the members of Zahid Khan's party received injuries while the members of Ram Sarup's party were unhurt. Hence, it is suggested that in order to get even Zahid Khan, Chhutai, Paragi and Ram Dayal made this attack on Ram Sarup and were also ready to give evidence. Sheo Dayal admits that so far as he knows no report was made about this incident and there is no corroboration of Sheo Dayal's statement. So far as facts which are well proved go, therefore there was considerably more reason for Bhabhuti Lal, Gopal Ram and the members of the gang to desire to take vengeance on Zafar Ali Khan, uncle of Zahid Khan, and Sadho Ram, father of Ram Dayal, than there was for Zahid Khan and Ram Dayal for attacking Ram Sarup. On the other hand, it may well be that the readiness of Zahid Khan and these other persons to give evidence against Bhabhuti Lal, Gopal Ram etc., was that they were supporters of Ram Sarup and Sheo Dayal. We may now turn back to the actual occurrence and the evidence which has been led to support the prosecution story. Ram Sarup was brought back to his house in Raghunathpur and from there he was taken as mentioned above to the Khutar police station, where the first information report was made by Hemraj. In the first information report the story which we have given above was related and the name of the driver of the addha was given as Behari, a tenant of Majhgawan. The names of the other three persons who had been travelling in this addha were not mentioned. One other point worth mentioning is that the persons who attacked Ram Sarup were said to have been armed with spears and lathis, although no injury caused by a spear was proved on Ram Sarup's body.

A very curious feature of this case has next to be considered. Hemraj having gone with Ram Sarup to police station Khutar, P. W. 6, Chunni, chaukidar of Piparia Kaptan, went to police station Mohamdi and made a first information report of this incident, which is on the record as Ex. 2. Chunni deposed that he received the information of this attack on Ram Sarup from Jagannath and was told that Ram Sarup had been beaten in Banyon-ka-Bagh. He went there and saw blood on the ground and he went on to Ram Sarup's house in Raghunathpur. Ram Sarup was lying wounded and when he called him he only opened his eyes and did not speak. Chunni says he asked Sheo Dayal to take Ram Sarup to Mohamdi but Sheo Dayal said that he intended to take him to police station Khutar. Chunni accordingly, as it was his duty to do, went to police station Mohamdi to report the incident and this he did at 8 P. M. In this report he gives the names of the assailants as Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Paragu and Nokhey Brahman, that is to say we get the name of Nokhey Brahman instead of the name of Ram Dayal, but the suggestion for the prosecution is that Nokhey's name was substituted by the Mohamdi police for that of Ram Dayal because Ram Dayal's father, Sadho Ram, had given evidence in support of the prosecution in the case under S. 110, and the fact that Ram Sarup was lying unconscious was similarly omitted and the report was recorded as one under Sec. 323, I. P. C., although the report contained a statement that the skull had been fractured at two places. Actually the wording of this statement is that "Khopri doi tir phoot gai hai," which really means no more than that there were two contused wounds on the head. The report gives the time of the occurrence correctly as a little before noon and recites as witnesses Jagannath Brahman and Hemraj Barhai, and the rest of the story is told in much the same way as it is in the report made at police station Khutar, for instance, it is mentioned that the four assailants jumped down from a tree, and it is further stated that Ram Sarup had gone to police station Khutar to make a report. On the other hand, there is no mention of Behari's cart and its occupants and those persons are not mentioned in the list of witnesses.

This report, although it is not in evidence as a first information report, is valuable. Chunni has admitted that he had no personal knowledge of the enmities mentioned in it but the report does afford some support to the statement of Sheo Dayal because it mentions that in Sawan, Ram Sarup Ahir had beaten Zahid Khan. It also mentions a quarrel between Ram Sarup's brother and Paragu about taking cattle to the pound. It is a curious feature of the prosecution evidence of the present case that there is an attempt to suggest that there is something suspicious about Chunni going to make this report. Chunni had given the source of his information as Jagannath and Sheo Dayal. Sheo Dayal said that he did not see Chunni chaukidar in the village before he went to police station Khutar while Jagannath similarly denied having ever met Chunni chaukidar and told him anything about the occurrence. We are clearly of opinion that there is no good reason for suspicion in regard to the circumstances in which Chunni made his report. Chunni went to the police station in the ordinary course of his duties to make a report of an incident which had taken place in his circle. Considering the nature of the report, we do not find any adequate reason for supposing that the police of Mohamdi police station would have substituted the name of an unknown person for the name of the accused Ram Dayal, and we are supported in this view by certain points of suspicion in regard to the prosecution case. It is clear that there was no good reason for Chunni to omit a mention of the coming on the scene of the addha driven by Behari, who was accompanied by Pullu, Chhutkai and Babu Ram. The story told by the prosecution in regard to this cart and its occupants arriving on the scene and witnessing what took place does not carry conviction. The medical evidence shows that Ram Sarup had on him two contused wounds on the head and 12 contusions on the body.

All these contusions were on the back and they are clearly the result of lathi blows as they vary in length from 3″ to 4¾″ and in width from ¾″ to an inch. It is clear that Ram Sarup was knocked down by two blows on the head, one of which resulted in a fracture of the skull and was then belaboured as he was lying on the ground. None of the blows given to him after he fell down was however sufficient to cause any fracture or serious injury at all. The whole beating of Ram Sarup could not have taken more than a minute or two. The attack on Ram Sarup had begun when the addha was first seen 250 or 300 paces away and yet it is supposed to be still going on up to the time when the addha stopped 10 or 15 paces away and three of its occupants jumped down and ran to rescue Ram Sarup. Then again, we find that after the assailants had run away and it was necessary to take the injured man back to his house at Raghunathpur the occupants of this addha including the driver Behari took no further interest whatsoever but at once drove off leaving Hemraj to attempt to carry Ram Sarup back to his house. Now an examination of the evidence of Behari, Pullu and Chhutkai shows that Behari, who it may be noted is a resident of Bhabuti Lal and Gopal Ram's village Majhgawan, was not in a particular hurry to get anywhere with his addha and is very much of a chance witness, as also is Pullu, while Chhutkai and Babu Ram had been picked up quite casually by Behari not very far away case was the prosecution witness Jagannath. Ram Sarup had been called as a prosecution witness having of course previously agreed to give evidence in support of the police case. When however he was called, he declined to give evidence and presumably was taking sides with Bhabhuti Lal and Gopal Ram and their associates. On the other hand, Zahid Khan's uncle, Zafar Ali Khan, had been called as a prosecution witness in the 110 case as also had Sadho Ram, father of the appellant Ram Dayal. Sadho Ram had given evidence as a prosecution witness on 17th May and Zafar Ali Khan had given evidence on 18th May, while as noted above the occurrence took place on 21st May 1938. Thus on the date of this occurrence we may take it that as Ram Sarup was siding with Bhabhuti Lal's gang, there was a direct cause of enmity between the members of that gang on the one side and the prosecution witnesses of that case on the other, and that fact is further evidenced by the fact that as far back as 26th July 1937, a year before this case under S. 110 was actually proceeding in Court, Zafar Ali Khan, mukhia of Piparia Kaptan, Zahid Khan and several others made an application to the Deputy Commissioner to the effect that they had gone to attend a local enquiry evidently directed to ascertaining whether there was evidence against the members of this gang, that on arrival at the place of the enquiry they had found Gopal Ram and Bhabhuti Lal present and that they had been threatened in case they should say anything against the members of the gang.

These facts would evidence hostility on the part of the members of the gang against the family of Zahid Khan and Ram Dayal. On the other hand, there is an allegation in the evidence of Sheo Dayal, brother of the deceased Ram Sarup, that in Sawan of 1937 there was a fight between Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Paragi and others on the one side and Ram Sarup and Sheo Dayal and a number of others on the other side on the west side of Raghunathpur in which the members of Zahid Khan's party received injuries while the members of Ram Sarup's party were unhurt. Hence, it is suggested that in order to get even Zahid Khan, Chhutai, Paragi and Ram Dayal made this attack on Ram Sarup and were also ready to give evidence. Sheo Dayal admits that so far as he knows no report was made about this incident and there is no corroboration of Sheo Dayal's statement. So far as facts which are well proved go, therefore there was considerably more reason for Bhabhuti Lal, Gopal Ram and the members of the gang to desire to take vengeance on Zafar Ali Khan, uncle of Zahid Khan, and Sadho Ram, father of Ram Dayal, than there was for Zahid Khan and Ram Dayal for attacking Ram Sarup. On the other hand, it may well be that the readiness of Zahid Khan and these other persons to give evidence against Bhabhuti Lal, Gopal Ram etc., was that they were supporters of Ram Sarup and Sheo Dayal. We may now turn back to the actual occurrence and the evidence which has been led to support the prosecution story. Ram Sarup was brought back to his house in Raghunathpur and from there he was taken as mentioned above to the Khutar police station, where the first information report was made by Hemraj. In the first information report the story which we have given above was related and the name of the driver of the addha was given as Behari, a tenant of Majhgawan. The names of the other three persons who had been travelling in this addha were not mentioned. One other point worth mentioning is that the persons who attacked Ram Sarup were said to have been armed with spears and lathis, although no injury caused by a spear was proved on Ram Sarup's body.

A very curious feature of this case has next to be considered. Hemraj having gone with Ram Sarup to police station Khutar, P. W. 6, Chunni, chaukidar of Piparia Kaptan, went to police station Mohamdi and made a first information report of this incident, which is on the record as Ex. 2. Chunni deposed that he received the information of this attack on Ram Sarup from Jagannath and was told that Ram Sarup had been beaten in Banyon-ka-Bagh. He went there and saw blood on the ground and he went on to Ram Sarup's house in Raghunathpur. Ram Sarup was lying wounded and when he called him he only opened his eyes and did not speak. Chunni says he asked Sheo Dayal to take Ram Sarup to Mohamdi but Sheo Dayal said that he intended to take him to police station Khutar. Chunni accordingly, as it was his duty to do, went to police station Mohamdi to report the incident and this he did at 8 P. M. In this report he gives the names of the assailants as Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan, Paragu and Nokhey Brahman, that is to say we get the name of Nokhey Brahman instead of the name of Ram Dayal, but the suggestion for the prosecution is that Nokhey's name was substituted by the Mohamdi police for that of Ram Dayal because Ram Dayal's father, Sadho Ram, had given evidence in support of the prosecution in the case under S. 110, and the fact that Ram Sarup was lying unconscious was similarly omitted and the report was recorded as one under Sec. 323, I. P. C., although the report contained a statement that the skull had been fractured at two places. Actually the wording of this statement is that "Khopri doi tir phoot gai hai," which really means no more than that there were two contused wounds on the head. The report gives the time of the occurrence correctly as a little before noon and recites as witnesses Jagannath Brahman and Hemraj Barhai, and the rest of the story is told in much the same way as it is in the report made at police station Khutar, for instance, it is mentioned that the four assailants jumped down from a tree, and it is further stated that Ram Sarup had gone to police station Khutar to make a report. On the other hand, there is no mention of Behari's cart and its occupants and those persons are not mentioned in the list of witnesses.

This report, although it is not in evidence as a first information report, is valuable. Chunni has admitted that he had no personal knowledge of the enmities mentioned in it but the report does afford some support to the statement of Sheo Dayal because it mentions that in Sawan, Ram Sarup Ahir had beaten Zahid Khan. It also mentions a quarrel between Ram Sarup's brother and Paragu about taking cattle to the pound. It is a curious feature of the prosecution evidence of the present case that there is an attempt to suggest that there is something suspicious about Chunni going to make this report. Chunni had given the source of his information as Jagannath and Sheo Dayal. Sheo Dayal said that he did not see Chunni chaukidar in the village before he went to police station Khutar while Jagannath similarly denied having ever met Chunni chaukidar and told him anything about the occurrence. We are clearly of opinion that there is no good reason for suspicion in regard to the circumstances in which Chunni made his report. Chunni went to the police station in the ordinary course of his duties to make a report of an incident which had taken place in his circle. Considering the nature of the report, we do not find any adequate reason for supposing that the police of Mohamdi police station would have substituted the name of an unknown person for the name of the accused Ram Dayal, and we are supported in this view by certain points of suspicion in regard to the prosecution case. It is clear that there was no good reason for Chunni to omit a mention of the coming on the scene of the addha driven by Behari, who was accompanied by Pullu, Chhutkai and Babu Ram. The story told by the prosecution in regard to this cart and its occupants arriving on the scene and witnessing what took place does not carry conviction. The medical evidence shows that Ram Sarup had on him two contused wounds on the head and 12 contusions on the body.

All these contusions were on the back and they are clearly the result of lathi blows as they vary in length from 3″ to 4¾″ and in width from ¾″ to an inch. It is clear that Ram Sarup was knocked down by two blows on the head, one of which resulted in a fracture of the skull and was then belaboured as he was lying on the ground. None of the blows given to him after he fell down was however sufficient to cause any fracture or serious injury at all. The whole beating of Ram Sarup could not have taken more than a minute or two. The attack on Ram Sarup had begun when the addha was first seen 250 or 300 paces away and yet it is supposed to be still going on up to the time when the addha stopped 10 or 15 paces away and three of its occupants jumped down and ran to rescue Ram Sarup. Then again, we find that after the assailants had run away and it was necessary to take the injured man back to his house at Raghunathpur the occupants of this addha including the driver Behari took no further interest whatsoever but at once drove off leaving Hemraj to attempt to carry Ram Sarup back to his house. Now an examination of the evidence of Behari, Pullu and Chhutkai shows that Behari, who it may be noted is a resident of Bhabuti Lal and Gopal Ram's village Majhgawan, was not in a particular hurry to get anywhere with his addha and is very much of a chance witness, as also is Pullu, while Chhutkai and Babu Ram had been picked up quite casually by Behari not very far away from the scene of the occurrence. There does not seem to be any good reason why these persons should not have offered to carry Ram Sarup to his house on the addha. Then again, Behari is said to be a sub-tenant of Bhabuti Lal and even if the evidence on that point is not convincing he is at any rate a resident of Bhabuti Lal's village. Pullu is also a resident of Majhgawan and there is a curious discrepancy between the evidence of Behari and Pullu, each of them claiming to have been driving the cart at the time of the occurrence. Chhutkai is a resident of Karonda, a village which adjoins Majhgawan, and his presence at the scene of the occurrence was a matter of complete chance, as he was on his way back to Karonda from a village 12 miles away. This witness is one of that curious type of witnesses, who having witnessed a brutal assault on some one claims to have remained completely silent on the subject after his return to his home. The fourth occupant of the cart curiously enough has disappeared but he also is admitted to have been a temporary resident of Majhgawan.

There is another curious feature about the story of the cart. If as a fact this cart and its occupants did come on the scene, then we should have expected to find the names of all the occupants of the cart mentioned in Hemraj's report. Instead we find the name of Behari only which suggests that the person making the report was retaining a free hand as to whom he should put in as witnesses to support Behari. In this connexion the evidence of Hemraj is most suggestive. Hemraj deposed in cross-examination that he knew all these occupants of the cart before and said that he did not give the names of the other occupants of the cart because the head-muharrir did not ask him for them. He said that on the very next day, i. e. 22nd May 1938, he gave those names to the Sub-Inspector. Further, on he was faced with the fact that in his statement to the Sub-Inspector he had said that Behari came with a cart in which were sitting three men whose names he did not know. He then produced the story that he had learned the names of the persons two days later from Behari and this again he corrected by saying that he learned these names from Behari two days after he had been questioned by the Circle Inspector. In our opinion the cumulative effect of the omission of any mention of this cart in the report made by Chunni, the omission of the names of the other persons in it in the first information report made by Hemraj and the other suspicious points to which we have drawn attention, make it inevitable that the evidence of Behari, Pullu and Chhutkai should be discarded entirely.

It is obvious that the discarding of the evidence of these witnesses very seriously affects the case against the appellant Ram Dayal. Had it been possible to rely on these witnesses, it might have been possible to disregard the discrepancy between the report made by Hemraj and the report made by Chunni Chaukidar which contains the story told to him immediately after the occurrence by one of the eye-witnesses Jagannath. Jagannath in his evidence not only denied meeting Chunni and giving him any information but he said that he had never made any statement about meeting Chunni to the investigating officer. Jagannath was accordingly faced with a copy of his statement to the Sub-Inspector and he denied having ever made the statement recorded by that officer in which he said he saw Chunni Chaukidar at his door and at Chunni's enquiry told him that Ram Sarup had been beaten by four persons, but the chaukidar did not enquire the names of the four persons, nor did he mention their names as he was feeling distressed by the hot weather. The Sub-Inspector was in due course called to prove that this statement had been made by Jagannath. It was doubtless for these reasons that the Mohamdi police did not ultimately prosecute Ram Dayal for participation in this occurrence and that it became necessary for Sheo Dayal to file a complaint against Ram Dayal in the Magistrate's Court. There is another point about the case against Ram Dayal which is very suggestive. Hemraj was examined by the police on 25th May and he then made a statement which was recorded by the police and was put to him in cross-examination. In this statement Hemraj stated :

> I do not know Sadho Ram and Ram Dayal either. I saw four men in the occurrence. Zahid Khan, Chhutai Khan and Paragi were known to me and the fourth man was not known to me. I do not know Nokhey Lal. The fourth man was of sallow complexion, round face, thick built, average stature, age about 30 years. When I was about to go to make the report Babhuti Lal of Majhgawan and Gopal Ram of Piparia told me that the fourth man was Ram Dayal son of Sadho Ram. As they mentioned Ram Dayal's name I got his name recorded in the report.

It was open to Hemraj when faced with this statement to deny having made it and to convey the suggestion that this was part of the trickery of the Mohamdi police intended to save Sadho Ram's son Ram Dayal from prosecution. Instead of doing this Hemraj deposed that he made this statement to the Sub-Inspector because the Sub-Inspector forced him to make it by beating and abusing him. There is of course no need whatsoever to beat and abuse anybody with the object of getting him to make a particular statement in an investigation. If a Sub-Inspector desires to do so, he can always record a witness as having made a statement whether he has made it or not and it serves no purpose to beat a witness in order to get him to make a particular statement from which he will in due course resile. Taking the whole of the facts to which we have referred above we are in no way satisfied that the evidence to establish the participation of Ram Dayal in the beating of Ram Sarup is reliable, and we accordingly allow his appeal, set aside his conviction and sentence and direct that he be released without delay.

The case against Zahid Khan and Chhutai Khan rests on a different footing. (After considering some evidence the judgment proceeded further.) On a full consideration of the whole of the evidence in this case we find no sufficient reasons for doubting the truth of the prosecution story that Zahid Khan and Chhutai Khan did take part in the attack on the deceased Ram Sarup.

It remains to consider whether these two appellants have been rightly convicted of an offence under Sec. 302, I. P. C., and if not of what offence they are guilty. We have already drawn attention to the injuries inflicted on the deceased. His death was undoubtedly due to a single lathi blow on the top of the head which caused a linear fracture of the frontal bone along the fronto-parietal suture continuing on both sides to the temporal bones which were also fractured. The base of the skull was also injured, there being a fracture of the right middle fossa, one inch long and of the left middle fossa 2¼″ in length. Death was due to the fracture of the skull with compression of brain hæmorrhage and shock therefrom. We are of opinion that in a case of this kind where death has been caused by a single blow with a lathi, and the other injuries found on the body of the deceased do not indicate a determination to beat the deceased to death, such as is indicated in many cases, it is not possible to hold that death was caused by doing an act with the intention of causing death or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but it may be held that death was caused by the doing of an act with the knowledge that by such act the person who did it was likely to cause death (vide S. 299, I. P. C.). In such a case the act of the striker can similarly only be brought within the provisions of clause fourthly in S. 300, which clause is based not upon intention, but upon knowledge. We however hesitate to apply that clause to the facts of the present case and would therefore have held that the act of the actual striker fell within the purview of the second part of S. 304, I. P. C. Where however the injury has been caused by one of several persons, and it cannot be said by which of those persons it has been caused, the persons concerned can all of them only be convicted by the application either of the abetment Sections or by the application of Sec. 34. It does not appear to us to be easy to apply the abetment Sections in a case of this kind (vide the wording of Section 107, I. P. C.). We have therefore to fall back on the provisions of S. 34, which provides that when a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone.

In interpreting S. 34 we have to remember that it has been held that the essential question in such cases is what was the common intention and further held that the common intention must be to commit the offence actually committed. It is not difficult to infer from the facts proved in the present case that the common intention was to cause hurt, which might extend to causing grievous hurt, to the deceased Ram Sarup. All the persons, who took part in the beating of Ram Sarup, would therefore be liable to conviction under Sec. 325, read with Sec. 34, I. P. C., but in a case where the offence would be otherwise construed as one under S. 304 by the application of Cl. 3 of S. 299, the difficulty arises that in such a case the person who has done the act falls within the scope of that Section not by reason of intention, but by reason of knowledge. In consequence, it is for practical purposes impossible to convict persons under S. 304 read with S. 34, if the case is one which falls within the knowledge clause of Sec. 299, and the same is true of a case under Sec. 302 falling within the clause fourthly of S. 300. In the present case we are of opinion first that the case is not really a case under S. 302 at all and that even if it could have been established who the person was who inflicted the fatal blow, the case would more properly have fallen under the second part of Sec. 304 and not under Sec. 302, I. P. C. We are further of opinion that where it is not known which of the persons concerned actually struck the fatal blow, it is not possible by the application of S. 34 to convict any of the persons taking part of an offence under the second part of S. 304, I. P. C., and the appropriate Section in view of the wording of S. 34 is S. 325, I. P. C.

We accordingly allow this appeal to this extent, that we alter the conviction from one under Sec. 302, I. P. C., to one under S. 325 read with S. 34, I. P. C. Bearing in mind the fact that the persons who knocked down and beat and caused the death of Ram Sarup clearly lay in wait for him. We think that a sentence of five years rigorous imprisonment will be proper and we sentence the appellants Zahid Khan and Chhutai Khan accordingly.

D.S./R.K. Appeal partly allowed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 54

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Emperor

v.

Som Nath and others — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 80 of 1938, Decided on 23rd November 1938, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Sultanpur, D/- 26th April 1938.

Criminal Trial—Revision — Enhancement of sentence—High Court will not entertain applications for enhancement of sentences on behalf of private parties.

The High Court will not entertain applications for enhancement of sentences on behalf of private parties. It is the part of the Crown and not of the individuals to ask the Court for enhancement of the sentences. In dealing with applications for enhancements of sentences the High Court will have regard to, what those responsible for maintenance of peace and order think of the matter and when the application has been rejected by the District Magistrate, it would all the more refuse to interfere : A I R 1927 Oudh 321 and A I R 1933 Oudh 421, Rel. on; A I R 1928 All 419 and A I R 1929 Cal 340, Not approved. [P 54 C 2; P 55 C 1]

Asst. Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

P. N. Chaudhry — for Applicant.

K. P. Misra — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is an application for revision of an order of the learned District Magistrate of Sultanpur. The applicants prosecuted the opposite parties under Ss. 147, 323 and 324, I. P. C. They were tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates and all of them except Somnath and Parbhu Nath were convicted under Ss. 147/323 and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 7 each. Somnath and Parbhunath were convicted under Ss. 147/324 and were fined Rs. 8 each. The applicants applied in revision to the learned District Magistrate and prayed that a recommendation be made to this Court for enhancement of the sentences of the opposite parties. This application was disallowed by the learned District Magistrate, who said that the trying Magistrates had given good reasons for not sentencing the accused to imprisonment. It was against this order rejecting their application for revision that the present application has been brought.

The learned counsel for the applicants has referred us to some cases in which it has been held that the High Court has power to enhance the sentence of an accused on the application of a private person. This is a proposition that can hardly be disputed. The question however is whether or not we should entertain an application by private parties for enhancement of sentences. Some of the High Courts have sometimes issued rules for enhancement of sentence on the application of private individuals and have even enhanced sentences on such applications, e. g. 30 Cr L J 219[1] and 33 C W N 395,[2] but this Court has consistently refused to entertain applications for enhancement of sentences on behalf of private parties. In 4 O W N 699[3] it was said that it is the part of the Crown and not of individuals to ask Courts to enhance sentences passed on criminal offenders. Similarly in 10 O W N 903[4]

1. Debi Singh v. Ram Charan Singh, (1928) 15 A I R All 419=113 I C 768=30 Cr L J 219.
2. Pramatha Nath Basu v. Ganga Charan, (1929) 16 A I R Cal 340=118 I C 894=30 Cr L J 979=56 Cal 964=33 C W N 395.
3. Jadunandan Brahman v. Emperor, (1927) 14 A I R Oudh 321=104 I C 242=2 Luck 605=28 Cr L J 802=4 O W N 699.
4. Hanuman Prasad v. Mathura Prasad, (1933) 20 A I R Oudh 421=1933 Cr C 1294=146 IC 577=35 Cr L J 118=10 O W N 903.

another Bench of this Court held that it is the part of the Crown and not of individuals to ask Courts to enhance sentences and refused to entertain an application of a private individual for enhancement of sentence. We prefer to follow the decisions of our own Court which appear to us to be based on a very sound principle, if we may say so with respect, namely that Courts should not be allowed to become tools in the hands of members of the public in giving vent to their private animosities. There is yet another consideration which keeps us in the present case from entertaining the present application. In dealing with applications for enhancement of sentences, the High Court will have regard to what those responsible for maintenance of peace and order in the locality think of the matter and in the present case the fact that the applicants' application for enhancement of the opposite parties' sentences was rejected by the learned District Magistrate, the head of the Magistracy in the district, shows that an enhancement of the sentences of the present accused was not considered necessary in the interests of justice. We therefore dismiss this application.

R.M./R.K. Application dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 55

THOMAS C. J.

Wazirey — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Mathura Prasad, Plaintiff and another, Defendant — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 263 of 1936, Decided on 30th November 1938, against decree of Civil Judge, Lucknow, D/- 26th May 1936.

(a) Insolvency—Annulment of adjudication—Object and effect of—Insolvent's property sold by receiver with Court's sanction before annulment—Receiver has power to execute sale deed after annulment.

The annulment of the adjudication under the conditions defined under S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act, is intended as a punishment to the insolvent and cannot be used in his favour. The protection conferred on him by reason of adjudication is withdrawn but it does not necessarily follow that he is to get back from the control of the Court his assets. Where therefore insolvent's property is sold by receiver with the sanction of the insolvency Court before the order of adjudication was annulled, the receiver has power to execute the sale deed even after the annulment : AIR 1938 Mad 752, Approved; A I R 1936 Mad 915, Dissent. [P 56 C 1, 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 2 (d) — Sale by Official Receiver falls under S. 2 (d) — If the sale is sanctioned by Court, sale deed is not necessary.

Official Receiver's sale falls under S. 2 (d). It is in the nature of a court sale and its validity really depends on the order of the Insolvency Court vesting the property in the Official Receiver and thus authorizing him to sell. Therefore such a sale if held with the sanction of Court does not necessitate a sale deed : A I R 1927 Mad 1 (F B), Disting. [P 56 C 2]

Brij Bahadur — for Appellant.

B. K. Dhaon and Ganesh Prasad — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal on behalf of defendant 1 (Wazirey) against the judgment and decree of the learned Civil Judge of Lucknow dated 26th May 1936, reversing the decree of the learned Munsif of Havali, Lucknow, dated 14th November 1935. Wazirey, appellant, was declared insolvent on 31st October 1927, and an Official Receiver was appointed to take charge of the assets of the insolvent. The Official Receiver on 5th July 1928 put in an application before the Insolvency Judge that he had put up to sale the two houses belonging to the insolvent and that the highest bid was of Rs. 100 which may be accepted (vide Ex. 2). The Court on 23rd August 1928 passed an order that the sale was approved (vide Ex. 3). It appears that on 11th October 1928, the order of adjudication was annulled (vide Ex. A-1), but no order was passed as to what would become of the assets of the insolvent. The receiver executed the sale deed on 17th March 1929 (vide Ex. 1). It was registered on 29th March 1929. Mathura Prasad, respondent 1, filed the present suit on 31st July 1935 for possession of the two houses. The suit was contested on the grounds inter alia that the defendant was not bound by the sale deed executed by the receiver as he had no power to do so and that the houses belonged to his wife and mother. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that as the sale deed was executed after the order of annulment, it was invalid under S. 37, Provincial Insolvency Act (5 of 1920). On appeal the learned Judge disagreed with this view of the learned Munsif.

The learned counsel on behalf of the appellant has raised the following two points : (1) that as the sale deed was executed after the order of annulment the receiver had no power to execute the sale deed; and (2) that under the provisions of S. 54, T. P.

Act, the transaction was only a contract for sale and it did not create any interest or charge on such property. In my opinion there is no force in either of these arguments. Under S. 37, Provincial Insolvency Act, where an adjudication is annulled, all sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made, and all acts theretofore done by the Court or receiver shall be valid. I am of opinion that where the bankruptcy is annulled, the authority of the Court will survive so far as may be necessary to complete the acts which were incomplete at the date when the order of annulment was passed. In my opinion the Court had jurisdiction over the proceedings notwithstanding the annulment of bankruptcy.

The learned counsel on behalf of the appellant has relied on the case in A I R 1936 Mad 915,[1] in which it was held that the effect of the annulment of adjudication under S. 43 is that the provisions of S. 37 apply immediately an order of adjudication is annulled and that on an annulment of adjudication without any order vesting the properties in the Official Receiver the Official Receiver ceases to have any right or authority to deal with the properties of the insolvent. The learned counsel on behalf of the respondents has relied on the case in 1938 M W N 455,[2] in which it was held that where the adjudication of the insolvents had been annulled and there was an order within a month of the annulment re-vesting the right, title and interest of the insolvents in the Official Receiver to sell the same and distribute the proceeds among the creditors, that order was not without jurisdiction because it was not passed simultaneously with the order of annulment but some time later. In my opinion there is no conflict in the case reported in A I R 1936 Mad 915,[1] and relied on by the appellant. In the body of the judgment the learned Judge has stated as follows :

> Even now the Advocate appearing for the Official Receiver is not in a position to state that there was an order vesting the properties in the receiver along with or after the annulment of the adjudication or any order imposing any conditions on the reversion of the estate to the debtor.

In case there is any conflict I am of opinion that the view laid down in 1938 M W N 455[2] is the correct view. Under S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act, if the debtor does not appear on the day fixed for hearing his application for discharge or on such subsequent day as the Court may direct, or if the debtor does not apply for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court, the order of adjudication shall be annulled. In my opinion the annulment of the adjudication under the conditions defined under S. 43 is intended as a punishment to the insolvent. This is clear from Cl. (2) of S. 43. The protection conferred on him by reason of his adjudication is withdrawn but it does not necessarily follow that he is to get back from the control of the Court his assets. An order of annulment may be made in a variety of circumstances, for instance, (1) when a composition is approved by the Court or (2) when the insolvent fails to apply for discharge in time or to prosecute his application etc. I am therefore of opinion that the punishment provided in S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act, cannot be used in favour of the insolvent.

With regard to the second contention, the learned counsel on behalf of the appellant relies on the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act. The point no doubt is a controversial one but I am of opinion that the case is covered by S. 2 (d), T. P. Act. The words of the Section applicable are "transfer by order of a Court of competent jurisdiction." I am of opinion that the Official Receiver's sale falls within the words. It is in the nature of court sale and its validity really depends on the order of the Insolvency Court vesting the property in the Official Receiver and thus authorizing him to sell. The learned counsel on behalf of the appellant relies on the case in A I R 1927 Mad 1[3] in which it was held that > the Official Receiver is not an agent of the Court transferring an application for adjudication for disposal within the meaning of the Contract Act so as to enable the Court to ratify any unauthorized acts done by the agent, and therefore a sale by Receiver of insolvent's properties before a vesting order in his favour is invalid and it cannot be validated by Court subsequently ratifying the sale.

In my opinion, this case is distinguishable because no sanction of the sale had been obtained in this case but in the case before me there was a report by the Official Receiver (Ex. 2) and the Court sanctioned the sale. Therefore I am of opinion that

1. Baluswami Naidu v. Official Receiver, Madura, (1936) 23 A I R Mad 915=165 I C 207.
2. Baluswami Naidu v. Official Receiver, Madura, (1938) 25 A I R Mad 752=(1938) 1 M L J 824=1938 M W N 455.
3. Sankaram v. Ganapati, (1927) 14 A I R Mad 1=99 I C 8=50 Mad 135=51 M L J 529 (F B).

the sale was complete and no sale deed was really necessary. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

N.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 57

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Brahma Din — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Sangam Lal and others, Plaintiffs and others, Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 132 of 1936, Decided on 7th December 1938, against decree of Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 23rd January 1936.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 132 — Under-proprietary rent is not malikana — Suit to recover such rent does not fall under Art. 132 but is governed by S. 132, Oudh Rent Act.

The rent payable by an under-proprietor in Oudh is not malikana as referred to in explanation to Art. 132. A suit to recover such rent from the under-proprietor does not therefore fall under Art. 132 but is governed by S. 132, Oudh Rent Act, and must be brought within three years : Case law distinguished. [P 59 C 2]

R. B. Lal and M. Manohar Lal — for Appellant.

H. Husain — for Respondents 1 to 5.

Judgment. — These connected appeals arise out of a suit for recovery of under-proprietary rent brought by Sangam Lal and others (appellants in Appeal No. 138) against the defendants, appellants in Appeals Nos. 132 and 133. The defendants are admittedly under-proprietors of village Gajadharpur, Tendwaujar and Patti Barisalpur which were at one time under the superior proprietorship of Syed Ali Hyder. In 1927 Syed Ali Hyder sold his rights to one Laigham Ali. The present plaintiffs pre-empted that sale and obtained a decree in 1928. They also obtained possession of the property in pursuance of the pre-emption decree. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for recovery of Rs. 109-3-0 as haq-i-malikana and prayed that if the defendants should not pay the amount within the time to be fixed by the Court, their under-proprietary rights specified in the plaint be sold for recovery of the amount of the decree. Their allegation was that the defendants as under-proprietors in the villages in question were liable to pay 10% of the land revenue and abwab to the plaintiffs as under-proprietary rent or haq-i-malikana. The rent claimed related to the years 1334 to 1339.

The defendants raised a number of pleas in defence on which the learned trial Court framed ten issues. One of the issues, namely Issue 6, was whether or not the suit was cognizable by the Civil Court. This issue was decided by the trial Court, the learned Munsif of Kaisarganj, in the negative and accordingly he ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge against this order but the learned First Civil Judge of Bahraich who heard the appeal concurred with the finding of the trial Court that the suit was cognizable by the Revenue Court only. The plaintiffs' appeal was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal in this Court and on 1st December 1933 the then learned Chief Judge allowed the appeal and in view of the provisions of Ss. 124-B, 124-C and 124-D, Oudh Rent Act, remanded the case to the Court of the District Judge of Gonda for rehearing the appeal and deciding it according to law. As the suit had been decided by the trial Court on the question of jurisdiction only and no evidence had been taken, the learned District Judge sent back the case to the trial Court for disposal of the issues other than that of jurisdiction. The learned Munsif after recording evidence held that the plaintiffs were the transferees of the rights of Ali Hyder, that Syed Ali Hyder as superior proprietor was entitled to recover 10% of the land revenue and cesses from the under-proprietors defendants as haq-i-malikana, that the defendants were paying Rs. 85-5-4 as land revenue and cesses for Gajadharpur, Rs. 68-10-0 for Tendwaujar and Rs. 25-7-4 for patti Barisalpur, that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest on the rent claimed at the rate of 1% per mensem claimed by them, that the claim for the years 1334 and 1335F was barred by limitation but that the plaintiffs were entitled to haq-i-malikana for 1336 to 1339F. On these findings the suit of the plaintiffs was decreed for Rupees 71-2-6 with proportionate costs and interest at 1% per mensem up to the date of the decree and future interest at 6% per annum.

Both parties appealed against this decree of the learned Munsif but the learned District Judge upheld that decree and dismissed both the appeals. Appeal No. 132 of 1936 has been brought by one of the defendants, Appeal No. 133 of 1936 by all the defendants and Appeal No. 138 of 1936 has been brought by the plaintiffs. I will take up Appeal No. 132 first. Only one ground has been urged in this appeal, which has been filed against the decree of the learned District Judge passed in appeal No. 64 of 1935 brought by the plaintiffs, namely that the lower Appellate Court has erred in allowing the respondents costs of the original suit amounting to Rs. 46-8-0. That decree provides :

> The respondents have incurred no costs in this Court of appeal. The plaintiff's proportionate costs of the original suit amounting to Rs. 46-8-0 are to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs.

In the other appeal (No. 61 of 1935) brought by the defendants Rs. 5-8-0, costs of the plaintiffs-respondents, were awarded against the defendants-appellants. The learned counsel for the defendant-appellant contends that as Appeal No. 64 of the plaintiffs was dismissed, no costs should have been awarded to them by the decree in that appeal. I do not think there is any force in this contention. The decree of the trial Court was superseded by that of the Appellate Court and as that decree was confirmed and it provided for payment by the defendants of the plaintiffs' proportionate costs of the suit, the order for payment of the plaintiffs' proportionate costs should naturally have found place in the Appellate Court's decree. Perhaps it would have been more proper if this order had been inserted in the decree prepared in the defendants' appeal but the insertion of it in the plaintiffs' appeal (No. 64) cannot be said to be illegal. Now, as the decrees of the lower Appellate Court stand, the plaintiffs cannot recover this amount from the defendants twice. Appeal No. 132 of 1936 has therefore been brought unnecessarily and must be dismissed.

In their Appeal No. 133 of 1936, the defendants have raised two points before me. The first is that the amount found by the trial Court as having been paid by the defendants on account of land revenue and cesses included also the haq-i-malikana. In other words, their contention is that the amount shown in the khewats of the three villages (Exhibits 26, 27, and 28) as that of abwab is really the amount not of cesses but of the haq-i-malikana payable by the defendants. In the lower Courts the contention also was that the defendants are liable to pay ten per cent. of the land revenue only and not of the abwab; but this position has now been abandoned and all that is urged is that the use of the word "munafa" in Exs. 26 and 27 (pukhtedari khewats of Gajadharpur and Tendwaujar respectively) shows that the amount shown as munafa is really haq-i-malikana. No such plea was however raised by the defendants in their written statement. Moreover, the findings of the Courts below of the aforesaid amounts being the amounts of land revenue and of abwab are pure findings of fact and cannot be questioned in this Court. Further, there is no good reason to suppose that the amounts shown as 'munafa' represent the haq-i-malikana payable by the defendants. On the other hand, there are good reasons for holding that those amounts represent the abwab. In the first place they occur in the column relating to abwab. In the second in three of the khatas mentioned in Ex. 26 the word 'munafa' is coupled with the word 'sewai' and the omission of that word from khata No. 4 in question seems to be merely an accidental omission. The next point urged is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any interest on the amount claimed. This plea too has no force whatever. As the amount claimed by the plaintiffs is undoubtedly 'rent' as defined in the Oudh Rent Act and as the learned counsel for the defendants himself was at pains to show in his reply to the plaintiffs' appeal, there is no reason whatever why the plaintiffs should not get interest on the rent claimed by them. This appeal too has therefore no force.

I now come to the plaintiffs' Appeal No. 138 of 1936. This appeal is against the decision of the lower Courts that the suit relating to the years 1334 and 1335 F was barred by limitation. It is argued that the amount payable by the defendants was a charge on the property and that therefore the limitation for recovery of that amount was twelve years and not three years. Reliance is placed on Article 132, Sch. 1, Limitation Act, and particularly on Explanation (a) to that Article. The Article read with Cl. (a) of the Explanation would read as follows :

To enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property.	12 years.	When the money sued for becomes due.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this Article:

(a) the allowance and fees respectively called malikana and haqqs . . . . . shall be deemed to be money charged on immovable property.

It is argued that the money claimed by the plaintiffs comes under the malikana mentioned in the Explanation to Art. 132.

'Malikana' has not been defined in the Limitation Act or in any other Act but after a careful consideration of the cases relied on by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs I have come to the conclusion that the term cannot be applied for purposes of Article 132, Limitation Act, to under-proprietary rent. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs has relied on the following cases: 5 Cal 921,[1] 9 All 591,[2] 41 All 259,[3] 10 Cal 697,[4] 10 C W N 151,[5] A I R 1934 Pat 44,[6] A I R 1938 Pat 16,[7] 7 O C 108,[8] 18 O C 380[9] and 19 O C 49.[10]

Almost all these cases hold that a claim to malikana can be brought within twelve years, but none of them is an authority for the view that the rent payable by an under-proprietor in Oudh comes within the term 'malikana' occurring in the Explanation to Article 132, Limitation Act. In the first of these cases the judgment is very short and does not show what was the nature of the money claimed in that case. In the second what was claimed as malikana was the amount which the vendee of certain immovable property contracted to pay annually to the vendor. In the third the facts were that in 1938 the proprietors of a certain village refused to accept the settlement offered to them under the orders of Government. They were therefore excluded from the settlement and a settlement was offered to the cultivators of the village and a malikana charge of 12½ per cent. on the land revenue was fixed for the proprietors who had refused to accept the settlement and had been excluded. Malikana in this case was therefore more in the nature of nankar than of under-proprietary rent. In the fourth case also, the nature of the malikana claimed was far from anything like the rent payable by an under-proprietor. The judgment in the fifth case does not show the nature of the malikana claimed. The same remark applies to the sixth case. The seventh case does not refer to malikana at all and all that was held was that where a mortgagor mortgages his right to recover rent from the tenant in respect of a certain holding, the mortgage though merely a right to recover rent is really a mortgage of an interest in immovable property. The last three cases of Oudh are clearly cases of nankar and not of under-proprietary rent. I am not therefore prepared to accept the learned counsel's contention that the under-proprietary rent payable by the defendants is malikana as referred to in the Explanation to Art. 132.

On the other hand, it is quite clear from the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act that the intention of the Legislature was that the haq malikana payable by an under-proprietor should be sued for within three years. According to Sec. 3 (5), 'rent' means money or the portion of the produce of land payable on account of the use or occupation of land or on account of any right in land or on account of use of water for irrigation. According to Sec. 3 (8) 'under-proprietor' means any person possessing heritable and transferable right of property in land for which he is liable or but for a contract or decree would be liable to pay rent. 'Landlord' according to Sec. 3 (11) means any person to whom an under-proprietor or tenant is liable to pay rent. Further, S. 108 which bars the jurisdiction of Courts other than Courts of Revenue in relation to certain classes of suit provides in Cl. (2), "for arrears of rent." From all this it is quite clear that what an under-proprietor is liable to pay to the superior proprietor is rent and that a suit for recovery of it must be brought in the Revenue Court under S. 108 (2), Oudh Rent Act. Now S. 132 of the Act, provides :

> A suit for the recovery of an arrear of revenue or rent . . . . shall . . . be instituted within three years from the last day of the month of Jeth of the Fasli year in which the arrear fell due.

As the case is fully governed by the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act those provisions must necessarily apply to it even though it be assumed that the rent payable by an under-proprietor can be called malikana referred to in the Explanation to Art. 132, Limitation Act. I am therefore of

1. Hurmuzi Begum v. Hirdaynarain, (1880) 5 Cal 921=6 C L R 133.
2. Churaman v. Balli, (1887) 9 All 591 = 1887 A W N 121.
3. Nathu v. Ghansham Singh, (1919) 6 A I R All 331=49 I C 737=17 A L J 177 = 41 All 259.
4. Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad, (1884) 10 Cal 697.
5. Jagarnath Pershad Singh v. Kharach Lal, (1906) 10 C W N 151.
6. Padhum Lal v. Tribeni Singh, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 44=154 I C 1013.
7. Ramzan Ali v. Babu Lal Singh, (1938) 25 A I R Pat 16=173 I C 64=18 P L T 801.
8. Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Wazir Khan, (1904) 7 O C 108.
9. Ram Jiwan v. Jadunath, (1916) 3 A I R Oudh 176=33 I C 555=18 O C 380.
10. Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad v. Jagjiwan Bakhsh Singh, (1916) 3 A I R Oudh 129=33 I C 461=19 O C 49.

opinion that the Courts below rightly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit for the years 1334 and 1335-F. The result is that all the three appeals are dismissed. Parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

N.S./R.K. Appeals dismissed.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 60

THOMAS C. J. AND ZIAUL HASAN J.

Chhab Nath Kuar — Applicant.

v.

Setraj Kuar — Opposite Party.

Application No. 20 of 1937, Decided on 4th November 1938, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, against decision of this Court, in F. A. No. 121 of 1935.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110—Question whether party has succeeded in proving family custom is not a substantial question of law.

The question whether a party has succeeded in proving the family custom set up by her is not a substantial question of law within the meaning of S. 110: A I R 1927 P C 110, Disting. [P 60 C 2]

M. Wasim and Ali Hasan — for Applicant.

Haider Husain — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 121 of 1935. The parties to the case are both widows of Rai Chhab Narain Singh of Rae Bareli District, the plaintiff opposite party being the junior widow and the defendant-applicant the senior widow. The plaintiff brought the suit from which this application arises for recovery of one-half of the property left by her husband. The defence was that according to a family custom the defendant as the senior widow was entitled to possession of two-thirds of the property and the plaintiff as the junior widow to only one-third. It was further pleaded that under a family arrangement also the defendant was given a two-thirds share of the property. The trial Court overrules the pleas raised in defence and decreed the plaintiff opposite party's suit and this decree was confirmed by a Bench of this Court on 1st October 1937. The present application has been brought by the defendant for leave to appeal against the decree of this Court. So far as the value of the subject-matter of the suit and the appeal is concerned, the case fulfils the requirements of the law; but as this Court affirmed the decree of the trial Court, the question arises whether or not the case raises a substantial question of law.

After hearing the learned counsel for parties we have come to the conclusion that the case does not involve a question of law within the meaning of S. 110, Civil P. C. The learned counsel for the applicant relies on the case in 54 I A 126,[1] but all that was decided in that case was that the words "some substantial question of law" do not mean that the question of law involved must be of general importance and that the condition is satisfied if there is a substantial question of law between the parties. In that case the question between the parties rested on the construction to be put on a will which was a document of title. In the present case however the real question was whether or not the custom set up by the defendant had been proved, though the proof of the alleged custom was practically confined to the two documents Exs. A-1 and A-2. The following quotation from the judgment of this Court will show what was actually the question for decision in the case :

> After a careful consideration of the evidence in the case we have come to the conclusion that neither is there any custom in the family by which the defendant-appellant should get two-thirds of Chhab Narain Singh's property, nor was there any family arrangement between her and the respondent entitling the appellant to a two-thirds share.

The applicant herself in para. (a) of her proposed grounds of appeal says :

> That their Lordships erred in holding that the custom of succession of the senior widow to the extent of a two-third share in the property of her deceased husband has not been proved.

It will thus be seen that though the applicant challenges this Court's interpretation of Exs. A-1 and A-2, the real question in the case is not the interpretation of those documents but whether she has succeeded in proving the custom set up by her. It cannot therefore be said that the case involves a substantial question of law. The application is therefore dismissed with costs.

N.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

---

1. Raghunath Prasad Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh, (1927) 14 A I R P C 110= 102 I C 889= 2 Luck 93=54 I A 126 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 61

THOMAS C. J. AND ZIAUL HASAN J.

Bidurramji — Plaintiff — Appellant.

v.

Kesho Ramji — Defendant — Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 98 of 1938, Decided on 14th November 1938, against order of Civil Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 17th September 1938.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 40, R. 1 — Power conferred by O. 40, Rule 1 should be exercised with great care — Power of Court to appoint receiver is limited to cases where it appears just and convenient.

The power conferred by O. 40, Rule 1 should be exercised with great care and caution and only in cases in which the applicant for the appointment of receiver has proved a prima facie title to the property. O. 40, Rule 1 limits the power of a Court to appoint a receiver to cases where it appears both just and convenient that such appointment should be made. [P 62 C 1]

The plaintiff, who claimed to be appointed the mahant of a religious institution (asthan) by a duly qualified committee, brought a suit for a declaration that he was the duly constituted mahant and was entitled to possession of two kothris within the precincts of the asthan together with the moveables, cash and record which were in possession of the defendant. The kothris in dispute had been attached by a Criminal Court under Sec. 145, Criminal P. C., and proceedings in that case were pending. The defendant has been in peaceful possession of the asthan and the property in dispute for about 15 years without the least objection on behalf of anybody. The plaintiff did not even allege in his application that the property was in danger of being wasted by the defendant and the only ground on which he wanted the appointment of a receiver was that as the kothris would remain closed on account of the attachment, the articles and documents kept therein might be spoiled :

Held that the plaintiff had not made out a good case for appointment of receiver and appointment of receiver would not be proper under the circumstances of the case. Possession of the Criminal Court attaching the property was to be deemed to be the possession of the defendant : A I R 1937 Oudh 280; 16 OC 238 and (1850-53) 4 H L 997, Rel. on. [P 62 C 2]

(b) Appeal—Appellate Court — Powers of— Appellate Court should not interfere with discretion of trial Court unless it has been exercised illegally or improperly.

In matters which lie within the discretion of the trial Court the Appellate Court should not interfere with the discretion of the trial Court unless it has been exercised illegally or improperly. [P 61 C 2]

M. Wasim and Ali Hasan — for Appellant.

Radha Krishna and C. P. Lal — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous appeal against an order of the learned Civil Judge of Fyzabad refusing to appoint a receiver on the application of the appellant. The facts are these : In Ajudhia there is a religious institution of the Hindus known as the Asthan of Ranopali of which the defendant-respondent is the managing mahant. The plaintiff-appellant in this case claims to have been appointed mahant of this Asthan on 27th May 1938, by a duly qualified committee which, it is said, had also power by custom to depose the defendant from the mahantship. On 23rd July 1938 the appellant brought a suit in the Court of the Civil Judge, Fyzabad, for a declaration that as a duly constituted mahant of Asthan Ranopali in Ajudhia, he is entitled to possession of two kothris within the precincts of the Asthan proper together with moveables, cash and records, which may be found in the said kothris and that the defendant has no right whatsoever in and is not entitled to possession of the said property. On the same day he filed the present application for the appointment of a receiver of the property in dispute. It may be mentioned that as there was a dispute between the parties, the kothris in dispute were attached by the Criminal Court under Sec. 145, Criminal P. C., and that proceedings in that case were pending when the appellant brought his application for the appointment of a receiver. The learned Civil Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to make out a case for the appointment of a receiver and dismissed the application. The plaintiff brings this appeal against the order of the learned Civil Judge.

We have heard the learned counsel for parties on this appeal at length and have come to the conclusion that the appeal cannot be allowed. In the first place, it is a well-established rule of law that in matters which lie within the discretion of the trial Court the Appellate Court should not interfere with the trial Court's discretion unless that discretion has been exercised illegally or improperly. In the second place we are ourselves of opinion that the present is not a fit case for the appointment of a receiver. The asthan in question is admitted to have been founded by one Baba Sangat Bakhsh more than one hundred years ago. He was succeeded by his chela Baba Madhoram and the latter in his turn by his chela Baba Narain Ram Das. Narain

Ram Das is said to have made a will in respect of the entire property in favour of the present respondent in the year 1912 and to have nominated him as his successor. Narain Ram Das died in 1923 and was succeeded by the respondent who has been in possession since then. According to the plaintiff-appellant his appointment to the mahantship of the asthan was in accordance with a custom prevailing in the asthan. On the other hand, the defendant's case is that no such custom exists or could exist as no mahant was ever removed from mahantship since the foundation of the asthan.

Courts are agreed that the power conferred by O. 40, Rule 1, Civil P. C., should be exercised with great care and caution and only in cases in which the applicant for the appointment of a receiver has proved a prima facie title to the property. In 1937 O W N 197[1] where the defendant had been put in possession of the property in dispute by the Revenue Court, it was held that it would not be just and convenient to deprive him of that possession and to appoint a receiver in his place to manage the property. In the present case the defendant had been in peaceful possession of the asthan and the property in dispute for about 15 years without the least objection on behalf of anybody and we do not think that it would be in the interests of justice to deprive him of his possession. In 16 O C 238,[2] it was held that O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., limits the power of a Court to appoint a receiver to cases where it appears to be both just and convenient that such appointment should be made, and that the convenience of the decree-holder is not a sufficient consideration to justify such an appointment, for what may be convenient to the decree-holder may not be just to the judgment-debtor. The learned Judges quote with approval the following passage from the judgment of Lord Cranworth in (1850-53) 4 H L 997[3] at p. 1031 :

> In such cases the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property. Where indeed the property is as it were in medio in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble. Such is the case when a receiver of a property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration. No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking it and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant. But, where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong.

Applying the principle contained in this passage, we cannot hold that the appellant has succeeded in making out a good case for the appointment of a receiver. We may mention that the plaintiff does not even allege in his application that the property is in danger of being wasted by the defendant and the only ground on which he wants the appointment of a receiver is that as the kothris have been attached by the Criminal Court :

> It is very probable that on account of the kothris remaining closed for a long time, the articles and the documents in them might be spoilt.

This is another reason why the appointment of a receiver would not be proper in this case. The learned counsel for the appellant has contended that the property in dispute should be considered to be in medio, but we do not agree with him. The possession of the Criminal Court which has attached property under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure must in this case be deemed to be the possession of the defendant-respondent, who was admittedly in possession before the plaintiff appeared on the scene and began to disturb his possession. As to the bona fides of the plaintiff's suit, we do not wish to say anything as it would not be proper on our part to pre-judge his case, and it is sufficient to say that after a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case, we are clearly of opinion that the learned Judge of the Court below was right in rejecting the prayer for the appointment of a receiver. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

R.M./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

---

1. Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan, (1937) 24 A I R Oudh 280=166 I C 983=1937 O W N 197.
2. Muhammad Husain Khan v. Amar Chand Paul, (1913) 16 O C 238=21 I C 283.
3. Owen v. Homan, (1850-53) 4 H L 997=10 E R 752=17 Jur 861=94 R R 516.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 63

ZIAUL HASAN J.

Ambica Dutt Ram — Defendant — Appellant.

v.

Nawab Shams Ara Begam — Plaintiff Respondent.

Second Rent Appeal No. 66 of 1936, Decided on 4th January 1939, against decree of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 27th July 1936.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (3 of 1901), Secs. 143 and 184 — Assignee of land revenue can claim interest on arrears of land revenue due to him.

Section 143, Land Revenue Act, deals with an arrear of land revenue due to Government and not to one due to an assignee of land revenue. There is no provision in the Oudh Rent Act disentitling an assignee of land revenue to claim interest on the arrears of land revenue due to him. On the other hand the analogy of Sec. 184, Land Revenue Act, and S. 225, Agra Tenancy Act, clearly shows that the intention of the Legislature was that an assignee of land revenue should get interest on the arrears due to him : A I R 1934 Oudh 259, Rel. on; A I R 1938 P C 67, Expl. [P 64 C 1]

Hakimuddin — for Appellant.

H. H. Zaidi — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal against a decision of the learned District Judge of Lucknow arises out of a suit brought under S. 108 (18), Oudh Rent Act, by an assignee of land revenue against the defendant zamindar for recovery of arrears of land revenue from Rabi 1339F to Kharif 1342F. The defence was that the defendant had paid up the revenue for 1340 and 1341F and that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs and interest on a sum of Rs. 134-13-6 for which a cheque was sent to him by the defendant but was returned uncashed by the plaintiff. The trial Court decided both the points against the defendant and decreed the suit. The defendant appealed and the learned District Judge agreed with the trial Court's finding with regard to the sum of Rs. 179-10-0 said to have been paid in respect of 1340 and 1341F but allowed the appeal to the extent of deduction of costs and interest in respect of the sum of Rs. 134-13-6. The defendant brings this second appeal and the two questions argued before me are : (1) whether the sum of Rupees 179-10-0 paid by the defendant by cheque in March 1935 should be credited towards the land revenue for 1340 and 1341F, and (2) whether or not the plaintiff should get interest on arrears of land revenue. With regard to the cheque for Rs. 179-10-0 the allegation in the defendant's written statement was that it was sent in respect of land revenue for "1340F, etc." In the course of pleadings in Court dated 30th September 1935, it was stated that this amount was sent for the dues for Rabi 1339F and parts of 1340 and 1341F. In evidence Dirgaj Singh, mukhtar-i-am of the defendant, stated that it was sent for the land revenue of 1340 and 1341F. On behalf of the plaintiff it was denied that any direction was sent along with this cheque and it was said that the amount of the cheque was credited towards a decree of this Court held by the plaintiff against the defendant. The trial Court was of opinion that the defendant had no right to ask the plaintiff to appropriate the amount towards land revenue for 1340 and 1341F when the revenue for 1339F was already in arrears. The lower Appellate Court thought that the oral evidence of Dirgaj Singh was inadmissible as secondary evidence of the contents of the letter containing the direction about appropriation of the amount said to have been sent along with the cheque as the letter was not summoned from the plaintiff. The judgments of both the lower Courts show that both of them were doubtful about the truth of the story that the defendant while sending the cheque for Rupees 179-10-0 directed the plaintiff to appropriate the amount towards the land revenue for any specified years; and in view of the contradiction on the point in the defendant's case as noted above and of the evidence on record I am not also prepared to believe that any direction was sent to the plaintiff along with the cheque. Moreover as land revenue for 1340F and 1341F amounted to Rupees 177-12-3 and Rs. 265-1-9 respectively the sum of Rs. 179-10-0 could not have covered the land revenue due for these two years. I am therefore of opinion that the Courts below were right in rejecting the defendant's plea about the cheque for Rupees 179-10-0.

The next point is whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to recover interest on arrears of land revenue due to him. The point was raised between the parties in a previous suit in the case reported in 11 O W N 754[1] and a learned Judge of this Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on arrears of land revenue due to him. Reliance is placed on S. 143, Land Revenue Act, which says that no interest shall be demanded on any arrear of revenue, but I am in perfect agreement with Nanavutty J. in holding that S. 143, Land Revenue Act, deals with an arrear of land revenue due to Government and not to one due to an assignee of land revenue. As was pointed out by Nanavutty J. in the case referred to above, there is no provision in the Oudh Rent Act, disentitling an assignee of land revenue to claim interest on the arrears of land revenue due to him. On the other hand the analogy of Sec. 184, Land Revenue Act, and Sec. 225, Agra Tenancy Act, clearly shows that the intention of the Legislature was that an assignee of land revenue should get interest on the arrears due to him. Sub-s. (2) of Sec. 225, Agra Tenancy Act, provides :

1. Shams Ara Begam v. Ambica Dutt Ram, (1934) 21 A I R Oudh 259=149 I C 901 = 11 O W N 754.

> Revenue or profits not paid on the day on which they fall due become on the following day arrears, and the lambardar or co-sharer or muafidar or assignee of revenue or taluqdar or superior proprietor, as the case may be, entitled to realize such dues shall be entitled to claim interest on such arrears at one per cent. per mensem.

It is inconceivable that the same Legislature which clearly provided for payment of interest to an assignee of land revenue on arrears of revenue in the province of Agra should have intended to deprive him of that interest in the Province of Oudh. The learned counsel for the appellant relies on the case in 1938 C W N 261[2] but in that case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee clearly held that interest for the period prior to the date of the suit may be awarded under the provisions of any substantive law entitling the plaintiff to recover interest and I have already referred to the provisions of law which appear to entitle an assignee of land revenue to recover interest on arrears due to him. I am therefore of opinion that there is no force in the contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to interest on the arrears due to him. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

D.S./R.K. Appeal dismissed.

2. B. N. Rly. Co. Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji, (1938) 25 A I R P C 67=173 I C 15 = 32 S L R 374 = I L R (1938) 2 Cal 72 = 65 I A 66 = 1938 O W N 261 (P C).

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 64

ZIAUL HASAN AND YORKE JJ.

Har Govind Prasad — Claimant — Appellant.

v.

Mt. Mahraj Kunwar and others — Creditors — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 8 of 1938, Decided on 26th September 1938, against order of Addl. Special Judge, First Grade, Barabanki, D/- 15th December 1937.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), Sec. 11—Claim under Sec. 11 analogous to suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. — Order passed on such claim held declaratory decree—Appeal from decree — Court-fee must be paid as on appeal from declaratory decree.

A claim under S. 11 was made and was analogous to a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. An order was passed on the claim :

Held that the order was a declaratory decree and in an appeal from the order the appellant was liable to pay court-fee as on an appeal from a declaratory decree. [P 64 C 2]

Radha Krishna — for Appellant.

Judgment.—We have heard the learned counsel for the appellant on the office report. The claim of the appellant was under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act, but it was dismissed by the lower Court. Sub-s. 4 of Sec. 11 lays down that any order passed by the Special Judge under this Section shall be deemed to be a decree of a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction, so that the order passed by the lower Court in this case was undoubtedly a decree of a Civil Court, but we are of opinion that the decree was a declaratory decree. The claim of the appellant was analogous to a suit under R. 63 of O. 21, Civil P. C. We hold, therefore, that the appellant is liable to pay court-fee as on an appeal from a declaratory decree and as the appellant has already paid Rs. 10, there is no deficiency in the court-fee.

D.S./R.K. Order accordingly.

A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 65

HAMILTON J.

Chandra Dhar Tewari and others — Plaintiffs.

v.

Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow — Defendant.

Civil Misc. Appln. No. 955 of 1938, Decided on 29th November 1938.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 124 — Object of —Meaning of word 'disclose' explained—Section does not apply when once disclosure has been made to member of public.

Section 124 is designed to prevent the knowledge of official papers, that is to say papers in official custody beyond that circle which would obtain knowledge of them in confidence whether the confidence was express or implied. It would normally include all officers including clerks of superior officers and might also apply to non-officials to whom such papers were disclosed on the understanding, express or implied, that the knowledge should go no further. The word 'disclose' means the first disclosure of communication made in official confidence and does not apply to disclosure in a Court of law of what has already been disclosed outside it. The Section has therefore no application when once there has been disclosure to a member of the public to whom the contents of such papers have not been made known in confidence. [P 66 C 1, 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), Sec. 124 — Official confidence—Demi-official letters.

Demi-official letters addressed by one officer by name to another officer by name are written in official confidence. [P 66 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 124—Public officer is to decide whether public interest would suffer by disclosure—But Court has to decide if communication is made in official confidence.

It is in the power of the public officer concerned and not in the power of the Court to decide whether disclosure of the contents of a document would be detrimental to the public interests : A I R 1915 Mad 1133; A I R 1918 Oudh 225; A I R 1925 Oudh 540 and A I R 1922 All 37, Ref. [P 65 C 2]

But it is for the Court to decide whether the communications are made in official confidence. [P 66 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 124—Public officer—Meaning of—Officer of Court of Wards is public officer.

A public officer is an officer with public as opposed to private duties who receives communications made to him in official confidence of such a nature that disclosure in certain cases would injure the public interests. The Court of Wards for the purposes of Sec. 124 is a Government office and the officer of the Court of Wards is therefore a public officer within the meaning of S. 124 : Case law discussed. [P 68 C 1]

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 124 — Privilege should be claimed after considering particular document.

It is not proper for an authority claiming privilege to claim privilege without considering particular papers and then coming to a decision whether privilege should or should not be claimed. [P 68 C 1]

Order.—In an application undated but presented on 16th November 1938 the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 4 of 1937 have asked that certain documents be exhibited. The documents are ten in number—the first three being from a file there described as "Release File," and two are from what is called the "Succession File" both being files which have been submitted to this Court under a sealed cover by the Court of Wards. The remaining five are in a file described as 'Assumption and Allowance of Rani's file from D. C.'s office' and they are in a file which has also come under a sealed cover from the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow. Objection has been raised both on behalf of the Court of Wards and on behalf of the Deputy Commissioner claiming privilege under S. 124, Evidence Act, on the ground that the public interest would suffer by disclosure of these documents. I must point out at once that the first three and the last five documents are in files which the plaintiffs have been allowed to inspect by the Court of Wards and the Deputy Commissioner respectively and the plaintiffs are therefore aware of what is contained in the papers which they seek to make exhibits. This does not apply to the fourth and fifth documents which in this application appear under Nos. 45 and 46.

It has been urged on behalf of the Court of Wards and the Deputy Commissioner that the sole judge as to whether disclosure will harm the public interests is the public officer concerned and in this respect 39 Mad 304,[1] 5 O L J 294,[2] 2 O W N 422[3] and 44 All 360[4] have been quoted. S. 124, Evidence Act, itself states that when the public officer considers that the public interest would suffer by the disclosure, he cannot be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence and I therefore agree with the contention of the counsel that it is not for me to decide whether public interests would or would

1. Nagaraja Pillai v. Secretary of State, (1915) 2 A I R Mad 1113=26 I C 723=39 Mad 304.
2. Tribhawan Nath Singh v. Deputy Commr., Fyzabad, (1918) 5 A I R Oudh 225 = 47 I C 225=5 O L J 294.
3. Emperor v. Nanda Singh, (1925) 12 A I R Oudh 540=89 I C 387 = 26 Cr L J 1347 = 2 O W N 422.
4. Collector of Jaunpur v. Jamna Prasad, (1922) 9 A I R All 37=44 All 360 = 20 A L J 140.

not suffer. Learned counsel has admitted that it is for the Court to decide whether the communications were made in official confidence and it appears to me that it is beyond doubt that it is for the Court to decide what is the meaning of the words 'disclose' and 'disclosure.' Learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs has urged that there cannot be disclosure within the meaning of S. 124, Evidence Act, now as there already has been disclosure when the plaintiffs are allowed to examine two out of the three files. He further urges that Sec. 124, specially the words "made to him in official confidence" applies only to communications by an official to another official in confidence, not communications made by a non-official to an official in which case some such words as "received in confidence" would appear in the Section instead of the words 'made in official confidence.' Learned counsel also urges that the Court of Wards, as at present constituted, is not a "public officer" within the meaning of Section 124.

Possibly the fact that two of these files have been disclosed may also be a guide to the Court as to whether the communications there contained were made in official confidence as presumably if they were so made permission to inspect the files would not have been given. In my opinion, S. 124, is designed to prevent the knowledge of official papers, that is to say papers in official custody beyond that circle which would obtain knowledge of them in confidence whether the confidence was express or implied. It would normally include all officers including clerks of superior officers and might also apply to non-officials to whom such papers were disclosed on the understanding, express or implied, that the knowledge should go no further.

